Tom H. McRa is a son of Duncan and Ella (Liston) McRa. He was born in Preston County in 1892, and while attending school he worked in a retail store. For six years he was assistant buyer for the State Board of Control. He then became an office man with the Charleston Grocery Company, and in 1919 organized the Kanawha Wholesale Grocery Company and has been president and general manager during its rapid growth and development. He is a member of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, of the West Virginia Wholesale Grocers Association and the National Wholesale Grocers Association.

Mr. McRa married April 5, 1921, Mamie L. Loy, of Paw Paw, Hampshire County, West Virginia.

JACOB F. CALLISON. Gradually and on the basis of the soundest commercial principles Jacob F. Callison has developed one of the most prosperous hardware stores in the state, at Charleston. It is known as the Farmers Hardware Company, of which he is president and chief owner. His success as a merchant is due not only to thorough training but also to the faculty of hard work and closest application to all the details.

This company was incorporated in 1913, with a capital of $25,000. Three years before that, in 1910, Mr. Callison and S. R. Pierson, both commercial salesmen, combined their modest capital of $1,000 a piece and established the firm of Callison & Pierson and made their start in the hardware trade at Charleston. A year later Mr. Callison became sole owner, and in 1913 incorporated. The vice president of the company is C. P. Pickens, though he is not active in the business. Mr. Callison's company now operates on a capital stock of $50,000. Sales for the first year were only $5,000, and the annual volume of business is now $150,000. Two assistants were required at the beginning and there are now nine, and the business also comprises a jobbing department. The company specializes in the farming trade. They occupy a double store-room on the ground floor, with a second floor over one and a large warehouse on the railroad.

Mr. Callison was born at Clay Court House, West Virginia, in 1866, son of a farmer, and he lived in the atmosphere of a farm until he was about twenty-seven years of age. He acquired only a common school education, and he did a great deal of hard farm work and the labor of lumber camps as a youth. When he left home he went on the road as a commercial salesman, selling flour and feed and later groceries, until he and Mr. Pierson left the road and put their capital into the business that is now the Farmers Hardware Company. Mr. Callison for years allowed the profits from his business to be used as investment for further expansion.

While a leading merchant and absorbed in the management of his store, he is thoroughly public spirited and has performed much public service in Charleston. He served four years as a member of the council, four years as city treasurer, and was deputy sheriff for four years in Clay County. His father and other members of the family were Confederate soldiers, and his early political training was as a democrat, and in that party he has been very active as a private and also as a delegate in conventions. Mr. Callison is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, and is prominent in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Charleston, having been chairman of the official board and a member of the board of stewards.

He married in Clay County, Miss Dora Stephenson, and they have a daughter, Mavis Stephenson Callison, who is now in high school.

COL. JOHN BAKER WHITE is a Charleston lawyer and has been in close touch with men and affairs of the state for thirty years. He gained his rank of lieutenant colonel while in the army service in France, and his military record is one of unusual service and distinction.

Soon after his admission to the bar Colonel White in 1898 entered the Spanish-American war as captain of infantry in the First West Virginia Regiment. He served a year with his regiment and after his honorable discharge he severed his connection with the National Guard, in which he had been an officer for ten years, rising from private to major.

On December 6, 1917, by special permission from the President, Colonel White entered the World war as major in the Judge Advocate General's Department, after several attempts to enter the line through the training schools, from which he was barred on account of age. He was immediately ordered to London as judge advocate of American troops in Great Britain and Ireland. His duties kept him in London continuously until June, 1919, when the base section having been closed he was ordered to General Headquarters in France, and thence sent to the Third Division Headquarters at Coblenz as judge advocate general of what was known as the "Marne Division." He continued his service in that capacity until September, 1919, and soon afterward was mustered out and transferred to the Reserve Corps of the United States Army, where he still remains. His promotion to the rank of lieutenant colonel came in April, 1919.

Colonel White has the honor of being one of the comparatively few Americans who received from King George in behalf of the British Empire the Distinguished Service Order, and his name is carried on the British military records as Lieutenant Colonel John Baker White, D. S. O. While in London and on his subsequent travels through Europe and around the world Colonel White enjoyed numerous fine courtesies of a social nature at the hands of British military officers and prominent people, bestowed in the generous and whole-hearted way that is the traditional manner of the English gentleman. He was a guest and was himself the host at a number of functions at which were entertained men of the most marked distinction in England. At one of these, the Raleigh Tercentenary Meeting at the Mansion House (Lord Mayor's residence) in October, 1918, Colonel White delivered an especially fortunate and felicitous address on Sir Walter Raleigh, other speakers on the occasion being Viscount Bryce, Hon. A. J. Balfour, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Edmund Gosse, Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton, Mr. R. P. Skinner the American consul, His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Lord Mayor of London.

After being relieved of active military duty in Europe Colonel White made a most interesting journey around the world, visiting Egypt, Palestine, India, Burma, Malay Peninsula, Java, China, Japan and the Philippines, and returned to America in June, 1920, soon afterward resuming his law practice at Charleston.

Colonel White was born at Romney in Hampshire County, West Virginia, August 24, 1868, son of Capt. C. S. and Bessie (Schultz) White. His mother came from Edinburgh, Scotland. The Whites are an old and prominent Scotch family, and several of Colonel White's early ancestors were graduates of Scotch universities. The ancestral home was at Paisley, Scotland, and one branch of the family was established in America about 1720. One of the first generations in America was represented by Dr. Robert White, son of Dr. John White of Paisley, and Dr. Robert was the father of John White, great-great-grandfather of Colonel White of Charleston. John White was a member of the first Bench of Magistrates of Winchester County, Virginia, 1754. His son, Judge Robert White, of Winchester County, was a major in the Revolutionary Army, a charter member of the Society of Cincinnati and was judge of the General Court of Virginia for about thirty years. The grandfather of John Baker White of Charleston was also named John Baker White, and for about forty years he filled the office and performed the duties of clerk of the Court of Hampshire County. The honors and responsibilities of this office were continued by his son, the late Capt. C. S. White, for thirty-six years. Capt. C. S. White was a gallant Confederate soldier and was twice wounded. He served first as a private and sergeant major in Stonewall Jackson's command until severely wounded and later was captain of Company C, Twenty-third Virginia Cavalry, Imboden's Brigade, Early's Division. He cut his way out at Appomattox and never surrendered.

John Baker White was reared in Hampshire County, but left high school at the age of sixteen to make his own way in the world. He soon afterward came to Charleston, and for seven years was connected with the office of Secretary of State and was secretary to Governor MacCorkle during the latter's term as Governor of West Virginia, from 1893 to 1897. Colonel White studied law in the office of Chilton, MacCorkle & Chilton in Charleston, was admitted to the bar in 1897, and has since practiced with honor and success except for the period he was in the army. While Charleston was under the commission form of government he served four years, from 1907 to 1911, as a member of the Board of Affairs of the city and frequently acted as mayor pro tem.

Colonel White, is a member of the Order of Cincinnati, the Sons of the Revolution, the Military Order of Foreign Wars, Spanish War Veterans, American Legion, also a Knight Templar, and Shriner and a Thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason.

THE CHARLESTON LUMBER COMPANY, of which W. L. Savage is president, is one of the old established concerns in the capital city, and the business today comprises a large retail yard, handling every class of building material, and also a planing mill.

The company was incorporated in 1897, with George Faloon as president, and A. Baird as secretary. This company took over the Meeker & Company sawmill and planing mill, with its retail yard and some fifteen or twenty employees. That business had been in existence about ten years, and was the outgrowth of a still older concern, the Deveraux Lumber Company, established about 1885. A. Baird was manager of the Charleston Lumber Company until 1906, when W. L. Savage was made president and S. C. Savage, vice president, and eventually they secured all the stock formerly owned by Baird. The company for a number of years were producers of rough lumber, operating a hand sawmill with a capacity of 40,000 feet per day. When the supply of timber was decreased to a point where the sawmill could not be profitably operated that department of the business was closed out, but a planing mill has been continued, the rough lumber being secured from various mills in the hardwood sections of West Virginia. There are about 100 employees in the planing mill department, and this mill produces everything used in connection with house building. The company still operates a retail lumber yard, and the business represents an investment of about $400,000.

The active men in the business today are the Savage brothers. Both are natives of Jackson County, Ohio, and came to West Virginia in 1876. Their father, W. A. Savage, was for twenty years one of the prominent oil producers, opening up many new wells in Texas. The family have lived at Charleston since 1876.

BUCKNER CLAY. While he has been a successful member of the Charleston bar nearly twenty years, Buckner Clay has a name that suggests Kentucky lineage and history. He is in fact one of the younger members of the distinguished Clay family of Kentucky, and the early associations of his life and the beginning of his career as a lawyer were in old Bourbon County.

He was born near Paris, Bourbon County, Kentucky, December 31, 1877, son of Col. Ezekiel and Mary (Woodford)

John Baker White

Clay. He is a descendant of John Clay, who came to America from England in the first years of the Virginia colony. In a later generation was another John Clay, whose son, Henry Clay, was the father of Charles Clay, born January 31, 1762. Charles Clay married Martha Green, and their son, Gen. Green Clay, was one of the most distinguished figures in pioneer Kentucky. He was born in Virginia, was a soldier of the Revolution, was the first deputy surveyor of Kentucky, for many years a member of the Legislatures of Virginia and Kentucky, and commanded the Kentucky militia in the War of 1812. He died in 1828. Gen. Green Clay was the great-grandfather of the Charleston attorney. He married Sallie Lewis, and their home was in Madison County, Kentucky, near Richmond. Their son, Gen. Cassius M. Clay, was a soldier, attaining the rank of major-general in the Civil war, was an editor and publisher, and served as minister to Russia by appointment from President Lincoln.

Brutus J. Clay, grandfather of Buckner Clay, was born in 1808, was educated at Center College, and in 1827 settled in Bourbon County and for years was a leader in agriculture and the live stock industry of the Blue Grass section of Kentucky. In 1853 he was elected president of the State Agricultural Association. He entered the Thirty-eighth Congress in 1862 as representative from his kinsman Henry Clay's district. He died in 1878. He was twice married, his wives being Amelia Field and Ann M. Field, sisters. They were descendants of a distinguished family, and it is interesting to note that one of them, John Field, served as an officer in the British army in the western campaigns, beginning in 1754, and was a participant in the battle of Point Pleasant, West Virginia. The famous American, Cyrus W. Field, was a member of this branch of the Field family.

Col. Ezekiel F. Clay, father of Buckner Clay, was a son of Brutus J. and Amelia Clay, and was born in Bourbon County, December 1, 1840. He left college to enter the Confederate army, became a colonel of cavalry, and was a gallant officer until taken prisoner in the spring of 1864. After the war he settled on his estate, known as Runnymede, in Bourbon County, a place he made celebrated as the home of some of the finest Kentucky thoroughbreds. Col. Ezekiel Clay married in 1866 Mary L. Woodford, a daughter of John T. and Elizabeth (Buckner) Woodford, representing another noted family of Kentuckians. The fourth of their six children is Buckner Clay.

Buckner Clay graduated from Kentucky University A. B. with the class of 1897, and received his degree in law from the University of Virginia in 1900. He was admitted to the bar at Paris, Kentucky, but in June, 1903, came to Charleston, where for a number of years he has been the junior member of the law firm of Price, Smith, Spilman & Clay.

J. ALBERT TOLER. From the elevated plane of public service down through the fields of its usefulness to the community and its honorable connection with a leading profession and into the privacy of his family circle the career of J. Albert Toler has been characterized by a constant and consistent integrity born of high principles. His professional life has been marked by constant action, and as an official and citizen he has displayed public spirit exemplified in a willingness to stand by his convictions and support worthy movements.

Mr. Toler was born in a little log cabin near Oceana, on Big Huff Creek, Wyoming County, West Virginia, November 28, 1893, and is a son of Henry Paris and Darthula (Brown) Toler. Henry Paris Toler was born at Sun Hill, Wyoming County, in 1857, and died November 18, 1918. He was a son of John and Elizabeth "Polly" (Cline) Toler, and a grandson of Zachariah Toler, who was born in Ireland and as a young man immigrated to America, settling in what is now West Virginia, where his son John was born. When John was still a child the family returned to Ireland, but again came to America when he was nineteen or twenty years of age and located below the mouth of Big Cub Creek, where Zachariah Toler died at the remarkable age of 102 years, after a career spent in farming. A number of interesting anecdotes are related of the prowess, strength and endurance of this sturdy old immigrant, as well as of his son John, also a farmer, who lived to be ninety-four years of age, and of the latter's wife, Elizabeth, or "Polly," who was nearly 100 years of age at the time of her demise. Henry Paris Toler passed his life in farming, in addition to which he dealt in the timber which he cut from his land and which he contracted to deliver at the river bank. He was a leader in the Missionary Baptist Church, and, like the other members of the Toler family, as well as the Browns (who lived on Big Huff) was a staunch adherent of the democratic party until 1892, when all became republicans. Aside from Henry P. the members of the family belonged to the Primitive Baptist faith. At Oceana, West Virginia, Henry P. Toler was united in marriage with Miss Darthula Brown, who was born on Big Huff Creek, Wyoming County, a daughter of Jack Brown. She survives her husband and for the most part makes her home with her son, J. Albert. Of the eleven children of Henry P. and Darthula Toler nine are living, four of these being sons, all self-educated: W. R., who is a justice of the peace at Mullens; J. Albert, of this notice; John H., a graduate of Concord Normal School and West Virginia University, who is now principal of the Mullens District High School; and Buren H., a graduate of Concord Normal School, who also attended the State University, served in the World war, and is now superintendent of schools of the Slab Fork District.

In his youth J. Albert Toler attended the schools of the community in which he lived, including the Laurel Branch school house, a log structure of one room, and when still little more than a lad entered upon his career as an educator, a vocation to which he devoted, in all, four years. His first trip outside of the county occurred when he was twenty years of age, when he went to the Concord Normal School at Athens, attending that institution for a part of two years. He then resumed his teaching activities, and while thus engaged borrowed law books and began to prepare himself for his chosen profession. Eventually he attended Kentucky University, now Transylvania, and in June, 1907, was admitted to the bar and located at Pineville, the county seat. There he was in partnership with R. D. Bailey, now occupying the bench as circuit judge, until 1912, when he was elected prosecuting attorney and served in that position until December 31, 1916. In July, 1917, he was appointed a member of the County Court of Wyoming County to fill out the unexpired term of H. M. Cline, resigned. Later Mr. Toler was in partnership with D. D. Moran, of Mullens, for two years, but is now engaged in practice alone. He stands among the leaders of his calling in Wyoming County, and in his profession is known as a man of sound ability, a valuable associate and a dangerous competitor. Mr. Toler has always proven himself a good citizen, supporting worthy movements and contributing to worthy causes. During the World war he volunteered his services as a "Four-Minute Man," and made numerous speeches in this connection, as he did also in behalf of the Red Cross and in the loan and other drives, at the same time contributing generously of his private means. He is a staunch republican in his political allegiance, but has never allowed party loyalty to blind him to justice. Fraternally he holds membership in the local lodges of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, in both of which he has numerous friends.

On October 28, 1907, Mr. Toler was united in marriage with Miss Victoria Trent, a daughter of Humphrey and Armina Trent, formerly of Rhoderfield, McDowell County, West Virginia, where Mrs. Toler was born. Five children have come to this union: Lyman, Raymond, Beatrice, Ruth and Kate, of whom the last-named died at the age of five years, October 28, 1920.

WILLIAM L. HUNTER, M. D. It is a well-known fact that a forceful personality speaks for itself and that the individual who can govern himself successfully is frequently called upon to govern the affairs of others. Men of broad ideas and firm grasp on civic matters develop into responsible citizens, and because of their resourcefulness and ripened judgment their communities benefit not only in a material sense but also with reference to those things which make for a general uplift. One of the men who for years has exerted an influence for good in professional life and in civic affairs throughout a large territory contiguous to Tralee is Dr. William L. Hunter, a member of the Wyoming County Court and physician in charge of practice at the Harty Coal Company, Barker's Creek Coal Company, Mead Peachontas Coal Company and Virginian Railroad Company, at Tralee, West Virginia.

Doctor Hunter was born on his father's farm at Greenville, Monroe County, West Virginia, November 4, 1872, and is a son of J. Allen and Laura A. (Smith) Hunter, and a grandson of Joseph Hunter, also a native of Monroe County. J. Allen Hunter was a native of the agricultural community of Monroe County, and was only twelve years of age when the war between the states came on, so that he did not see service, although his older brothers all fought in the Confederate army. When he attained manhood he adopted farming for his life work, and has been engaged therein throughout his career, being still a resident of Monroe County and in moderate circumstances. He was formerly a democrat, but for some years past has voted with the republican party. He is now seventy-three years old, and his wife, also a native of Monroe County, is sixty-eight, and both are faithful members of the Methodist Church and active in church and Sunday school work. She is a daughter of William Smith, who was a pioneer of Monroe County. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hunter: William L., of this review; Clayton, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits in Monroe County; J. O., a graduate of the Maryland Medical College, and now a practitioner of medicine and surgery at Peterstown, Monroe County; Frank, who is in the mercantile business at Princeton, Mercer County, this state; Mary, who is the wife of Doctor Harber, a physician and surgeon of Seminole, Oklahoma; Marguerite, who is now Mrs. Bennett, of Ada, Oklahoma; and Ruby, who is the wife of Albert McCurry, residing also in Oklahoma.

The early education of William L. Hunter was acquired in the country schools of Monroe County, following which he began his career as a school teacher, a course followed by many professional men whose financial circumstances were such that they must earn their own way through the higher institutions of learning. For ten years he was engaged in instructing the young, and then, in 1897, entered the Medical College of Virginia, at Richmond, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1900. He at once entered practice at Red Sulphur Springs, Monroe County, where he remained nearly fifteen years, then coming to Tralee to take over the practice of the companies mentioned above. He has won for himself a position high in the confidence of the people and the esteem of his fellow-practitioners in the county, and has shown himself thoroughly capable and learned and possessed of a kindly and sympathetic nature that makes friends out of patients. In 1918 Doctor Hunter became a member of the Wyoming County Court, and has remained thereon to the present time, and 1920 served as president. During his term of office many improvements have been accomplished, one of the chief of which has been the extensive building of modern highways throughout the county.

In 1894 Doctor Hunter was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Weikle, daughter of Tippet Weikle, of Monroe County, and to this union there have been born three daughters: Ida, Pauline and Zelma. The family belongs to the Methodist Church, in the work of which they have been active. Doctor Hunter is a Master Mason, holding his membership at Blue Indian Creek, Monroe County, and his Scottish Rite degree at Wheeling. He is a republican in politics and progressive in his ideas and actions.

HARRY HAIRSTON DARNALL. While he has been a member of the West Virginia bar only fifteen years, nothing less than a state-wide reputation attaches to the name of Harry Hairston Darnall of Huntington. His forte has been the criminal law. Numerous causes celebre have tested his resourcefulness in this branch of the law. In the preparation of his cases, and in the presence of court and jury, he rises to some of the highest standards that have been used to measure the attainments of eminent lawyers of either the present or past generations.

Mr. Darnall comes of a distinguished old Virginian family. His great-grandfather was Henry Darnall, a native of Virginia. His grandfather, Richard Darnall, was born in Giles County, that state, in 1810, and was a planter and slave owner before the Civil war and spent his active life in Franklin and Giles counties. He died in Floyd County, Virginia, in 1896. His wife was Sarah Hardaman, who was born in Franklin County in 1810, and died in Floyd County in 1898.

The father of the Huntington attorney was a well-known Virginia banker and business man, Henry Manze Darnall. He was born in Giles County, September 13, 1859, spent his early life in Giles and Franklin counties, and in 1881 married at Martinsville in Henry County. He remained in Henry County until 1882, operating a tobacco plantation. Then, in 1882, he became assistant cashier of the old Roanoke Trust, Loan and Safe Deposit Company at Roanoke. He was with that institution a number of years, was for a time general manager of the Gas and Water Company of Roanoke, was president and manager of several land companies, and for several years before his death was commissioner of revenue of the City of Roanoke. He retired from business in 1915, and died at Roanoke July 16, 1916. He founded and incorporated the First State Bankers Association of Virginia. Outside of business his influence was steadily exerted in behalf of better schools, and he was one of the citizens of Roanoke who did most to establish permanent and a high class school system. For a number of years he was president of the city school board. He was also president of the city council a number of years. In politics he was a democrat, and was a devout member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he enjoyed the important honor of grand keeper of records and seals in the Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias of Virginia, and was a member of four other fraternal organizations.

Henry M. Darnall married Mary Louise Hairston, who while retaining a summer home in Roanoke resides at Bradenton, Florida.

Through his mother Harry H. Darnall is related to one of the oldest and most substantial of Virginia families. His mother's grandfather, George Hairston, was born in Henry County, and died at Hordessville in that county. He was owner of about 90,000 acres comprised in plantations in Henry, Patrick, Floyd and Franklin counties. A man of wealth, he was prominent in public affairs, and for thirty years was a member of the Senate or House of Delegates of Virginia. He was elected to office even after he was eighty years of age. Robert Hairston, maternal grandfather of Harry H. Darnall, was born in Henry County in 1824, and for many years he owned and operated and lived upon the Roundabout Plantation in Henry County. Prior to the Civil war he was considered one of the largest slave holders in the state. He and his brother George owned 7,000 acres in Henry County. In his time and even now there is no superior tobacco land in the country to that comprised in the Roundabout Plantation. On this plantation he lived out his life and died there in 1903. Robert Hairston married Miss Elizabeth Saunders, who was born at the pretentious country home of the Saunders family known as Bleak Hill in Franklin County, Virginia. She was born in 1825 and died in Henry County in 1890.

Henry M. Darnall and wife had a family of four children, the oldest being Mary, wife of Mercer Hartman, an attorney at Norfolk, Virginia. Harry Hairston is the second in age. Thomas Mauze is an attorney, member of the law firm of Hoge and Darnall at Roanoke. Elizabeth is the wife of Edward J. Snyder, who owns and operates a large orchard near Roanoke.

Harry Hairston Darnall was born at the old family plantation in Henry County May 13, 1884. He acquired a public school education in Roanoke, graduating from high school in 1902, spent three years in the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg, and in 1905 entered Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, to pursue his law course. He remained there two years, and in June, 1907, was admitted to practice by the Supreme Court of Virginia.

Harry St. Darnall

In July following his admission to the Virginia bar he came to West Virginia and for three years practiced at Beckley. For two years of that time he was town recorder, and he also acted as mayor part of one term. In 1910 he removed to Huntington, and since then has been one of the busiest members of the local bar of that city. Probably 80 per cent of his law practice is in the criminal branch of the law. There has hardly been an important criminal case tried in Cabell County since 1910 with which he has not been identified. His practice as a criminal lawyer is by no means confined to this one county. His law offices are at 803 Fifth Avenue.

Mr. Darnall is a democrat, a Presbyterian, has twice been exalted ruler of Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, has served as district deputy grand exalted ruler of the West Virginia Elks, is a member of the Guyan Country Club and belongs to several social organizations. Mr. Darnall owns a fine suburban home, a brick residence situated on twenty-seven acres of land along the Barboursville Road. He has acquired other real estate in Cabell County. During the World War he employed his profession and all his personal influence to aid the Government in the successful prosecution of the war. He was a member of all the committees for raising funds, was on the legal advisory board of the county, and spent much time helping recruits fill out questionnaires.

In Huntington, June 4, 1908, he married Miss Em Holderby, daughter of Edward and Columbia A. (Stewart) Holderby, the latter still living in Huntington. Her father, who died at Huntington in 1890, was a prosperous farmer of Cabell County, and he owned the old Holderby homestead on the Sixteenth Street Road. One-half of the modern City of Huntington is built on the old Holderby farm, which was patented in 1790. Mrs. Darnall was liberally educated in Marshall College of Huntington and the Virginia College at Roanoke. Two children have come into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Darnall, Harry Holderby, born April 30, 1910, and Lucy Holderby, born March 15, 1919.

OBEED BABB. It was perhaps the grandfather of Obad Babb who came from Germany and established this well known family in Luzerne County, Pennsylvania. Some of the land owned by him there had been traded for land in what was then Virginia, now Grant County, West Virginia. Peter Babb, the father of Obad, was the founder of the family in this section, coming from Pennsylvania in 1818.

The old homestead, known far and wide as Cherry Lane Stock Farm, thus acquired and developed during succeeding years, was maintained by the Babbys until 1919, when Obad Babb, the owner since his fathers death in 1870, sold it and moved to Keyser, Mineral County, where he now resides, retired, at the age of eighty-eight years. He was born at what is now Martin, Grant County, December 21, 1833. His mother was Phoebe Scott, a native of that section.

The children of Peter and Phoebe Babb were: James, who during the Civil war, while attempting to recover some sheep stolen from him, was shot and killed by the thief; Milton, who spent his early life in West Virginia, migrated to Illinois and acquired a large farm in Champaign County, is survived by three sons, one a prominent lawyer in Idaho, one a retired farmer of Champaign and the other a banker of Homer, Illinois; Catherine, who married Okay Johnson, a farmer and stockman of Mineral County, where they spent their lives; Jane, the widow of Henry Suit, a Grant County cattleman, died at Keyser when past ninety years of age; Daniel William, who for many years was associated with his brother Obad in farming and stock raising and who died in Grant County, where his widow still resides; Obad; and Sallie B., who married Thomas R. Karskadon, of Mineral County, a great prohibition leader and once candidate for vice president on the prohibition ticket. Both he and his wife are now deceased.

Obad Babb spent eighty-five years of his life on the farm where he was born. He was a youth when subscription schools were the only provision made for the education of children, and he attended a private school near Moorefield. He and his brother Daniel were stock drovers to the Baltimore market in the old days. They handled live stock on a large scale, cattle, horses and mules. Obad Babb continued to keep in close touch with this business during all of his active career, and is today perhaps one of the best judges of live stock in this section of the state. He proved his title to a leading citizen of his locality, where he was active in community affairs. He was prominent in the Methodist Episcopal Church, was an original republican, and voted for John C. Fremont in 1856, but has never responded to any of the invitations to become a candidate for office. In 1869 he married Mary Louise Hennen, daughter of George Washington and Justina (Shay) Hennen, of Morgantown. She was born in Monongalia County in 1847. All her life has been devoted to her home and children and the moral and the church interests of her community.

Their children are: Dr. Walter Milton; Ernest Peter and Frank Hennen, all of Keyser, and two daughters: Justina, who married J. Walter Scherr, president of the Inter-Ocean Casualty Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, they having one son, Joseph Walter, Jr., a student in the Cincinnati schools. The youngest of the family, Mabel, married Clarence E. Vossler, a prominent merchant and stock raiser of Grant County. She died in October, 1918, leaving one son, Charles Henry Vossler.

Dr. Walter Milton Babb was born August 2, 1870. He received his education in the public schools and at Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, and graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania with the class of 1893. After practicing in Mineral County for about one year he entered the Allegheny General Hospital at Pittsburgh as resident physician, and at the expiration of his service there located in Pittsburgh, where he practiced his profession until 1908, when he moved to Keyser, where he has since resided.

Doctor Babb is a member of the State Health Council, was medical examiner of the Draft Board during the war and especially active in all war work. In 1901 he married Marguerite Mignot, of Alderney, Channel Islands, England. They have one son, Walter Milton, Jr.

Ernest Peter Babb was born February 18, 1874. He attended the public schools, also Shepherd College at Shepherdstown, and graduated from Eastman College at Poughkeepsie, New York. After some time spent in the old Keyser Bank, now the First National Bank of Keyser, he was assistant clerk of the West Virginia Senate during the session of 1897. From there he went to Washington, where he held a position in the War Department during the Spanish-American war, serving under Secretary Alger and Secretary Root. Resigning that position in 1903, he returned to Grant County and was until 1919 associated with his father in farming and in the live stock business. When the farm was sold he moved to Keyser and is now a special agent of the State Department of Agriculture, engaged in the administration of the live stock sanitation, commercial feed and fertilizer laws.

In 1899 Mr. Babb married Katherine Bell, daughter of Joseph V. Bell, of Keyser, whose interesting career is the subject of another sketch. They have one son, Joseph Vance, born in 1903, who graduated from the preparatory department of the Potomac State School at Keyser, and is now in his second collegiate year at that institution.

Frank Hennen Babb was born June 24, 1875, and after finishing the course provided in the public schools spent two years at the State University at Morgantown. He returned to Cherry Lane Stock Farm, where he was engaged in business with his father until he was twenty-six years of age, when he moved to Keyser to engage in the real estate and insurance business. He has one of the standard insurance agencies of the state, and conducts a general bonding and surety business. He promoted Liller's Addition to Keyser, laid off and sold the Reynolds Addition and also the F. H. Babb Fort Hill Addition. He served two terms as mayor of Keyser. He took the lead in getting the Legislature to give Keyser a new charter providing for a commission form of government and as mayor of the old regime he installed this new government and was re-elected as the first commission mayor.

Mr. Babb married Gertrude Scherr in Charleston in 1902.

Mrs. Babb is the daughter of Arnold C. Scherr, who at the time of her marriage was serving his first term as auditor of West Virginia. They have two children, Mary Catherine, a student of Potomac State School, and Arnold, attending the Keyser High School.

ROBERT LESTER EARLY. Although still included among the younger generation, the large and varied interests which have engrossed the time and attention of Robert Lester Early have brought him to the very forefront among the progressive business men of Mullens, where he is a member of the well-known contracting firm of Early Brothers. Essentially a business man, he has not been content to play only a passive part in municipal affairs, but has brought his keen abilities to bear in the position of mayor, an office which he now occupies, thus contributing in no small degree to the general welfare.

Mr. Early was born at Rocky Mount, Virginia, September 2, 1890, and is a son of Jubal A. and Minnie Lee (Lynch) Early, natives of Franklin County, Virginia. Jubal A. Early was born in 1866, and as a young man learned the trade of carpenter, which he followed for some years before developing into a contractor. For some years he lived at Rocky Mount, and moved from there to Elkhorn, McDowell County, West Virginia, where, after a short stay, he moved to Beckley, Raleigh County, and in 1914 came to Mullens, where he now resides as a member of the firm of Early Brothers. From the outset of his career Mr. Early displayed his thorough mastery of every detail of his trade, and when he became a contractor it was found that he was never at a loss to know at once the thing to be done, no matter what the problem or difficulty. Probably no man in the coal regions of this section did more or better work in the erection of tipples, miners' houses, etc., and his contracts were not only extensive, but his work would always stand the severest tests. Mr. Early is a man who is liberal in his views, and who has the friendship and esteem of many. A republican in politics, he has always been active in committee and convention work and wields not a little influence in the ranks of his party. He is a Mason, and while not a professed church member supports the movements of the Baptist Church, to which Mrs. Early, who is one year his junior, belongs. They have three children: Anderson Cabell, a member of the firm of Early Brothers; Robert Lester, of this record; and Lotta B., who resides with her parents.

Robert Lester Early received his primary education in the public schools and supplemented this by attendance at Beckley Institute. When he was still a lad, with his brother he assisted their father in his various contracts, and thus received an early introduction to the business, although his first regular position was with the Link Belt Construction Company of Philadelphia. From that city he went to Pittsburgh, where during 1913 and 1914 he was with the Nacla Construction Company, in the latter year returning to Mullens, where he joined his brother in the formation of the firm of Early Brothers. Later their father was admitted as the third member of the concern. The firm of Early Brothers has practically built Mullens. It has not only erected many of the business blocks and residences at this place, but its contracts have extended to various other communities of Southern West Virginia. Among their contracts at Mullens may be mentioned the Wallingford Hospital, the J. C. Sullivan office building, the Wyoming Ice and Bottling Company's plant, the Emmons-Hawkins Wholesale Hardware Company Building and the Santon Building. The firm and its members enjoy the best of reputation in business circles. A republican in politics, Robert L. Early was elected mayor of Mullens in 1921 and re-elected to that office in 1922. He has given the city an admirable administration, displaying much executive ability and bringing to bear his abilities as a business man. As a fraternalist he is a past master of Mullens Lodge, A. F. and A. M., and a member of Princeton Chapter, R. A. M., in addition to which he holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. With his family he belongs to the First Baptist Church, in which he is serving as a member of the board of trustees.

In 1914 Mr. Early was united in marriage with Miss Lillian E. Moseley, daughter of J. P. Moseley, of Richmond, Virginia, and they are the parents of three children: Pauline, Marguerite and Jo Edith.

PEYTON RANDOLPH HARRISON bears a historic name, is a member of the third successive generation of that name, and for many years has been an active and prominent citizen and business man of Martinsburg.

He was born in that city. His father, Peyton Randolph Harrison, was born at Clifton on the James River, and his grandfather, Rev. Peyton Randolph Harrison, was born at Brandon on the same river and represented the distinguished Harrison family of that state. Rev. Mr. Harrison was a Presbyterian minister, and at an early time was identified with the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Martinsburg. He finally removed to Baltimore, where he spent his last years retired, dying at the age of eighty-one. He married a daughter of Judge Carr, of Virginia. Their children were: Mrs. William Hoge; Mrs. Lyle Turnbull; Mary, who became the wife of Maj. Robert W. Hunter; William Wirt; Peyton Randolph; and Henry Tucker.

Peyton Randolph Harrison, II, graduated from the law department of Princeton University and achieved a very successful practice at Martinsburg. He was appointed to deliver the oration at the 4th of July celebration at Martinsburg in 1860. Immediately before the outbreak of the war between the states he entered the Confederate Army, with the commission of lieutenant, and he and two of his cousins were killed in the first battle of Manassas. He married Sarah Porrest Hunter, a native of Martinsburg and daughter of Edmund Pendleton and Martha Crawford (Abell) Hunter. Edmund Pendleton Hunter was a native of Martinsburg, an attorney by profession, and died of cholera in early life. He was a grand master of Virginia Masonry before the state was divided, and was one of the first eminent grand commanders of Knights Templars in West Virginia. In that capacity he laid the cornerstone of the old Reformed Church at Martinsburg. Later, when this church was burned down, his grandson, the present Peyton Randolph Harrison, as grand master officiated at the cornerstone laying. E. P. Hunter's wife was born near Elkwood in Jefferson County. Sarah F. Harrison is still living, at the age of eighty-eight. She became the mother of the following children: Jane Cary, wife of Rev. Edward D. Washburn; Edmund P.; Peyton Randolph.

Peyton Randolph Harrison, III, was educated in a private school taught by John Sellers, a Scotchman, and finished his military and technical education in the Virginia Military Institute at Lexington, where he specialized in civil engineering. On returning to Martinsburg he took up a business career, and since 1888 has been prominent in the insurance and bonding field. He represents some of the standard companies of fire, life, accident and liability insurance. His influence and capital have been identified with a number of commercial enterprises. He helped organize and is principal owner of the Expert Apple Company, being secretary, treasurer and general manager of this corporation.

Soon after his college career Mr. Harrison was chosen a magistrate. In 1896 he was candidate for re-election, but suffered defeat with the republican landslide of that year. Subsequently he was appointed by the County Court, and served two and a half years. In 1912 he was elected mayor, serving two years, and in 1916 was again chosen the city's chief executive. In 1913 he was appointed deputy collector of internal revenue, with office in the Federal Building at Martinsburg, and he held that post until June 30, 1921, when the office was abolished. In the meantime he had collected for the Government a sum totalling $1,450,000. Mr. Harrison is commissioner in chancery for the Circuit Court, and several cases have been referred to him from the Federal Court.

He has been twice married. His first wife was Lillian Gorham, a native of Rockford, Illinois, and daughter of Marquis L. and Helen (Meade) Gorham. She died in 1890, leaving a daughter, Lillian, who is the wife of Forrest A. Brown, only son of Forrest W. Brown, of Charles Town, and they have three children, Sarah Forrest, Forrest Washington and Peyton Randolph Brown. For his second wife Mr. Harrison married a daughter of E. Holmes and Lily (Dandridge) Boyd, of Winchester. The two children of this marriage are Peyton Randolph and Ann Spotswood. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church. Judge Harrison is affiliated with Equality Lodge, A. F. and A. M., Lebanon Chapter No. 2, R. A. M., Palestine Commandery No. 2, K. T., of which he is a past eminent commander, and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling.

BEA just

COL. EDMUND PENDLETON HUNTER. The Hunter family has been identified with the important history of the country around Martinsburg for a century and a half. Its members intermarried with another historic family of this region, the Harrisons, as noted in another article. This sketch reviews briefly the well-known older members of the family, Col. David Hunter and Col. E. P. Hunter.

Col. David Hunter was born at York, Pennsylvania, May 3, 1761, and was a child when his parents settled in what is now Berkeley County, Virginia. Their home was established about two miles north of Martinsburg, on what is now known as the Williams Port Pike. The Hunter estate there became known as the Red House Farm. Upon the organization of Berkeley County the first court convened at the Hunter home. David Hunter attended a school in a log building situated near the corner of Queen and Burke streets in Martinsburg. About 1778 he went to England, and was abroad some three years. After his return to this country he married Elizabeth Pendleton, descended from one of the first settlers of what is now Berkeley County. Her father, Philip Pendleton, was born near the present site of Martinsburg in 1752, was an eminent lawyer and was present at the organization of Berkeley County in 1772. Philip Pendleton married Agnes Patterson. Col. David Hunter throughout his long life was deeply interested in all the affairs and progress of his home locality, and he was elected and served as clerk of the County Court from 1803 until his death in 1829.

Col. Edmund Pendleton Hunter, son of David and Elizabeth (Pendleton) Hunter, was born in 1809, acquired an education at Jefferson College and was admitted to the bar in Berkeley County in 1831. He became owner and editor of the Martinsburg Gazette. He had many interesting associations with public men of his day. He attended the Young Men's Convention in Washington, where he heard Henry Clay speak, and ever afterward was an ardent supporter of that great Kentuckian. Colonel Hunter succeeded General Boyd as commonwealth's attorney for Berkeley County, and he served in the Virginia House of Delegates during 1834-35 and 1839-41. During the war between the states he commanded the Sixty-seventh Regiment of Virginia Volunteers. He rose to the highest honors in the Masonic fraternity in his state, and was a member of the Episcopal Church.

On August 2, 1832, Edmund Pendleton Hunter married Martha C. Abell, daughter of John and Sarah (Forrest) Abell. She was born in Jefferson County, and her parents came from St. Mary's County, Maryland. Colonel Hunter and wife reared seven children, named: Sarah, Maj. Robert W., Elizabeth J., David, John Abell, Martha C. and Mary Louisa. The daughter Sarah was the wife of Peyton Harrison, who is elsewhere referred to. The son David was killed at the battle of Cedar Creek in 1864. Martha C. became the wife of Harry Riddle and Mary Louisa married John H. Doll.

Miss Elizabeth Hunter for several years taught a private school in Martinsburg. She and her widowed sister, Mrs. Mary Louisa Doll, now occupy the old home on East King Street, near the Public Square. Elizabeth Hunter is a member of the Episcopal Church and the Daughters of the Confederacy.

PERRY EMERSON BURT. Integrity of purpose, uprightness of dealing, soundness of principle and a keen sense of business values are qualities which all go towards developing the substantial men of affairs. No man reaches a prosperous material condition without striving towards some desired end, but he must have something back of the ambition to succeed in order to attain his object. Natural and acquired qualities that are rooted in a foundation of deep-laid principles are absolutely necessary, and it is fortunate for business conditions that so many men have possessed these characteristics. Among the men of Wayne County who through the possession of these qualities have reached positions of prominence and at the same time have contributed to the stability of business conditions is Perry Emerson Burt, manager of the Saks Stamping Company of Westmoreland, West Virginia.

Mr. Burt was born at West Lafayette, Ohio, December 16, 1866, a son of James Bradner and Margaret Jane (Beall) Burt. His grandfather, Hon. James Madison Burt, was born in 1810, at Warwick, New York, and became a pioneer of Coshocton and that vicinity of Ohio, where he engaged in agricultural operations. He enlisted for service in the Black Hawk Indian war, and was a prominent democrat of his locality, serving as county judge of Coshocton County, as state senator and as justice of the peace. He married Mary Ann Bradner, who was born in Orange County, New York, and died at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Judge Burt died full of years and honors at Newcomerstown, Ohio, in 1893.

James Bradner Burt, father of Perry Emerson Burt, was born April 4, 1837, at Coshocton, Ohio, where he was reared and married, but later made his home at West Lafayette. He was an extensive and successful agriculturist, and a man who was held in high esteem by his fellow-citizens, who elected him to a number of local offices, in which his record was a splendid one. In politics he was a democrat, and as a churchman he was a life-long member of the Baptist faith, in which he died at West Lafayette in February, 1907. Mr. Burt married Miss Margaret Jane Beall, who was born March 16, 1847, near Coshocton, Ohio, and still survives him as a resident of West Lafayette. They became the parents of four children: Perry Emerson; Mary, the wife of Dr. Jesse McClain, a well-known practicing physician and surgeon of Coshocton; Jennie, who is unmarried and a teacher in the kindergarten department of the public schools at Detroit, Michigan; and James Roe, of Westmoreland, West Virginia, formerly associated with his brother in business, but now engaged alone in mercantile pursuits.

Perry Emerson Burt attended the public schools of West Lafayette, following which he pursued a course at Granville (Ohio) Academy. He then entered Denison University, Granville, Ohio, from which he was graduated in 1895, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and during his college career was admitted to membership in the Phi Gamma Delta Greek letter fraternity. For two years thereafter Mr. Burt taught in the Burlington Institute College, Burlington, Iowa, and then took a course at the University of Chicago Post-Graduate School, specializing in English history for one year. He was then retained as principal of the high school at Cambridge, Ohio, for five years, but school work affected his health and he was advised by his physician to seek some other vocation. Accordingly, after a year's rest he bought an interest in the enameling works at West Lafayette, and was manager of this plant until 1916. In the meanwhile he had founded the Ohio Valley Enameling Company at Westmoreland, West Virginia, in 1914, and in 1916 came to this plant and acted as its sole owner and operator until 1920, when he sold out to the American Druggists Syndicate, although retaining the position of manager. At the time of the sale the name was changed to the Saks Stamping Company. In the large brick plant situated on Vernon Street, Westmoreland, along the right-of-way of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, the company manufactures enameled sheet steel hospital goods, which are shipped all over the United States and into Cuba, Europe and South America. Mr. Burt's business success has been marked, and that he has gained position and prosperity is all the more creditable in that his earlier inclinations and training had all been along professional lines. His standing as a man of sound integrity and probity has never been questioned, and among his associates he is held in the utmost confidence. Politically Mr. Burt has never sought honors at the hands of any party or his fellow-citizens, and is inclined to be independent in view and action, although where all other considerations are equal he supports the candidates and principles of the democratic party. He is a consistent member of the Baptist Church, in which he serves as deacon. His pleasant modern residence is situated at 2850 Piedmont Court, in a desirable residence section of Westmoreland.

In June, 1895, at Zanesville, Ohio, Mr. Burt was united in marriage with Miss Anna Linnard McCann, a daughter of John and Mary (Miles) McCann, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. McCann was a retail dealer in hats at Zanesville and a man of substance and worth. Mrs. Burt is a woman of numerous graces and accomplishments and a graduate of Denison University, class of 1895. She and her husband are the parents of four children: Frederick McCann, born July 25, 1896, now a merchant of Huntington, who during the recent war was identified with the aviation branch of the United States service, stationed at Boston, Massachusetts, and at the time of the signing of the armistice was all ready to go overseas for bombing service. He married in September, 1917, Eleanor McGugin, of Ravenswood, West Virginia, and they have one daughter, Carolyn Ann. Margaret Miles is a senior at Denison University. Marian Bradner is a student in the same institution, in the sophomore class. Edward Emerson was born September 23, 1913.

OSCAR O. ALLISON. The really valuable men of any community are not necessarily those whom fate has placed in commanding political positions where they compel applause from their associates and the admiration and support of their constituents, but rather the men who rise steadily through sheer merit to governing places among commercial and financial enterprises where their abilities are directed toward the control of finances and the creation of better conditions for the working majority. Such men are not to be found everywhere. The requirements of the positions they fill and the weight of the responsibilities they voluntarily assume are of such a nature as to bar out all but the chosen minority who have proven themselves. When such an individual has shown his worth, his value to the community cannot be overestimated. Judged by these standards one of the valuable men of Chester is Oscar O. Allison, cashier of the First National Bank of Chester and secretary-treasurer of the Hancock County Building and Loan Company.

Mr. Allison was born at Chester, March 31, 1872, a son of Samuel and Eliza (Finley) Allison, natives of the same community. Samuel Allison was born in 1837 and died May 5, 1907, in his seventy-first year, while Mrs. Allison was born December 3, 1840, and died March 17, 1910, on the anniversary of her wedding day. She and her husband had enjoyed fifty years of happy wedded life. Samuel Allison was a son of Charles Allison, whose father, Jonathan Allison, died in his ninety-sixth year, the latter's father, Datty Allison, being buried on his 100th birthday. Charles Allison was eighty-six years of age at the time of his demise, so it will be seen that this is a family somewhat noted for its longevity. Samuel Allison lived at the old home two miles south of Chester, at the head of Cunningham's Run or Creek. He followed farming for a long period and won success through industry and good management, so that he was able to retire in the evening of life, and for some years lived comfortably in his pleasant home at Chester. He was a man of popularity and influence in his community, and on two occasions was the democratic candidate for the office of sheriff, and on one occasion met defeat by but seven votes, although in a strong republican county. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: Charles F.; Sarah Jane, the widow of John L. Bernard, of Chester; Ida Mary, the wife of A. J. Glass, a retired farmer of Chester; Oscar O.; and Olive E., who was active in the First Presbyterian Church at East Liverpool, Ohio, and died in young womanhood.

Charles F. Allison, brother of Oscar O. Allison, was born on the old home farm in Hancock County, and died in March, 1921. He remained on the home farm until 1900, at which time he was elected sheriff of Hancock County, the only member of his party to be accorded that honor in forty years. During President Wilson's administration he served in the capacity of deputy United States marshal. Prior to 1900 he had made a special appraisal of real estate in Hancock County. During the last years of his life he was connected with the jewelry business. Mr. Allison was one of the incorporators and a member of the board of directors of the First National Bank of Chester. He was an elder of the Presbyterian Church at New Cumberland. His widow, who bore the maiden name of Sally Cameron, survives him as a resident of Chester.

Oscar O. Allison received his education in the country, attending the Washington Schoolhouse, which was situated on a corner of the home farm. On first coming to Chester he became interested in a general store business, with which he was identified for five years, the firm finally becoming Allison & Hobbs. Mr. Allison disposed of his interests in this enterprise to become one of the five incorporators of the First National Bank of Chester, of which he was the first cashier, a position which he still retains. A history of this institution will be found on another page of this work, as will also a review of the Hancock County Building and Loan Company, of which Mr. Allison is secretary-treasurer. He is a director in the Bucher-Smith Company, one of Chester's important industries, and in former years was a member of the board publishing the Tribune of East Liverpool, Ohio. He is a charter member of the Chamber of Commerce of East Liverpool and a director of the Kiwanis Club of that city. An adherent of progress and advancement, he has been a helpful and constructive supporter of all worthy civic, educational and religious movements.

As a young man Mr. Allison joined the Presbyterian Church at Fairview (now Pughtown), and was a trustee thereof until coming to Chester, where he became one of the organizers of the church at Chester, of which he has been an elder since its inception. He has also served as clerk of the session and as delegate to the Presbytery. He has likewise been prominent in political matters, and as a staunch and uncompromising democrat has been a delegate to several congressional conventions and was formerly a member of the Democratic Executive Committee.

Mr. Allison has an unique distinction as a fraternalist, having been the first member initiated in any fraternal order at Chester, where, October 4, 1890, he was accepted into the Junior Order United American Mechanics. He presided over this lodge during the first year, and for twenty years has filled one or another of its offices, in addition to having passed all the state chairs. He was made an Odd Fellow as a charter member of New Cumberland Lodge, and was the first noble grand of Pride of Chester Lodge No. 245, being twice delegate to the Grand Lodge. He became a charter member of Chester Lodge No. 142, A. F. and A. M., of which he was made treasurer at the time of organization, an office which he still retains. In October, 1921, he was crowned inspector general of the thirty-third degree in the House of the Temple at Washington, D. C., and is the only thirty-third degree Mason in West Virginia north of Wheeling, there not being one even at East Liverpool. His membership is as a thirty-second degree Mason in the Consistory at Wheeling. Since 1910 he has been a Knight Templar in the Commandery at Wheeling, belongs to Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and on two occasions has been a representative to the Imperial Council, in 1918 at Atlantic City, and in 1920 at Portland, Oregon, and attended both. Mr. Allison is a member of the board of directors of the Scottish Rite Educational Association of West Virginia, president of the Scottish Rite Club of Chester, treasurer of the Shrine Club of Chester, a member of the Masonic clubs of Wheeling and East Liverpool and a member of the board of directors of the Masonic Temple Company of Chester, and he and Mrs. Allison are charter members of Chester Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star. Mr. Allison is greatly interested in tennis, baseball and all forms of wholesome athletics and recreations.

Mr. Allison married Miss Anna Baxter, a daughter of Absalom Baxter, a farmer of this locality. She was educated in the normal school at West Liberty, and prior to her marriage was a successful and popular teacher in the public schools. To this union there have been born two daughters and two sons: Eunice M., a graduate of Wilson College, Chambersburg, and principal of Newell High School, who is active in the work of the Presbyterian Church; Helen R., a graduate of the Pennsylvania College for Women at Pittsburgh, class of 1922; and Ralph B. and Howard R., both deceased.

JOHN E. NEWELL. It would be impossible to deal properly with the men of Hancock County whose names stand out conspicuously in the banking interests of the county, and who through inherent characteristics and achievements have contributed to the upbuilding and development of the community of Chester without paying special attention to John E. Newell, president of the First National Bank of Chester and of the Hancock County Building and Loan Company, for it is one that compels more than passing mention. For a number of years he has been prominently identified with financial, industrial and agricultural matters, and such has been his force of character and natural inclinations that he has attained prominence, not only as a thorough business man, but as manager of large affairs, in which he has displayed marked executive ability.

Mr. Newell was born in Tomlinson's Run, near Pughtown, Hancock County, where his grandfather, John Newell, ran a mill, December 22, 1861, and is a son of Hugh Newell. John Newell, the grandfather, was a son of Hugh Newell, who built the old fort on his farm, and was himself the original settler of this section, from Cross Creek, Washington County, Pennsylvania. John Newell was a tanner by trade, and at the age of twenty-one years came to Pughtown, where he operated a tannery in the village, his son Hugh being born here in 1827. Hugh as a lad assisted his father in operating a grist mill, which was later sold, John Newell then building a mill further down, known later as the Baxter or Hartford mill. This he also sold to settle on a farm at Newell, a nice level property on the "hill," a part of which is now owned by the Village of Newell. There he resided from about 1837 until his death, at the age of eighty-six years, in 1884, being laid to rest at Fairview Plats, Pughtown. His first wife was a Miss Elder, who died without issue. His second wife was Lydia Edie, of Hancock County, who was the mother of Hugh Newell. His third wife was a widow, Mrs. Johanna (Hastings) Frazier, who survived him. They had no children, but Mrs. Frazier had two sons who served in the Confederate army during the war between the states, while Mr. Newell had two sons serving in the Union army at the same time. The children born to John and Lydia (Edie) Newell were as follows: Hugh, the father of John E.; Elizabeth, who married Alfred Marks and died in Hancock County; William, who was in the United States army and later went to California as a freighter on the plains, and died in the West; Rachael, who married George S. Harker, a pioneer pottery man, and died at East Liverpool, Ohio; George, who went to Colorado after his parents' death and died there; Benjamin, who lived on the old home farm and for whom the Village of Newell was named; and Rev. James, who served as a lieutenant in the Union army during the Civil war, after which he became a minister of the Presbyterian Church, preached locally for a time, then served in California, where he became pastor emeritus of Bethesda Church at Los Angeles, Washington and Jefferson College and Allegheny Seminary.

Hugh Newell, the father of John E. Newell, conducted a mill until coming to Chester with his wife's brother, Alfred Marks, with whom he was in partnership for several years. Later he bought land on Marks' Run, a property of about 500 acres, on which he lived from 1871 until his death in 1903, breeding sheep and clearing up a good deal of land. This old farm, the present residence of his son John E., whose home is but a short distance from that of his brother Samuel, at the old residence, lies about one-half mile back from the Ohio River, up Marks' Run. Hugh's residence was about one mile from the bank at Chester. Hugh Newell was active in securing the building of a bridge across the Ohio River to East Liverpool, served as school trustee, acted as roadmaster and was one of the organizers and the first president of the Hancock County Building and Loan Company. His wife was Alizan Marks, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Perree) Marks. Her maternal grandfather Perree, of French origin, was a manufacturer of guns at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and on moving to Coryopolis, then old Middletown, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, was said to have manufactured the first rifles to be made west of the mountains, these being tested by his daughter Mary, according to her personal statement some years ago to her grandson, John E. Newell. Samuel and Mary (Perree) Marks came to Hancock County about 1818, and their old stone house is still standing, it having been built when their daughter Alizan was about thirteen years of age. Samuel Marks had a 100-acre tract of land, patented by President Washington, including what is now the upper end of Chester. A son, Alfred, succeeded to the ownership, and his old farm is now covered by the Potteries Park, etc., including the old stone house. Alizan Newell, who was born on this farm, in the same year as her husband, died five years later. Her brother Alfred, who passed almost his entire life in the old stone house referred to, died as the result of an accident. Mr. and Mrs. Newell were faithful members of the Presbyterian Church. He was a Union man, an honorable citizen, and a man who was greatly respected in his community. He and his wife had five children: Mary, the widow of Dr. Hamlin Barnes, of Cleveland, Ohio; John E.; Anna, the wife of S. W. Root, of Los Angeles, California; Frank, the owner of a fruit ranch at Bakersfield, California; and Samuel, residing on the old home place as a partner of his brother John E.

John E. Newell received a public school education and as a youth adopted the vocation of farmer, one which he has never relinquished, although numerous other interests have also attracted his attention. In partnership with his brother Samuel he is the owner of 450 acres of land, on which he is carrying on dairying with a herd of Holstein cattle, supplying milk by wholesale. He has also met with success as a fruit grower, raising apples and peaches, with twenty-five acres in fruit, mostly set on the higher land. A few miles inside the "horseshoe," partly surrounded by the Ohio River, constitutes what is recognized as one of the best fruit-growing sections in this part of the United States. The hills are some 500 feet above the river and are comparatively free from frost injury, and even in 1921, a notoriously bad year for fruit, a good apple crop was harvested here.

Mr. Newell is president of the National Bank of Chester, having succeeded the first president, Judge Campbell. He is also president of the Hancock County Building and Loan Company. As a public-spirited citizen he has accepted the responsibilities of public life, and as the regular party nominee was sent to the State Legislature for the session of 1902-1903, during Governor White's term of office. He has since served as county commissioner, the county jail and residence of the sheriff being erected during his term of office, and during the World war he was chairman of the Hancock County Draft Board. With his family he belongs to the Presbyterian Church at Chester, in which he is president of the board of trustees.

Mr. Newell married Miss Minnie Rose, of Chester, daughter of Samuel F. and Martha (Pugh) Rose, Mr. Rose having been an early merchant of Chester, now deceased. Mrs. Rose was a daughter of John Pugh, of the family who settled Pughtown, the old county seat of Hancock County. The five children of Mr. and Mrs. Newell all reside with their parents, being: Helen R., a teacher at Chester; Martha M., a teacher at Newell; Frances E., a teacher in the high school at Newell; Rachael E., a student in the West Virginia University, from which she will graduate as a member of the class of 1924; and John Roseco, who is attending the high school at Chester.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CHESTER. During the twenty years of its existence the First National Bank of Chester has developed into one of the strongest financial organizations for a community of its size to be found in the northern part of the State of West Virginia, and one which has won its standing in banking circles and in the confidence of the general public through a strong yet conservative policy, honorable representation and the connection therewith of men of known integrity and probity.

This financial institution was opened October 15, 1903, its original capital being $50,000. The original board of directors included the following: Judge Joseph A. Campbell, president, now deceased; Joseph N. Finley, vice president, as now; F. W. Stewart, now deceased; John R. Donahue, now deceased; James Porter, now deceased; C. F. Allison, at that time sheriff of Hancock County, and now deceased; John E. Newell; John D. Stewart, now deceased; J. H. Maxwell; George R. Ahrends; Mark Miller; A. B. Allison; S. E. Calhoun; and T. R. Cunningham, now deceased. O. O. Allison was the first cashier, but was not then a member of the board of directors.

Since the opening a number of changes have taken place in the personnel of the board, but the same policy of conservatism and honorable conduct has been adhered to. The present board consists of the following: John E. Newell, president; O. O. Allison, cashier; Joseph N. Finley, first vice president; George E. Lewis, M. D., second vice president; J. C. Cunningham, E. C. Stewart, Robert R. Hobbs, S. A. Stewart, J. M. Calhoun and R. M. Ramsey.

The present home of this banking house, which was erected in 1907, at a cost of $20,000, includes the bank, a store and general offices overhead. At the close of business December 31, 1921, the resources of the bank were over $790,000, and the deposits over $600,000.

HANCOCK COUNTY BUILDING AND LOAN COMPANY. The wonderful growth of realty values during the '90s in Northern West Virginia brought to the forefront a class of men who for general ability, astuteness and driving force have been seldom surpassed in the annals of trade in this section. It is all well enough to say that conditions develop men, but it is better and more accurate to state that men bring about conditions. Hancock County owes what it is to the men who had the courage to persevere, to act wisely and to keep their operations clean in one of the most difficult fields of endeavor.

In 1899, when Chester was but a small village, the urgent demand for more homes made the time opportune for the organization and operation of a modern savings and loan association in the community. The original plan of the Hancock County Building and Loan Company was developed and formulated by a few of the leading citizens in the latter part of 1899, and December 31 of that year the association was incorporated under the laws of the State of West Virginia, by S. T. Herbert, G. Y. Travis, N. G. MacCrum, J. W. Gipner, O. C. Vodrey, C. A. Smith, S. F. Rose, W. N. Voegtly, William Banfield, J. E. McDonald and Hugh Newell, with a total subscription of $6,100 as the capital thereof, and paid in on said subscriptions, $610. On January 10, 1900, the stockholders met and elected the following directors: Hugh Newell, C. A. Smith, J. E. McDonald, S. T. Herbert, S. F. Rose, J. W. Gipner, G. Y. Travis, O. C. Vodrey and W. N. Voegtly. The board then organized by electing Hugh Newell, president; C. A. Smith, vice president; S. T. Herbert, secretary; N. G. MacCrum, treasurer; and G. Y. Travis, attorney.

The Hancock County Building and Loan Company commenced business in a modest and unassuming manner March 8, 1900, and for four years thereafter its office and place of meetings were in the law offices of Herbert & Travis at East Liverpool, Ohio. The first application for a loan was made by James S. Cochrane, of Chester, and was granted. The first secretary received a salary of $25 per year for the years 1900 and 1901, $50 for the year 1902, and $9 for the year 1903. On March 17, 1904, the offices of the association were removed to the rooms of the First National Bank of Chester, West Virginia, and S. T. Herbert having resigned as secretary and N. G. MacCrum as treasurer, O. O. Allison was elected to the dual office of secretary-treasurer.

During the early days of the life of the association it was impossible to supply the money necessary to make the loans required by the people of Chester and the vicinity, and realizing that the home is the bulwark of civilization, that every individual or institution that makes it easier for the general public to build or purchase a home adds strength and perpetuity to their government and prosperity to their community, the board of directors resolved to put forth every effort to induce the people to become members of the association, which has resulted in hundreds of people building and owning their own homes.

The men behind the company are responsible for its success. They are not new in this section of the country nor are they new to the building and loan business. They have been born and reared in this part of the country and hence know the value of the property upon which they make loans. The association is now firmly established in the confidence and esteem of the people of West Virginia and adjoining states, as the best place in this section of the country to save money at an earning rate of not less than 5 per cent per annum compounded semi-annually, or to borrow money on easy terms either on farm or city property. This splendid reputation has been secured by prompt service, fair dealing, safe business methods and economical management during the more than twenty years of its existence.

The present officers of the company are: John E. Newell, president; A. B. Allison, vice president; O. O. Allison, secretary; Daniel S. Dawson, assistant secretary; O. O. Allison, treasurer. Perry L. Rigby, attorney, and these gentlemen (with the exception of Mr. Dawson), form the board of directors, together with the following: R. W. Pugh, Thomas C. Glenn, Robert R. Hobbs, Thomas G. Stewart, A. L. Skinner, Frank Finley, W. W. Thompson, J. C. Cunningham, J. S. D. Mereer, Thomas R. Timothy and George E. Conkle.

EDMUND L. HENSLEY. Among the labors to which men devote their activities there are none which have a more important bearing upon the business and financial welfare of any community than those of the business educator. The community which may boast of able and energetic workers in this field seldom want for enterprise and civic zeal. In his connection mention is made of Edmund L. Hensley, proprietor of the West Virginia Business College of Huntington, a man of broad, varied and thorough experience, who has developed an institution that is accounted one of the leaders of its kind in the state.

Mr. Hensley was born in Bath County, Kentucky, July 31, 1881, a son of Edmund C. Hensley. His great-grandfather, Samuel, came from near Jamestown, Virginia, and took up a claim at or near the present site of Catlettsburg, Kentucky, prior to or about the time of the Revolutionary war, in which community was born the grandfather of Edmund L. Hensley, Richardson Hensley, in 1821. He became a pioneer near Holbrook, Kentucky, where he was engaged in farming all his life, and in his death, which occurred in 1888, his locality lost one of its enterprising agriculturists and dependable citizens.

Edmund C. Hensley was born December 14, 1848, at Holbrook, Kentucky, and was reared and educated in that community, but as a young man went to Bath County, where he was married and where he carried on agricultural pursuits for many years. In 1904 he retired from active pursuits and settled at the home of his son, with whom he now lives. He is a democrat in politics and a member of the Christian Church, of which he is a strong supporter. Mr. Hensley married Miss Lydia Hall, who was born in Bath County, Kentucky, in 1853, and died in that county in 1893. Of their two children, Edmund L. and Elbert, the latter is a graduate of Bethany (West Virginia) College, and is now a minister of the Christian Church at Sparta, Kentucky.

Edmund L. Hensley received his education in the public schools of Salt Lick, Bath County, Kentucky, where he was graduated from the high school with the class of 1899, and for a number of years taught in the rural districts of that county. In 1904 he left the educator's profession temporarily, accepting employment with the Cherry River Boom and Lumber Company of Richwood, Nicholas County, West Virginia, but in 1909 again became an instructor, when he went to Clarksburg, West Virginia, and taught in the

Edsel Hensley

West Virginia Business College until 1911. In that year he removed to Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, and became principal of the commercial department of the high school, a position which he retained for one year, and January 1, 1913, came to Huntington as instructor in the West Virginia Business College. During the summer of the same year he became proprietor of this institution by purchase, and since has built up this college to one of the leaders of its kind in the state. It has more than a state-wide reputation, as its pupils are attracted not only from all over West Virginia, but from Ohio, Kentucky and other states as well. The college occupies the entire third floor of the Miller Building and is complete in every department. Mr. Hensley is independent in politics, and a member of the Christian Church, in which he officiates as a deacon. He holds membership in the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and the Huntington Business Men's Association, and is active in civic affairs. His comfortable home is located at 1110 Eleventh Avenue, in a desirable residence district of the city.

In 1911, in Braxton County, West Virginia, Mr. Hensley married Miss Bessie Riffe, who was born in Braxton County, and is a normal school graduate. She was a school teacher prior to her marriage to Mr. Hensley, and is now his assistant in the college. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hensley: Edmund, born November 1, 1912; and Eluda, born May 13, 1914, both attending the Huntington schools.

GEORGE CAMPBELL. During a long, useful and active career George Campbell has applied himself to the vocation of agriculture with such good results that he is now accounted one of the substantial men of the Holliday's Cove community of Hancock County. He has brought to his work industry, energy, careful application of modern methods and intelligent management of the various departments of farm work, and has thus developed a property as attractive as it is valuable. Also, while so doing he has gained and held the well wishes, esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Campbell was born on the farm where he now lives, June 7, 1851, a son of Robert and Margaret (Purdy) Campbell, the latter a sister of James Purdy, the father of James A. Purdy, a sketch of whose career will be found elsewhere in this work. Robert Campbell was born September 27, 1803, at Furnace Place on King's Creek, Hancock County, a son of Alexander Campbell, who should not be confused with the old minister of that name, being not even of the same immediate family. Alexander Campbell was a son of James Campbell, a native of Scotland, who settled here about 1780, and it is thought that Alexander was born in this locality. James Campbell bought the old Farr Furnace, which was the first vest of the mountains, and at which much of the ammunition and cannons were manufactured for Commodore Perry on Fort Erie, as well as ammunition used by General Jackson at the memorable battle of New Orleans during the War of 1812.

Alexander Campbell married Jane Bell, a neighbor girl, whose nephew, William Bell, still follows the vocation of miller in the same community. Following his marriage Mr. Campbell came to the "Hill," as a certain section is known, a part of which is included in the present farm of George Campbell and is located about one mile from Veerton. His father, James, then died, leaving him 500 acres of land in a tract that had been secured from the government when Patrick Henry was governor of Virginia, and in addition to this Mr. Campbell also owned other lands, so that he was able to give farms to his five sons. Later he sold his remaining property and went to Illinois. His sons were: Alexander, who sold his farm, removed to Illinois, and died in the West; Archibald, who removed to Van Buren County, Iowa, where he died; David and Daniel, the latter of whom also removed to the West and passed away there; and Robert. David and Robert, the only sons to remain, received the 500-acre farm with one sister, Elizabeth who married a Mr. Casson and lived near Parkersburg, West Virginia. Polly, another sister, married Morris Baker and removed to Hardin County, Ohio, and a third sister, Patience, remained a maiden and died in old age at Steubenville, Ohio. David continued to live on his farm during the remainder of his life, and since his death the property has been sold.

Robert Campbell, as before noted, secured a part of the 500-acre farm, on which he spent his entire married life, during which he added 165 acres to the property. This he gave to his eldest son, John P., who is now living in Arkansas at the advanced age of ninety-one years. Robert Campbell died at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife, Margaret, having died when she was sixty-three years of age, in his declining years he married Alice Linduff, who survived him some years, without issue. By his first marriage he had the following children: John P.; Jane, who married Daniel Stansbury and died in Hancock County; Cyrus, who became a physician and surgeon and went to Missouri, where he practiced until his death; William, who removed to Missouri and died there; Elizabeth, who married Ephraim Evans and died on a farm in Washington County, Pennsylvania; James, who went to New Mexico as a prospector and miner and died there; Robert A., who followed carpentry at Chester, West Virginia, until his death; Julia, of Wellsville, Ohio, the widow of James Wright; Susanna, who married Francis Ralston and still resides in the Holliday's Cove neighborhood; George, of this notice; and Hiram T., a retired agriculturist now living at Holliday's Cove.

George Campbell was reared on the old home place, attending the public schools, and some time after attaining his majority, in company with his brother, Hiram, he purchased the old farm. They continued to operate the property as partners for twelve years and then divided the land, George securing 150 acres. He sold a part of his coal when it was worth only one-half or one-third what it is today, but for the past several years has mined quite successfully, has received a comfortable income from his extensive orchards and has been prosperous in his work as a breeder of Poland China hogs. He has kept his business on the farm and has found fortune and contentment in his work. Mr. Campbell is a democrat, as has been the family for generations with the exception of two brothers. With his family he belongs to the Presbyterian Church at Holliday's Cove.

At the age of twenty-four years Mr. Campbell was united in marriage with Miss Alice Hammond, daughter of William Hammond, an old-time teacher now living at the Cove. Mrs. Campbell became her father's housekeeper when she was fourteen years of age, and continued to act as such until she was married. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Campbell: Charles L., a sketch of whose career will be found on another page of this work; Robert Elmer, of Holliday's Cove, formerly a teacher in the public schools but now a car inspector on the Pennsylvania Railroad, married Bessie Brice and has three children, Robert Brice, Mary Brown and Kenneth; Walter Hammond, formerly a car inspector on the Pennsylvania Railroad and now carrying on operations on a part of the home farm, married Ma Leonora Gilmore and has four children, Fred H., Walter B., Pauline Roberta and Virginia Belle; and Jessie Agnes, the wife of David Diekie Mercer, of East Liverpool, Ohio, formerly a teacher, as was she, and later a machinist in the foundry, and now deceased, and they had two children, Alice M. and Walter.

ABSALOM L. CARTER. Prominent among the representatives of the agricultural industry of Brooke County is Absalom L. Carter, a member of an old and honored family, who now resides two miles from Follansbee, on the Eldersville Road. Mr. Carter has followed farming and stock breeding all his life, at various times has been identified with other lines of endeavor, and his career has been a successful and gratifying one, both from the viewpoint of material gain and from that of securing the good will and esteem of those with whom he has been associated.

Mr. Carter was born on the old Carter homestead, the present home of his brother, E. C. Carter, about two miles east of his present home, November 8, 1857, a son of Samuel and Michal (Wells) Carter. Michal Wells was born June 1, 1816, and died in January, 1892. She was a daughter of Absalom Wells, a son of Charles Wells, who is said to have had twenty children, the twentieth having been named Twenty. Twenty Wells died at the age of sixteen years and was buried at Sistersville, West Virginia. The life of Absalom Wells was spent mainly in Brooke County. His wife was Helen Owings, of Ellicott's Mills, near Baltimore, Maryland, where she was born in 1771 and married in 1798. She was so delicate that her physician said she could not live to reach the "Far West," but she not only did that but lived to rear a large family and to attain the remarkable age of ninety-seven years.

Samuel Carter was born August 8, 1817, in Brooke County, West Virginia. He died October 26, 1898, and was buried in St. Johns Cemetery. He was a son of Joseph Carter, who lived on Pot Rock Run, Brooke County, a native of Winchester, Shenandoah Valley, Virginia. He was a plasterer by vocation, reached old age, and was buried at Franklin, Brooke County. His father, also named Joseph, was buried at Cadich Chapel, while his mother was laid to rest at West Liberty. The children of the younger Joseph Carter were: Lewis, a farmer and plasterer and a great worker in the Baptist Church, in which he was a deacon, who lived on a nearby farm and reached the age of seventy-five years; Joseph, who went to Kansas City, Missouri, and there died; Samuel; John, who went to La-Grange, Indiana, and there spent the remainder of his life; and Hilary and Cephas, twins, the former of whom went to Montezuma, Iowa, and there died, while the latter lived on a farm near Fowlerstown, West Virginia.

The Carter family was founded in America prior to the Revolutionary war by two English brothers of the name, who settled in the Colony of Virginia, where the old Carter house is still standing. Colonel Carter, an officer of General Washington's army, was home on a furlough, so runs the story, when an English officer, with a detachment of men, learning of his presence, decided to capture him. In the meantime word had been taken to General Washington of his officer's predicament, and he hurriedly sent a squad of patriot soldiers. Colonel Carter, defending himself and his home from the enemy, fought a duel with the British officer on the stairway, on the banisters of which can still be found the hacking of the swords. It is related that the timely arrival of the patriot troops turned the tables and that the English officer and his men had to submit to capture. After his marriage to Michal Wells, January 21, 1844, the most of Samuel Carter's life was spent on the old home farm, and he accumulated some 190 acres, including the present farm of E. C. Carter. He belonged at Cross Creek to the United Presbyterian Church, or "tent," the latter name being used because the early services were held under a canvas cover. Mrs. Carter, like all the members of her family, was a Primitive Baptist, and attended the old Cross Creek Baptist Church at Hunter's Mill. They were the parents of four children to grow to maturity: Pauline, who passed her life as a maiden with her parents and died August 18, 1872; Mary, who also remained unmarried and died at the home of her parents December 4, 1879; Eli C., who is carrying on operations on the old home farm; and Absalom L.

Absalom L. Carter passed his boyhood amid agricultural surroundings on the old home place, obtaining his education in the common schools. On October 4, 1884, he was united in marriage with Miss Jane R. Walker, a sister of James M. Walker, mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Carter was born on the old Walker homestead, adjoining the old Carter place, October 26, 1859, and resided on that property until the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Carter commenced housekeeping on their present property December 23, 1884. This is the old Elson farm, patented in 1785 by one Rich Elson, the grandfather of the last Elson owner, Mitchell Elson, who sold the place to Samuel Carter in 1877. Absalom L. Carter has since reduced the property, which now contains sixty-five acres, a large part of which was given over to the raising of sheep as long as that industry was profitable. His coal he sold some years ago, before the high prices had set in. Mr. Carter has modern improvements on his property, and his comfortable home was erected in 1900.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter are members of the First United Presbyterian Church at Steubenville, Ohio, located 4½ miles distant from their home. Mr. Carter is a democrat, and the Carters have always been a democratic family. He has not sought office, but has served as a member of the board of reviews since the organization of that body. He served as vice president of the Brooke County Farm Bureau, and was a charter member thereof, and has been a director in the Pan Handle Mutual Insurance Company of which he is now vice president. He was a director and vice president of the Pan Handle Agricultural Club of Brooke and Ohio counties, one of the earliest clubs formed.

Mrs. Carter's mother was Hannah R. McConnell, daughter of Robert and Jane (Hawke) McConnell, natives of Ireland who on their arrival in the United States settled in Jefferson County, Ohio, just outside the City of Steubenville. They were charter members of the First United Presbyterian Church at Steubenville, as were Mrs. Jane R. Carter and Mrs. Hannah Walker. The last-named was one of the first subscribers for the United Presbyterian paper published at Pittsburgh and continued as such throughout her life. On the occasion of her fiftieth anniversary her picture was published in this publication. Mr. and Mrs. Carter have no children.

FRANK P. BEAUMONT, M. D. It is not unusual for the male members of a certain family to follow the same profession or vocation through several generations, and this is particularly true in the medical profession, where son frequently inherits a predilection for the calling and passes it on down to a son of his own. In this connection it is interesting to note that four generations of the Beaumont family have practiced medicine in Hancock County, and that the name is one that is prominent and highly esteemed in medical circles and held in the highest of confidence by the people.

In the third generation of Beaumonts who have become physicians and surgeons is found Dr. Frank P. Beaumont, of New Cumberland, a skilled and thorough practitioner and a man of prominence and influence. He was born at New Cumberland, August 5, 1865, a son of Dr. Godfrey L. and N. A. (Campbell) Beaumont. His grandfather, Dr. William Beaumont, was born in England where he received his education and as a young man came to Lisbon, Ohio, where he engaged in the manufacture of woollens. He was likewise a minister of the Christian Church, in which he preached for many years, but eventually came to New Cumberland, West Virginia, where he applied himself to the practice of medicine until his death, which occurred in old age.

Godfrey L. Beaumont was born in Ohio, but as a youth was brought to New Cumberland. He inherited a love for the medical profession, and prepared himself partly under the teaching of his father and partly by attendance at a medical school. In 1869 he commenced the practice of his profession, and applied himself thereto assiduously and without interruption until his death in 1891, when he was but fifty-four years of age. His wife, a member of the well-known family which formerly owned a large part of the land upon which is now located the town of New Cumberland, has spent her entire life here and still survives at the age of eighty years.

Frank P. Beaumont was given the advantages of a high school education at New Cumberland, following which he entered upon his preparation for the following of a medical career. He did some preliminary work prior to entering the Eclectic Medical College at Cincinnati, where he pursued a full course and received his degree of Doctor of Medicine, and later took postgraduate work in New York City. Doctor Beaumont commenced the practice of his profession at New Cumberland in 1887 in association with his father, and this connection continued until the elder man's death four years later. Doctor Beaumont has risen to a recognized place in the ranks of his calling in Hancock County, and has adhered closely to the Eclectic teaching. He belongs to the Eclectic medical societies, both state and national. He was a member of the Board of Pension Examiners for many years, served as county health officer for twenty years and has been a town health officer for a decade. During the World war he also acted on the Draft Board, and since the close of that struggle has been an examiner in connection with the Veteran's Bureau. In politics he is a staunch republican.

Doctor Beaumont married Miss Maggie B. Joseph, who was reared at Toronto, Ohio, a daughter of John A. Joseph. Four children have been born to this union: Dr. Dudley H., a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and now engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at New Cumberland; Helene L., a graduate of Bethany College; Frank C., a student in the dental college of the University of Pittsburgh; and Godfrey L., who is attending high school.

Dr. Dudley H. Beaumont, while a graduate of the regular school of medicine, uses much of the Eclectic system, and since 1921 has been associated in practice with his father. He is in the fourth generation of doctors of the Beaumont name to practice in this community, and attends the same families as have his father, grandfather and great-grandfather before him. For about seventy years a Doctor Beaumont has been counselor and medical advisor at birth, through life and during the last illness of dozens of families, amounting to thousands of individuals. Fraternally Dr. Beaumont is a Mason and religiously is a Presbyterian.

THE MACK MANUFACTURING COMPANY. There is no doubt but that concentration along any one line is productive of the best results. The man or the corporation who scatter their energies, trying first one line and then another, waste their forces and time, and when they eventually settle down to something definite have neither the opportunity nor the vitality to develop properly. Especially has his been true during recent years, when competition has become so strenuous as to demand undivided attention to one given avenue of activity. The men who thus apply themselves not only increase their own material holdings, but by providing employment for many become important factors in the economic world. In this connection mention is made of the Mack Manufacturing Company, whose extensive operations in the New Cumberland community of Hancock County have been confined to a given line of production, the manufacture of brick.

The general offices of the Mack Manufacturing Company are located at Wheeling, in the old German National Bank Building, sixth floor, where are found the rooms of the operating head and the board of directors. The five plants in Hancock County are all located within a space of eight miles, these being the Crescent, Actna, Union and Rocky Side, above New Cumberland on the Ohio River, devoted to the manufacture of brick; and the Sligo, three miles south of New Cumberland, the output of which is sewer pipe and paving brick. The present Crescent plant was formerly the Copper and Middle Clifton, owned by Atkinson, Porter & Company, the product of which, common building brick, was sent by flat-boats down the Ohio River until several years ago. The Upper Clifton Plant was formerly owned by Smith, Porter & Company, who at one time controlled all the Clifton plants, and these plants were eventually consolidated into the Crescent. The Actna was owned formerly by the Moneypenny interests, and then sold to the John Porter Company, in connection with the Eagle, which was later dismantled, the Union and the Rocky Side. The John Porter Company bought the Smith, Porter & Company interests, and then sold out to the Mack interests of Philadelphia, the business at that time adopting the style of the Mack Manufacturing Company. The Sligo Plant had also been owned by the John Porter Company.

The Mack Manufacturing Company in its various plants has a daily capacity of 300,000 paving brick, made of shale and fire clay. There are 400 men on the pay-roll, which approximates $50,000 normally per month, and of these 400 men about 125 are used in the mining of the clay and shale.

In all, the plants cover ten acres, while the company owns several hundred acres outright and the mineral rights to many more acres, so that the future insures an adequate supply of clay, shale and coal. The latter lies on top of the clay and is taken out at the same time. Sales are made direct to customers throughout West Virginia, in the New England States and North Carolina.

George O. Bowles, general superintendent of the plants of the Mack Manufacturing Company, was born in Belmont County, Ohio, and as a young man adopted the vocation of teaching in the public schools. Later he pursued a business course at the Elliott Business College, Wheeling, and in 1904 became an employe in the offices of his present company under S. G. Gaillard, then manager of the concern, and former assistant to the president of the Norfolk & Western Railway. His industry, ability and fidelity were recognized by Mr. Gaillard, who advanced him to the position of his assistant, and in 1914 Mr. Bowles was made superintendent of the plants, a position which he has retained to the present. His work has been satisfactory to his superiors, and perhaps much of his success lies in the fact that his relations with the employes have always been of the friendliest character. Many of these old-time employes own homes and other property of their own, and the plant has experienced no labor troubles.

Mr. Bowles married Miss Katherine Robertson, daughter of Rev. A. W. Robertson, formerly an attorney and prosecutor of Hancock County, and later a minister, but now an invalid and retired at New Cumberland. Mr. and Mrs. Bowles are the parents of two children: George O., Jr., who is attending the New Cumberland High School; and Ruth.

WALTER LOUIS FERGUSON has practiced law at Huntington for ten years, and in that time has widened his reputation throughout his district, both as an accomplished lawyer and as an earnest citizen with the abilities that count for leadership everywhere.

Mr. Ferguson was born at Huntington September 18, 1879. The Ferguson family came out of Scotland and settled in Virginia in Colonial times. Mr. Ferguson's great-grandfather, Lewis S. Arthur, was a Revolutionary soldier. His grandfather, John Ferguson, was an early settler in West Virginia. He was born in Fluvanna County, old Virginia, in 1818, was reared in America, and subsequently established his home in what is now Putnam County, on the Kanawha River in West Virginia. His wife, Lucy Arthur, came to what is now West Virginia in the early '60s. In addition to operating his farm he owned and conducted a blacksmith, wagon making and repair shop. A notable incident of his life is that he shod the horses of the famous James Brothers just prior to the robbery of the Huntington Commercial Bank, now known as the Huntington National Bank. John Ferguson died at Huntington in 1896.

His son, John Henry Ferguson, was born at Red House, Putnam County, in 1850, but since 1862 has lived at Huntington. For many years he has been a leading general contractor of that city. He is a staunch republican and a member of the Masonic fraternity. John Henry Ferguson, married Lucy Frances Roberts, a daughter of Absalom Roberts, an early family of Virginia. She was born in Cabell County in 1850. A brief record of their children is as follows: John A., a painting contractor at Huntington; Sallie Belle, wife of Charles W. McClure, Jr., who for the past thirty years has been a machinist in the Huntington Shops of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad; Cola, wife of Charles Neutzing, connected with the Nicholson-Kendle Furniture Company of Huntington; Charles Henry, a general contractor of Huntington; Walter Louis; Emmett Blaine, a furniture dealer at Huntington; and Clarence McKinley, a general contractor.

Walter Louis Ferguson as a youth attended the grammar and high schools of Huntington, and for five years he studied law in the office of Judge Lewis D. Isbell. Mr. Ferguson was admitted to the bar in 1911, and at once began his work as a general practitioner. In his practice he has handled many important cases in the local, state and federal courts, and has appeared a number of times in what is known as the Tri-State District. His offices are in the Prindle Building on Fourth Avenue.

Mr. Ferguson is a republican, holds a commission as a notary public, is affiliated with the First Methodist Episcopal Church, is a member of the Huntington Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, and the Cabell County Bar Association. He was one of the county leaders in the various organizations and the patriotic program during the World war, serving as a member of the Legal Advisory Board of the county, and giving a large amount of his time to assisting the recruits in filling out their questionnaires.

On January 1, 1914, at Parkersburg, he married Miss Ethel Josephine Cohn, daughter of Henry C. and Margaret (Barkwill) Cohn, residents of St. Marys, Pleasants County, where her father is a merchant. Mrs. Ferguson was well educated in music, being a skilled pianist. Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson have three children: Walter Louis, Jr., born November 11, 1914; Henry Cohn, who died at the age of nine months; and Margaret Jane, born November 14, 1918.

CHARLES B. YOUNG, a veteran in the laundry business, has been identified with laundry management and operation at Charleston for over twenty years, and is manager of the Superior Laundry, perhaps the last word in laundry construction, facilities and operation in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. Young was born at Charleston in 1886. His father, Peter Young, was a well-known business man in Charleston, where he entered the grocery business in 1867. Charles B. Young was reared and educated in Charleston, and for years he and his brothers owned and operated the American Laundry, a plant they sold in 1920.

Charles B. Young, a member of the firm Young Brothers, utilized his long experience and study and his widely diversified knowledge of the laundry industry in constructing and planning the new Superior Laundry, at the corner of Kanawha and Truslow streets. He had personal charge of all the details of building this plant, which was completed and opened for business July 12, 1921.

Without exaggeration this is one of the finest and most modern laundries in the United States, and represents the ultimate ideal of laundry practice and operation. The building is of brick, of good architectural style, and affords floor space of 14,000 square feet under one roof. A feature deserving of special commendation is the lighting and ventilation, there being 3,500 square feet of glass in the one room. All the flooring is concrete, and the interior finish is plain and sanitary, easily cleaned, and kept constantly and spotlessly clean. The atmosphere of the place is wholesome, an ideal place for those who spend their working days there. The motto of the laundry is "Modern to the Minute," and Mr. Young is to be congratulated upon realizing in the construction and operating details this ideal. A few months after the plant was put in operation Mr. Young added $3,000 worth of the latest machinery. As to the capacity of the laundry its rating is 100 shirts per hour. All the washing, drying, ironing and other machines are of the latest models. One of the most noteworthy is a washer of solid brass for perfect sterilization. All the machines are electrically controlled, the motor driven apparatus being so constructed as to afford individual control to each machine, while all may be controlled together from one switchboard. The engine and boiler rooms are perfect in their equipment for the steam heating of water.

THE MERCHANTS AND MINERS BANK OF WELCH was organized in 1920 by Bernard O. Swope, formerly cashier of the First National Bank. This institution has enjoyed phenomenal growth, and in spite of competition from two strong banks has accumulated deposits during the first year of more than half a million dollars. It has a capital of $100,000, its surplus is $20,000, and at the present time plans have been made for the erection of an office building, the ground floor of which will be used as the banking room and foreign exchange department of the bank. The officers are: Bernard O. Swope, president; A. F. Leckie, vice president; and B. W. Ellis, cashier.

ROBERT R. HOBBS. Included among the men who have the responsibility for good government in Hancock County on their shoulders is Robert R. Hobbs, occupying the position of clerk of the County Court. Mr. Hobbs is well known to the people of the county as an efficient, energetic and conscientious official, for he is now serving his second six-year term in his present office, and prior to becoming the incumbent thereof had acted in other public capacities. He has spent his entire life in the county, where he has been the architect of his own fortunes.

Mr. Hobbs was born at Fairview, Hancock County, September 5, 1875, a son of John Wesley and Elizabeth Jane (Brenneman) Hobbs. The mother of John Wesley Hobbs was Margaret Ray, a daughter of Joseph Ray, said to have been a Revolutionary soldier, who settled on Brown's Island, six miles below New Cumberland in the Ohio River, and reached an advanced age, being buried at Pughtown. The father of John Wesley Hobbs was Leonard Hobbs, who died at the age of thirty-four years at Wellsburg. John W. Hobbs was sheriff of Hancock County during the Civil war period, following which he became a merchant at Pughtown. In 1881 he was elected to the State Legislature, when the capital was at Wheeling, and after completing his term of office returned to his store at Pughtown, in which community he died at the age of seventy years. Elizabeth Brenneman was a daughter of Jacob Brenneman, a descendant of the original settler of the county, Jacob Nessley, whose home was opposite the mouth of Yellow Creek, Ohio, but over the West Virginia line. There Elizabeth had been brought at two years of age and was reared on the farm in the Ohio Valley. She died at the advanced age of eighty-two years.

Robert R. Hobbs secured his education at Pughtown, where he lived until reaching the age of sixteen years, at that time becoming an employe of a merchant at Hookstown, Pennsylvania. At the end of three years he went to Pittsburgh, where he became a clerk for Joseph Hern & Company, and then ran a store at Chester, West Virginia, until 1909, when he was elected sheriff of Hancock County. After spending four years in that capacity he returned to his mercantile operations at Chester, and applied himself thereto without interruption until elected clerk of the County Court for a period of six years, on the republican ticket. When his term expired the citizens, in looking back over his record, found it so satisfactory that he was chosen to succeed himself for another six-year term, and is still the capable, conscientious incumbent of that position.

Mr. Hobbs married Miss Effie K. Knowles, of East Liverpool, Ohio, and to this union there have been born four children: Robert Knowles, who graduated from the high school at Chester, West Virginia, in 1922; Ruth Louise, who is attending high school; and Mildred Elizabeth and Ralph Brenneman, who are attending the graded schools. Mr. Hobbs has a number of civic and social connections, and is accounted one of the progressive men of his community, where he has numerous friends.

J. S. D. MERCER, sheriff of Hancock County, occupies his present position because of his fearlessness as an officer, his executive talents, and his courteous and pleasing personality. This is his second occupancy of the office, prior to becoming the incumbent of which he had filled other posts, and his entire record from the time that he started out to make his own way in the world has been one of steadfast effort, marked industry and conscientious performance of the duties of public and private life.

Sheriff Mercer was born in Grant District, in the north end of Hancock County, on Mercer's Run, where his great-grandfather, William Mercer, had settled about 1800, upon his arrival from Washington County, Pennsylvania. One of his ancestors was General Mercer, a noted officer of the Revolutionary war. The father of J. S. D. Mercer was Robert Mercer, a school teacher in Hancock County for some years, and later engaged in the furniture and undertaking business at Hookstown, Pennsylvania, where he was taken sick. Then he removed to Hancock County where he died at the early age of thirty-five years. Robert Mercer married Sarah Elizabeth Allison, a daughter of Jonathan Allison, Jr., a descendant of James Allison, one of the earliest settlers of the north end of Hancock County, the old home being on a fork of Tomlin's Run. There were two children who reached maturity: J. S. D.; and J. W. F., a blacksmith of Chester, West Virginia.

J. S. D. Mercer was five years of age when his father died, and he was taken into the home of his maternal grandfather, Jonathan Allison, a large land owner. He attended the public schools and was reared on the original Allison homestead, where he remained until twenty-one years of age, then learning the carpenter's trade, at which he worked for about fourteen years, mainly at East Liverpool, Ohio. His first public office was that of town clerk of Chester, in which he served for one term, being then elected mayor of Chester, an office in which he acted with excellent executive ability for two terms. When he left that office he was chosen county assessor, and served one term, and in 1912 was first elected sheriff of Hancock County, and was the incumbent of that office for four years. During the four years that followed the expiration of his term he was engaged in business successfully as a building contractor, but again in 1920 re-entered public life when he was elected sheriff as the nominee of the republican party. He ran far ahead of his ticket. Sheriff Mercer devotes his entire time to the duties of his office, and is one of the best officials the county has known. He requires only one deputy, this being his son, M. D. Mercer, and the affairs of the office are taken care of in an efficient and expeditious manner, much to the satisfaction of the people of the county. Sheriff Mercer is courageous in action, prompt and energetic, and possesses more than the average detective ability, which has assisted him in making the county a law-abiding community. He has the support of all good citizens.

Sheriff Mercer married Miss Martha B. Allison, of the same stock of Allisons from which he descends, her mother being a Pugh of Pughtown. Five children have been born to them: James Raymond, D. S., who is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Akron, Ohio; Merwyn D., his father's deputy in the sheriff's office; Thelma Elizabeth, a teacher in the public schools of New Cumberland; and Martha E. and Mary L., who graduated from the high school at New Cumberland as members of the class of 1922. The family was reared in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which Sheriff Mercer belonged until recently, when he transferred his membership to the Presbyterian Church at New Cumberland. As a fraternalist he belongs to the Knights of Pythias; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has passed through the chairs and at one time sat in the Grand Lodge; and the Junior Order United American Mechanics, in which he has also passed through the chairs.

ROY EARL PARRISH. Of the Gold Stars set in West Virginia's honor roll of soldier dead in the great war, one represents Roy Earl Parrish, a son of Thomas Jefferson Parrish, the Clarksburg business man and banker. He left a secure place in his profession and the honors of politics and public office to become a soldier, and in that new and strange role, until his death, he expressed, as the tributes of his superiors and comrades testified, some of the most noteworthy characteristics of the American soldier.

A son of Thomas J. and Mary (Morgan) Parrish, he was born at Wallace, Harrison County, November 27, 1888. He was educated in the public schools, graduated from West Virginia Wesleyan College, studied law in West Virginia University, was admitted to the bar at Clarksburg in 1910, and was engaged in practice until he went into the army. In 1912 he was elected to the House of Delegates, serving through the session of 1913, and in 1914 was elected to the State Senate by a large majority from the Twelfth Senatorial District. He was vice-chairman of the Republican State Committee for the first Congressional District, and was chairman of the Republican County Executive Committee of Harrison County. He was a member of the Sigma Chi fraternity and the Clarksburg University Club.

So much for the dire statistics of his life. For the significance of his character and the service he rendered as a civilian and as a soldier a deft record is found in the proceedings of the State Senate for January 21, 1919, a day set apart by formal motion for memorial services in honor of Lieutenant Parrish. From the proceedings of that day it is possible here to quote a portion of only one address, that delivered by his successor in the Senate from the Twelfth District, Harvey W. Harner, a life-long friend of Lieutenant Parrish. Senator Harner, after reviewing his boyhood, his continued interest in his church, the First Methodist Episcopal of Clarksburg, his graduation in 1903 from the Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, the graduation from the University Law School in 1910, his active practice as a member of the Clarksburg bar and the unusual influence he exercised as one of the youngest members of the House of Delegates and the State Senate, took up his patriotic record, and what he said on that point may properly stand as the permanent tribute to this brave young West Virginia officer. The concluding paragraphs of Senator Harner's address are as follows:

"Largely because of the conditions growing out of our entering into the great World war, the Governor of our State called the members of the legislature to assemble here in a second extraordinary session on the fourteenth of May, 1917. Instead of heeding this call of the Governor, instead of seeking the pleasure of your association in legislative work, ROY PARRISH chose to volunteer as a soldier in the American Army, and on the day you assembled here, he entered Fort Benjamin Harrison, at Indianapolis, Indiana, in the training school for officers. In that school he remained until August 15th, when he was commissioned Second Lieutenant of Field Artillery.

"After a few days at home he reported to Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, on September first, and eight days later he was transferred to Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Alabama. Shortly after his arrival at Camp Sheridan, his ability as a soldier and lawyer was recognized and he was made Assistant Judge Advocate, a position he filled until November 15. On November 20, 1917, he was detailed as Judge Advocate and served in that capacity until ordered to prepare for duty overseas. He left Camp Sheridan December 15th, with orders to report in New York City on January 20, 1918. In the few intervening days he visited his friends and family at home, leaving for the last time on January 1st, 1918 for New York. On the 14th of January, he sailed for overseas, and after three weeks, which must have been stormy, he arrived at Liverpool, England, February 5th, and in a few days sailed for France. After arriving in France, he entered an artillery school established by Napoleon Bonaparte for special training, and after three months he was ordered to the front with the Sixth Field Artillery, First Division.

"He was in the big drive at Chateau-Thierry, that spelled success for the Allies and defeat and disaster for the German army.

"On the 6th day of July, DeLano Andrews, Second Lieutenant, Field Artillery, Acting Adjutant, United States Army, wrote his commanding officer: 'The Brigade Commander directs me to communicate to you his commendations of the services of Lieutenant Roy E. PARRISH, 6th F. A. as Liaison Officer with the Infantry. His reports have been clear, intelligent and full of valuable information. They are models of Liaison work and reflect great credit upon Lieutenant Parrish's energy, power of observation and devotion to duty.'

"Later, G. McDowell, First Lieutenant, Field Artillery, United States Army, Acting Adjutant, wrote: 'Lieutenant PARRISH was sent forward on July 18th on Liaison work with the Infantry in the attack on that date. Nothing more was heard of him, and after the attack, when the regiment reassembled, he was missing. About two weeks later a report was secured by me from the captain of the Infantry who had talked with him for a few moments as they were going forward, and a second later this officer saw Lieutenant PARRISH killed by a shell.'

" 'We have buried our dead on a thousand hills
And thousands unburied lie,
In battered village and shattered wood,
Agape at the drenching sky,
Where they poured their blood in the trampled mud
As a witness to God on high—
As the last full price of sacrifice
For that which shall never die.'

"Our own Major John Bond, who has just returned from overseas, met Lieutenant PARRISH shortly before he was killed in action, and where the German shells were falling all around. Major Bond says: 'ROY PARRISH was one of the most fearless men I ever knew. He was a second Roosevelt—never satisfied unless he was in the thickest of the fight.'

"The father of ROY PARRISH sits here at my left. Of his five sons, four followed the flag in this awful war—two crossed the seas and two were on the seas. One that crossed never returned. The other that crossed sits here today.

" 'And some shall come home through a sea of flags
When the cannon their thunder cease;
And some shall lie alone with the sky
In the Valley of Long Release;
And what shall it matter—if freedom stand
On the Rock of Eternal Peace.'

"The heart of this father and these brothers and a sister are sad. Your words today, I am sure, are a comfort and a consolation to them. Brother Senators, knowing this father and these brothers and sister as I do, I know that the greatest comfort and consolation and the greatest hope that fills their hearts today is the fact that Roy has been faithful not only to his country and his flag—for he had never wavered there—but that he had also been faithful to his God, and his soul has a resting place we all hope shall be ours."

Since the return of the troops from France Mr. Parrish has been tireless in his efforts to establish the identity of his son. And we quote herewith from correspondence which Mr. Parrish received from the War Department.

(A) Proximity of the place of death of Lieutenant Parrish and place of original burial of the body, which has been identified as being that of the deceased. Lieut. J. Hamilton, 6th Field Artillery, reports: Lieut. Roy E. Parrish, 6th F. A. was killed July, 1918, and buried in a large shell hole marked with a wooden cross, and tag was attached for identification. This shell hole was in a big open field north of Missy-en-Bois, between there and the railroad from Soissons to Chateau-Thierry, near the town of Brezyl-le-Sec.

(B) The only means of identification found was a canteen cup with the name "Lieut. Faris" inscribed thereon, and in view of the similarity of names, and the fact that the name on the canteen cup may have been corroded to such an extent that in all probability it had been "Parrish," this office arrived at the conclusion that the body contained in grave 178, Section E, Plot 4, American Cemetery, Ploisy, Aisne, is that of Lieutenant Parrish.

The remains of Lieutenant Parrish will be interred with full military honors in an American National Cemetery in France.

"Rest Ye in peace, ye Flanders dead,
The fight ye so bravely led We've taken up, and we will keep True faith with you who lie asleep
With each a cross to mark his bed.
And poppies blooming overhead,
Where once his own life blood ran red,
So let your rest be sweet and deep
In Flanders field.

Fear not that ye had died for naught,
The torch ye threw to us we caught,
Ten million hands will hold it high,
And freedom's light shall never die!
We've learned the lesson that ye taught,
In Flanders field."

THOMAS JEFFERSON PARRISH. Through a life that began the year Abraham Lincoln was first elected to the presidency and came to the responsibilities of manhood more than forty years ago, Thomas Jefferson Parrish has attained to broad experience and successful achievement. A native of Harrison County, he has been a farmer, merchant, timber and lumber man, and has not only attracted within the sphere of his activities important material concerns but has also fulfilled in generous measure the obligations that fall upon the citizen, the home-maker and the father of children in whose training for usefulness he has never been remiss. Four of his sons followed the path of duty that led them into places of danger in the great war.

Mr. Parrish was born on a farm near Wallace, Harrison County, April 5, 1860, son of Silas Newton and Rebecca Ann (King) Parrish, the former born in what is now Marion County, in February, 1835, and the latter in Greene County, Pennsylvania, March 13, 1836. The grandfather, Richard Parrish, was born in Maryland, about 1810, and married a Miss Tetric, a native of West Virginia. Mr. Parrish was an early settler in Marion County, a prosperous farmer and influential citizen, joined the republican party at its organization, and he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They lived out their lives at the old homestead, and were the parents of fourteen children.

Silas Newton Parrish after his marriage located on a farm in Harrison County, and in addition to farming, which was the chief business of his long and successful career, he had other interests, including a lumber business at Wallace, being associated with his son, Thomas J., in that enterprise. Silas N. Parrish died in 1915, at the age of eighty years, and his widow died in her eighty-sixth year. They reared three children: Thomas J., Harriet L., and Florinda B. Florinda is now deceased. Silas Newton Parrish was a loyal and forward looking citizen, who was always ready to assist in progressive movements for the benefit of his home community and county. He was an unreserved republican, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On the home farm Thomas J. Parrish spent his childhood and early youth, attended the public schools, and during these years he acquired a really adequate training for a responsibility that began with manhood. He married at the age of twenty-one, and for a number of years following he devoted his time between farming and merchandising at Wallace. While there, as an associate of his father, he began logging some timber stocks and converting the timber into manufactured lumber. In the fall of 1894 he removed to Beverly, Randolph County, and was engaged in the lumber business there for a time. He returned to Wallace in the spring of 1897, and continued his interests as a merchant in that community until 1910. In the meantime, in 1908, he had established his family home at Clarksburg, in order to give his younger children better school advantages in the county seat.

In later years Mr. Parrish has had a wide variety of business and financial interests. His associates appreciate his sound judgment, his integrity and his enterprise, qualities that have made him a welcome and valuable member of a number of organizations. For several years he has been interested as a producer in the oil, gas and coal industries, and among several concerns with which he is associated the most important are those represented and controlled by the firm of Groves & Parrish, of which he is senior member. He has employed his individual experience and capital in promoting the success of several financial institutions. He helped organize in 1903 the Wallace Bank at Wallace, Harrison County, and from the beginning has been its president. He is a director and stockholder in the Union National Bank, a stockholder in the Empire National Bank of Clarksburg, is president and general manager of the Fort Clark Coal Company, a director and stockholder in the Champion Collieries Company, president and a large stockholder in the Green River Coal Mining Company of Kentucky, and vice president and a stockholder in the Bond County Gas Company of Greenville, Illinois.

Hand in hand with the excellent success that has attended his various business activities has gone the utmost civic loyalty. In the welfare and advancement of his home locality he has devoted twelve years to his duties as a member of the Harrison County Board of Education, and in 1921 he was elected a member of the Clarksburg City Council and has cooperated with all the plans and measures undertaken to give the city an adequate administration. Mr. Parrish is a republican, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Clarksburg Country Club, the Allegheny Club, and the Cheat Mountain Club. In Masonry he is a Knight Templar, a member of the Commandery of Clarksburg, has attained the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, is a Mystic Shriner, and also a member of the Knights of Pythias.

In 1881 Mr. Parrish married Miss Mary J. Morgan, daughter of Coleman and Rachel Morgan. She was born in Doddridge County, was a mere girl when her parents died, and she passed away in 1900. Of the seven children born to Mr. and Mrs. Parrish one died in infancy, and those who reached maturity were Raymer, Charles P., Roy Earl, Lester Glenn, Clair Nelson, and Wilbur Dee. The son, Charles, died at the age of twenty-two. Roy Earl made the supreme sacrifice while serving as a young officer with the American Expeditionary Forces, and a special memorial sketch of him appears above. Lester Glenn was also in the overseas service in the army, and two other sons, Clair N. and Wilbur Dee, were in the navy. The oldest son, Raymer, is associated with his father in business, giving his chief time to the Fort Clark Coal Company.

Mr. Parrish in 1902 married Miss Elsie L. Deem. She died in 1913, and is survived by one daughter, Vera Grove.

HON. ROBERT MORROW BROWN. For several decades Hon. Robert Morrow Brown has been a progressive, and for much of that period a prominent, factor in the business, journalistic, political and public activities of New Cumberland. His standing as a citizen is firm and broad, and as a leader of the republican party his reputation has extended into state-wide influence. Mr. Brown was born at New Cumberland, Hancock County, West Virginia, November 21, 1877, and is a son of Adrian Wilmer and Mary Virginia (Morrow) Brown.

Adrian Wilmer Brown was born at Wellsburg, Brooke County, Ohio, in 1854, his parents being John Danforth and Lucie (Howlett) Brown. John D. Brown, who was born in what is now West Virginia, was a merchant for some years at Wellsburg, where he died aged thirty-nine years, while his wife, who survived him to the age of sixty-three years, was born at Richmond, Virginia. Adrian W. Brown passed his boyhood at Wellsburg, where he received a public school education and as a young man secured a position with the Wellsburg Herald. In 1877 he came to New Cumberland, where he founded the New Cumberland Independent, the first issue of which appeared January 10th of that year, from the same building in which it is now published. This republican weekly, published on an old-fashioned Washington hand press, at once gained a good circulation, due to its general worth and excellence and to its championing of all worthy movements in the way of modern progress and advancement. Mr. Brown remained as editor of this newspaper until 1903, when he retired from active affairs and turned its management over to his son. He died three years later, greatly mourned by those who had come to know his numerous fine qualities of mind and heart. Mr. Brown was circuit clerk for Hancock County from 1890 to 1896. He was a member of the Episcopal Church at Wellsburg, and services were held in his own home at New Cumberland once a month. At Pughtown Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Miss Mary Virginia Morrow, daughter of Alexander and Sarah (Wilson) Morrow, of Pughtown, Mr. Morrow having been proprietor of the old Virginia House at that place when it was the county seat. He was also a justice of the peace for many years. Mrs. Brown died in 1890, leaving two children: Robert Morrow; and Lucie, now the wife of N. W. Ballantyne, a sketch of whose career appears elsewhere in this work. Later Mr. Brown married Ola M. Moore, who survives him, but they had no children.

Robert Morrow Brown attended the public schools of New Cumberland, and after his graduation from the high school enrolled as a student at the West Virginia University, where he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1902 and his Bachelor of Laws degree one year later. Previous to this he had seen service on a daily paper at East Liverpool, and had also been on a paper at Morgantown, so that he was not without experience when he took charge of the Independent at the time of his father's retirement in 1903. The old hand press of former days has gone with other things of its kind, and the office is now electrically equipped throughout, with modern linotype machines and a Babcock press, which has a capacity of from 1,500 to 2,000 per hour. The paper circulates freely, not only in the immediate vicinity of New Cumberland, but into sections of Pennsylvania and Ohio. It is in high favor with its readers because of its practical, well-written and timely editorials, its authentic news features and its various interesting departments, and because it has ever maintained the policy of its founder in supporting all movements promising for advancement and progress along all material and moral lines.

In addition to his newspaper activities Mr. Brown has been engaged in the practice of law, having a large and lucrative practice in all the courts. In 1905 he was elected on the republican ticket as prosecuting attorney, an office in which he served with an excellent record until 1909. In 1912 President Taft appointed him postmaster of New Cumberland, and this office he also held for four years. During the World war period he was exceptionally active, serving on the county committee in the Liberty Loan drives and the Red Cross, and it is to be noted as a significant fact that Hancock always stood high among the counties when the final returns were in. In November, 1920, Mr. Brown was elected to the State Legislature for Hancock County, and during his term was a member of the following committees: Judiciary, Rules, Printing, Forestry and Conservation, Mines and Mining, Labor, Medicine and Sanitation and Redistricting. His record was a worthy one, of much value to his constituency and his state. For the past eight years Mr. Brown has been chairman of the Hancock County Republican Committee. He was in attendance at the national convention that nominated Warren G. Harding for the presidency. As a fraternalist Mr. Brown holds membership in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, and he is also a member of the Kiwanis Club, and Phi Kappa Psi College fraternity. He and his family are entitled to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution and the Daughters of the American Revolution through the service of one of his direct ancestors, Capt. Oliver Brown, buried at Wellsburg, who participated in the winning of American independence.

Mr. Brown married Miss Leora Scott, of Somerset, Pennsylvania, and to their union there has been born one son, John Scott.

HARRY L. BROOKS. Under the modern conditions and organization the police department of a city like Weirton is one of the most important in the municipal service, and its management requires rare abilities of an executive nature, good diplomatic powers in the handling of a force of men so that the machine may run without retarding friction, the bravery of a fearless soldier and the broad judgment of an able general. All of these traits are possessed by Harry L. Brooks, chief of police of Weirton and president of the West Virginia Association of Police Chiefs.

Chief Brooks was born at Grafton, West Virginia, a son of Richard Brooks, for over thirty years a locomotive engineer on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, running out of Clarksburg, West Virginia. He eventually retired, with a splendid record, and died in 1921, at the age of seventy-two years. He was also engaged in police work at Clarksburg, and continued to give the merchants of that city protection even after his son had become chief. A man of many excellent qualities, he had hosts of friends, and his loss was widely mourned.

Harry L. Brooks was reared at Clarksburg, where he received his education in the graded and high schools, and in 1901 joined the police force. His promotion was rapid and he soon advanced to the position of chief. In 1908, at the solicitation of John C. Williams, general manager of the Weirton Steel Corporation's Plant, the building of which about that time brought the City of Weirton into being, Chief Brooks resigned his post at Clarksburg and came to Weirton to become the first chief of police of this place, with a force of ten men, this constituting the Department of Public Safety. His initial duties also included those of welfare worker, he being placed in charge of all public improvements and the social betterment of the mill employes. The Weirton Police Department now consists of fourteen men. Weirton also boasts of one of the most modern homes for its police department of any town in the state, a modern structure which cost about $35,000 and which is excellently equipped with all the latest devices, and includes private offices, a court room, etc.

Chief Brooks, who was elected nine times by vote of the people, is known as "the ideal chief." Of powerful and well proportioned physique, his mere presence is sufficient to quell any ordinary disturbance, and he has long been a terror to law-breakers, although a kind-hearted friend to the unfortunate and a protector of the innocent. No third-degree methods are tolerated in the Weirton Police Department, cowardice and brutality are reasons for instant dismissal from the force, and merit is the basis of advancement. Chief Brooks is at present president of the West Virginia Association of Police Chiefs and a member of the International Association of Police Chiefs, connections which have proved beneficial to him in his quests as detective and police officer. In 1919, before the International Association of Police Chiefs, Chief Brooks was called upon for an address, and his talk was one of the very few considered worthy of publication, being reproduced in full in the Washington Herald. Chief Brooks addressed the association upon their duty to the Government, as to their share in the raising of funds for patriotic purposes, and in regard to the town of Weirton, which he stated had raised two and one-half times its quota in Liberty Loans, Red Cross work and the Y. M. C. A. drives.

Chief Brooks married Miss Calla Davis, daughter of Evander Davis, who was formerly a teacher at Salem, West Virginia. One son has been born to this union, Richard, who at present is captain of a gun crew on the U. S. Battleship "Idaho." U. S. N. Chief Brooks is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

ROBERT C. AND JESSE S. EVANS. None of the mercantile establishments at Weirton are better known or have gained a greater success during a like period of years than the general merchandise enterprise of Evans Brothers, the proprietors of which are Robert C. and Jesse S. Evans. These men have built up a large and flourishing business from small beginnings, and while advancing their personal success have contributed to the progress of the community not only through the development of a worthy commercial venture but through their constructive and helpful support of measures promulgated for the betterment of the city's institutions.

The Evans brothers were born at New Cumberland, Hancock County, West Virginia, Robert C. on June 4, 1873, and Jesse S., June 24, 1879, their parents being James Madison and Emma E. (Evans) Evans. Mrs. Evans, who was born at Wheeling, still survives and resides at New Cumberland, at the age of eighty-four years. James Madison Evans was born near New Cumberland, in 1841, a son of Jeremiah C. Evans, an agriculturist, who passed his life in Hancock County and was an extensive operator. On reaching manhood James Madison Evans adopted farming for his life work, and spent his whole life in Hancock County, where up to the time of his retirement he tilled the soil and was a large grower of fruit. He resided at New Cumberland, surrounded by the comforts attainable by the fruits of his early industry and where he died in March, 1916.

Robert C. and Jesse S. Evans received good, practical educational advantages as lads in the public schools of Hancock County. They were reared as farmers' sons, but neither desired to lead an agricultural life, and accordingly accepted positions as clerks, where they gained their introduction to business methods. Robert C. Evans also served two terms, or eight years, from 1904 to 1912, as assessor of Hancock County, an office to which he was elected on the republican ticket. In May, 1912, the Evans brothers founded the Weirton Supply Company, a grocery and market, their initial capital being about $2,500. The business was continued in the same way, although with growing success, until 1918, when it was consolidated, with a store at Weirton which the brothers had started in 1916 as a branch of the original business. In the same year they had erected a double store, three stories in height, of brick, at the present location, costing $28,000, and in 1921 another store was added, with lodge hall and two apartments above, making the entire building cost about $37,000. The first year's sales were about $30,000, but have run as high as $225,000, and the stock carried regularly is valued at from $20,000 to $25,000, or more than ten times the original stock. Eight employes are kept busy and the trade is by no means confined to Weirton, many of the patrons of the establishment residing in the rural districts and the nearby towns and villages. The brothers are men of sound integrity who have established excellent reputations for honorable dealing and honest representation. They are interested as good citizens in civic matters and give their moral and material support to all measures which promise to be of benefit to their community. They have several connections of a fraternal character, and their friends are numerous in social circles.

Robert C. Evans married Miss Mary L. Mayhew, daughter of J. H. Mayhew, who was superintendent of the Hancock County Infirmary for a number of years. To this union there have been born two children: Edna, a teacher in the public school at Holliday's Cove; and James Henderson, D. D. S., a graduate of the Pennsylvania University at Philadelphia.

Jesse S. Evans was united in marriage with Miss Virginia Wilson, of New Cumberland, and they have five children: Emma Virginia, Dorothy, James L., Fred W. and Lambert.

REV. ANDREW WILCEK. During the six years that Rev. Andrew Wilcezek has been the pastor of Sacred Heart of Mary Catholic Church at Weirton he has impressed the community with his disinterested work in the cause he serves, and has given evidence of the possession of qualities which must assuredly call forth general admiration, even from those who differ most sharply with him theologically and otherwise. His sincere piety, his intense moral earnestness, his uninterrupted industry, his unfailing kindness and his spirit of tolerance have gone far to make him beloved by his flock and prosperous in the affairs of his parish, and have gained him the good will and assistance of those of other creeds, without which no priest considers that he has achieved the fullness of his mission.

Father Wilcezek was born in Poland, where he received his early education at the University of Cracow and a Military Academy and held the rank of sub-lieutenant in the army. Coming to the United States in 1910, he completed his theological education and was ordained a priest of the Catholic Church at Detroit. His first services were at Norfolk, Virginia, where he built a church and spent two years, and at the end of that period came to Weirton, accepting the call to Sacred Heart of Mary parish. This parish was started at the beginning of the town of Weirton by Father Madert, the first congregation of thirty of forty families meeting for service in a small building on Avenue

A. C. Hawkins

A. Father Madert remained one year and was succeeded by Father Przybysz, who continued for a like period, the next priest in charge being Father Lo Monaco, who remained only a few months. His successor was Father Pawlowski, who continued one year, and October 16, 1916, he was replaced by Father Andrew Wilezek, who has continued to the present.

One year following his arrival Father Andrew Wilezek had so straightened out the financial affairs of his parish that he was able to buy the present property on Avenue "A" and to build a combination building of church, school, and dining hall, kitchen, etc., at a cost of $100,000. On September 7, 1919, the corner stone was laid and the church was dedicated October 24, 1920. On both these occasions Father Wilezek entertained Bishop P. J. Donahue of the Diocese of Wheeling, who assisted at the above named ceremonies. Prominent men of Weirton were served at a banquet in the rectory. The neighboring clergymen, with their people, participated in both those events, and high compliment was paid the Pastor, Andrew Wilezek, by several of the speakers present for the wonderful growth and development of this congregation. In September, 1917, the school started, under the charge of two Franciscan sisters, there being at that time eighty pupils in attendance. At this time there are 250 pupils and five teachers, and the high school graduation is on the same basis as that of the public schools. At the present time the Sacred Heart of Mary congregation includes some 220 families, or approximately 1,000 souls. The parish maintains nine Polish societies, of which two own their own buildings, and these societies include in their objects dramatics, music and dances. About 120 of the parish own their own homes, their inclinations in this direction having been encouraged by Father Wilezek, who realizes what a great factor the home is in making for education, higher morals and better citizenship, for he himself became a citizen of the United States January 16, 1917. He is active throughout the Wheeling diocese, and acts not only as a spiritual guide to his people, but as their advisor on all matters pertaining to their welfare and as their sincere friend in all the situations of life.

HARRIS CLINTON HAWKINS is one of the energetic business men of New Martinsville, a young, progressive citizen, who has succeeded in building up a widely extended and prosperous insurance business.

Mr. Hawkins was born at Belington in Barbour County, West Virginia, December 14, 1884. His grandfather, William Hawkins, spent the greater part of his life at Buckhannon, where he was associated with the Giffin Lumber Company. He was in the Quartermaster's Department of the Union Army during the Civil war, and died at Buckhannon. His wife was Caroline Farnsworth, who died at Sutton but is buried at Buckhannon. Thomas Henry Hawkins, father of the New Martinsville business man, was born at Buckhannon September 22, 1857, and was reared and educated there. Shortly after his marriage he was ordained a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for a number of years continued active in the ministry, both in West Virginia and in Missouri. He also engaged in business as a merchant in Belington, but in 1877 removed to Sutton, where he continued merchandising, and in 1898 established his home at New Martinsville, where he organized the West Virginia Monumental Works and later resumed merchandising. He died at New Martinsville in October, 1912. He served two terms on the City Council, was a republican, and after retiring from the ministry kept up a deep and sincere interest in the working affairs of his church and was especially prominent in the first church of the Methodist Episcopal denomination at New Martinsville. He was also a Knight Templar Mason. Thomas H. Hawkins married Mary King Harris, who was born in Henry County, Virginia, October 17, 1863, and now lives with her only surviving child in New Martinsville. Her older child, Bertha, died at the age of twenty-one years.

Harris Clinton Hawkins acquired his early education in the public schools of Sutton and New Martinsville, and spent two years in West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. Leaving college in 1903, he was for six or seven years employed by the Brast Hotel Company of New Martinsville, but since 1910 has been giving his time and talents to the life insurance business, and is now state manager for the Masonic Mutual Life Association of Washington. The main offices are in the Federal Realty Building on Main Street, New Martinsville, and also branch offices are maintained at Wheeling, Huntington, Charleston, Bluefield, Clarksburg, Fairmont and Bramwell, West Virginia.

Mr. Hawkins is a past master of Wetzel Lodge No. 39, F. and A. M., and district deputy grand master of the Grand Lodge. He is affiliated with West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine in that city. When the Kiwanis Club of New Martinsville was organized he was elected its first president, in 1921. He is also vice president and a director of the Ohio Valley Builders Supply Company of New Martinsville. Mr. Hawkins is a republican and a member of the Official Board of the First Methodist Episcopal Church. During the war he assisted in all the drives for funds, and took charge of the Salvation Army drive for Wetzel County.

February 27, 1913, at New Martinsville, he married Miss Maude Amelia Funk, daughter of Thomas J. and Helen (Fisher) Funk, residents of New Martinsville. Her father is now retired after a long service with the Kountz Lumber Company. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins have four children: Mary Helen, born February 7, 1914, Eloise Frances, born December 15, 1915, Harris Funk, born December 5, 1917, and Betty Ann, born February 3, 1920.

WILLIAM BANFIELD. Prominent among the men who have contributed to the business development of Follansbee may be mentioned William Banfield, general manager of the Follansbee Brothers Company Steel plant, who has numerous other important business connections. Mr. Banfield was born in Monmouthshire, England, in 1854, and at the age of eighteen years immigrated with his father to the United States.

Upon their arrival in this country father and son secured employment in the first tin plate mill erected in this country, located at Leechburg, Pennsylvania, where William Banfield was a heater and roller for seven years and was then made manager, a position which he held for six years. In October, 1885, he removed to Irondale, Ohio, and with others established the Irondale Rolling Mill Company, having purchased the former plant of the Pioneer Iron Works. The above company, under the name of Wallace, Banfield & Company, Limited, made fine grades of black and galvanized iron and soft sheet steel, and it became one of the leading industries of Jefferson County. In 1892 they converted part of their plant into a tin mill, being the first to become extensive manufacturers under the McKinley Tariff. In 1899 the American Tin Plate Company purchased and dismantled the plant, and Mr. Banfield, with others, erected sheet mills at Chester, West Virginia, but these were also acquired by the American Tin Plate Company at the time of their completion. Mr. Banfield was chosen and served as district manager for this concern about five years, at the end of which time he removed to Steubenville, in 1907, subsequently becoming associated with the Follansbee brothers in building the tin plate mills at Follansbee, of which he has since been general manager.

The Follansbee Brothers Company, started to erect a mill at Follansbee, West Virginia, in 1902, and the six tin plate and two sheet mills were put into operation in 1904, with 600 employees. There were three buildings, about 200 x 40 feet, occupying approximately two acres of ground. In 1911 two sheet mills were added. In 1906 the company had commenced the steel plant, having two twenty-five ton open hearth furnaces, to which a third was added in 1911 and a fourth in 1918. Three more sheet mills greatly increased the company's capacity in 1915, as well as a galvanizing shop. There are about 1,200 men on the pay-roll, which in 1920 was over $2,000,000. The weekly output approximates 400 tons of tin plate and 1,000 tons of sheet steel. The company has erected ninety houses, which it has sold to its employes on reasonable terms, and the friendliest of feelings exist between the corporation and its men. The Follansbee brothers, of whom there were formerly four, but now only three, were merchants of Pittsburgh prior to entering their present line. They now have a similar mill at Toronto, Ohio, with about the same capacity.

An auxiliary company of the Follansbee Brothers Company is the Sheet Metal Specialty Company, which was established in 1906 on a small scale with about fifteen men employed. In December, 1906, the plant was destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt on a larger scale and since then has been enlarged at different times, now having four two-story buildings, 50 x 150 feet each, with from seventy to eighty employes engaged in making sheet metal ovens and stovepipe and elbows. In 1921 this company took over a two-story building 180 x 130 feet, formerly operated by others for several years in making metal specialties, and this is now utilized for the manufacture of milk and garbage cans, with some fifty employes. This latter acquisition added about an additional half to the company's output, sold to jobbers, which is now about 350 cars. The buildings of this plant have some 65,000 square feet of floor space, and the annual pay-roll amounts to $105,000. The officers are: John Follansbee, president; L. A. Diller, secretary and manager; and D. Reed, treasurer.

Mr. Banfield is also president of the East Ohio Sewer Pipe Company at Irondale, Ohio, one of the important local industries of that place, president of the Union Savings Bank and Trust Company at Steubenville, and a director of the Citizens Bank of that place. He likewise is an elder of the Second Presbyterian Church at Follansbee, West Virginia, and now makes his home at Follansbee.

G. L. BUCHANAN. One of the important business industries of Holliday's Cove, the Cove Valley Lumber Company, is an expression and example of a well worked out plan of business procedure, based upon the solid foundation of efficiency and thorough knowledge of conditions and requirements. Back of the success of this concern has been the directing mind and guiding hand of its president, G. L. Buchanan, a man of sound ability and known integrity, practical, energetic and result-attaining. He has worked his own way to a place of business pre-eminence, and while so doing has contributed materially to the advancement of the community through his business enterprise and his personal public service.

Mr. Buchanan was born at Winterville, Jefferson County, Ohio, June 10, 1869, a son of J. A. Buchanan. His grandfather, Ebenezer Buchanan, was born in Ohio County, West Virginia, and spent his life in this state and Pennsylvania in agricultural pursuits. J. A. Buchanan, also a native of Ohio County, passed his active life as a tiller of the soil with the exception of the three years he spent in the Union Army during the war between the states, when he was a private in Company D, Twelfth Regiment, West Virginia Infantry. He was wounded in the service, but recovered and returned safely to his home, where he resumed his farming operations. He made a decided success of his business affairs and is now living in comfortable retirement at St. Petersburg, West Virginia.

G. L. Buchanan received his education in the public schools and as a young man learned the trade of carpenter, a vocation at which he worked for about ten years. Coming to Holliday's Cove about 1899, during the following decade he built practically all the buildings erected at that time, and many evidences of his mechanical skill and sound workmanship are to be found still standing in this locality. In 1909 Mr. Buchanan founded the Cove Valley Lumber Company and established a lumber yard, and this he conducted as a private enterprise until March 24, 1920, when the business was incorporated with a capital of $100,000, the officers being as follows: G. L. Buchanan, president; William I. Graham, a practical mechanic and foreman of the plant, vice president; and O. C. Talmann, secretary and treasurer, all of these being active in the management and operation of the business. The Board of Directors includes also Eric Stern, of East Liverpool; and Daniel F. Sheckler, of Holliday's Cove, assessor of Hancock County, also active in the business. Recently there has been installed in the plant modern planing mill machinery for the manufacture of interior equipment, fittings and ornaments for buildings. The company acts as building contractor, furnishing anything required by architects' drawings in the way of building materials, exterior or interior. At times fourteen or fifteen men are given employment, and the operations of the company have not been confined to Holliday's Cove, but have reached to Follansbee and other communities. The product includes all kinds of lumber, cement, lime, sewer pipe, etc. Mr. Buchanan has other business connections and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Bank of Weirton.

From the time that he arrived at Holliday's Cove Mr. Buchanan has been active in civic affairs. Not long after his arrival he was elected a member of the Village Council, a position which he held for a number of years, as he did also that of member of the Board of Education. He was also mayor of the city for two years, giving a very satisfactory administration, and was elected on the republican ticket as a member of the Board of County Commissioners. It was during his term that the first good roads movement in the county was put under way. With his family Mr. Buchanan belongs to the Presbyterian Church of Holliday's Cove, and as a fraternalist he is a thirty-second degree Mason at Wheeling, a Blue Lodge Mason at New Cumberland, and a member of Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.

Mr. Buchanan married at Holliday's Cove Miss Jessie I. Gilmore, daughter of J. R. Gilmore, who has followed carpentry all his life and is still a resident of Holliday's Cove. To Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan there have been born two daughters: Virginia, who is attending high school; and Evelyn, a student of the graded schools.

JAMES A. PURDY. One of the most active and progressive men of Holliday's Cove, James A. Purdy, has contributed to the growth and development of his community a sound business ability, high principles of business practice and commendable ideals of the responsibilities of good citizenship. During his career he has risen from small beginnings to a leading place among the men who have achievements to their credit, and at this time is senior partner of the prosperous general merchandise firm of Purdy & Marsh.

Mr. Purdy was born on a farm in the Holliday's Cove community, July 20, 1869, a son of James and Mary Jane (Knox) Purdy, the latter a native of the same community. James Purdy was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and at the age of four years was brought to West Virginia by his father, John Purdy, who was a cabinet-maker by trade, but who in 1824 purchased a farm on which he spent the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. James Purdy early took charge of the home farm in partnership with his brother, John Purdy, who later retired and went to Iowa, but James continued as a farmer, cattle grower and sheep breeder until his death at the age of ninety-one years. He was an active democrat in politics, was a great reader, and a man who was well and thoroughly posted on all worth-while subjects of the day. He kept open house, entertaining every traveler who visited the community, and became widely known for his generous and kindly hospitality. His word was as good as his bond, and he was a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church at the Cove, of which his wife had become a charter member in her girlhood. She died at the age of fifty-two years, and was greatly mourned as a woman of many admirable characteristics and qualities of both mind and heart.

James A. Purdy had to leave school as a lad in order to take charge of the home farm. His father had married very late in life, and as James was one of the younger children he was little more than a boy when he accepted the responsibilities of a man. With his younger sister, Samantha, as his housekeeper, he remained on the home farm until the death of his aged father, in the meantime having added the breeding of swine to the other activities of the farm and becoming widely known as a raiser of Berkshire hogs. Farming, however, he felt was not his forte, and when the elder man passed away and the estate was settled Mr. Purdy left the farm and became a clerk in a grocery store for one winter. Subsequently he spent a few months in Northwestern Idaho and then went on to the Pacific Coast, but in 1910 returned to Holliday's Cove, where he rented a store and installed a general stock of merchandise. His original stock was valued at $1,700, but during the first year he had sales of $25,000. At the present time he carries a stock of $15,000, and does an annual business approximating $160,000. He sells close and depends on the volume of business for his profits, and this necessitates the employment of six assistants. In 1914 he built the present building, which he has since sold, being now a renter. In 1920 J. R. Purdy admitted to partnership G. H. Marsh, and the business has since been conducted under the firm style of Purdy & Marsh. Mr. Purdy was one of the original directors of the Bank of Weirton, and still holds a place on the board. From young manhood he has been interested and active in civic affairs. While still residing on the farm he served as a member of the School Board of Bertha District. After leaving at Holliday's Cove he was elected mayor, but resigned from that office to act as a member of the Draft Board during the war period, having been appointed to that position by Governor Cornwall. He has also served several times as a member of the City Council. Fraternally he affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, and as a means of recreation enjoys the sports of fishing and horseback riding. In all, he is one of the most active and progressive men of the community comprising Holliday's Cove and Weirton.

Mr. Purdy was united in marriage with Miss Lara Buxton, who was born in Brooke County, West Virginia, daughter of J. H. Buxton, who is now deceased, and to this union there were born two sons: John, in the fourth generation of the name; and James G., the third generation to bear the name.

GEORGE H. DAVIS, M. D. Not only is Dr. George H. Davis of Weirton, a leading and learned member of the Hancock County medical fraternity, enjoying a high professional standing, but is likewise a public-spirited citizen who has contributed materially to the advancement of education and other attending features of modern civilization. His career has been one of constant activity and well-earned success, worthy of the fine old family of which he is a representative.

Doctor Davis was born on the north side of the Ohio River, in Beaver County, Pennsylvania, where two Davis brothers, soldiers of the Revolution, had settled after the pining of the struggle for American independence. The family has resided in Western Pennsylvania ever since. There have been three generations of physicians in this immediate line, although the father of Doctor Davis was an agriculturist, with two brothers being practitioners of medicine. George H. Davis attended the public schools of his native locality and Mount Hone (Ohio) College, after leaving which institution he began teaching. After six years spent as an instructor, during which time he applied himself in his leisure hours to the study of medicine, he entered the Baltimore Medical College (now the University of Medicine) at Baltimore, Maryland from which he was duly graduated as a member of the class of 1895. Among his classmates were Dr. Spillman Follansbee and Dr. Chris Fairmont, of Charleston, West Virginia. Doctor Davis began the practice of his profession at Chester, West Virginia, and remained in that community until coming to Weirton as the pioneer physician and surgeon of this place. He has built up a large and representative practice and has won the full confidence and esteem of his clientele, as well as the respect of his professional brethren. He was formerly surgeon for the Weirton Steel Corporation. Doctor Davis holds membership in the Hancock County Medical Society, the West Virginia Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Since his young manhood, when he applied himself to educational work, Doctor Davis has been intensely interested in the public schools. For several years he served as a member of the School Board, and it was during this period that the public school system experienced its greatest era of advancement in the city, having grown from a condition where only five teachers were necessary to one where sixty teachers were demanded for the various classes. Doctor Davis has ever stood for advanced ideas, a uniform program of class recitation and other progressive features, and it was largely through his efforts and influence that the district supervisor's office was created. The system at this time is creditable, although the lack of suitable buildings is a handicap which the Doctor and others are trying to have removed. Doctor Davis has also interested himself in the cause of religion. In 1910 he established the first Sunday School, the old Union Sunday School, established in the open, under a locust tree, which thereafter held its regular meetings in unfurnished dwellings until the Union Sunday School Building, now the Methodist Episcopal Church, was built. Next, Doctor Davis started a Presbyterian Sunday School, which was followed by the establishment, largely through his efforts of the First Presbyterian Church. He is also active in civic affairs, and belongs to the Masonic Club at Weirton. He is a York Rite Mason, a Knight Templar in the Commandery at Wheeling and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, and also holds membership in the Knights of Pythias.

While still a medical student at Baltimore, Doctor Davis was united in marriage with Miss Catherine L. Candler, of that city, who is a representative of two royal families. On the German side she is descended from the Hotz family, with a castle on the Rhine, and on the English side is a descendant of Lord Seymour, and retains the coat-of-arms of this family in her home. Doctor and Mrs. Davis are the parents of two daughters: Lydia Ann, who graduated from the Weirton High School as a member of the class of 1922; and Margaret M., attending high school and is a member of the class of 1924.

PHINEAS RANDOLPH THARP, a county surveyor of Ritchie County, with residence and official headquarters at Harrisville, the county seat, was born at Auburn, this county, January 13, 1850, and died November 24, 1921. He was a son of Timothy and Sarah (Cox) Tharp, the former a native of Harrison County and the latter of Lewis County. Timothy Tharp was a boy at the time of his father's death and was indentured, or "bound out," in a family that required much service of him but gave him few advantages, especially along educational lines. His alert mind and self-reliant spirit, however, enabled him to make advancement after he initiated his independent career. After his marriage he established a modest home on a farm in Lewis County, and later, with increasing prosperity, he bought a tract of timbered land near Auburn, Ritchie County. He reclaimed this place to cultivation, developed a productive farm, and he and his wife remained on this homestead, honored citizens of the county, until their deaths, both having been members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of their family of thirteen children Phineas R., of this review, was the last survivor.

Mr. Tharp was reared on the home farm and attended in his boyhood and youth both the subscription and public schools. As a youth he taught three terms in the rural schools of his native county, and though he was but a boy at the time of the inception of the Civil war he served 10½ months as a member of Company E, Sixth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, as a loyal young soldier of the Union. Three of his brothers likewise were Union soldiers, W. D. having been a member of an Iowa regiment, S. S. having been a member of Company I, Third West Virginia Cavalry, and the third brother having died while a prisoner of war in Andersonville Prison.

Mr. Tharp led a busy and useful life, and he prepared himself thoroughly, through study and practical service, for the profession of surveyor, so that he was well qualified for the office which he so ably filled in his native county, and he served also as a road supervisor, constable and justice of the peace, and had been county surveyor since 1917. He was a stockholder of the People's Bank at Harrisville, of which he was one of the organizers and was the owner of his residence property and also had other real estate interests in Ritchie County. His political allegiance was given to the republican party, he was a past grand of Harrisville Lodge No. 89, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was one of the appreciative and honored members of the local post of the Grand Army of the Republic, of which he had served as commander. He was affiliated also with Harrisville Lodge No. 98, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and he and his wife held membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

November 25, 1869, recorded the marriage of Mr. Tharp, and Miss Sarah C. Moyers, who was born in Ritchie County, November 15, 1849. Mr. and Mrs. Tharp became the parents of four daughters: Mary M. now deceased, was first the wife of Frank M. Moats, who died leaving two sons, Guy R. and Dale H. Moats, and her second marriage was to M. L. Weekly, of Pennsboro, this county. There were no children by this marriage. Martha Maude is the wife of B. C. Moats, of Parkersburg. Isa Adelle is the wife of R. W. McKeen, of Youngstown, Ohio. Carrie Belle is the wife of B. M. Sigler, of Harrisville, and they have one son, Howard Tharp Sigler.

CHARLES L. CAMPBELL. In length of service Charles L. Campbell is oldest member of the teaching administrative staff of the Butler District of Hancock County. His experience has covered nearly all the improvements in school facilities from the crude one-room schoolhouse to a real school system and educational plant. He is principal of schools in the incorporated village of Holliday's Cove, which is included in the Butler school district, embracing the unincorporated adjoining town of Weirton. Weirton and adjacent community are the subject of more extended comment and description on other pages. The postmaster at Holliday's Cove is D. M. Shakley, also president of the Butler District School Board.

Mr. Campbell was born at Holliday's Cove April 9, 1876, son of George and Alice (Hammond) Campbell, still living at the old homestead. The Campbells are one of the oldest families in this section of West Virginia. George Campbell's father was Robert Campbell, and his grandfather was Alexander Campbell. The pioneer of the family in this section of Virginia was James Campbell, who secured a grant of land from Patrick Henry, then governor of Virginia. Some of the old estate is still owned by the family. Robert Campbell died at the age of seventy-eight. George Campbell is now seventy-one.

Charles L. Campbell attended high school at Steubenville, Ohio, the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, and also the State University at Morgantown. In 1898, at the age of twenty-two, he began teaching, taking charge of the school at Holliday's Cove when he was sole teacher with about sixty pupils, all in one room. Prior to that time there had been a school house of two rooms with an opening making them practically one, and used both for school and church purposes. This was replaced by a one-room building on the site of the present eight-room school house. That in turn was followed by a four-room frame building erected in 1902. Mr. Campbell after teaching at Holliday's Cove taught in other schools of the district, but in 1907 returned to his home community. For three years he was a teacher in the Weirton School, and since then has been in regular service at Holliday's Cove. The present eight-room brick building occupies the site of the old frame school house which was burned. While the main building contains only eight rooms, the school population has so increased that fifteen rooms are now required, necessitating the leasing of temporary quarters.

Mr. Campbell married Ora Shimer, a native of Ohio. They have six children. Leslie, George, Harold, Ruth, Wayne and Alice. His family is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and has held the chairs in the lodge. For eighteen years he has been an enthusiastic advocate of wholesome athletics in this community, and in the school has encouraged a base ball team and otherwise stimulated athletic competition.

W. D. JOHNSTON is superintendent of schools at Weirton, that interesting and thriving industrial and agricultural community of which the town of Weirton and the Weirton Steel Works are the central figure. For a century this section of Hancock County was almost entirely agricultural and pastoral. Therefore, while Mr. Johnston has been looking after the schools only half a dozen years or so, his work here has been largely coincident with the period of modern growth and development.

It was in 1916 that the present Central High School building was erected at Weirton, with Mr. Johnston as superintendent. Prior to that time the educational activities of the Butler District had been centered at Holliday's Cove, while the high school had been maintained for several years. The Central High School at Weirton and the schools in that group enrolled about 800 pupils, with forty in the high school, twenty-nine teachers all told, and three in the high school. There were only seven schools altogether in the Butler District in 1916. For 1922 the enrollment for the district was 1,720, there were sixty-eight teachers, and the high school had 110 scholars and ten teachers comprising the faculty. Among the veteran teachers at Weirton, whose work has been of the highest degree of usefulness, might be mentioned Miss Nell Cox, Miss Catherine Conlon and Miss Clara M. Smith.

Superintendent Johnston was born in Harrison County, Ohio, graduated from Adrian College in Michigan in 1912 took post graduate work in Ohio University at Athens and at Columbia University in New York. For three years he taught in the district schools of his native county, was principal for three years at the high school of Jewett, Ohio, for three years was principal of the Chester High School in West Virginia, and then, in 1916, came to his duties at Weirton as superintendent of the local schools. He is an active member of the National Educational Association, the State Association, and is vice president of the District Superintendents Association of the state. He has been superintendent of the Presbyterian Sunday School at the Cove, and is county chairman of the Junior Red Cross.

He married Dorothy Dennimore, of Jewett, Ohio. She is a talented musician, graduated from Dana's Musical Institute at Warren, Ohio, and at Scio College, and for four years was a teacher of music in the public schools of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Johnston have one daughter, Lorraine.

The school system of the Butler District is a matter of special pride to all local citizens. D. M. Weir, vice president of the Weirton Steel Company, in an address he delivered to the officers and executives of the Steel Company in January, 1922, had this to say concerning the school system:

"The school system in Weirton is one that we have every reason to be proud of. The superintendent of schools in the Butler District is a man of high ideals, is a credit to the community and a very able and efficient director. And I think that the results bespeak more for him that any word of praise that I may say at this time. He has the support of a very able school board, Mr. Shakley, Mr. Morris and one of our own employees, Mr. Rowland. These men give their time and thought to advancing educational facilities in the district, which is now taking care of 1,800 children, having about sixty teachers for this work. In addition to that we have two colored schools, one in the north-east part of Weirton, with about twenty pupils, and one on Calico Hill, with about forty or fifty pupils. The teachers of these schools are just as competent as any others."

"We are all justly proud of our High School and I think it compares favorably with any other in the state. This educational work is of the utmost importance. Boys and girls in the schools today will be prime movers in tomorrow's Weirton, and we should encourage educational work in every way."

"At the present time there is being considered and it seems an absolute necessity a building for high school purposes at a probable cost of from $150,000 to $200,000. This bond issue will come before the people some time soon and I am hopeful that it will be approved, because new high school facilities are badly needed. About seventy-five pupils are being enrolled each year in the freshman class, and if past records for enrollment are any criterion it will increase yearly."

"Mr. Johnston would like to have a high school which will accommodate from 400 to 500 pupils. Naturally he is working ahead. He has vision. We think it will only be a few years hence until we will have that many pupils in our high school. Vocational training is being carried on to such success in our present high school building. In the wood work and machinery class there are some forty boys enrolled, and the work they produce is most commendable. A recent exhibit of what they made was shown in one of the local stores and proved most surprising to everyone who saw it. No one had any idea that such development is taking place in this line of work. Domestic Science is very popular class in high school, some fifty girls being enrolled. This branch teaches home economics and sewing."

HOWARD C. LANE, of Wheeling, is a native of that city, a dentist by profession and had an overseas experience during the World war.

He was born at Wheeling September 4, 1889. His father, John Lane, was born in Marion County, West Virginia, in 1856, and was about ten years of age when he accompanied his widowed mother to Ohio County, West Virginia. He was reared, educated and married there, and for a number of years was employed in one of the nail factories at Wheeling, served four years as jailor for Ohio County, and since 1896 has been in the service of the National Exchange Bank, being custodian of its vaults. He is a democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. John has married Margaret Flynn, who was born in Marshall County, West Virginia, in 1858, Martin, the oldest of their children, is in the train service of the Pennsylvania Railroad and lives at Wheeling. Howard C. is the second in the family. Miss Marie is a teacher in the Webster School at Wheeling.

Howard C. Lane acquired a public and parochial school education at Wheeling, finished his high school course at the age of seventeen and subsequently learned the profession of prosthetic dentistry.

Mr. Lane is unmarried. He is an independent in politics and for a number of years was a member of the Wheeling Board of Education. He is a Catholic and is affiliated with the Grand Council No. 504, Knights of Columbus, and Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. On June 24, 1918, he entered the United States service, having one month of duty at Camp Meade, Maryland, and was sent overseas with Evacuation Hospital No. 1.

He was stationed at Revigny, France, and was with the Army of Occupation in Germany at Coblenz until June, 1919, when he returned home with Evacuation Hospital No. 16 and was mustered out at Camp Dix, New Jersey, August, 1919. He at once returned to Wheeling and resumed his professional work.

W. P. SAMPLES has been an active member of the Grafton Bar since 1906, and his career both as a lawyer and citizen has exemplified all the qualities that insure successful esteem.

Mr. Samples had become a resident of Grafton before winning practice there. He was born at Mineral Point, Harrison County May 7, 1876, son of James W. Samples. His father was born in Greenbrier County, West Virginia, April 6, 1844, acquired a liberal education, being one of the first students in the West Virginia State University, and later graduated at Marshall College. His career was a long and steady devotion to educational work, and was the oldest member of the teaching profession in Harrison County when he died in 1918, at the age of eighty-three. He married Elizabeth Virginia Morris, daughter of George Morris, a farmer at Grassland in Harrison County. Mrs. James W. Samples, who survives her husband, was born in Harrison County, February 10, 1855. She became the mother of the following children: Marmaduke, of Salem, West Virginia; Heman S., of Norman, Oklahoma; Eve Lee, wife of Truman Coffman, of Salem; Mary E., at the old homestead in Harrison County; Gertrude of Seattle, Washington; Mrs. Ocie M. Goodwin, who died at Dallas, Texas, February 20, 1916; Charles Roy, of Norman, Oklahoma; and Percy Hale, the youngest, to meet a soldier's death October 14, 1918, in the Meuse sector on the Argonne front, and his body since being returned to this country lies in the Odd Fellows Cemetery in Salem.

William P. Samples was reared to manhood at Mineral Point, and the duties that gave him a sound physique were those provided by the farm. He attended the common schools, one term in the Fairmont State Normal, and about that time he became a volunteer in the Spanish-American war, enlisting at Fairmont in June, 1898, in Company A of the First West Virginia Infantry, under Captain Sabel and Colonel Spillman of Parkersburg. The regiment was in training at Chickamauga Park, Knoxville, Tennessee, and finally at Camp Conrad, Columbus, Georgia, where the troops were awaiting orders when the war closed. Mr. Samples was mustered out at Columbus February 4, 1899. He is a member of the United Spanish War Veterans-at-large at Washington.

After leaving the army he continued his education as a student for two terms at Salem College and two terms in West Virginia University. He then returned home and spent some time as a clerk at Grafton. While in the university he passed his bar examinations and was admitted to the bar in September, 1906, and at once established his office at Grafton. He tried his first law suit here in the Circuit Court, and his qualifications early brought him a promising practice. His practice is general in both the State and Federal Courts, and he has been admitted on motion to practice at the Federal bar. Among other cases of importance Mr. Samples was one of the counsel associated with E. G. Smith and Stephen G. Jackson, of the law firm of Smith and Jackson of Clarksburg, for the Gentry Brothers Show Company, which sued the City of Grafton for damages resulting when one of the company's wagons fell off the bridge over Berkeley Creek. Mr. Samples and associates won their case and a judgment for $2460.00 for their clients. Mr. Samples was employed as general counsel for Isaac C. and William M. Ralphsnyder, claimants of the estate of Adolphus Armstrong. This litigation covered a period of ten years, finally settled by agreement between the heirs. Mr. Samples' clients obtained as their share fifty-two and two-ninths of the estate. An important factor contributing to this was the appointment secured by Mr. Samples of William M. Ralphsnyder as administrator of the estate of Louisa Ann Armstrong of Monroe County, Ohio, said to have been the sole heir of Adolphus Armstrong. All attempts to remove Mr. Ralphsnyder from his post as administrator failed, and the larger part of the Adolphus estate finally reached the Ralphsnyders because of this.

In 1918 Mr. Samples organized the Newlon Coal Company, a partnership, for the purpose of producing Pittsburgh coal at Simpson, West Virginia. In 1921 he organized the Adelaide Coal Company, a corporation with a capital of $25,000.00, for the purpose of producing coal on the Galloway Branch of the Baltimore & Ohio at Astor. He is secretary and treasurer of both these companies.

Mr. Samples is a member of the Taylor County and West Virginia Bar Associations. He is a past grand of Central Lodge No. 98, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a member of the Encampment and Rebekahs, and for three years was district deputy of the Fifth District. He is a member of Greenhill Methodist Protestant Church in Harrison County.

At Grafton July 31, 1902, he married Miss Adelaide Wyckoff, a native of Rosemont, West Virginia, and daughter of D. B. and Virginia (Bailey) Wyckoff. Mr. and Mrs. Samples have two children: William W. and Virginia.

HOMER B. WOODS, a leading citizen of Harrison County, Ritchie County, is presiding on the bench of the Circuit Court of the Third Judicial Circuit, comprising Pleasants, Ritchie and Doddridge counties, and he has made a splendid record both as a lawyer and a jurist.

Judge Woods was born on a farm in Ritchie County, near Harrisville, July 16, 1869, and is a son of Rev. Philip A. and Salina (Wells) Woods. Rev. Philip A. Woods was born in Pennsylvania, January 4, 1828, and was about eighteen years old when the family came to what is now West Virginia and settled in Ritchie County. He gained his education principally in Pennsylvania, where he attended a private school and also Allegheny College, after which he was ordained a clergyman of the Baptist Church. He continued in the service of the ministry during the remainder of his active career, and held various pastoral charges in the central part of West Virginia. He became a staunch advocate of the principles of the republican party, and his memory is revered by those who came within the compass of his benignant influence. Both he and his wife were well advanced in years at the time of their deaths. They became the parents of six children.

Judge Homer B. Woods gained his youthful education in the public schools of the various places in which the family resided in connection with his father's pastoral charges in the central part of the state, and he was but sixteen years old when he initiated his career as a teacher, his service in the pedagogic profession having been successfully continued several years. In the meanwhile he attended Marietta College, and in preparation for the legal profession he took a course in the law department of the University of West Virginia. While pursuing his studies in the law school he was elected superintendent of the public schools of Ritchie County, and after having served two terms in this office he continued his services as a teacher for several years, within which he was principal of the Harrisville High School and later of that at Pennsboro, likewise in Ritchie County. He was admitted to the bar in 1892, and thereafter continued in the private practice of his profession at Harrisville until 1896, when he was elected prosecuting attorney of his native county. He held this position two successive terms and retired therefrom in 1904, in which year he was elected to the bench of the Circuit Court.

Judge Woods was unanimously nominated by the republican party, in August, 1920, as a candidate for the third term as judge of the Third Judicial Circuit. His splendid previous record on the bench is not only attested by this nomination but also by the action of the democratic party which met in convention in the same month and made no nomination to oppose him, and at the same time unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, at the Republican Judicial Convention, the Honorable Homer B. Woods was nominated for the Judge of this judicial circuit, and

"Whereas, we, the legally constituted delegates and representatives of the Democratic party in and for the third judicial circuit, in convention assembled, believing that the judiciary should be composed of able and honorable men, well versed in the law and experienced in court procedure, and who would wear the ermine untarnished by partisan prejudice or political influence, and we, having confidence in the ability, integrity and fitness of the said Honorable Homer B. Woods for the high office of Judge; and to the end that the judiciary may be removed from and elevated above partisan political contests; be it resolved, that this convention doth decline to nominate a candidate for judge of the third judicial circuit."

Judge Woods was, therefore, unopposed at the polls in the November election in 1920, and is now serving his third term on the bench.

Judge Woods is a staunch republican, and he and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church. He is affiliated with Harrisville Lodge No. 98, A. F. & A. M., and Odell Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., is a past grand of the local lodge of Odd Fellows, his wife being a member of the adjunct organization, the Daughters of Rebekah, and he is an influential member of the Modern Woodmen of America, in which he has served as counsel of the local camp and also as counsel of the head camp of the organization in West Virginia, in which he is now a member of the committee on appeals and grievances.

September 10, 1892, recorded the marriage of Judge Woods and Miss Winifred Davis, daughter of the late Thomas E. Davis and a representative of one of the oldest and most highly honored families of Ritchie County. Of the six children of Judge and Mrs. Woods five are living; Ralph D. is a graduate of the law department of the University of West Virginia; Homer B., Jr., who graduated in the high school and who became a successful teacher, received appointment to the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland, and was attending that institution at the time of his death, at the age of twenty years. Miriam graduated in the Harrisville High School and in 1922 is a student in the Cincinnati (Ohio) Conservatory of Music; Robert J. is a high school student; and Samuel T. and Winifred are grade pupils in the public school. The eldest son, Ralph D., entered the nation's military service in connection with the World war, gained the rank of first lieutenant, and was in service in turn at Camp Dodge, Iowa, the Central Officers' Training Camp at Waco, Texas, and the Second Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, Indiana. The war came to a close before there came a call for his command to enter service overseas. He is an active member of the American Legion, and is now engaged in the practice of law at Harrisville.

JOHN A. McCALLISTER is superintendent for the Faulkner Coal Company at Huffco in Logan County. His home is in Huntington. Mr. McCallister has been acquainted with practical mining operations for forty years, and his name is widely and favorably known among the prominent interests represented in the southern part of West Virginia. The Faulkner Coal Company is one of the operations carried on by the W. E. Deegans Consolidated Coal Company.

Mr. McCallister was born at Big Sewell Mountain, Fayette County, West Virginia, November 13, 1868, son of William and Rebecca (Campbell) McCallister. His father was a farmer and shoemaker, and finally left the farm to locate at Sewell, a station on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. He was a democrat, and with his wife worshiped the faith of the Baptist Church. They had ten children—six sons and four daughters. The son Edward was for five years foreman of the Paragon Mines on Ram Creek and is now a mine foreman in the New River District.

John A. McCallister attended school at Fayette County and was only a boy when his parents died. His education was abbreviated by the necessity of doing something for his own support. At the age of fourteen he went to work as a trapper in the mines at Sewell, and his experience included bailing water, hauling coal, mule driving, and finally he was made boss driver, a job he held three years. For seven years he was a coal loader. Then, after an experience of a few months in the mines at Jellico, Tennessee, he became assistant foreman of a mine on Loup Creek, West Virginia, and from there went to the Paragon Mine on Ram Creek as foreman. He spent eight years in that service there and was promoted to superintendent. His next work was with the E. R. Johnson Coal Company on Low Peach Creek, on the Guyandotte, as superintendent, and he was also superintendent of the operations at Peach Creek. He spent about ten months there, and then became assistant superintendent at Toplin, and in October, 1921, took up his present duties with the Faulkner Coal Company.

While living at Paragon he was a member of the board. Mr. McCallister married in 1898 Hester, daughter of Robert House. Her father was a native of England, and Mrs. McCallister was born in West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. McCallister have nine living children—five sons and six daughters. The sons Kenneth G. and John are in the grocery business at Huntington. Mr. and Mrs. McCallister are Methodists, and fraternally he is affiliated with Longdale Lodge No. 14, F. and A. M., on Keyneys Creek, the Scottish Rite bodies of the Consistory at Wheeling, the Mystic Shrine of Charleston, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is an independent voter.

HON. BELVARD J. PRICHARD, president of the Wayne County Bank and president of the Southern West Virginia Oil and Gas Corporation, located at Wayne forty years ago as a young lawyer, and while steadily maintaining a reputation for skill and efficiency as a civil and commercial lawyer, his interests have become widely extended only in the industrial field but as a forceful influence on all matters of progress in his section of the state.

Mr. Prichard represents a pioneer family of West Virginia and Eastern Kentucky, and was born June 10, 1850, near Garner, on Little Sandy, in Boyd County. His first American ancestor was William Prichard, who left Wales when a boy of fourteen, accompanied by his brother John, and, getting on board an Italian vessel, was taken across the sea and left on the shores of Virginia about 1745. William Prichard finally went to Russell County, Virginia, where he was living at the beginning of the nineteenth century, and subsequently moved to what is now Boyd County, Kentucky, where he died in 1819. His children were John, James, Lewis and Elizabeth. Of these Lewis was the father of Dr. Lewis Prichard, long prominent as a banker of Charleston, West Virginia.

James Prichard, son of William, was born in Russell County, Virginia, in 1796, and as a boy saw service in the War of 1812 as a coast guard at Norfolk, Virginia. About 1820 he came down the Big Sandy and settled at Buchanan in Lawrence County, Kentucky, where he became a citizen of distinction, planter and slave owner, and it is said that he never sold a slave, and negroes were so attached to him and his family that after liberty was given them they declined to part. James Prichard was a practical ideal of the peacemaker in his neighborhood, and was well qualified for the office of justice of the peace, which he filled. He also served as county assessor. He married Elizabeth Stewart, who was born in Giles County, Virginia, in 1804. They were active Methodists, and their family consisted of eight sons and one daughter.

One of the sons was Dr. William Allen Prichard, who was born near Buchanan in Lawrence County, Kentucky, August 4, 1823, and died at Garner February 2, 1900. He graduated from the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati in 1854, and for many years practiced his profession at Garner. He served one term in the Kentucky State Legislature, was a member of the Royal Arch Chapter of Masons at Ashland, a staunch democrat and a contributing member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Doctor Prichard married Samantha Jones, who was born in Lee County, Virginia, September 17, 1830, and died September 13, 1916. She was the mother of six children: James M., a physician in Lee County, Virginia; Mrs. James W. Mullan, of Catlettsburg, Kentucky; Belvud J.; Mary E., who died at the age of twelve years; Helen, wife of Samuel D. Finley, of Bolts Fork, Kentucky, and both now deceased; Robert A., a resident of Wheaton, Missouri.

Belvud J. Prichard acquired his early education in the public schools of Eastern Kentucky, attended an academy at Ashland, the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, and Center College at Danville, Kentucky. In the course of these educational advantages he taught three rural schools. He began the study of law in the office of his uncle, Keener F. Prichard, and Judge John Elliott at Catlettsburg, and in 1879 received his law degree from the University of Louisville. Mr. Prichard began practice at Gosport, Indiana, where he was associated with C. C. Ginning, afterward an Indiana congressman and also nominal head of his party for governor. Reasons of health caused a fall Prichard to give up his promising professional career in Indiana, and in 1881 he located at Wayne, Wayne County, West Virginia. His first associate here was William Merrell in the firm Prichard & Merrell, later he was a member of Prichard, McAlister & Fry, and subsequently Judge Tiernan became senior member of the firm Tiernan, Prichard & Fry. As his practice increased Mr. Prichard confined his efforts more and more to his specialty as a civil and commercial lawyer.

With his rising professional prominence came honors of a public nature, and for two terms he was mayor of Wayne, and in 1888 was elected a member of the State Senate, serving as chairman of the committee on counties and municipalities and the finance committee. In 1914 he was again urged to become a candidate for the Legislature, and was nominated by the democratic party, his nomination being endorsed by the republican and progressive parties. He received every vote in the county except 191. He went to the Legislature primarily to fight the pending bill designed to cut off a part of Wayne County, and he permanently blocked that piece of legislation. In 1916 Mr. Prichard became a member of the County Court, but resigned before serving his full term.

The Wayne County Bank was organized in 1904, and Mr. Prichard has been president of this institution ever since. In 1908 he organized the Belvud Oil & Gas Company, of which he became president, in 1909 organized the Central Wayne Oil & Gas Company, and in 1912, the Wayne Light, Heat & Water Company. These three companies have since been merged together as the Southern West Virginia Oil & Gas Corporation, of which Mr. Prichard is president. He also organized the East Lynn Coal Company and the Big Sandy, East Lynn and Guyon Railroad Company, and among other enterprises he has promoted is the Wayne Brick & Tile Company. He has been an enthusiastic advocate of good roads construction for a number of years. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason, has been grand master of the State Lodge of Odd Fellows, and has filled all the district offices in the Knights of Pythias.

In 1880 Mr. Prichard married Catherine Finley, daughter of Eb Finley. Mrs. Prichard died in 1901, the mother of five children. The oldest, E. F., is an accountant at Macon, Georgia; Dr. Allen C. was in the World war as first lieutenant, then as captain, and, finally, as major. He was on the battle front at St. Mihiel and the Argonne, being dangerously wounded in the latter action, and is now practicing medicine at Hot Springs, Arkansas. The third child, Stella M., is the wife of Gordon Davis, of Huntington, West Virginia. The son Oscar died at the age of nineteen, and the youngest, Sallie, is the wife of C. W. Harp, of Lexington. In 1902 Mr. Prichard married Etta R. Rucker, daughter of John W. and Emma Bell Rucker, of Lawrence County, Ohio. To this marriage have been born three sons, Belvud R., Marion J. and Russell G.

WILLIAM A. SHANNON for a long period of years, in fact since early manhood, has been in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company. For over ten years he has been the railway station agent at Springfield in Hampshire County.

His name introduces one of the oldest of the pioneer families of this section of West Virginia. The founder of the name was his great-great-grandfather, who came from Merceburg, Pennsylvania, and settled about a mile below the old farm at Springfield. William A. Shannon as a boy could see the ruins of his old pioneer home. He was a blacksmith, and a number of his descendants followed the same trade. His pioneer ancestor was buried in the old graveyard at Springfield in 1792, his grave being marked by a common stone slab. The next ancestor was his son, Thomas Shannon, who likewise was a blacksmith and devoted his active life to his trade in his shop on the Springfield townsite. He was laid to rest in the same graveyard as his father. Thomas Shannon married a Miss Walker, and among their children were: James, who settled at West Union, West Virginia; Andrew; and Mrs. William Donaldson, wife of a large slave holder and wealthy farmer between Springfield and Green Spring in Hampshire County.

Andrew Shannon, grandfather of the railway station agent, was born at Springfield, and died there in 1850, at the age of fifty-two. He also followed his father's trade, and was the village blacksmith of his generation. He was never in public service of any kind. He married Mary Cross as his first wife. She came from Wood County. They had four sons, Benjamin, who was a Springfield blacksmith and a magistrate when he died; Thomas, the only soldier representative of the family who volunteered for the Mexican war, and removed to Ohio and died at Nelsonville in that state; Robert, who also went to Ohio and practiced medicine at Circleville; and James.

James Shannon was born August 5, 1824, and was only a few weeks old when his mother died. He had only a subscription school education, but his inquiring mind led him to investigate and acquire a knowledge of many subjects outside his immediate experience. He became a blacksmith, and for many years worked as a partner with his brother Benjamin at Springfield. He was a member of the school board, a Presbyterial, a loyal and faithful Christian in all his years, was a Southern man in sympathy and a democrat in politics. He died in 1908. His wife was Elizabeth Somerville, who was born in October, 1821, and died New Year's morning of 1900. She was the daughter of William and Elizabeth (Phillips) Somerville, who came to Hampshire County from Frederick County, Virginia, and settled at Romney, where the daughter Elizabeth was born. William Somerville was a saddler and harness maker, and died in 1865, at the age of eighty-three. The children of James Shannon and wife were: Charles, who followed his father's trade for a short time and later became a merchant at Springfield, where he died; Miss Mary, of Springfield; Emma, wife of Charles Towers, of Baltimore; Sallie, who died at the age of sixteen; William Andrew; and Hannah, Mrs. Elwood Parsons, of Springfield.

William A. Shannon was born August 25, 1861, and was reared and educated at Springfield. At the age of twenty-one he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company as a track man, was promoted to section foreman, then to supervisor, and in October, 1911, took over the duties of station agent at Springfield as successor of J. D. Pownall. He has given over forty years to the service of the railway company, has performed his duties with a high degree of fidelity and efficiency, and has also performed a good part as a public spirited citizen of his home community.

For twenty-eight years Mr. Shannon has been a member of the Springfield School Board, and is its president. He is a democrat, is an elder in the Presbyterian Church of Springfield, a former superintendent of the Sunday school and is now assistant superintendent.

At Springfield, November 27, 1884, Mr. Shannon married Miss Fannie C. Parsons, daughter of William C. and Louise (Jarboe) Parsons, her mother a daughter of Washington Jarboe. Her father was born near Springfield and her mother at Piedmont, West Virginia. William Parsons was a Confederate soldier. Mrs. Shannon was born September 16, 1864, seventh in a family of thirteen children, eleven of whom grew up and nine are still surviving, namely: Elwood, of Springfield; Mrs. Nannie Parker, of Lincoln, Nebraska; Mrs. Shannon; Mrs. Sallie Hughes, of Moundsville, West Virginia; William, of Cumberland, Maryland; Miss Louise, of Springfield; John, of Piedmont; James and Charles, both of Springfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Shannon have one son, Augustus, born December 25, 1885. He was educated in the public schools, is a traveling salesman, and during the World war served as a member of the Hampshire County Draft Board.

J. FRANK JUNKINS, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners of Mineral County, is one of the most progressive of the agriculturalists of this region. His finely-improved farm in the Elk District being one of the most valuable rural properties in this part of West Virginia. He was born in New Creek District, Mineral County, January 31, 1872, a son of Ephraim Junkins and grandson of John Junkins, of Irish descent, who established his home in Maryland at an early date, but came to Mineral County in his latter years, and here died. During many years of his life he was a school-teacher, and he was a well-educated man. Twice married, his son Ephraim was born of his second union.

Ephraim Junkins, it is believed, was born in Maryland, and following the close of the war of the '60s he came to Mineral County. Securing land in Elk District, he devoted himself to farming, but was a man of moderate circumstances, and worked hard to support his family. His education was a limited one, and he never formed any fraternal connections. During all of his mature years he was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and died firm in its faith when fifty-five years of age. In politics he was a republican, but he did not enter the contests for public honor.

The mother of J. Frank Junkins was Sarah (Harrison) Junkins, and she was a daughter of Nathan Harrison, and was born in Mineral County, in 1841. Although now an aged lady, she survives and is enjoying excellent health. Her father left Virginia for West Virginia, and he was a farmer all his life. Two of the brothers of Mrs. Junkins, Reynolds and William Harrison, served in the Union army, and received pensions from the Federal Government. They were farmers of Mineral County, and died without issue. Mrs. Junkins' educational advantages were those afforded the country girl of her generation and locality. She and her husband became the parents of the following children: Charles C., who is a farmer of New Creek District; Oliver R., who is a farmer of Elk District; James Franklin, whose name heads this review; John, who died when seventeen years old; and Lucy Virginia, who married Henry Roberts, a farmer of Welton District.

J. Frank Junkins was reared on his father's farm and attended the district schools. After attaining his majority he began working for neighboring farmers, and continued in this line until he was thirty. During these nine years he had but two employers, and his wages ranged from $15 to $20 per month. In spite of the small amount he received he was thrifty and saved a considerable amount, having in mind all the while the purchase of a home of his own. This he was able to do when he ceased working for others, acquiring ownership of the farm in Elk District which has continued to be his home ever since. He has 628 acres of very productive land, all paid for, on which he is carrying on grain and stock raising. The original purchase was of 410 acres, but he and his wife have since added 218 acres to their farm. The improvements made by Mr. Junkins are many and include the remodeling of the house and the erection of a barn 30 by 40 feet, with a mowroom for forty tons or more of hay. His buildings are kept in fine repair, his fences are good, and he has improved machinery and appliances for doing his farm work. His stock shows the effects of breeding up to a high standard of grades, of which the Durham strain is his preference because of the milk-producing qualities. Mr. Junkins has gone into sheep-raising quite extensively, keeping to the Shropshire strain, and he has found this the most profitable of his industries, for sheep require less for upkeep and make two cash returns each year. His profits from his sheep have played an important part in his success as an agriculturalist. In addition to his farm and stock interests Mr. Junkins was a stockholder in the Siever Hardware Company of Keyser, which business was wiped out in the disastrous fire in that city in February, 1922.

Mr. Junkins is one of the most prominent republicans in this part of the state, and cast his maiden presidential vote for Major McKinley in 1896, since which time he has remained faithful to his party's candidates. His personal success commended him for public service, and he was strongly urged for some time to become a candidate for county commissioner. Responding to these appeals, he entered the race in 1916, defeated his five competitors for the nomination, and won the election over the democratic candidate by the normal republican majority. Sworn in as commissioner in January, 1917, as the successor of J. R. Bane, for the first two years he served on the board with Alfred Ridgely and George Klenke. During the next two years George T. Carskadon took Mr. Klenke's place, and the last two years Aaron Thrush took Mr. Ridgely's place. The most important work accomplished by the board during Mr. Junkins' term of office have been the building of the New Creek "drive," the Keyser-Piedmont Road, eight miles of road grade from Blaine to the Northwestern Turnpike, and nearly six miles of grade from Ridgely toward Patterson's Creek.

Mr. Junkins married Miss Eliza Virginia Dixon, a daughter of Joseph and Amy (Bragg) Dixon. Joseph Dixon was born in Pennsylvania, but following the close of the war of the '60s he came to West Virginia as a school-teacher, and here met and married Amy Bragg. They spent the remainder of their lives on their farm in Mineral County. Mrs. Dixon was noted for her good spelling, and was a school-teacher prior to her marriage. Spelling was one of the branches in which she specialized, and was not satisfied until she thoroughly grounded her pupils in it. Mr. Dixon died in 1901, but she is still living, although over eighty years of age. She and her husband had three children who reached maturity, two of whom are now living, namely: lbert C. Dixon, who lives in the Elk District; and Mrs. unkins, who was born April 7, 1875. Mr. and Mrs. unkins have a son, Albert Dixon, who was born April 7, 1901. He graduated from the Elk District High School, and is now a farmer. There are two children, Bessie and Richard, born of his marriage with Myrtle Dixon.

G. W. Fane

While J. Frank Junkins is not identified with any religious organization, he is a believer in the effectiveness of the work of the Protestant churches, and is a liberal supporter of all the denominations in his neighborhood, especially of the Methodist Episcopal, as Mrs. Junkins was reared in its faith and is now a member of the local church. Mr. Junkins's success is but the natural outcome of his industry, thrift and good management. He early learned the value of money and how to invest it so as to yield a profit. While he has been steadily adding to his material prosperity, however, as the years have passed he has not allowed to also win the approval and gain the respect of his neighbors, and is today recognized as one of the most representative men of the county.

GEORGE WILLIAM FARR, who began the practice of law in West Union more than forty years ago, has served the profession with all his abilities and character, has earned those things that constitute success, and among other honors was for some time judge of the circuit including Doddridge County.

Judge Farr was born on a farm in Fayette County, West Virginia, December 18, 1857, son of Wesley J. and Elizabeth (McCue) Farr. His father was born February 1, 1824, in Vermont, son of Artemus and Chloe Farr. Artemus Farr was born and reared on the south coast of Vales, and on coming to America settled in Vermont. He was accompanied by three brothers to this country. Wesley J. Farr was thirteen years of age when his father died in 1837, and he was soon bound out to a New York man, but on account of cruel treatment ran away and walked to New York City and from there traveled by teamboat to Richmond, Virginia. In Virginia he sought work, and was variously employed for several years and in the meantime added to his education by private study. He finally moved to what is now Pocahontas County, West Virginia, and a few years later to Nicholas County, where he met and married Elizabeth McCue. She was born in Nicholas County, daughter of John and Malinda (McLung) McCue, natives of Nicholas County, where they spent their lives. After his marriage Wesley Farr remained in Nicholas County farming until 1856, and then established his home on another farm in Fayette County, where he lived until his death, on May 29, 1900. His wife, Elizabeth, died in 1866, the mother of five children, two of whom died in infancy. The other three were: Chloe M., Mrs. Charles Judy, of Lansing, West Virginia; George W.; and James C., of Fayetteville. For his second wife Wesley Farr married Mary E. Legg, who was born and reared in Fayette County, and is still living. She became the mother of nine children, named Ellen, Leonard, Grant, Rosa, Walter, Arthur, Susan, John and Lud.

Wesley Farr was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was a man of intellectual power and force of character, and in spite of the fact that he was largely self educated he was regarded as one of the best informed men in his county. He held several positions of honor and trust, being a member of the County Court and justice of the peace. He was a strong Union man in the Civil war. In politics he was a democrat up to the war, but ever after was a republican.

Judge George W. Farr attended rural schools, and after exhausting these advantages he became in turn a teacher and taught for six terms. In the meantime he was studying law, and in April, 1881, he was admitted to the bar and on the twenty-fifth of the same month he established his office at West Union. During all the busy years of a professional career he has looked after an extensive private practice, has served as county prosecuting attorney, as mayor of West Union, for eight years was a state senator, and resigned that office to become judge of the Circuit Court by appointment from Governor Atkinson to fill a vacancy. He was on the bench for twenty months, and then resumed private practice. Judge Farr has farm interests and has prospered in his business affairs as well as in his profession. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Church.

On April 15, 1886, Judge Farr married Miss Agnes V. Stuart. Her father, Chapman J. Stuart, one of the able lawyers and prominent citizens of West Virginia, was born in Highland County, Virginia, January 8, 1820, and died at West Union, April 20, 1888, a son of Edward and Margaret A. Stuart, who removed to Harrison County, West Virginia, in 1822. The first wife of Chapman J. Stuart was Elizabeth E. Little, a native of Bedford County, Pennsylvania, who died in 1855. In 1858 he married Mary A. Stuart, who was born in Bath County, Virginia. Chapman J. Stuart served as county prosecutor from 1852 to 1861. He was an opponent of secession, and sat as a member of the First Wheeling Convention of 1861, was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and in 1863 was elected judge of the Circuit Court and was on the bench for ten years, until 1873. His public service to the state continued after leaving the bench, and in 1874-75 and again in 1878-79 he represented Doddridge County in the Legislature. During the Civil war he did some valuable work as a lieutenant of the Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry in recruiting Union soldiers, raising Company A of that regiment. He was a democrat and a member of the Methodist Church.

Judge and Mrs. Farr have two children: Mary and Ruby T. Mary is the deceased wife of Ed. Maxwell, and her only child, Mary Agnes, is now being reared in the home of her grandparents, Judge and Mrs. Farr. Ruby is the wife of Everet W. Maxwell.

DAVID FOX. The entire absence of competition in his special line of business endeavor at Huntington cannot account for the worthwhile success that has attended the career of David Fox, proprietor of the Branchland Supply Company, jobbers in oil and gas well supplies. This enterprise is entirely of Mr. Fox's own development, and in its building up he has displayed all the characteristics included in the make-up of a successful business man, including perseverance, aggressiveness tempered by practical conservatism, and an integrity that has become proverbial.

Mr. Fox was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, September 27, 1858, a son of Sam and Henrietta (Adler) Fox. Sam Fox, now a resident of Huntington, was born February 26, 1863, in Bavaria, and was a youth of seventeen years when he immigrated to the United States. In his native land he had received a common school education and learned the trade of tailoring, and on his arrival at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1880, applied himself to his trade and subsequently established himself in business as a merchant tailor. He was married in that city, where he continued to make his home until 1899, in that year removing to Huntington, West Virginia, where he opened a tailoring establishment. He has enjoyed constantly increasing success, and is now one of the leaders of the city in his line of business. Mr. Fox is a republican in his political sympathies, and belongs to Oheb-Shalom Temple, Huntington. He is fraternally affiliated with the Masons and with Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Fox married Miss Henrietta Adler, who was born in 1863, in Baden, Germany, and died at Huntington in 1911, a woman of many excellencies of heart and mind. Mr. and Mrs. Fox became the parents of the following children: David, of this review; Hilda, a graduate nurse of New York City, who saw much active service as a nurse in France during the World war; Leo, who is engaged in the insurance business at Huntington; Erwin, proprietor of the Fox Dry Cleaning Company of Huntington; and James, who is attending the Huntington High School.

David Fox attended the graded schools of Huntington and the high school through the sophomore year, and, leaving school in 1904, joined his father in the merchant tailoring business. He remained with the elder man for four years, and in 1908 joined the Guyan Oil Company, as chief clerk at Huntington, continuing with that concern until 1913. At that time he became the founder of the Branchland Supply Company, jobbers in oil and gas well supplies, and has built up a prosperous and flourishing business, the only one of its kind at Huntington, where he maintains well-appointed offices at 201-2 Day and Night Building. Mr. Fox has won success entirely through his own ability and progressiveness, and at the same time has maintained a high standing in the esteem and confidence of those with whom he has been associated. He is a stockholder in the Huntington National Bank and the Ohio Valley Bank of Huntington. His political views make him a republican, and he is a member of Oheb-Sholom Temple of Huntington. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the B'nai B'rith. He is likewise a member of the Guyan Country Club of Huntington and the Huntington Rotary Club. He owns a comfortable, modern residence at No. 1115 Tenth Avenue.

In 1915, at Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Fox was united in marriage with Miss Blanche Goodman, daughter of Abram and Nessie (VanCleaf) Goodman, the latter of whom is deceased, while the former still resides at Cincinnati, where he is the proprietor of a sales stable. Two children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Fox: Betty Jane, born August 19, 1916; and David, Jr., born February 19, 1921.

CECIL H. PERRY was born in Logan County at a time when this famous coal district was hardly known to the world. He received a training that equipped him with the highest degree of technical skill for service in the coal industry, and as a civil and mining engineer returned to his native county a year or so ago and is now general superintendent for the Main Island Creek Coal Company at Stirrat on the Omar Branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Mr. Perry was born in Logan, May 22, 1886, son of N. F. and Ida (Gore) Perry. The Gores are an old West Virginia family. The Perry family were early settlers in the famous Pike County District of Missouri. N. F. Perry was born, however, in West Virginia, and served in the Confederate army, being a member of the regiment known as the Wild Cats. He was once wounded in the forearm, and subsequently was captured and was held at Fort Donelson until 1866. He was a farmer by occupation.

Cecil H. Perry attended common schools at Logan, and acquired his professional education in Columbia University of New York City, where he graduated civil engineer in 1907. As a civil engineer engaged in work of a mine engineer he spent two years in New Mexico with the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coal Company. He then returned East and was at Washington from 1909 to 1912 as resident engineer for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. Returning to West Virginia, he became an engineer with the Consolidated Coal Company at Fairmont, and served with this corporation successively as mining engineer, superintendent and finally as general superintendent until January, 1920, when he resigned and took up his present duties at Stirrat with the Main Island Creek Coal Company. He is general superintendent of mines Nos. 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21 and 22 for this company. Mr. Perry was discouraged from army service during the war, since he was more useful to the Government in securing a maximum of coal production.

On May 22, 1912, at Jackson, Kentucky, Mr. Perry married Miss Nancy E. Woodman, daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth (Combs) Woodman, both natives of Kentucky. Her father is a merchant at Hazard, that state. The two children born to their marriage are Mary Elizabeth and Paul. Mr. and Mrs. Perry are Baptists, and he is a Master Mason and is also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias.

CHARLES W. ATKINSON is the efficient general superintendent of the Jenkinjones group of mines (Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8) operated by the Pocahontas Fuel Company, in the vicinity of the Village of Jenkinjones, McDowell County.

Mr. Atkinson was born in Montgomery County, Virginia, March 3, 1870, and is a son of James G. and Mary Elizabeth (Cunningham) Atkinson, both natives of Bedford County, Virginia, where the former was born April 12, 1842, and the latter, September 7, 1844. The parents now reside at Alleghany Springs, Montgomery County, Virginia, and all of their five children are living. James G. Atkinson was a valiant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war took part in many battles, including those of Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain and Princeton, and his command was with the forces of General Johnston on the retreat to the seaboard and at the final surrender in North Carolina. Mr. Atkinson has been a successful farmer, and has been engaged also in work as a carpenter and builder. He was for twelve years a resident of McDowell County, West Virginia, where he built houses at various mines and also did other construction work. At Northfork, this county, he served as justice of the peace. He now owns and resides upon his well improved farm in Montgomery County, Virginia, and both he and his wife are in the best of health. They are active members of the Missionary Baptist Church, and he is a republican and a member of the United Confederate Veterans. Edwin Thomas, eldest of the children is a farmer near the home of his parents; Charles W., of this review, was next in order of birth; Lillie is the wife of B. F. Barnes, of Floyd County, Virginia; Lulu Maude is the widow of John W. Doss, who, as a contractor, built hundreds of mine houses, and she resides at Alta Vista, Virginia; Frank M. resides at Graham, that state.

Charles W. Atkinson gained his youthful education in the schools of his native county, and he was twenty-one years of age when he came to McDowell County, West Virginia, and initiated his association with coal mining. He worked with pick and shovel in the loading of coal at Simmons Creek, and four months later went to the Upland Mine of the Crozier Coal Company, where he won promotion to the position of head trackman. After four years he became the company's slate foreman at Northfork, and his effective service led to consecutive advancement, both at Northfork and Arlington. He was assistant mine foreman three years, then became mine foreman at Greenbrier, and finally was made general foreman in charge of the Cherokee Mine. At Switchback, as general foreman, he had charge of five mines, and thereafter he was in service one year at Northfork and later at Shamokin and Lick Branch. For two years he was general superintendent of the Rolfe collieries of the Pocahontas Fuel Company, and in 1912 he assumed his present responsible position as general superintendent at Jenkinjones. The railroad extension to this point had not been made at that time and the opening of the mines, including the general construction work, were effected under his supervision, so that he is consistently to be termed a pioneer in this now important coal field. He has been closely identified with general development and progress in the community, and has served as a member of the school board of Adkins District. He is a republican, is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Knights of Pythias, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Atkinson is more than six feet in height, strong in mind and body, and a fine representative of the productive workers of the world.

On July 3, 1896, Mr. Atkinson married May Planner, daughter of J. K. Planner, of Elkhorn, this state, to which he came from Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson have four sons and three daughters.

EARL MCCONNAUGHY has effectively upheld the prestige of the family name in connection with the coal-mining industry, and is one of its vital and progressive exponents in the Kentucky and West Virginia fields. He was the organizer and is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the P. M. C. Coal Company, which derives its title from the surname initials of its three promoters, Messrs. Palmer, McConnaughy and Countreman. The coal lands of the company comprise 600 acres on Hatfield Bend of the Tug River in Pike County, with a steel bridge across the river to afford connection with the company's tipples in West Virginia. The residence and executive headquarters of Mr. McConnaughy are maintained at Sprigg, Mingo County, West Virginia. He had the supervision of the opening of the mine of this company and the erection and equipping of the producing plant, operations at the mine having been initiated in August, 1918, and the company having developed a large export trade.

Mr. McConaughy was born at Bridgeport, Ohio, June 19, 1877, a son of Howell and Sophia (Heneke) McConaughy, both likewise natives of that place, where the mother died in February, 1911, aged fifty-nine years, and where the death of the father occurred in the following October, when he was sixty-two years of age. Howell McConaughy was actively concerned with coal mining during his entire business career, and operated mines in the Eastern Ohio District. Of the family of three sons and one daughter the eldest son, Albert C., was president of the Buffalo Eagle Coal Company, operating in the Logan field of West Virginia, and also secretary and treasurer of the Guyan Coal Company, his death having occurred in 1920. Fred is district agent of the New York Life Insurance Company, with headquarters at Lead, South Dakota. The only daughter is Mrs. Charles Adams, of Dayton, Ohio.

The early education of Earl McConaughy was acquired in the schools of his native place. He was eighteen years old when he left the Bridgeport High School and initiated his association with the practical affairs of business. He became night superintendent of the Aetna Standard Mill, and four years later, at the age of twenty-two years, he became assistant superintendent for the Republic Iron & Steel Company at Toledo, Ohio. A year later he accepted the position of superintendent for the Henderson Coal Company, operating in Ohio, and in this connection he maintained his headquarters in his native city of Bridgeport for ten years. He then came to the Logan coal fields in West Virginia, and for two years was engaged in the buying of coal lands. He then became manager of the Alua Thacker Fuel Company in Kentucky, not far distant from Matewan, West Virginia, and his next decisive movement was the organizing of the P. M. C. Coal Company, of which he has since continued secretary, treasurer and general manager. He was in the last draft, at the time of the World war, but received from Government authorities instruction to bend his energies to the production of coal, an economic service of as much value as could be that which he might render in the army or navy. He spurred his energies to the maximum production of fuel, and thus effectively followed the instructions which had been given. Mr. McConaughy's basic Masonic affiliation is with the Blue Lodge at Williamson, and in the Scottish Rite he has received the thirty-second degree, besides which he is a member of the Lodge of Elks at Martins Ferry, Ohio. He was reared in the faith of the Methodist Church, and his wife holds membership in the Presbyterian Church.

On April 5, 1900, Mr. McConaughy married Miss Lucy Hill, daughter of Thomas Hill, of Bridgeport, Ohio. They have no children.

CHARLES SPINDLER. Before answering the summons of death on March 17, 1922, Charles Spindler had accumulated those achievements that mark for lasting honor, an individual life. He was a former sheriff of Preston County, and had spent thirty years as a contractor both in general building and in road construction and probably had as much substantial work to his credit in Preston County as any other man in his line.

The Spindler family has been in Preston County since prior to the Civil war. His grandfather, Jonathan Spindler brought his family to the United States from one of the German states about 1828, first locating in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, where Jonathan Spindler died. He and his wife were buried near Turkeyfoot. He was a farmer, and all his sons were farmers or mechanics. These sons—there were no daughters—were three in number, John, Jonathan and Andrew.

Andrew Spindler was a volunteer soldier at the time of the Civil war, but hostilities closed before he got out of training camp. He learned the carpenter's trade, made it his life work, though he also owned a farm and reared his family in the country. On coming to West Virginia he established his home near Clifton Mills in Grant District of Preston County. He was a contractor and builder in this locality. He died in 1908, surviving his wife two years.

They were buried at St. Peter's in Grant District. Andrew Spindler was one of the respected men of his locality, though he never sought public honors, voted as a republican and worshipped as a Lutheran. He was a hearty and rugged man, about medium height, and had a fine sense of duty. His wife was Nancy J. Haines, of a family that came to Preston County prior to the Spindlers. She was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania. Her children were: Elizabeth, widow of Robert Maust, residing near Clifton Mills; William, a farmer and veterinarian in Grant District, and a member of the County Court; Loretta, who died at Fairchance, Pennsylvania, wife of Steward Barclay; Isabel, who became the wife of Edward Smith, of Uniontown, West Virginia; James G., of Fayetteville, Pennsylvania; Samuel of Burketts town, Pennsylvania; Charles; and Bruce, an undertaker and furniture dealer in Kingwood.

Charles Spindler was born April 29, 1871, at his father's home in Grant District. He lived with his parents until he passed his twenty-first birthday. He attained a common school education and attended two summer normals in Grant District. For four years he was an apprentice at the carpenter's trade, followed it as a journeyman, and gradually took on an ever increasing scope of activities as a contractor. For many years his work was in building houses and barns in Grant District exclusively. From there he expanded his business over a larger territory, and to include all classes of building and construction work, including road making.

Mr. Spindler perfected an organization for handling perhaps the most important class of public improvement to-day, road building. Of hard surface road in Preston County he constructed some fifteen miles. In 1921 he completed three and a half miles of the Corinth and Albright roads. The building of durable and permanent roads was a subject to which Mr. Spindler devoted a great deal of time and study, and he appreciated some of the limitations imposed upon the contractors. While the type of hard surface roads recently constructed is a wonderful improvement over the old dirt road, it will not stand up, in the opinion of Mr. Spindler, under the heavy traffic of many years, since the construction work specified is too light. Ordinarily five and seven inches of thickness has been the standing for road building over the state, and while experience shows it to be insufficient, county courts have been slow in conceding their mistake and have failed to adopt heavier type, involving greater initial expense, but undoubtedly the better for permanent wear. Insufficient drainage is another feature of road building that Mr. Spindler discovered through experience, but the matter of drainage has been well taken care of in his territory, and undoubtedly an ideal system of drainage and construction will in time be the standard.

One good example of Mr. Spindler's activities in house building is his Kingwood home, a ten-room brick of two stories, which with its modern features, stands as one of the finest residences in the county seat. Earlier in his career he built his home in Bruceton and another at Terra Alta. One high class artistic home which he constructed is the Lincoln home at Kingwood. He erected four of the Hopemont sanitarium buildings, the Masontown school building and the bank building at that place, perhaps the equal or better than any other banking house in the county. He was also contractor for the Methodist Church and parsonage at Terra Alta. The best example of his concrete construction is the three-story Herring business building at Kingwood.

Along with contracting Mr. Spindler found other interests to engage his time and attention. The people of Preston County nominated him for sheriff in 1908. He was the successful one among five candidates for the republican nomination. He was elected, defeating William M. Schaeffer, and served the four year term allowed by law. He was a village and peace officer, though he had perhaps only the normal routine of duties. Three murders were committed in the county during that time, and he used his official authority to break up some of the illicit traffic in liquor. Mr. Spindler was twice elected mayor of Terra Alta, and served one term in the same office for Kingwood. At Kingwood, his administration was marked by an era of street improvement. Mr. Spindler was a member of West Virginia Consistory of Scottish Rite Masonry at Wheeling, and was also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Woodmen of the World. He was reared a Lutheran but for a number of years was a member of the Methodist Church.

In Preston County April 11, 1899, Mr. Spindler married Miss Nettie Matheny, daughter of W. J. Matheny and Fanny (Bush) Matheny. Mrs. Spindler was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, in 1876, the oldest of eight children, the others being Effie; Jessie, a trained nurse who died unmarried; Mrs. Hattie Lyons; Howe; Ray; Miss Willa and Miss Myrtle. Except Mrs. Spindler all these children now live in Southern California, around Los Angeles.

Surviving the honored husband and father are Mrs. Spindler and two children: Charles Hobart was associated with his father in the contracting business. He married Miss Josephine Brown. Gerald Ralph is a student in the University of Morgantown.

The first wife of Mr. Spindler was Luanna Wirsing. By this marriage he had a son, William W., who after reaching manhood became associated with his father in business, and left civilian life to enlist at the beginning of the World war. He was in the field artillery and died at Camp Meade of the influenza and was buried with the honors of a soldier at Kingwood.

DON CUNNINGHAM. Although one of the younger members of the Braxton County Bar Association, Don Cunningham has already proven his ability as a lawyer and worth as a man, and is enjoying a large and growing practice at Gassaway. He is a veteran of the World war, and his record as a soldier is characteristic of the man. He was born in Randolph County, West Virginia, June 17, 1895, a son of David S. and Minnie (Warner) Cunningham, born in 1858 and 1865, respectively. The paternal grandfather was Solomon F. Cunningham, and the family is of Scotch-Irish descent. David S. Cunningham was reared on a farm, and educated in the free and normal schools of West Virginia. During his younger years he was engaged in teaching school and held a first-grade certificate, but later on in life carried on an extensive business as a lumber merchant, and was a member of the lumberman's organization known as Hoo Hoos. In his political sentiments and actions he was a republican, and staunch in his party support. The Presbyterian Church held his membership. The following children were born to him and his wife: Guy, who is a graduate of the Keyser preparatory branch of West Virginia University, and is at home; Warren, who is auditor of the Central West Virginia & Southern Railroad; Margaret, the wife of Floyd Harris; Robert, a resident of Montrose, Randolph County, West Virginia; and Don, whose name heads this review.

Don Cunningham was reared in Randolph and Tucker counties, and attended the public schools, the West Virginia Preparatory School at Keyser, West Virginia, and Washington and Lee University, being graduated from the law department of the latter institution with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. In 1917 Mr. Cunningham enlisted in his country's service as a private, rose through the ranks to second lieutenant, and was at Camp Lee as an instructor when the armistice was signed. Following his honorable discharge he was placed in the Officers' Reserve Corps of the United States army. Following his discharge Mr. Cunningham went to Elkins, West Virginia, and took the West Virginia bar examination, was admitted to the bar September 30, 1919, for a short time was engaged in practice at Elkins, and in March, 1921, came to Gassaway, where he has since remained.

Mr. Cunningham married, March 12, 1921, Miss Ida L. League, a graduate of the public schools and the Southern Seminary at Buena Vista, Virginia. She is a daughter of John S. and Grace B. (Woodford) League, the former of whom is a jeweler of Gassaway. Mr. Cunningham belongs to Gassaway Lodge No. 196, K. of P., in which he is master of finance; and to the Loyal Order of Moose. Mrs. Cunningham is a member of the Pythian Sisters. She is an active worker in and member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which Mr. Cunningham is a liberal contributor. The republican party and ticket receives the strong support of the Cunninghams. Thoroughly abreast of the times, with excellent abilities, both natural and carefully trained, Mr. Cunningham brings to his practice and also to his civic responsibilities the enthusiasms of youth and the results of thoughtful preparation, and is rapidly advancing to a strong position among the legal practitioners of his native state.

ANDY WIRT BERRY. Some men are not content with their home communities, but leave for parts unknown to pursue there a fortune which oftentimes eludes them, but there are others, probably more sensible, who, remaining where they are known and where they are acquainted with the people and customs, earn their money and make their investments locally. Centering their holdings and interests, they are able to acquire means and exert a strong influence along constructive lines. Such is the case of Andy Wirt Berry, one of the large landowners of Braxton County, a merchant and banker of Flatwoods, and one of the city's most representative men and public-spirited citizens.

The birth of Mr. Berry took place on a farm near Flatwoods, which he now owns, November 25, 1876, and he is a son of William H. and Irene Caroline (Denison) Berry. William H. Berry was born in Braxton County, October 16, 1834, and still survives. His wife, Irene Caroline (Denison) Berry, was born near Janelow, Lewis County, West Virginia, a daughter of Gabriel Denison, and a niece of "Stonewall" Jackson. They were reared and educated in the rural districts, and Mr. Berry taught school when young. When the Flatwoods Baptist Church was organized in October, 1889, Mrs. Berry was one of its charter members, and Mr. Berry also belongs to this church. He is a democrat. For many years in addition to his farming activities he was a heavy buyer and shipper of stock, and contributed substantially to the early development of Braxton County. Of the seven children born to these parents four survive, namely: J. G. Berry, who is a contractor in the oil fields of Oklahoma; Andy Wirt, whose name heads this review; Martha E., who is the wife of W. F. Duffield; and Ada, who is the wife of Claude C. Davis.

Growing up on the farm, Andy Wirt Berry attended the common schools, and when only seventeen years of age began teaching school. He spent a couple of years at this work, and then went into his brother's store as a clerk. In 1899 he established himself in business at Flatwoods, and has been handling staves, lumber and coal ever since. He is also interested in oil, gas and coal, and owns a number of farms in Braxton County, as well as stock in the Bank of Sutton and in many other local enterprises.

In 1901 Mr. Berry married Miss May Fisher, who was the daughter of Hon. B. F. Fisher, of Braxton County. She died in 1902, and he subsequently married Miss Anna Zinn, of Troy, West Virginia. Mr. Berry has six children, namely: Irene, Elizabeth, A. W., Jr., May Nell, Robert Zinn, and Richard Waitman.

He is a member of the Flatwoods Baptist Church, which he is now serving as clerk. A Mason, he belongs to Sutton Lodge No. 21, A. F. and A. M., of which he has been master for eight years; Sutton Chapter, Sutton Commandery, K. T., and the Mystic Shrine of Charleston, West Virginia. He completed the eighteen degrees of the Scottish Rite at Clarksburg, West Virginia, and will complete the Scottish Rite up to the thirty-second degree at Wheeling, West Virginia, in the very near future. In politics he is a democrat. He also takes a very active part in county and state politics. In everything he has undertaken Mr. Berry has been successful, but he has made it a point to look into a matter very carefully before taking action, and to see to his interests personally. He is very proud of his home community and is anxious to secure for it a proper amount of improvements, but at the same time he is not willing to sanction an unwise expenditure of the taxpayers' money. Such men as Mr. Berry are a valuable asset to any neighborhood, and he may properly be regarded as one of the best representatives of the substantial American business man of his time and locality.

HON. JOHN I. BENDER. Because of the leading part he has taken in business, financial and public affairs and the extent and importance of his connections Hon. John I. Bender is justly accounted one of the leading citizens of Braxton County, where he is representative of his district in the Lower House of the State Legislature and president of the Burnsville Exchange Bank. He was born at Chapel, five miles from Gassaway, West Virginia, December 11, 1870, and is a son of Andrew and Eliza E. (Lloyd) Bender.

The paternal grandfather of Mr. Bender, John Bender, was born in Germany, where he was reared, educated and learned the trade of tailor. In his native land he married Mary C. Dahis, and following their union they immigrated to the United States, first locating for a short time at Baltimore, Maryland, and then coming to West Virginia and settling on Steer Creek. Mr. Bender farmed here and also followed his trade to some extent, but finally went to the State of Iowa, where his death occurred. He was a man of religious inclination and was straight-forward and honorable in his dealings. He and his worthy wife were the parents of the following children: Henry; Mary, who became the wife of N. W. Lloyd; Andrew and John, who were twins; W. K.; and Christina, who became the wife of Azariah Bright. All these children are living in 1922 with the exception of Mary.

Andrew Bender was born in the Chapel community, near Gassaway, where he was educated in the public schools and reared to the pursuits of farming, which he adopted on reaching manhood. Following his marriage he settled on a farm in his native community, where he has always carried on his operations, and at the present time is engaged in the successful cultivation of a valuable and modernly-equipped tract of 350 acres. He is a republican in politics, and he and Mrs. Bender are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of their nine children six are living in 1922: Tabitha, who is the widow of George C. Gerwig; John I., of this notice; Christina, the wife of W. A. Haymond, of Florida; Iva, the widow of Rev. C. E. Hainrick; L. L., who is engaged in farming in Braxton County; and Otis A., also an agriculturist of Braxton County.

John I. Bender was reared on the home farm in the Gassaway community, and his early education was acquired in the rural schools near his father's farm. Later he received instruction in private schools, and with this preparation entered upon a career as a teacher, but after two years decided that the educator's profession was not his forte, and accordingly turned his attention to merchandising. For several years he conducted a store, but in 1905 changed his scene of operations to Burnsville, where he embarked in the lumber business, an enterprise with which he continued to be identified and in which he has achieved a very gratifying success. Mr. Bender was one of the organizers of the Braxton County Bank, of which he was president, and when this institution was taken over by the Burnsville Exchange Bank he became the chief executive of the combined institution. This position he still holds, his fellow-officials in the institution being: W. C. Hefner, vice president; H. B. Marshall, cashier; and Frank Amos, assistant cashier, while the board of directors consists of the following: John I. Bender, G. D. Marple, C. A. Wade, H. B. Marshall, E. A. Stockert, W. C. Hefner, F. G. Hoover, Frank Amos, John M. Marple, R. D. Dennison and W. G. Wilson. Mr. Bender is also interested in the oil and gas business, and is the owner of a handsome modern farm, on which he maintains a productive orchard. In his various business connections he has always shown himself thoroughly capable, reliable and trustworthy, winning and holding the deserved confidence of his associates, and through his energy and progressiveness contributing to the success of the various enterprises with which he is identified.

Politically a republican, Mr. Bender has long been interested in public affairs and wields a strong influence in the ranks of his party. He was the first republican ever elected a member of the County Court of Braxton County, serving on that body from 1900 to 1906, and has also been a member of the Burnsville City Council and of the local Board of Education, in all of which capacities he advocated measures that would add to his community's growth and elevate its standards of morality, education and good citizenship. In 1914 he was first sent to the State Legislature of West Virginia, as the representative of his district, and served capably during the session of 1915 and 1916. Again, in 1920, he was the successful candidate for the Legislature, in which he served in the session of 1921 and 1922, to the great benefit of his constituents. His public career has been one in which his record is an open book and has been characterized by numerous achievements in behalf of his community and his state.

On May 1, 1902, Mr. Bender was united in marriage with Miss Inez Harbert, who was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, and educated in the public schools and the State Normal School at Fairmont. Five children have been born to this union: Edgar A., a graduate of the Burnsville High School; Earl L., who is attending that school; and John R., William H. and James C., who are students in the graded schools. Mr. and Mrs. Bender are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and active in the work thereof. As a fraternalist Mr. Bender is a past master of Burnsville Lodge No. 87, A. F. and A. M.; a member of Sutton Commandery No. 16, K. T., and Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M.; a past noble grand of the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

W. B. GOLDEN. A position of public trust is necessarily indicative of the man who fills it. When the duties of an office demanding a keen intellect, a never-failing diplomacy and a strong moral courage, are, year after year, discharged so satisfactorily that the public vote confirms them successively on the same person, we may be immediately assured that the individual who occupies the office is possessed of the proper abilities. In this connection mention is to be made of W. B. Golden, who was elected to the office of superintendent of schools of Braxton County in 1910, served four years and was elected again in 1918 and is now serving his second term.

Mr. Golden was born in Upshur County, West Virginia, February 19, 1874, a son of A. B. and Celina (McCauley) Golden, both natives of the same locality and both products of the farm and of the country schools. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Golden had taught in the free schools of her native county for several years. After their marriage Mr. Golden turned his attention to farming, and settled on a small farm near Rock Cave, but in 1884 disposed of his interests in that locality and moved to a farm near Flatwoods, Braxton County, where they lived until the death of Mr. Golden, which occurred September 3, 1900, after which Mrs. Golden disposed of the farm and now resides at Walkersville, Lewis County, with her youngest son. They were faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Golden was a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, and his political faith was as a democrat.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Golden were as follows: W. B., of this review; Charles O., who is engaged in farming in the State of Colorado; Eva, who is the wife of M. H. Crawford, of Weston, West Virginia; J. L., who is engaged in farming and the lumber business at Rock Cave, this state; A. H., of Burnsville, Braxton County; T. R., who is engaged in operating a farm in Oklahoma; Oscar, who while working for the Government as a trained nurse in the Philippine Islands, contracted tuberculosis, from which he died; and Clyde, who resides at home with his mother.

W. B. Golden was reared on a farm, but cared little for agricultural pursuits, and when fifteen years of age taught his first country school. He continued to follow this vocation, in the meantime adding much to his store of information by reading and home study courses.

He has been elected two terms of four years each to the office of county superintendent of schools of his county. In the superintendency, Mr. Golden has done much to elevate the standards of the free schools of his county and place them on a higher plane. He has made himself a general favorite with teachers, pupils and parents, and much of his success has been due to the fact that he knows the needs of his county and is working with all the energy at his command for the general betterment. So well has he done his work as superintendent that he is regarded as one of the best in the state and can no doubt be elected again with little opposition.

On May 26, 1899, Mr. Golden married Miss Estella M. Morrison, who was born in Braxton County and educated in the public schools of her county. To this union were born five children: Marvin L., a graduate of the high school at Sutton and has since had two and one-half years at the State University; Mary Marie, a graduate of the Sutton High School and teaches in the graded school at Flatwoods; Audrey, a student at the Flatwoods High School; Opal and Edith, who are attending the graded school at Flatwoods.

The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which Mr. Golden is superintendent of the Sunday school. He is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, in which order he belongs to the State Great Council, and in politics is a democrat.

HOMER THOMAS LAMBERT. Success in life along any path of endeavor demands energy, aggressiveness, proper preparation and self-reliance. Genius and talent may also be present, but for permanency, practicality and the homely virtues are necessary. To the undoubted possession of these may be attributed in part at least the success that has crowned the efforts of Homer Thomas Lambert, of Huntington, a jobber for mine, mill and general contractors' equipments, a manufacturer and a man variously connected with leading business enterprises.

Mr. Lambert was born at Kilgore, Boyd County, Kentucky, September 12, 1884, a son of Samuel T. and Maggie (Simpson) Lambert, and belongs to a family which originated in France and was founded in Virginia during Colonial times. His grandfather, William Lambert, was born in 1824, in Wayne County, Virginia (now West Virginia), where he was reared and educated, and as a young man removed to Boyd County, Kentucky, where he was married. He was a carpenter by trade, and followed that vocation until enlisting in the Union army for service during the war between the states, in which he saw much active service. At the close of the struggle he returned to his trade, and lived in Boyd and Greenup counties, Kentucky, but finally went to Blue Springs, Gage County, Nebraska, where he died in 1906. He was a republican in politics. Mr. Lambert married Elizabeth Ferguson, who was born in Wayne County, and died in Greenup County, Kentucky, in 1864.

Samuel T. Lambert, who is now a resident of Matewan, Mingo County, West Virginia, was born March 7, 1861, in Greenup County, Kentucky, where he was reared and educated, and as a young man became identified with coal operations, in which he has been interested throughout his career. In 1893 he removed to Thacker, Mingo County, this state, and five years later to Matewan, where he has been superintendent and general manager of the Red Jacket Consolidated Coal and Coke Company and of several other companies. In 1912 he engaged in mine operations on his own account, and in 1916 embarked in the general mercantile business, in which he is still interested, having the leading general store at Matewan. One of his community's most prominent and influential citizens, he is serving in the capacity of mayor, and for the past sixteen years has been president of the Board of Education. He is a staunch republican in his political sympathies, belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and holds membership in Bluefield Lodge No. 269, B. P. O. E.; Thacker Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Thacker; and Red Jacket Lodge, K. of P., of Matewan. In 1882 Mr. Lambert married at Geigerville, Boyd County, Kentucky, Miss Maggie Simpson, of Kilgore, Kentucky, who died at Thacker, West Virginia, in 1895. They were the parents of five children, as follows: Marvin, a bookkeeper for the Borderland Coal Company at Borderland, West Virginia; Homer Thomas, of this review; Maggie, who died unmarried in 1916, aged twenty-four years; Ethel, the wife of Luther Hill, train dispatcher for the Norfolk & Western Railroad at Williamson, West Virginia; and Haven, an employee of a United States Government stamping mill at Thayne, Alaska, who met his death in a fall from a building in 1915, when twenty-two years of age. In 1897, at Thacker, West Virginia, Samuel T. Lambert married Miss Dora Christian, who was born at Matewan, West Virginia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Christian, the latter deceased and the former an agriculturist of Okeffe, West Virginia. To this union there have been born two children: Willie, who left home and has not been heard from; and Frank, who resides with his parents.

The public schools of Red Jacket, West Virginia, furnished Homer Thomas Lambert with his primary educational training, following which he pursued a course at the National Business College of Roanoke, Virginia, from which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1904. His first employment was as chief electrician of the Red Jacket mines of Mingo, where he remained two years, and was next with the Jeffrey Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio, for one year. He left this position to become master mechanic and electrician with the Pike Collieries at Matewan, but after six months joined the Glen Alum Coal Company, Glen Alum, West Virginia, as electrician, remaining six months. Mr. Lambert erected the plant of the McDowell Coal and Coke Company at McDowell, West Virginia, in 1907, and was then with the Goodwill Coal and Coke Company of Goodwill, this state, as chief electrician, for ten months. His next experience was as a traveling salesman for the Emmons-Hawkins Hardware Company of Huntington, for three months, following which he joined the Superior Supply Company of Bluefield, West Virginia, as a traveling salesman, with headquarters at Graham, Virginia. In 1911 he left this company and accepted a position with the Queen City Supply Company of Cincinnati, handling mining, mill and contractors' supplies, and while engaged with this concern came to Huntington in 1913. In January, 1915, he resigned his position and embarked in business on his own account as a jobber for mine, mill and general contractors' supplies and equipment, and is so engaged at the present time, having built up the leading business at Huntington. He is likewise engaged in the manufacture of frogs, switches and light track material for the mines, of which there are 2,200 coal mines within a radius of 150 miles of Huntington. His offices are situated at No. 1017-18 First National Bank Building, and the plant is at Fifteenth Street and Jackson Avenue, West Huntington, on the B. & O. and C. & O. railroads. Mr. Lambert is president and general manager of the H. T. Lambert Company, and president of the Linville Oil and Gas Company. He is a democrat in his political allegiance, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Fraternally he belongs to Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M.; Huntington Commandery No. 9, K. T.; Lodge of Perfection No. 4, and Knights of the Rose Croix No. 4, Huntington, West Virginia; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Wheeling, thirty-second degree; Beni-Kedem Temple, A. O. N. M. S., Charleston; and Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E. He holds membership also in the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and the Jobbers and Manufacturers Bureau of Huntington, and is a member and director of the Lions Club. Mr. Lambert owns a modern residence at 614 First Street, one of the attractive homes of Huntington.

On July 5, 1908, at Ironton, Ohio, Mr. Lambert was united in marriage with Miss Vernon Webb, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Brewster) Webb, the latter of whom resides with Mr. and Mrs. Lambert, while the former died at Hanging Rock, Ohio, where he was a cupola tender. Four children have come to Mr. and Mrs. Lambert: Cecil, born April 9, 1909; Howard A., born June 25, 1911; Eleanor Margaret; and Frances Louise.

HON. W. R. PIERSON, JR. In studying the influences which have combined for the advancement of our men of business, professional and public importance, it is invariably to be discovered that these individuals have risen to their present positions largely through the force of their own industry and ability. The traits of character upon which we may depend for the greatest rewards are perseverance, integrity and self-reliance, and to these may be attributed the success that has crowned the efforts of Hon. W. R. Pierson, Jr., a member of the Lower House of the State Legislature from Braxton County, and a resident of Sutton. He has been the architect of his own fortunes and has occupied an honorable place in the confidence of the people because of the straightforward policy ever governing his actions.

Mr. Pierson was born on a farm in Birch District, Braxton County, November 17, 1890, a son of H. H. and Allie (Pierson) Pierson, natives of the same county. His grandfather, W. R. Pierson, Sr., was born December 2, 1842, and still resides on his Braxton County farm, being one of the prominent and influential men of his community. He is a veteran of the war between the states, in which he served as a soldier of the Confederacy. H. H. Pierson was born January 5, 1859, and after receiving a common school education became a school teacher in Braxton County, a vocation which he followed for fifteen years. After his marriage to Allie Pierson, who was born June 15, 1867, he settled down to farming on a property near where both had been reared, and is still identified with the pursuits of the soil. He is a leading republican and president of the school board of Birch District, and as a fraternalist holds membership in the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias. He and his worthy wife are faithful church members and the parents of the following children: H. V., credit man for the Thomas Shoe Company of Charleston, West Virginia; W. R. Jr., of this review; Eva, the wife of J. N. Reip; G. H., a bookkeeper for Hardy, Dana & Company of Charleston; R. H., who holds a like position with the same concern; Ovy O. Pierson, who graduated in the spring of 1922 from the Sutton High School; and Earl H. and Ruth B., who are attending the country school in the vicinity of their father's farm.

The country public and subscription schools furnished W. R. Pierson, Jr., with his educational training while he was being reared on the farm, and in 1910 he went to Charleston, where he became a traveling salesman for the Thomas Shoe Company. He was thus employed when America entered the World war, and June 27, 1917, he enlisted in the American army, with which he served until the armistice was signed. He then returned to his position with the Thomas Shoe Company, and continued therewith until January 1, 1921, when he resigned to give his entire attention to his duties as a member of the Lower House of the West Virginia Legislature, to which he had been elected on the republican ticket. Mr. Pierson has made an excellent official, working faithfully in behalf of his district, his constituents and his state. He has studied deeply the important public questions of the day, and, as a well informed man, of sound and discriminating judgment, has utilized an observant eye and has turned to account the knowledge that he has gained in a somewhat varied career. He has long been a recognized leader in the ranks of the republican party in Braxton County. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, and also belongs to the United Commercial Travelers.

Representative Pierson married Miss Jessie McComb, of Pocahontas County. They have no children.

CARY C. HINES. A leading member of the legal fraternity of Braxton County, who has also been identified prominently with civic and political affairs, is Cary C. Hines, engaged in the successful practice of his calling at Sutton for a period of a quarter of a century. Mr. Hines was born at the mouth of Wolf Creek, near Alderson, Monroe County, West Virginia, March 10, 1874, the ninth son of Joseph Powell and Lucy (Alderson) Hines.

Joseph Powell Hines was also born near the mouth of Wolf Creek, in 1831, and died at Rock Camp, Monroe County, in 1904. His father, William Hines, was a son of Charles and Margaret Hines, who settled on Wolf Creek, now in Monroe County, in which locality Charles Hines died in 1804 and his widow, some years afterward. Joseph Powell Hines married Lucy Alderson, who was born at Alderson, West Virginia, in 1831, and died at Rock Camp, Monroe County, in 1898. She was a daughter of John Alderson and a granddaughter of Rev. John Alderson, who preached for the Baptist congregation at Linville Creek, Virginia, in 1775. After two missionary trips to Greenbrier Valley in the year 1777 Rev. John Alderson came here permanently and built his house in the Town of Alderson, on the present site of the Alderson Hotel. He was the founder of the Greenbrier Valley Baptist Church at Alderson and of the Baptist Church in the Greenbrier Valley, and was a man widely known for his good deeds and earnest work as a spiritual guide and advisor. He died at Alderson, which town takes its name from his grandson, George Alderson, now living there in the eighty-eighth year of his age, who in his younger days was a member of the State Legislature when the capital was located at Wheeling. To Joseph Powell and Lucy (Alderson) Hines there were born ten sons, as follows: Jesse E., engaged in farming at Willow Bend, this state; Charles A., a farmer of Cashmere, West Virginia; Robert L., of Linside, Monroe County, engaged in farming; George R., carrying on agricultural operations at Gower, near St. Joseph, Missouri; Thomas H., who is farming at Mound City, Missouri; James Elmer, of Jackson, Ohio; John Powell, who followed farming at Mound City, Missouri, until his death, December 16, 1921; Samuel Oscar, formerly a traveling salesman for the Sutton Grocery Company, who died at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland, December 7, 1901; Cary C., of this review; and William E., a graduate of the law school of the West Virginia University, class of 1891, and a senior member of the law firm of Hines & Kelly at Sutton.

Cary C. Hines received his early education in the public schools of Monroe County, following which he took a course at the Concord Normal School, Athens, West Virginia. Next he taught three terms of public school at Red Sulphur Springs, Monroe County, and then entered the law school of the West Virginia University, from which he was duly graduated with his degree as a member of the class of 1897. In that year he formed a partnership for the practice of his profession at Sutton with R. G. Linn and W. E. R. Byrne, of Charleston, West Virginia, under the firm style of Linn, Byrne & Hines, which connection continued until the year 1908, when Mr. Byrne withdrew from the firm and W. F. Morrison, Jr., was admitted, the style then becoming Linn, Hines & Morrison. This partnership was terminated in 1919, when Mr. Linn died, but the firm of Hines & Morrison continued until June 1, 1921, when Mr. Morrison severed his connection therewith, and since that time Mr. Hines has been practicing alone at Sutton, Mr. Morrison having removed to Charleston.

Mr. Hines has a large and representative practice and is accounted one of the leaders of the Braxton County bar, where he has been connected with numerous important cases. He has also been identified with public affairs as a prominent figure in the ranks of the democratic party. In the democratic primary of 1904 he was a candidate for the office of prosecuting attorney, but was defeated for the nomination. In 1908 he was again a candidate for the same office and received the nomination in the democratic convention without opposition. Elected to the office in the following fall, he served capably as prosecuting attorney of Braxton County from January 1, 1909, to January 1, 1913. Mr. Hines has a number of business interests, being president of the Central Utilities Company, which furnishes light, power and water to Sutton besides operating the ice plant, is a stockholder and director of the Sutton Grocery and Milling Company, a wholesale grocery concern doing business at Sutton, and is attorney for the Bank of Sutton, all of which enterprises he assisted in organizing. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias and is a Knight Templar Mason and a member of Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston.

On January 16, 1900, Mr. Hines was united in marriage in Braxton County with Miss Elizabeth Morrison, daughter of Wellington F. and Sarah E. (Berry) Morrison. Mr. and Mrs. Hines have one daughter, Virginia Ruth, born December 5, 1901, who graduated from the Sutton High School in 1918, at the age of seventeen years, attended one term at the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, and spent two years at the Ward-Belmont School, Nashville, Tennessee, from which she was graduated as a member of the class of 1922.

GEORGE G. DAVIS. Nowhere is the value of thorough preparation in professional life more evident than in the domain of the law. In the legal field the university is a vital necessity, if the young man reasonably hopes to reach the plane of a broad practice, to get beyond the small courts and the region of pettifoggery. "Be sure you're right; then go ahead," is a maxim which need not alone be posted in business houses. Hurry, feverish haste without forethought, is fatal to the lawyer as well as to the merchant. Still a young man, George G. Davis prepared himself with patience and thoroughness before he entered into the activities of his profession, with the result that in the few years of his actual practice he has made noticeable strides toward success.

Mr. Davis, who is junior member of the law firm of Dulin & Davis, a strong combination at Sutton, and a veteran of the World war, was born at Wheeling, West Virginia, January 4, 1890, a son of W. F. and Alice (Shaffer) Davis. His father was born at Jancelew, Harrison County, West Virginia, and passed his boyhood on a farm, acquiring his educational training in the country schools. After his marriage to Alice Shaffer, who was born in Marion County, this state, and was also a product of the farm and the country school, he went to Wheeling, West Virginia, where he was employed by the firm of W. A. Wilson & Son. Later Mr. Davis embarked in business as a contractor, builder and architect, and in these capacities first came to Braxton County about 1892. He has continued to be engaged in the same lines here ever since and has been very successful. He has risen to a high place in his calling, and many of the largest and most imposing structures in this locality stand as monuments to his skill and good workmanship. He is a democrat in his political leanings, but has not sought public office. In his religious faith he is a Presbyterian, while Mrs. Davis is a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They have but one child, George G.

George G. Davis was only two years of age when brought by his parents to Sutton, and here his early education was obtained in the public schools. After due preparation he entered the law department of the University of West Virginia, and on completing a full course was graduated as a member of the class of 1913, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Upon his return to Sutton he further prepared himself for the practice of his profession by working in an attorney's office, and also worked for two years in the county clerk's office, where he gained much valuable experience. Next, Mr. Davis went to Logan, West Virginia, where he became one of the partners of E. T. England, who has since become attorney general of West Virginia, and was engaged in practice there when the United States entered the World war. Giving up his professional and private interests, Mr. Davis entered the Officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, where he received his commission as a second lieutenant, being later promoted to the rank of first lieutenant. In August, 1918, he was sent overseas to France, and saw active service until March 19, 1919, when he returned to this country, and in the same year was mustered out of the service at Camp Dix, New Jersey. He then returned to Sutton, where he soon took up the practice of his calling, and is now a member of the firm of Dulin & Davis, with a large, representative and lucrative practice in the State and Federal courts.

He was nominated by the republican party in 1920 for prosecuting attorney of his county, but was defeated at the general election by his democratic opponent, a gentleman twenty years his senior, by twenty votes.

In August, 1917, Mr. Davis was united in marriage with Miss Helene Juergens, a graduate of the Sutton High School, and they have one son, William E., born January 4, 1921. Mr. Davis is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and Mrs. Davis is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity at West Virginia University, is a thirty-second degree Mason of Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, and a member of Sutton Lodge No. 21, A. F. and A. M., in which he has numerous friends.

HON. FRED L. FOX. For many years Hon. Fred L. Fox has been one of the foremost citizens of Sutton, foremost in legal circles, in financial affairs, in politics, in public enterprises, in beneficences, and in the place he has won in the confidence of his fellow-citizens. Such varied achievement is a proud distinction, the fruition of a symmetrical manhood. It is possible only to the favored few upon whom have been bestowed the fundamental elements of energy, constructive ability and business intuition. All these essential qualities Mr. Fox possesses, united with an unbending integrity of character that commands the trust and confidence of the public and have made him a power in the development of the community.

Mr. Fox was born on a farm near the mouth of the Big Birch River, October 24, 1876, a son of Camden and Caroline (McMorrow) Fox, and a grandson of Samuel Fox. Samuel Fox was born in Nelson County, Virginia, and became one of the leading citizens of Braxton County. At various times in his active and successful career he followed the vocations of agriculture, milling, lumbering and merchandising, and at the time of his death was a member of the County Court. He was a leading member of the democratic party. Samuel Fox married a Miss Boggs, who was born in Braxton County.

Camden Fox was born in Braxton County, December 14, 1854, and was reared to agricultural pursuits while gaining his educational training in the public schools. On attaining manhood he adopted farming as his life work, and continued to be engaged therein until his retirement in 1919, at which time he moved to his present home at Sutton, where he and his worthy wife are held in the highest esteem. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and his political affiliation is with the democratic party. He and his wife are faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Seven children have been born to them: Fred L., of this review; Jennie, the wife of O. W. Hall; Augusta H., the wife of Daniel Curry, of Bridgeport, Harrison County, this state; Earl F., an attorney temporarily of Shreveport, Louisiana; Anna, the wife of H. O. Fast, of Charleston, West Virginia; John B., deputy county clerk of Braxton County; and Herman V., a medical student at the University of West Virginia.

Fred L. Fox was reared on the home farm and acquired his early education in the common schools. Later he pursued a course in the University of West Virginia, from which he was graduated with the class of 1899, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and, being admitted to the bar during the same year, came at once to Sutton, where he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession with constantly increasing success. He is now a member of the law firm of Haymond & Fox, in existence since 1904, conceded to be one of the strongest combinations in Central West Virginia, practicing in the State and Federal Courts.

Mr. Fox has long been prominent and active in local and state politics, and has been chairman of the County Executive Committee of the democratic party for the past ten years. In 1912 he was elected a member of the State Senate and was retained therein by re-election in 1916, having served in all eight years as a member of that body. During six years of this time he was democratic leader of the Senate. Senator Fox was one of the organizers of the Bank of Sutton, of which he has been president since its organization in 1918. His fellow officials in the bank are: W. C. Marple, vice president; Hugh Swisher, cashier; and Benton B. Boggs, S. H. Cutlip, A. W. Engel, J. H. Hutchinson, I. Lawrence Freeman, C. W. Marble, H. A. Long and W. A. Tucker, directors. Mr. Fox is also a director of the institution, a strong and solid banking house capitalized at $35,000. He has large real estate interests, embracing oil and coal lands, as well as much city property, including one of the finest residences in the county and the large block in which his business offices are situated. As a fraternalist he belongs to the local Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic Order, and is a past high priest and past eminent commander. With his family he belongs to the Presbyterian Church.

On June 22, 1900, Mr. Fox was united in marriage with Miss Anna Lee Frume, a graduate of the public school of Sutton, and to this union there have been born six children: Gordon B., John H., George M., Agnes, Rebecca and Anna Jean.

HARVEY HANSFORD MORRIS, who maintains his residence and business headquarters in the City of Huntington and who is prominently concerned with coal-mining operations in his native state, is of distinguished American ancestry on both the paternal and maternal sides. His paternal grandfather, Fenton Mercer Morris, was born at Crown Hill, Kanawha County, Virginia (now West Virginia), in the year 1815, and his death occurred at Boomer, Fayette County, in June, 1892. He was extensively engaged in farm enterprise and also was a leading figure in the timber industry, he having resided for varying intervals in Kanawha, Nicholas and Fayette counties. His wife, whose maiden name was Rebecca Lloyd, died in Nicholas County. William Morris, father of Fenton M., was born in one of the eastern counties of Virginia and was a resident of Kanawha Falls, Fayette County, at the time of his death. He served as sheriff of Kanawha County, was a farmer and timber operator and was for a time a resident of Peters Creek, Nicholas County. He first married Sarah Hansford, and after her death contracted a second marriage, the family name of his second wife having been Chapman. His father, Joshua Morris, a native of Virginia, was one of the pioneer settlers in what is now Cabell County, West Virginia, and he developed a large landed estate, and was one of the progressive pioneer exponents of farm industry in Cabell and Kanawha counties. He had served in the early Indian wars and was also a patriot soldier in the War of the Revolution. In Orange County, Virginia, was solemnized his marriage to Frances Simms. He was a son of William Morris, who was born in England, in 1722, and who first located at Philadelphia after coming to America. In 1744 he initiated operations as a farmer or planter in Culpeper County, Virginia, and there occurred his marriage to Elizabeth Stepp. In 1773 he came with his family to what is now Kanawha County, West Virginia, and located at the mouth of Kelly's Creek, near the present Village of Cedar Grove. He was the first permanent white settler in that county, and his was the first will probated in Kanawha County. He had the spirit of a hardy adventurer and true pioneer, and as a farmer and hunter he was a prominent figure in the early development of what is now West Virginia. He had given gallant service as a soldier in the Revolution, became guardian of Kelly's Post in Kanawha County, and at that point he died and was laid to rest. He reared a family of eight sons and two daughters. His son William gained fame as "Major Billy" Morris, gallant commander of patriot forces in the War of the Revolution. Major Morris married Catherine Carroll, a descendant of Lord Carroll, the Maryland colonist.

Albert Gallatin Hansford, maternal grandfather of Harvey H. Morris, of Huntington, was born at Crown Hill, Kanawha County, and there his death occurred shortly before the inception of the Civil war, he having been a merchant, having conducted a cooper shop and having been a shipper of coal and salt. His wife, whose maiden name was Nancy Harriman, was born in the present Cabell County, West Virginia, in 1818, and died at East Bank, Kanawha County, in 1904. Albert G. Hansford was a son of Maj. John Hansford, who was born in Eastern Virginia, and who was a pioneer in Kanawha County, where he became a farmer and was the first to ship produce from the Kanawha Valley, he having served as a major in the War of the Revolution and his remains being interred in a pioneer cemetery at Crown Hill, Kanawha County. He married Jane Morris, a daughter of Maj. "Billy" Morris, mentioned above. Mrs. Fenton (Morris) Brown, sister of him whose name initiates this review, is, in 1922, organizing at Pratt, on the Kanawha River, a chapter of the Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the same will be chartered as William Morris Chapter.

Harvey Hansford Morris was born at Coalburg, Kanawha County, West Virginia, April 11, 1873, and is a son of Chapman and Sallie Summerfield (Hansford) Morris, the former of whom was born in Nicholas County, in 1847, and the latter at what is now East Bank, Kanawha County, in the same year. Chapman Morris died at Coalburg in October, 1873, and his widow survived him by forty years, she having been a resident of Richmond, Virginia, at the time of her death, June 15, 1913. Chapman Morris was reared in Nicholas County and was a young man at the time of his removal to Kanawha County, where his marriage occurred and where he passed the remainder of his life, he having been associated with coal mining in that section and also with the construction of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad through that county. He was a democrat, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife were zealous members of the Baptist Church. Of the children, the elder is Fenton, who in 1892 became the wife of William S. Brown, he having been a leading lawyer and prominent politician and having died at Tornado, Lincoln County, in June, 1912. Mrs. Brown now resides at Atlanta, Georgia, an enthusiastic member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The younger of the two surviving children is he whose name introduces this article.

Harvey H. Morris attended the public schools in Kanawha and Fayette counties, and at the age of sixteen years he began an apprenticeship to the trade of telegraphy. As a skilled operator he was long employed by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, in the service of which he continued twenty-six years. He advanced through the various grades of promotion, train dispatcher, train master, assistant superintendent, and, finally, a superintendent of division, in which office he succeeded C. P. Snow at Huntington, January 1, 1911. He continued his service at Huntington until November 15th of the following year, when he was transferred to Richmond, Virginia, where he served in the same capacity until September 1, 1913, when he became superintendent at Ashland, Kentucky. In February of the following year he was transferred to Clifton Forge, Virginia, where he remained until the 1st of the following October, when he returned to Huntington. Here he continued his effective service as superintendent until December 1, 1915, when he resigned, after a record of long and greatly appreciated service of most effective order.

In December, 1915, Mr. Morris engaged actively in the coal business as an operator, and he is president of the West Virginia Standard Coal Company of Huntington; the Kentucky Elkhorn By-Products Coal Company oforton, Kentucky; the Mary Elizabeth Coal Company of McGraws, West Virginia; and is a stockholder in the Southern States Coal Company and the Huntington By-Products Coal Company. His office headquarters are in suite 518-20-22 Lewis Arcade Building at Huntington.

Mr. Morris retains the ancestral political faith and is a stalwart democrat. He and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Huntington, he is an active member of the Huntington Chamber of Commerce, and holds membership in the Guyandotte Club, the Guyan Country Club and the Kiwanis Club, all of Huntington. His Masonic affiliations are here briefly noted: Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M.; Huntington Commandery No. 9, Knights Templars; Beui-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Charleston; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, at Wheeling, in which he has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite.

September 7, 1892, recorded the marriage of Mr. Morris and Miss Anna Bell Davis, of Kanawha County, and her death occurred January 25, 1920. Mrs. Morris is survived by one child, Julia Summerfield, who is now the wife of Lieut. Robert Francis Carter, an officer in the United States Army, a graduate of West Point, and now stationed at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. Lieutenant Carter has charge of the training of students for entrance into the United States Military Academy at West Point, and in the World war period he was in active service with the American Expeditionary Forces in France.

On the 16th of March, 1920, in New York City, Mr. Morris wedded Mrs. Mary Elizabeth (Van Weinkin) Snyder, daughter of John Van Weinkin, who is engaged in the real estate business in St. Louis, Missouri.

K. C. MOORE started the practice of law in Tyler County twenty years ago, and his sound abilities have brought him a large practice and growing influence in the affairs of his native county. He is a resident of Middlebourne, and is a member of a family that for four or five generations has been identified with West Virginia, chiefly as farmers, and always as good substantial citizens of their respective localities.

For several generations the Moores lived in Monongalia County, where the family was established by the pioneer, Alonzo Moore, who came from Maryland and was a farmer. Alonzo was the great-great-grandfather of the Middlebourne attorney. His son, Phillip Moore, was also a native of Maryland, but spent his active life as a farmer in Monongalia County. The grandfather was William Moore, who was born in Monongalia County in 1807, was reared and married there, became a farmer, and in 1840 moved his family to Tyler County. He became the pioneer fruit grower of this county, and his orchards of cherries, apples, peaches and plums were developed to commercial proportions and did much to stimulate fruit growing in the county. William Moore died at Joseph's Mills in Tyler County in 1884. He was a whig and later a democrat in politics. His first wife, grandmother of the Middlebourne lawyer, was Rebecca Sine, a native of Monongalia County, who died at Joseph's Mills. By this marriage six sons and two daughters grew to mature years, all now deceased. By the second marriage of William Moore there were nine children. The third wife was Mrs. Ann (Johnson) Ellinger.

William Nelson Moore, a son of William and Rebecca (Sine) Moore, was born in Monongalia County August 1, 1829 and was between ten and eleven years of age when the family moved to Monongalia County and settled at Joseph's Mills. In that community he lived out his life and was a highly successful farmer. In younger years he filled the office of justice of the peace and was also a member of the County Court. In politics he was a staunch republican. He died at Joseph's Mills December 6, 1919. William N. Moore married Lucinda Sweeney, who was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1832 and died at Joseph's Mills in September, 1907. She was the mother of six children: Virginia, who died at the age of fifty-nine at Shiloh in Tyler County, where her husband, Dr. David C. Smith, is a well known physician; Sarah, a resident of Pennsboro, West Virginia, widow of A. Nicholas Fordyce, who was a school teacher and later a farmer; Margaret A., living at the old homestead at Joseph's Mills; Mary E., who died aged fifty-six at Wilbur in Tyler County, wife of J. Wesley Stewart, now a retired farmer at Akron, Ohio; Charles, who owns and operates the old homestead farm; and K. C. Moore, who is the youngest.

Mr. Moore, who was born October 16, 1874, grew up on the old homestead, had the advantages of the rural schools, spent one year in the West Liberty Normal School, and graduated Bachelor of Pedagogy in 1896 from West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. He spent two years in West Virginia University Law School and in 1900 was admitted to the bar and began practice at Sistersville. A year later he moved to Middlebourne, where for twenty years he has been busily engaged in handling a civil and criminal practice, and since 1912 has been a member of the firm, Underwood & Moore, one of the best known law firms of Tyler County. Mr. Moore was prosecuting attorney of Tyler County from 1908 to 1912. He has been active in the republican party, has been a delegate to state, congressional and judicial conventions, and in recent years has seldom missed attending conventions for the nomination of judicial and congressional candidates. He is a member of the State Bar Association.

During the war Mr. Moore gave precedence to such work as he could perform for the Government, including the filling out of questionnaires for recruited men in the county and as a Four Minute Speaker in behalf of the Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other drives.

At Alma, West Virginia, in 1906, he married Miss Edna E. Conaway, daughter of Dr. Eli B. and Mary Elizabeth (Smith) Conaway. Her mother still lives at Alma, where her father was a greatly loved country physician, practicing medicine forty-seven years. Mrs. Moore finished her education in West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. She has two children, Richard Conaway born September 9, 1907, and Mary Virginia, born August 13, 1900.

DAVID M. PETERSON. A business experience covering a number of years is honorable or otherwise, according to its nature, but in either case it develops capacity and broadens the outlook upon life. While every honorable career must include certain qualities to attain success, that of the banker finds those qualities indispensable which rest on a higher plane than in many other lines and for this reason, if for no other, the banker occupies a position in a community of a distinctive character. While he is still comparatively a young man, David M. Peterson has had sixteen years of honorable experience in the banking business, and at the present time occupies the position of vice president of the Bank of Weirton.

Mr. Peterson was born at Steubenville, Ohio, May 24, 1888, a son of one of the successful and influential business men of that city who lived in retirement for some years before his death. The education of David M. Peterson was acquired in the graded and high schools of Steubenville, and when he was only eighteen years of age he began his banking career as a minor employee in the National Exchange Bank of Steubenville, with which institution he remained for six years, during which time he gained not only promotion but valuable experience. In 1912 he came to Weirton to become cashier of the Bank of Weirton, of which he has since become vice president. This institution was chartered in 1911 and was opened for business in April, 1912, with a capital of $40,000, those active in its organization being E. T. Weir, president; and Cyrus Ferguson, the first vice president. At the present time the officials are: E. T. Weir, president; D. M. Peterson, vice president; H. E. Hawkins, cashier, and E. D. Rothrock, assistant cashier, the board of directors consisting of: E. T. Weir, D. M. Weir, C. Ferguson, W. J. Hudson, G. L. Buchanan, J. A. Purdy, F. S. Loeb, D. M. Peterson and J. C. Williams. The bank now has resources of $1,500,000, and has paid dividends regularly. In 1921 a modern banking house was constructed by and for the bank, which includes all the latest devices and appliances for the insuring of absolute safety for the depositors' money.

Mr. Peterson is one of the popular men of Weirton, both among his business associates and the depositors of the institution which he represents. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and member of Aladdin Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Columbus, Ohio, and in politics supports the republican party's candidates. He is unmarried.

LOWRY M. STOOFS. Among the younger generation of educators who have made rapid strides in their calling within recent years and who have contributed through their labors to the advancement of the cause of education in Hancock County, one who is well and popularly known is Lowry M. Stoops, superintendent of schools of the New Cumberland Independent District. Since the start of his career Mr. Stoops has applied himself to educational work with the exception of the period when he was serving in the United States Army in the World war, in which he saw much overseas service.

Lowry M. Stoops was born at Tustin, California, April 5, 1892, and is a son of Rev. J. P. Stoops, a minister of the Presbyterian Church. Reverend Stoops came originally from Pennsylvania and has filled pulpits in various parts of the country, including his native state, California, Ohio and West Virginia. In the last named he served eight years, at West Liberty and Warwood, and at the latter place organized the congregation and erected the present church edifice. At the present time he is filling a charge at Wooster, Ohio.

The early education of Lowry M. Stoops was acquired in the public schools, following which he pursued a course in the normal school at West Liberty and was graduated from that institution in 1909. In that year he became principal of the Ward School at Benwood, and remained in that capacity for five years, or until 1914, when, feeling the need of further preparation, he enrolled as a student at the West Virginia University. While he was engaged in his collegiate work he conducted an extension course. Mr. Stoops had a brilliant college career and was duly graduated in 1917, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. At this time his career was interrupted when the United States became involved in the World war, and he enlisted in the Fifteenth United States Engineers, with which unit he saw two years of service, twenty-one months being in France. This was a railroad organization, in which Mr. Stoops held the rank of sergeant, and its work, principally the building of railroad yards, new roads, bridges, etc., frequently brought them within range of the enemy's fire. Sergeant Stoops was with the Headquarters Company, and his record was one of conscientious attention to duty. On his return, and after he had received his honorable discharge from the army, he again took up the profession of teaching, and during 1919 and a part of 1920 was principal of the Weirton High School. In the latter year he was elected superintendent of the New Cumberland Independent School District, which includes seventeen teachers and a student enrollment of 500. Of these ninety pupils are in the high school, and in 1921 the graduating class consisted of twenty graduates. Mr. Stoops is greatly interested in his work and is indefatigable in his efforts to improve the system and elevate the standards. In his labors he is being assisted by the teachers and pupils, with whom he has become greatly popular, and his work is also receiving the sanction and appreciation of his fellow-citizens at New Cumberland. Mr. Stoops stands high in the esteem of his fellow educators and is a valued member of the West Virginia Educational Association and the National Educational Association. He is partial to all forms of out-door and indoor exercise, particularly basketball and baseball, but primarily the latter. While a student at West Virginia University he was a member of the varsity team, and at present acts as coach for the local school team at New Cumberland, which under his instruction and guidance has won several county championships in contests with other Hancock County School clubs.

Mr. Stoops was united in marriage with Miss Mary L. Williamson, of Ben's Run, Tyler County, West Virginia, whom he met as a fellow-educator at Weirton. Mrs. Stoops has taken an active and helpful part in all work of local progress and has been a leading figure in several movements.

GEORGE LOREN BAMBRICK. Few members of the Hancock County Bar have advanced more steadily to leadership than George Loren Bambrick, of New Cumberland, the prime secret of his uniform success being the union of remarkable business judgment and a keen legal insight into the most involved transactions. In addition to being prominent in his profession he has also been active and constructive in civic affairs and at various times has been the incumbent of public office.

Mr. Bambrick was born in Wayne County, Iowa, September 4, 1869, a son of Lewis S. and Sarah M. (Baxter) Bambrick, natives of Hancock County, West Virginia. Thomas Bambrick, the grandfather of George L., was born in Ireland, where he received his education and as a young man became a teacher and surveyor. He came to West Virginia about 1820, and at first taught school, but later turned his attention to farming, which he followed in conjunction with his work as a surveyor and in which he traveled all over the county. A man of superior education, he was called upon to do much legal work of the period, especially before the creation of the County Court, and largely in this way came favorably before the people. He became the author of the bill creating Hancock County, which was cut off of Brooke County, sat in the Virginia House of Representatives at the time the county was created, in 1848, as a delegate, and named the county Hancock in honor of John Hancock, first president of the Continental Congress. He was a staunch democrat. When he died, at the age of eighty-four years, the county lost one of its strong characters.

Lewis S. Bambrick, like his father, was a teacher in his earlier years, but later turned his attention to farming, and continued to be engaged therein without interruption in Hancock County with the exception of two years spent in Wayne County, Iowa. He is now living retired at the age of eighty years, but continues to take an interest in matters, especially those pertaining to civic affairs, and holds membership on the Board of Equalization. He is a democrat. Mr. Bambrick married Sarah M. Baxter, daughter of Samuel Baxter, who was born in Brooke County and at marriage came to Hancock County, where he spent the rest of his life in progressive operations as a farmer and sheep and cattle breeder, and died at the age of eighty-four years. Mrs. Bambrick died at the age of sixty-six years, a happy married life of about forty-five years.

George Loren Bambrick, as had his forebears, entered upon his career as a teacher, and for two years engaged in educational work in the rural districts. He then entered the University of West Virginia, where he finished his law course in 1896, was given his degree of Bachelor of Laws, and at once engaged in the practice of his calling at New Cumberland, where he has been successful in building up a desirable clientele and making steady advancement in his calling. A staunch democrat in politics, he has been active in public affairs, served eight years as city attorney of New Cumberland and four years as prosecuting attorney in a county which is normally republican by a majority of two to one, and was special judge of the Circuit Court during the sickness of an incumbent judge. In 1904 he was his party's candidate for the office of state senator, but met with defeat. As a fraternalist Mr. Bambrick is a thirty-second degree Mason, a Knight Templar and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine.

Mr. Bambrick married Miss Christine Donehoo, and to this union there were born two children, Eleanor McCown and George Donehoo. Mrs. Bambrick is the youngest daughter of the late Hon. John R. Donehoo, who at the time of his death, in 1917, at the age of eighty-two years, was the oldest member of the Hancock County bar, of which he had been a member for more than a half a century. He had studied law under Charles Russell of Wheeling, was at one time editor of the New Dominion at Morgantown, and served in various official capacities, including state senator and member of the Board of Trustees of the Romney State School. In politics he was a democrat. Recognized as a master of the English language, he was very able in writing opinions, as well as in translating Latin and other languages, and his articles were widely read. One of his sons, the late Rev. J. DeQ. Donehoo, was a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College and became a minister of the Episcopal Church, serving various charges in Louisiana and Texas. He was also an author of some note, and his "Apocryphal and Legendary Life of Christ" is well known. Mrs. Bambrick is a graduate of the Washington (Pennsylvania) Seminary, and her mother, who bore the maiden name of Eleanor McCown, was a graduate of the Steubenville (Ohio) Seminary.

R. OSBURN JOHNSON while a young man learned and worked at the plumbing and heating trade in all branches. That is a business he knows from every standpoint. Some years ago he became a traveling representative for one of the largest and most exclusive houses manufacturing and distributing plumbing goods and supplies, the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company of Pittsburgh, and for this company he established a branch jobbing house at Huntington, of which he is the manager.

Mr. Johnson is a native of the famous Blue Grass District of old Kentucky, born in Woodford County, January 29, 1889. He is of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His grandfather, Van Johnson, was born in Kentucky in 1838, and spent nearly all his life in Woodford County. He was a distiller by trade, and in that capacity he was in the service of the Old Crow Distillery in Woodford County for a half century, until finally pensioned by the company. He died in Woodford County in 1912. His wife was a Miss Jennings, who was born in Kentucky in 1840 and died in Woodford County in 1910. William P. Johnson, father of the Huntington business man, was born in Woodford County, was reared and married there, and was a merchant in the county until 1903, when he removed to Lexington and continued in business in that city until his death in 1907. He was a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. William P. Johnson married Clara Williams, who was born in Woodford County in 1863 and is now living at Lexington. She was the mother of three children. Ola is the wife of George Compton, a bookkeeper for the Second National Bank of Lexington. R. Osburn is the second in age. Sampey is the youngest, and is associated with his brother at Huntington as warehouse superintendent. He enlisted at Lexington as a mechanic in the navy, was stationed at the Great Lakes Training Station and then at Hampton Roads, became a second-class seaman and was in the service two years before his honorable discharge.

R. Osburn Johnson attended rural schools in Woodford County, but left school at the age of sixteen and for three years was clerk in a dry goods store at Lexington. For two years he was bookkeeper for Buford A. Graves, cement contractor at Lexington, and then took up the business in which he has made his real success. For seven years he was in the employ of J. J. Fitzgerald, a plumbing and heating contractor at Lexington, and while with him he acquired every detail in the practical and technical knowledge of heating and plumbing as a business.

Mr. Johnson went on the road as a traveling representative for the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company on February 15, 1915. His territory was West Virginia and portions of Virginia and Kentucky, with headquarters at Huntington. His success in building up business for the company led to the opening of a branch jobbing house at Huntington in 1918, with Mr. Johnson in charge as manager. The offices and jobbing house are located at the corner of Second Avenue and Tenth Street. Through this house an extensive business over the adjacent territory is transacted in plumbing, heating, mill, mining and factory goods, supplies and machinery.

Mr. Johnson regards himself as a permanent factor in Huntington's business affairs. He has acquired a home here at 525 Seventh Avenue and the business building at 612 Third Avenue. He is a democrat, a member of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, the Guyan Country Club, the Kiwanis Club, Chamber of Commerce and the Credit Men's Association.

In March, 1911, at Georgetown, Kentucky, Mr. Johnson married Miss Grace Rice, a native of Fleming County, Kentucky, and a graduate of Hamilton College, Lexington.

JOHN R. PLATTENBURG. Three generations of the Plattenburg family have had as their chief business interest the editing and publishing of the Hancock County Courier, now published at New Cumberland by John R. Plattenburg, the grandson of the original founder. This newspaper has been in existence for more than a half a century, during which time it has become a part of the daily lives of the people of the county, whose opinions it largely moulds and whose actions it greatly influences.

John R. Plattenburg was born at New Cumberland, January 23, 1883, a son of Jesse T. and Lou (Lockhart) Plattenburg. His grandfather, J. W. Plattenburg, was born in Illinois, where his parents had been pioneers, and in young manhood adopted the vocation of teaching. This he followed for several years, in the course of which he went to Wellsburg, West Virginia, and there learned the printer's trade. Later, as a journeyman, he set the first line of type on the old Wheeling Intelligencer. His first newspaper, the Wellsburg News, was founded about 1859, and was still being published when Mr. Plattenburg joined the Union Army during the war between the states as a captain of West Virginia infantry. He was wounded during his service, being shot through the shoulder, but continued in the army until the close of the war, when he resumed the printer's trade. In 1869, at Pughtown, then the county seat of Hancock County, he established the first newspaper in the county, known then, as now, as the Hancock County Courier. It was a four-page, six-column publication, democratic in its policies, and while its form and style have changed to some extent during the fifty-three years of its existence, its politics have remained unwaveringly the same. The paper continued to be published at Pughtown until 1895, with Mr. Plattenburg as editor and publisher, but in that year the county seat was removed to New Cumberland, and the paper went with the seat of government. The founder continued as its active head until his death in 1907, at the age of seventy-seven years. A good newspaper man and a capable writer, he made the publication well known and its articles and editorials were widely quoted by contemporaries in the journalistic field. His widow, who was Sarah Wetheral, of Wellsburg, survives at an advanced age.

At the time of his death J. W. Plattenburg was succeeded in the ownership of the paper by his son Jesse T. Plattenburg, who died five years later, in 1912, after a career which had been devoted entirely to the paper. While attending Bethany College he met Lou Lockhart, also a student, and they did not wait until their graduation to be married. They became the parents of four children: Joseph L., who is identified with the Weirton (West Virginia) Steel Corporation; John R., of this notice; Julia, who is the wife of T. T. Bambrick; and Mary, the wife of A. O. Dorman.

John R. Plattenburg received his education in the public schools of New Cumberland and practically grew up in the office of his grandfather's and father's newspaper. From early youth he has been perfectly familiar with its every detail of preparation, make-up and production, and since the death of his father has taken over the duties of editor and publisher. He is now producing an attractive, interesting and thoroughly reliable eight-page, seven-column paper, which has a wide circulation throughout Hancock and the surrounding counties in this part of the state, and which wields a distinct influence in directing public opinion and action. Mr. Plattenburg is a democrat. He has a number of business and social connections and has taken an active part in civic affairs. During the World war he served for thirteen months in the adjutant general's department at Camp Johnson.

Mr. Plattenburg married Miss Mary McDonald, and they have two children: John W. and Mary L.

CHARLES T. HEDGES is a native of Lumberport, and his chief business experiences have been acquired in that thriving little city of Harrison County. He was formerly a merchant but is now in the real estate and coal business.

He was born at Lumberport April 6, 1890, son of Henry Clay and Alice (Robinson) Hedges, the latter now deceased. In the family were six sons and one daughter. Henry Clay Hedges, son of Charles and Nancy G. Hedges, was born on a farm at Worthington, West Virginia, July 30, 1844, had a rural training and common school education, and on leaving the farm went to work as clerk at Clarksburg and subsequently entered merchandising on his own account at Lumberport. He was in business there for a number of years and later engaged in the real estate business. He still has interests at Lumberport, but spends only his summers there, his winter home being at Orlando, Florida.

Charles T. Hedges was reared at Lumberport, attended the public schools and completed a business course at Buckhannon. Some five or six years of his early life were spent in the West, as far as the Pacific Coast, and he had a variety of experiences and employment. On returning to Lumberport in 1911 he engaged in business as a member of the general mercantile firm of Hedges and Oyster Com-ny. He sold out to his partner in 1919, and since then is concentrated his attention on the coal and real estate business.

Mr. Hedges is a Master Mason, an Elk and an Odd Fellow. He married Miss Mary Lamar, of Kingwood. She is trained nurse by profession. They have one daughter, Elizabeth Ann.

WALTER PAUL HAMMER, M. D. In one of the most prosperous rural localities of Harrison County a few brief years have been sufficient to prove the professional skill and usefulness of Dr. Hammer, who has become an appreciated friend and helper among the widening group of milites that esteem him as their trusted physician.

Doctor Hammer was born on a farm near Ruddle in Pendleton County, West Virginia, January 31, 1890, son of Isaac Taylor and Fannie Urhana (Conrad) Hammer, so born and reared in Pendleton County, and grandson of Elias Hammer, of the same county. Isaac Hammer spent his active life as a farmer. The mother of Doctor Hammer is still living.

He was one of six children and as a background his early life was the farm. He attended the rural schools here, and later finished his education in Valparaiso University of Indiana. In 1916 he graduated M. D. from the Chicago College of Medicine and Surgery, and on the 7th of December of the same year he began his work as a practicing physician and surgeon at Lumberport, Harrison County. In six years he has built up an extensive practice, a member of the Harrison County, West Virginia State and American Medical associations, and fraternally is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Elks.

Doctor Hammer in 1914 married Miss Etta M. Duff, of Miller County, Pennsylvania. Their two children are Mildred Gale and Walter Dorland Hammer.

WILLIAM RUSSELL SHOWACRE. Lumberport is one of the prominent small towns of West Virginia, long the center of a rich agricultural region, and with ample coal resources considerable manufacturing has been done there. The natural gas field adjacent has brought renewed activity to the industry. Perhaps the largest and most important industrial plant is the Mound City Glass Company, of which William Russell Showacre is secretary and general manager. Mr. Showacre, who has had a long and extensive experience in the glass industry, was born March 11, 1881, in Moundsville, Marshall County, West Virginia, son of William H. H. and Christina Isabelle (Jackson) Showacre. His father, a native of Maryland, early entered the railroad service as a railway station agent, and subsequently as a well known hanker at Moundsville. He served a term of sheriff of Marshall County.

W. R. Showacre was reared in Moundsville, completed common school education there and spent one year in West Virginia University. His first regular employment was in a glass factory, the Pistoria Glass Company at Moundsville. For five years he was with the Consolidation Glass Company. He became secretary of the Mound City Glass Company at Lumberport in 1916. Since 1919 he has also performed the duties of general manager. The importance of the industry to the population living around Lumberport is evidenced by the fact that approximately 125 people are carried on the pay roll. The output of this factory is punch tumblers, vases and other ware.

Mr. Showacre is a democrat. He is serving as recorder of the City of Lumberport. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In 1909 he married Miss Genevieve Urnsworth. They have one son, William Miller Showacre.

WILLIAM O. HUNDLEY. In the person of William O. Hundley the oil and gas interests of Cabell County have a pable and energetic representative of the younger generation at Huntington. While he is a recent acquisition of these lines of business, he has already indicated that his career therein will be an unqualified success, and as secretary and treasurer of the Big Ben Petroleum Company he occupies a recognized position among the active men in these branches of industry.

Mr. Hundley was born February 12, 1890, in Fayette County, West Virginia, and is a son of Henry T. and Jane L. (Honaker) Hundley. His grandfather, Lieu Hundley, was born in 1834, at Salem, Virginia, and as a young man became a pioneer of Fayette County, where he spent the remainder of his active career as a successful agriculturist. He died at Scarboro, West Virginia, in 1892. Henry T. Hundley was born in 1858, in Fayette County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and was educated in the rural schools and brought up to the vocation of farming, which he has followed throughout his life. He has always lived in Fayette County, where he is the owner of one of the best kept farms in that section of the state, and now makes his home at Fayetteville, where he is respected and esteemed as a substantial and successful man and public-spirited citizen. He is a democrat in politics, and his religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he is a very active supporter. Mr. Hundley married Miss Jane L. Honaker, who was born in 1860, near Charleston, Kanawha County, West Virginia (then Virginia), and to this union there were born children as follows: Doshia, who is unmarried and makes her home with her parents; Lieu Zingle, a general merchant of Fayetteville; Henry C., also a merchant of Fayetteville and a veteran of the World war, in which for ten months he served as a sergeant in the engineering corps and was stationed at Camp Humphreys, near Washington, D. C.; William O., of this review; Lillie D., the wife of Lemon A. Skaggs, of Huntington, who for the past seven years has been a clerk in the shops of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway; Minnie May, of Huntington, a teacher in the public schools; Rosa, a student in the high school at Huntington; Ada and Anna, who are attending the graded school at Fayetteville; and French, employed by the Bachman Coal Company at Bachman, Fayette County.

William O. Hundley was educated in the rural schools of Fayette County and reared on his father's farm, where he remained until twenty years of age. At that time he left agricultural pursuits to embark in the automobile business at Fayetteville. During the next ten years he continued in the same line, and despite his youth and his limited capital at the outset of his career he achieved a remarkable success. In the meantime, in 1916, during the border trouble with Mexico, Mr. Hundley served for a year in the United States Army as chief mechanic, first under General Folk and later under General Pershing, having charge of a motor train of thirty-three trucks. In 1921 he disposed of his automobile business at Fayetteville, although he still retains the ownership of a public garage building at that place, and came to Huntington, where he turned his attention to the oil producing industry. He assisted in organizing the Big Ben Petroleum Company, an oil producing company which has proven a very successful venture. The property now being operated, consisting of 372 acres, is located in Warren County, Kentucky, and has fifteen producing wells. The concern is incorporated under the laws of the State of West Virginia, and the officers are: S. H. Honaker, Huntington, president; T. H. Laing, Huntington, vice president, and William O. Hundley, secretary and treasurer. The offices are situated at Rooms 203 and 204 Lewis-Samson Building.

Mr. Hundley has always been a staunch democrat, and while a resident of Fayetteville served as a member of the city council for two years. He is a member of Lafayette Lodge No. 57, Fayetteville, in which he has numerous friends and also has several civic and social connections. Mr. Hundley is the owner of a modern residence at 825 Twenty-fifth Street, Huntington, a comfortable and attractive home located in one of the preferred residential districts of the city, in addition to which he owns other real estate at Huntington.

On April 1, 1917, Mr. Hundley was united in marriage at Charleston, West Virginia, with Miss Elsie Bias, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James B. Bias, of 1615 Tenth Avenue, Huntington, Mr. Bias being an employee of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. Mrs. Hundley is a graduate of the Huntington High School and a woman of many graces and accomplishments. To Mr. and Mrs. Hundley there have been born two children: William O., Jr., born February 23, 1918; and Leonard Ray, born May 8, 1920.

NEWTON VAN WILSON, one of the experienced and successful practitioners at the bar of Gassaway, is serving the city as its attorney, and is rendering his community an efficient service both in a public and private capacity. He was born at Glendon, Braxton County, September 30, 1872, a son of William M. and Phoebe (Frame) Wilson. William M. Wilson was born at Ireland, Lewis County, West Virginia, January 4, 1826, while his wife was born in Clay County, West Virginia, and she died in 1875. Both were reared to farm life, and their educational training was restricted to that afforded by the local schools. They were married in Clay County, and settled in that county, which they later left, going to Texas. After four years spent in the latter state they returned to West Virginia and located in Braxton County, where both rounded out their useful lives, having been farming people. They were consistent members of the Missionary Baptist Church. In his political convictions he was a democrat. Of their seven children four are still living, namely: Virginia, who is the wife of J. W. Jackson; Glarvina, who is the wife of John Q. Harris, of Canfield, West Virginia; Robert L., who is a resident of Centralia; and Newton Van, whose name heads this review.

Reared on his father's farm, Newton Van Wilson first attended the common schools, later a high school, from which he was graduated, and he then matriculated in the law department of the University of West Virginia, and was graduated therefrom with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was admitted to the bar of his native state in 1897, and then settled permanently at Gassaway, where he has built up a large and very important practice. At one time he was justice of the peace, he has served on the Board of Education, and is now city attorney. Having faith in Gassaway, he has shown an interest in local concerns, and is a stockholder of the Farmers and Mechanics Bank of Gassaway.

Mr. Wilson married first Bettie A. Duffield, who died, leaving four children, namely: Mertie C., Leonore, Goldie and Garland. In 1920 Mr. Wilson married Miss Ettie Corley. There are no children of this marriage. Mrs. Wilson belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Fraternally Mr. Wilson belongs to Gassaway Lodge, I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand, the Grand Lodge and Encampment of that order, and is a past chief potentate of the Encampment; and he is also a member of Frametown Lodge No. 196, K. of P., of which he is a past chancellor; and of Gassaway Lodge No. 1553, L. O. O. M. In politics he is a republican, and has been elected to the several offices on his party ticket. Skilled as an attorney, capable as a man, and public-spirited as a citizen, Newton Van Wilson is representative of the best element of his profession and estate, and reflects dignity and honor upon everything with which he is connected.

CLARENCE L. PERKINS. From the beginning of the postal service the representative men of each community have been chosen to fill the important office of postmaster. As so much responsibility reposes in them it is necessary for them to be men of strict honesty, reliability and solidity, as well as to be possessed of a capacity for careful work. At Gassaway, West Virginia, the post office is in charge of Clarence L. Perkins, who possesses all the qualifications noted above, and who is discharging the duties of the office in a capable and expeditious manner.

Mr. Perkins was born April 9, 1882, in Nicholas County, West Virginia, a son of H. C. and Mary (Nutter) Perkins, the former a native of Greenbrier County, Virginia, and the latter of Nicholas County, West Virginia. H. C. Perkins received a common school education, and as a youth located in Nicholas County, where he became a teacher in the free schools. When the war between the states came on he enlisted in the Confederate service and established a brave and honorable record during the course of the struggle, at the close of which he returned to Nicholas County, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. He became one of the prosperous community farmers and was highly respected by all with whom he came in contact. A man of high principles, he was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to which also belonged his worthy wife. He was a democrat in politics and on several occasions was called to public office, serving as county assessor and deputy sheriff of Nicholas County. By his second wife he became the father of four children: S. B., who is engaged in farming in Nicholas County; Rev. C. C., presiding elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the Parkersburg District; C. G., who is engaged in merchandising at Gassaway; and Clarence L. of this review.

Clarence L. Perkins was reared on the home farm in Nicholas County, in which community he received his early education in the rural schools. Later he enjoyed the advantages of attendance at the Summersville Normal School and after his graduation therefrom became a teacher in the free schools of his native county, a vocation which he followed for several years. Not caring for the educator's profession, Mr. Perkins then turned his attention to business, his experience in this connection being gained as clerk in the general store conducted by the Curtin Lumbe Company at Curtin, West Virginia. In 1905 he came to Gassaway, where he embarked in the general merchandising business, in which he has continued to the present time with constantly increasing success. He is now the head of a prosperous business, which has been developed along legitimate lines and which has the confidence of the community, being noted for its honest representation and straightforward dealing. In 1916 Mr. Perkins was appointed postmaster of Gassaway, a position which he has continued to fill with capability, courtesy and commendable expediency. His public record also includes one term as mayor of Gassaway and three terms as recorder, in both of which offices he sustained his record for superior ability and conscientious performance of duty.

On September 12, 1906, Mr. Perkins was united in marriage with Miss Bessie Criss, who was born in Braxton County, West Virginia, and received a public school education. They have no children. Mrs. Perkins is a member of the Christian Church, and Mr. Perkins, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. As a fraternalist he is affiliated with Gassaway Lodge No. 133, A. F. and A. M., Sutton Chapter, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery, K. T.; and Ben Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Charleston. He likewise holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he is a past noble grand.

JAMES HOOD HORNOR is a veteran of the Spanish-American war, and prior to that and since has been an unusually active and enterprising factor in the business life of Harrison County. His home is at Lumberport, and nearly all the years of his life have been passed at or near this village.

He is a son of James D. and Elizabeth Florence (Hood) Hornor. A brief record of his father's career appears on other pages. James H. Hornor was born at Lumberport May 13, 1872. As a boy there he attended public school and later finished his education at the Northwest Academy at Clarksburg. His early experiences after leaving school were as a merchant at Lumberport and then at Clarksburg. He had the rather unusual experience of serving as assistant postmaster both at Clarksburg and at Fairmont.

Later he returned to Lumberport and was in the flouring mill business. He left his post in that industry at the beginning of the Spanish-American war in 1898 to volunteer his services. He became second lieutenant in Company E, of the First West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and was with his regiment in camp duty until the close of hostilities. He then resumed his connections with the flouring mill business at Shinnston, and a few years later sold out and organized the Hornor Hardware Company at Lumberport. This was a business continued under his personal direction for five years. He sold out in 1910, and since then he had charge of the Lumberport Gas Company, of which he is treasurer and manager. Mr. Hornor is also a stockholder and director in several other business corporations.

In 1905 he married Miss Minnie K. Lowe, daughter of Benjamin F. and Sarah M. (Higinbotham) Lowe, of Shinnston. Mr. Hornor is a democrat, and is a Royal Arch and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner.

JOHN WASHINGTON FORTNEY, a former member of the House of Delegates from Harrison County, has been prominently identified with the business and agricultural affairs of the Lumberport vicinity for a number of years, and on April 5, 1922 he was appointed postmaster of the Lumberport office, beginning his duties on April 15.

He was born on a farm in Eagle District of Harrison County, July 2, 1865, son of Joshua D. and Mary J. (Gifford) Fortney. The Fortneys were a very early family in Harrison County, moving there from Preston County. His paternal grandparents were Jacob D. and Mary (Shrove) Fortney, the former also a native of West Virginia. Mr. Fortney's parents were born and reared and spent all their lives in Harrison County. Jacob Fortney, who was a farmer, enlisted in the Union army in 1861, and served eighteen months in Captain Moffett's company, until honorably discharged on account of ill health. Mary J. Gifford was a daughter of John and Malinda (Harbert) Gifford.

John Washington Fortney was one of eleven children. He grew up on the farm, and finished the eighth grade in the public schools at Lumberport. He engaged in farming, and about 1906 became a merchant and meat dealer in Meadowbrook and later at Lumberport. This business he sold in 1916, and then returned to the farm. In September, 1921, he again entered commercial affairs at Lumberport, as a merchant dealing in dry goods, groceries, hats, caps and shoes.

Mr. Fortney has been one of the active republicans of his county. He served several terms in the council of Lumberport, and in 1918 was elected to the House of Delegates and served one term with credit. In the session of 1919 he was a member of the committee on railroads and military affairs. Mr. Fortney is a Baptist and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1888 he married Miss Minerva J. Bates, daughter of Noley S. Bates of Harrison County. Mr. and Mrs. Fortney became the parents of thirteen children, ten of whom are living.

FRED TROFF. The fundamental cause of many of the industrial disputes and disturbances of recent years has been due to the separation of financial ownership from the responsible direct management. A contrasted case, in which disputes have been conspicuous by their absence, is furnished by the Trof Coal Company of Morgantown, of which Mr. Fred Trof is the manager. Mr. Trof came up from the ranks as a working miner, qualified himself for the responsibilities of mine ownership on the score of actual efficiency, and today he works at the mines with his men, knows their viewpoint as well as his own, and conducts the business as a smooth running frictionless organization.

Mr. Trof was born in Brooklyn, New York, October 23, 1870. In 1880, when he was a boy of ten, he went to the Connellsville coal and coke region of Pennsylvania. With limited school advantages he started to work with a dump wheelbarrow and a small fork handling coke, and for several years he earned his living by labor in mines, car shops and other industries. Not satisfied always to work for others, he put himself in the ranks of independent operators near Scottdale, Pennsylvania, where he began working an abandoned mine and did it so systematically and efficiently as to lay the foundation of his success there. He has been a coal operator ever since.

In October, 1916, he secured his present mine, which had been opened by Alexander Tait. This coal property lies under about 200 acres bordering the Monongahela River, three miles below Morgantown. There are four veins of coal in this territory, the Pittsburg being the most valuable. Above the Pittsburg lie at a distance of some sixty feet apart two other veins. The Trof Coal Company confines its operations to the Pittsburg vein, where eight foot mine props are used. At the beginning Mr. Trof loaded only one car per day, while now he has the facilities for the prompt loading of from fifteen to twenty-two cars. He employs 165 men and the average production is 950 tons daily. A few other local men are associated with him, but he is the leading spirit and principal owner of the Trof Coal Company, and personally superintends every detail of production. His mine has a reputation for fair dealing with its men. Differences almost universally are settled without calling upon officials of the unions. In only one instance, and that concerning a minor matter, was an outside union official appealed to. Mr. Trof deservedly has won hosts of warm friends, is a man of liberal views, and plays a substantial part in the affairs of Monongalia County.

He married Miss Margaret McGoogin, of Scottsdale, Pennsylvania. They have one daughter, Anna Mary, now a student in the high school at Morgantown.

LAMAR CECIL OYSTER, M. D. A busy physician with an extensive country practice in Harrison County for twenty years, Doctor Oyster eventually discovered a taste and talent for commercial lines that brought him into the ranks of merchants. To mention that he is proprietor of "The Big Little Town Store" is sufficient to identify him with West Virginia's most successful country merchants.

Doctor Oyster since he was three years of age has lived in Harrison County, near Lumberport. The accident of birth makes him a native of Kansas. He was born at Paola in that state December 14, 1873, son of John H. and Elizabeth (Denham) Oyster. His father was a native of Washington, D. C. The grandfather, David W. Oyster, went out to Kansas about 1859, and was a participant in the great free state struggle there. The mother of Doctor Oyster was born near Lumberport, August 17, 1848, one of the six children of John B. and Elizabeth (Smith) Denham, and granddaughter of David B. and Elizabeth (Robinson) Denham, and her maternal grandfather was James Smith of the Simpson Creek vicinity of Harrison County. Mrs. Oyster was born and reared on her father's farm about a mile south of Lumberport. She is a Methodist. Doctor Oyster has never married, and he and his mother have always lived together, he being her only child. They have been very much devoted to each other all the years.

Doctor Oyster was educated in public schools of Lumberport, in the Fairmont State Normal, and for four years was a teacher. In 1901 he graduated from the Baltimore Medical College, and for upwards of twenty years he practiced medicine at Lumberport and vicinity.

In the meantime, December 8, 1911, he became a member of Hedges and Oyster Company, general merchandise. In the growing business of this concern he found his time and interest more and more engaged until in 1919 he bought out his partner and has since given his time almost exclusively to this store. He carries a stock of general merchandise, and only one other store in Harrison County individually owned has a larger stock.

The business has thoroughly justified its name of "The Big Little Town Store," and that title has been widely advertised. Doctor Oyster believes in advertising and the principle that the "more you tell the quicker you sell." Few men are better equipped to conduct an advertising campaign. He knows the community, he knows its needs and its pace, he knows his business, and he has the art of weaving into his advertising many matters of incidental interest so that his business talks are as eagerly read as the news columns of local papers. In the interest of his business he publishes "now and then" a store paper known as "The Oyster." His was the first store in West Virginia to publish such a trade paper, and in fact it was one of the first store papers in the country. While its primary purpose is to put before the public a timely account of the merchandise, "The Oyster" is also a medium of community news and contains many paragraphs of the Doctor's wit and philosophy. His store paper has been widely quoted, and he has written a great deal for other trade papers.

Doctor Oyster through his business and through his personal interest contributes to the growth and development of his home town. He is a stockholder and director in several corporations, including the Lumberport Bank and the Mound City Glass Company. In politics he is a republican, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

JAMES DAVID HORNOR was one of Harrison County's best known citizens. His life was a varied one in its relationship. He was a farmer, merchant and also a public official.

He was born at Lumberport, Harrison County, August 8, 1847, and was a resident of that town throughout his life. He was a son of James Yardley and Mary A. (Robinson) Hornor. James Y. Hornor was born in Fauquier County, Virginia, and was a pioneer settler of Lumberport. His first wife was Dollie Ferguson, and he had children by both marriages.

James D. Hornor carried on an extensive business in Lumberport. He was also well known at the county seat as one of the prominent county officials. He served two or three terms as county assessor and in 1884 was elected sheriff, serving one term of four years. He was a democrat in politics.

James D. Hornor, who died May 13, 1898, married on December 6, 1870, Elizabeth Florence Hood, daughter of William and Hannah (Pindall) Hood. She was born in Marion County November 11, 1850, and is now past three score and ten. She is a Methodist. Her children were: James Hood, Vance Leslie, Goff, Haymond, who died in childhood, Mary, wife of Paul S. Hornor, and Florence E., wife of Oliver Napoleon Hill.

VANCE LESLIE HORNOR. For upwards of thirty years Mr. Hornor has devoted his time and energies to the business field, but with a diversity of objects that have relieved monotony and no doubt contributed to his aggregate success. His life has been spent in Harrison County, where he has been a manufacturer, banker, and in later years one of the leaders in gas production.

He is a son of James D. and Elizabeth Florence (Hood) Hornor. A brief sketch of his father precedes this. Vance Leslie Hornor was born September 29, 1875, at Lumberport, and had a good common school education as preparation for the serious duties of life. For several years he was in the flouring mill business, first at Shinnston and then at Lumberport. When the Lumberport Bank was organized in 1903 he became its first cashier, and he continued the duties of that position for twelve years while the bank was improving its resources and its service as the only bank in that part of Harrison County.

In the meantime, in 1910, he became interested in the real estate and gas business. During the next five years his interests increased to such an extent that he resigned as cashier of the bank to give his entire time to his interests in the gas district. He is widely known over the state for his holdings and his operations as a gas producer. He is a member of several other business corporations, and is still a director and vice president of the Lumberport Bank.

Mr. Hornor in 1903 married Georgia Pauline Richardson, of Shinnston. Their three children are Mary Katherine, Eleanor Elizabeth and James Richardson Hornor. Mr. Hornor is a democrat, a Methodist, and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of the Royal Arch Chapter and the Mystic Shrine and is also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Elks.

FLOYD TEMPLETON WILLIS. While he taught school for a time, Mr. Willis has kept steadily in pursuit of the aim of his youth, to become a successful banker. He has had a round of experience representing his increasing abilities, but the post of duty where he has found his most congenial and useful relations has been as cashier of the Lumberport Bank in Harrison County.

Mr. Willis was born on a farm in Harrison County, October 14, 1874, son of Henry Harrison and Prudence

J. (Martin) Willis. The farm where he was born was the scene of his early youth, and his training in its duty was supplemented by a rural school education. He taught school in a rural district for three years, and then entered West Virginia University, where he took an elective course, including commercial subjects. While at the university he paid some of his expenses by work with the West Virginia geological survey.

Since his university career his time and energies have been entirely devoted to banking. He was for a little more than two years an employe of the Buckhannon Bank at Buckhannon, for a year and a half with the Trader National Bank of Buckhannon, for three years was cashier of the First National Bank at Parsons in Tucker County, for one year was cashier of the Peoples Bank of Philippi, and for about six months was assistant cashier of the Grafton Banking and Trust Company. He resigned from the latter bank in 1915 to become cashier of the Lumberport Bank.

The Lumberport Bank was established in 1903, with an authorized capital of $25,000.00. This capital was increased to $50,000.00. The resources in March, 1922, stood at $385,422.94. Mr. Willis succeeded Vance L. Hornor as cashier. While Lumberport is situated in the midst of a splendid coal mining and agricultural district, it is the only bank in that section of Harrison County, and the service it has rendered has fully justified this practical control of the banking facilities. The bank has been well and conservatively managed, and is one of the strongest institutions among the smaller towns of West Virginia.

Mr. Willis has had due regard for the obligations of citizenship. He is now serving as president of the Board of Education for the Eagle School District. He is a republican and a member of the Baptist Church.

In his career as a banker he has had a splendid associate in Mrs. Willis, who is a trained and capable business woman and assists him as assistant cashier of the Lumberport Bank. They were married in 1906. Mrs. Willis was formerly Miss Elizabeth Whitescarer. She is a graduate of West Virginia University in the school of commerce and bookkeeping, and for nine years she remained as an instructor in that department. She is also an active member of the Baptist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Willis are proud of their two daughters, Mildred and Hazel, both of whom have shown talent in music, Mildred, being a pianist and Hazel a vocalist.

LEWIS J. MILLER, formerly general manager of the Wheeling Wholesale Grocery Company, stands as one of the veteran and representative figures in the wholesale trade of Wheeling, in which city he was born August 25, 1858, a son of Peter Miller, who was one of the sterling pioneer merchants of this city. Peter Miller was born in the Fulda River District of Hessen, Germany, November 1, 1832, a son of John and Anna Maria Miller, he having been a youth at the time of the father's death, but the widowed mother having attained to the venerable age of eighty-eight years. Peter Miller was reared and educated in his native land and was about nineteen years of age when he came to the United States. In 1852 he established his home at Wheeling, and here he served a three years' apprenticeship in the tailoring establishment of Christian Hesse, working the first year for $10 a year and his board, the second year receiving $20 and board and a suit of clothes. In the third year he became a skilled journeyman at his trade. In 1860 he engaged in the retail grocery business at the corner of Main and Third streets, where he continued operations five years, the brick block which he erected at this location still standing and in excellent preservation. He continued for many years as one of the substantial, reliable and highly respected business men of Wheeling, and through his well directed endeavors accumulated an appreciable fortune, as gauged by the standards of the locality and period. He was eighty-one years of age at the time of his death, and his widow passed away at the age of eighty-three years, their marriage having been solemnized November 1, 1857. Mrs. Miller, whose maiden name was Christina Heil, was born children five are living: Flora, wife of John Prince, a farmer in Braxton County; Albert A., a minister of the United Brethren Church; Iverson W.; Alvin M., a farmer in Upshur County; and Lester W., in a business college in the State of Washington.

Iverson W. Crites spent the days of his youth on a farm, attended the common schools, and began working for himself and earning his own living when he was fifteen. He had made every possible use of his advantages while in school, qualified as a teacher and for six years taught winter terms of school. The summers he spent working in lumber camps and around the saw mills, and when he gave up the teaching profession he turned his complete energies to the lumber industry. Mr. Crites in 1917 acquired stock in the Hope Lumber Company. This is an incorporated company with A. O. Harper as president and manager, S. F. White, vice president, J. A. Genderson, treasurer, and I. W. Crites secretary. Mr. Crites is also a stockholder in the Arch Run Lumber Company.

During the World war he enlisted and was trained at Richmond, Virginia, later at Camp Forrest in Georgia, and went overseas with the Four Hundred and Sixty-seventh Engineers. He was on duty in France five months and was a sergeant. He is a member of Weston Post of the American Legion. Mr. Crites is unmarried, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in politics votes as a republican.

CLAUDE W. RINEHART is a successful business man of Weston, where for many years he has devoted his best energies to the lumber business. He is one of the proprietors and executive officers of the Central Lumber Company.

Mr. Rinehart was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, August 24, 1885, son of William and Sarah (White) Rinehart. His parents were also born and reared in Lewis County, grew up on farms, attended the common schools, and after their marriage settled on the farm where the father spent the rest of his life. He was progressive and industrious and accumulated a body of 200 acres of first-class farming land. The mother is still living. They were active members of the Methodist Protestant Church, and William Rinehart was a democrat. Of their large family of eleven children ten are still living: Statira, wife of Charles E. Lamb, of Coolville, Ohio; John A., connected with the Parkersburg Mattress Company; Lloyd of Weston; Theo, a farmer in Lewis County; Jesse M., a contractor and builder at Weston; Elza A., cashier of the Farmers Bank of Clarksburg, West Virginia; Dr. L. G., a dentist in Oklahoma; Claude W.; Laura, wife of W. A. Moneyenny, of Lewis County; and Lona, wife of Oscar Bailey, of Gilmer County.

Claude W. Rinehart grew up on a farm, attended the common schools with his brothers and sisters and later graduated from the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. As a boy on the farm he determined to enter a commercial career. After his college course he spent two years as clerk with the E. J. Kane Hardware Company. He then transferred his abilities to the lumber business and for fifteen years was secretary and treasurer of the Sun Lumber Company. In 1919 he took an active part in the organization of the Central Lumber Company, and is the executive head of this corporation.

Mr. Rinehart married Miss Effie A. Atkins, of Weston, October 16, 1912. She was reared and educated in Harrison County, West Virginia. They have a daughter, Mary Louise, born October 6, 1917. Mr. and Mrs. Rinehart are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a democrat and is prominent in Masonry, being affiliated with Weston Lodge, No. 10, A. F. & A. M., Bigelow Chapter, No. 4, R. A. M., St. John Commandery, No. 8, K. T., West Virginia Consistory, No. 1, at Wheeling, and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg. In the local branches of the order he is a past master, past high priest and past eminent commander.

GEZA KOKOCHAK. The United States, where total democracy is supposed to reign and where no lines of distinction are drawn other than those of relative, proved ability, have long attracted the ambitious youths of other countries. In making their home here they find their dreams of earnest labor well repaid come true and their immigration is of mutual advantage. A fair example of the case in hand is found in Geza Kokochak, who has risen to be a leading business man of Weirton, where he is part owner of the Leader-News and proprietor of a flourishing real estate business.

Mr. Kokochak was born May 16, 1885, in Czecho-Slovakia, then Hungary. When he was ten years of age he was left in his native land by his parents, who in 1895 immigrated to the United States and settled in Jefferson County, Ohio, not having sufficient means to take their children with them. When he was only five years of age Geza began earning a part of his living as a goose herder, and continued until, when seven years of age, he had charge of 500 geese on a nobleman's estate, likewise being overseer swineherd for the village. Later he was made a shepherd and tended the village sheep, amounting to 1,300. Up to this time he received no wages, working merely for his board, but eventually he secured a position with a lumber company, where, in the mill, he was made foreman of a bunch of twenty-five boys engaged in sorting lath, and this employment paid him a small wage. His schooling, starting at seven years, consumed two and one-half years, whereas the usual course was six years, but he was called upon to attend the examinations. During his residence in his native land Mr. Kokochak lived with an aunt, who was interested in his advancement, and finally arrangements were made, in 1897, for him to join his parents, and in December of that year the family was reunited. Geza secured work in the coal mines of Jefferson County, where he remained three years, but it was his desire to enter business on his own account, and in order to prepare for a mercantile career he secured employment as a clerk, a vocation which he followed for three and one-half years. Mr. Kokochak made his initial venture into the merchandise business at Connorville, Ohio, in partnership with his father, Michael Kokochak, who is now deceased, but lost all his capital on account of a coal strike then existing.

It was at this time that Mr. Kokochak married Miss Susannah Swartz, who had been born in the same vicinity in Czecho-Slovakia as her husband, and had been brought as a child to Steubenville, Ohio, by her father, Andy Swartz, formerly foreman at the old LaBelle mines, and now living in retirement at Steubenville. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Kokochak settled at Steubenville, where they embarked in the general store business, with $6 cash and a $3,500 debt to pay. During the seven years that they engaged in business at Steubenville they built up an enterprise of $3,000 sales the first year to $100,000 sales the seventh year and paid off all debts. During this time also Mr. Kokochak had been identified with all movements and was a leader among his people. In 1913 he opened a branch of his business at Weirton, then a village of 800 population, with but one mill in operation. Mr. Kokochak put in a general stock of merchandise and was soon doing a thriving business. He had the foresight to note how Weirton was to grow and develop, and, where a man of less courage and self-reliance would have hesitated, was prompt in disposing of his Steubenville business in order that he might concentrate his full energies upon the new enterprise. His judgment was also shown in the choice of a location for his store, for when the community grew up and developed it was found that his store was located within a mile of the center of the city. For a time it would seem that his foresight had been at fault, as his store lost some money, but his business ability soon overcame this obstacle and he made the mercantile effort a decided success.

At this time there was somewhat of a boom on in real estate, and Mr. Kokochak, a man of known acumen, was frequently consulted as to property values. This opened up a new field for his capabilities, and he soon was engaged in the real estate business as the medium through which could be transacted transfers of property. His in-tores in this direction soon grew to such an extent that he disposed of his store and purchased a real estate agency from a Mr. Widing. With the growth of the town he began to handle all kinds of property, and his deals grew larger and larger, until at one time and another he has probably sold as much property as there is in Weirton at present, one of his deals involving the transfer of 340 acres of property, which extended the corporate limits greatly. He became a salesman and also a stockholder for the Weirton Home Building Company, which sells many homes, and the Weirton New Home Building Company, and acts as salesman for the Weirton New Home Company, owned by the Weirton Steel Company, the leading industry of the community. Mr. Kokochak has interested many new people in the community and has encouraged them to build and settle, and is the man in charge of the some eighteen or twenty additions to the growing community of Weirton, which during the past few years has shown an almost phenomenal development.

Mr. Kokochak first entered the newspaper field in 1920, when he purchased the Weirton Leader from James J. Weir. On Mr. Weir's return from the West he secured a half interest in the Leader, and December 1, 1921, Messrs. Weir and Kokochak bought the Weirton News from J. W. Jones, who had purchased it in 1920 from Mr. Weir, its founder. The two papers were thus combined as the Leader-News. Mr. Weir being editor and manager and Mr. Kokochak, treasurer. Mr. Kokochak is also president of the Weirton Business Men's Association. He has always been one of the town's best boosters, and has at all times been ready to help progressive movements with his ability, his time or his means. During the World war he was greatly active, particularly in the Red Cross, where he was a member of the executive board, although he likewise did his full share in other movements, being a member of all committees of Liberty Bond drives and an assistant to the members of the War Registration Board, in addition to working valiantly in behalf of the Young Men's Christian Association and other drives. Largely through his work and that of other public-spirited citizens like himself Hancock County was among the first in every drive. He was appointed by the director of War Risk Insurance to assist the Government in gathering the necessary data to reinstate the service men in retaining their Government insurance. When the Red Cross first installed its local branch Mr. Kokochak gave them the use of his offices free until the society had an opportunity of erecting a building of their own. Mr. Kokochak is particularly well read in all Slavonic tongues, and while a resident of Steubenville was frequently called into the courts to act as an interpreter. He is the owner of a modern home at Weirton, in which he has a well-selected library of some 5,000 volumes. Taking a pride in his adopted city and its institutions, he has helped to build up all the churches, and not only aids all educational movements, but is a regular visitor at the schools.

Mr. and Mrs. Kokochak are the parents of seven children, as follows: Anna, who is attending the local high school; Napoleon John, attending the graded school; Geza C., Alexander Ferdinand, Olympia Josephine, Theodore Woodrow and Lillian Susannah. Anna and Napoleon were the first junior members of the Red Cross in Hancock County, in the first branch, and the first chapter in Hancock County was established at Weirton.

CARL EDWARD GUSTKEY. It can properly be said that Carl Edward Gustkey was the architect of his own early destinies as well as his mature career. He became a worker when a mere boy, and his work proved a training school in which he has developed his successful career as a merchant and he has been a business man of independence in Preston County during the greater part of his life.

He was born in Newburg, April 17, 1880. His grandfather, Edward Gustkey, brought his family in company with a party of immigrants from Hanover, Germany, the party being delivered near Hardman, West Virginia, under contract to work for Mr. Hardman in getting out iron ore. This work was the first employment of Edward Gustkey in the United States. After five or ten years he moved to Pittsburgh, where his sons became employees of the steel mills, and he then returned to West Virginia, settled at Newburg, and finally at Independence, where he spent his last years in cultivating a small plot of ground. He died in 1889, at the age of seventy-six. His children were: Anna, who married August Shrader and is now living at Independence at the age of seventy-two; William, now deceased, spent a greater part of his life at Pittsburgh, and several of his sons became men of prominence in railroad circles.

Carl Edward Gustkey, Sr., was born in Hanover and was thirteen years of age when brought to the United States. He acquired a limited education, but sufficient to transact the affairs of life. As a young man he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company as a laborer on a repair gang. Later he became an engineer at the Edgar Thompson Steel Mills, and while operating a locomotive in the Edgar Thompson plant of the Bethlehem Steel Company near Braddock, Pennsylvania, he was accidentally killed on August 4, 1889, at the age of thirty-four. At Independence, West Virginia, he married Elizabeth Avers, who was born at Terra Alta in 1854. Her parents were John H. and Yetta Avers. John Avers, a native of Holland, was a farmer in Germany, and brought his family to the United States, arriving in very straightened circumstances financially. After purchasing a cow he had only seven dollars left. At Terra Alta he began with a small parcel of ground and farmed it. Later he moved to Independence, West Virginia, and entered the railroad employ, and after many years of service in the Newburg, West Virginia, shops of the Baltimore & Ohio he retired. He died at Independence at the age of eighty-eight. He had a large family, and some of his sons became prominent in railroad circles.

The children of Carl E. Gustkey, Sr., and wife who lived to maturity were: Carl E., now of Independence, West Virginia; Anna, who married Thomas Gough, now of Blaine, West Virginia, and Harry Wilson, now of Detroit, Michigan.

Carl Edward Gustkey, Jr., was only nine years of age when his father died. He had the privilege of attending only seven terms of public schools. At the age of fourteen he became an employe in the store of W. E. Sharp & Company, at Independence, West Virginia, at $12.00 per month. Later he worked for Mr. Sharps alone, then for his successors, Hartley & Metzler, and finally, in 1904, bought the interest of Mr. Metzler, this transaction resulting in the change of the firm name to Hartley & Gustkey. This his first partnership, was with J. M. Hartley, now of Fairmont, West Virginia, and a pioneer merchant of West Virginia. The firm is still doing business prosperously and with a large establishment occupying the site of the first store established in the Village of Independence before the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was built. Mr. Gustkey is working with undiminished energy and with the efficiency acquired by many years of experience as a merchant, and gives practically all his time to the store, although he has had some capital invested in a small way in coal mines. He is a director of the First National Bank of Newburg, and has also served Lyon District three years as a member of the Board of Education.

Mr. Gustkey was reared in a home where the politics was democratic, but he cast his first presidential vote for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904 and has supported the republican ticket in national elections ever since. He is affiliated with Newburg Lodge of Masons, the Royal Arch Chapter and Knights Templar Commandery at Grafton, the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, is a past chancellor of Damon Lodge, No. 5, Knights of Pythias, at Newburg, is a past grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Independence, and is a member of Grafton Lodge, No. 638, Loyal Order of Moose. While a member of the Lutheran Church, he is also active in the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church.

At Independence, June 14, 1906, Mr. Gustkey married Daisy Lenore Wilkins, who was born at Independence, August 14, 1880, only four months younger than her husband. Her parents were Isaac and Elizabeth (Helmick) Wilkins, early settlers of Preston County, and her maternal grandfather, Helmick, was a pioneer circuit rider of the Methodist Protestant Church, covering Preston, Taylor and nearby counties, and spent the greater part of his life near the Village of Independence. Mrs. Gustyke was the youngest of four children. The others are: Inez, a teacher in the Grafton public schools; Mrs. May Gibson, of Newburg; and Arthur, a successful architect at Pittsburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Gustyke have two sons, Carl Wilkins, born in 1908, and Earl, born in 1911.

THOMAS JEFFREY DAVIS, prosecuting attorney of Ritchie County, with residence at Harrisville, the county seat, was born in this county March 19, 1879, and is a scion of an old and honored family of what is now West Virginia, a family that was founded in America in the early colonial era. The genealogy of the Davis family has fortunately been preserved in careful record, from which the following data are drawn:

William Davis was born in Glamorganshire, Wales, in 1663, and was educated at Oxford University, his parents wishing him to become a clergyman. At the university he became interested in the teachings of the Society of Friends, which he joined, and in which he became a speaker.

In 1684 he came to America with others of this faith to join the colony of William Penn. In 1698 he became a member of the Seventh Day Baptist Church in Pennsylvania. He first married Elizabeth Brisley, and after her death wedded Elizabeth Pavior. Four children were born of the first and seven of the second marriage. Several of the children became members of a Seventh Day Baptist colony at Monmouth, New Jersey, about 1740, and with these children William Davis passed the closing years of his life. He died in 1745, aged eighty-two years. Representatives of the family were prominent members of the old Baptist Church at Shrewsbury, New Jersey. Rev. Jacob Davis enlisted as a chaplain in the Patriot Army of the Revolution, and his father, James, Sr., was killed by a stray bullet while in service as a soldier in that war. William Davis, Jr., served on the staff of Gen. George Washington. William Davis, Jr., and his family became members of the colony from the old Shrewsbury Church that came to Virginia in 1789, the immigrants, who came with a train of fifteen wagons, making settlement on White Day Creek in what is now Monongalia County, West Virginia. James Davis, son of William, Jr., was sixteen years old at the time of this migration to the wilds of Virginia. His son David married Lydia Jeffrey, and they became the parents of ten children, of whom the fifth was Thomas Neely Davis, who was born in 1824 and who married Amelia Zinn. Thomas Engle Davis, son of Thomas N. and Amelia (Zinn) Davis, was born July 11, 1846, at Oxford, Ritchie County, West Virginia, as now constituted. December 24, 1868, Thomas E. Davis wedded Alethea Anna Leggett, and they became the parents of four children: Winifred married Homer B. Woods, September 10, 1890, and they became the parents of seven children, of whom two are deceased; Juniata Davis married Wheeler Boggess, June 23, 1892, and her death occurred February 20, 1920, she being survived by six children; Thomas Jeffrey, the immediate subject of this review, was the next in order of birth; and Dada died in infancy.

Thomas Engle Davis attended historic old Washington and Jefferson University at Washington, Pennsylvania, and he had the distinction of being the teacher of the first public school established in Ritchie County. He became one of the leading members of the bar of Ritchie County, which he served two terms as prosecuting attorney, besides which he served in earlier years as deputy sheriff and deputy county and circuit clerk. He was a man of fine intellectuality and marked professional ability, was a leader in public affairs in his native county, and represented his district in the State Legislature. He was a stalwart advocate of the principles of the republican party, was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and was a zealous member of the Baptist Church, as was also his widow, who died January 7, 1915, at Harrisville. Brief record has already been given concerning the four children, but it may be stated that Winifred graduated from the Wheeling Female College and that her husband is now Judge Homer B. Woods of Harrisville; Juniata, who attended Broadus College, became the wife of Rev. Wheeler Boggess, who served as a missionary of the Baptist Church in India, from 1892 to 1915, the death of Mrs. Boggess having occurred at Phillipi, West Virginia, February 20, 1920, as previously stated.

Thomas Jeffrey Davis gained his early education in the public schools of Harrisville, West Virginia, completing his public school education in Washington, D. C., and was thereafter graduated in Woods Commercial College in that city. He also attended Broadus College, Clarksburg, West Virginia, and in 1900 he was graduated in the law department of the University of West Virginia. He received at this time the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and later he received the degree of Master of Laws from Columbian University, Washington, D. C. In 1901 he was admitted to the bar, and he has since been successfully engaged in the active practice of profession at Harrisville, save for the interval of his service as private secretary of the president of the Senate of the West Virginia Legislature. He was elected prosecuting attorney of Ritchie County in 1912, and that his administration has been especially efficient is indicated by the fact that in 1920 he was re-elected for a third consecutive term. He is a republican and is an influential figure in the councils of his party in his native county. Mr. Davis is the owner of a considerable amount of real estate in his home city and county, including his attractive home. He is a director of the First National Bank and is interested also in oil production enterprise in this section of the state. He and his wife are specially zealous and valued members of the Baptist Church at Harrisville, and he served nearly eleven years as superintendent of its Sunday school, besides having served twelve years as secretary of the Ritchie County Sunday School Association, and is also serving as recording secretary of the West Virginia State Sunday School Association and as secretary of its executive committee. He is past master of Harrisville Lodge, No. 98, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; is a member of Odell S. Long Chapter, No. 25, Royal Arch Masons; is a past eminent commander of Pennsboro Commandery, No. 20, Knights Templars; and is a member of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. Both he and his wife hold membership in the Order of the Eastern Star, in which he is a past patron of the local chapter and a past grand patron of the grand chapter of the state. Mrs. Davis being affiliated also with the Daughters of Rebekah.

June 27, 1917, recorded the marriage of Mr. Davis and Miss Hermoine Goff, of Burnt House, Ritchie County. She attended Marshall College at Huntington, and the Fairmont Normal School, and for four years was a popular teacher in the schools of Ritchie County prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have two children: Thomas Jeffrey, Jr., born September 1, 1918, and George L., born May 4, 1921.

J. R. WILLIAMSON SMITH, of Phillipi, is a native of Barbour County and a member of one of the substantial old families of this section. He was born in Barker District on Bill's Creek, January 13, 1848.

His grandfather, Henry Smith, left old Virginia in early boyhood with his brother Jacob, crossed the mountains on foot and settled on the waters of Sugar Creek in Randolph County, within what is now the limits of Barbour County. The two brothers located in the woods, put up a cabin of round logs, notched together, and they kept bachelor's hall there until they married. The old log house at a later period in the family history was used by Mrs. Henry Smith as a loom house. Henry Smith did some of the work that first brought the virgin soil of that locality into cultivation. To eke out the slender income from the farm he worked at the carpenter's trade. After reaching advanced age he turned over the property to his children, lived with his daughter in Roane County and died there about 1890, when past ninety years of age, and is buried near Spencer. The wife of Henry Smith was Katie Leshor, who died at the old homestead on Sugar Creek, the mother of the following children: Polly, who married Bryan Gainer and died in Roane County; Alpheus; John, who spent his life as a farmer in Roane County; Hiram, who served two years in the Confederate army, was a tanner by trade, and spent his last years in Texas; George, a farmer who was a Union soldier and died in Roane County; Bettie, who married Michael Nestor and died in Gilmer County; Martha Jane, who married Oliver Buck and died in Roane County; Hulda, who died in Roane County, the wife of Daniel Phillips; Rebecca Ann, who is living at Philippi, at the age of eighty-five, wife of Charles Wolverton.

Alpheus Smith was born on Sugar Creek, started life with only the meager advantages furnished by a term or two of school in an old log shanty in his neighborhood, and farming was the work which he prosecuted as a means of rearing his family. He lived on Bill's Creek and died in 1906, when almost eighty years of age. He was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church and a republican. The wife of Alpheus Smith was Ann Glascock, daughter of William and Mahala (Cole) Glascock. Her father, a native of Bath County, Virginia, came to West Virginia as a young man, served as a soldier in the War of 1812, and was a farmer. He died about 1855, survived by his widow. Their children were: William, who went to Iowa and died there; Chapin, who died in Iowa; Spencer, who died at Grafton; Ailsy, who married Abraham Reed and died in Barbour County; Peggie, who died in Barbour County, wife of Abner Bilan; Joshua, who lived in Barbour County; Susan, who was the wife of Meredith Hathaway, of Barbour County; Nettie, who became the wife of Rev. Thomas Wood, a Baptist minister; Hamah, who died in Barbour County, wife of Henry Wood; and Mrs. Alpheus Smith, the youngest of the children, who died at the age of sixty-five. She was the mother of Mozell Smith, who spent her life in Barbour County, wife of Marshall Lake; John R. Williamson; Bettie, who died in childhood; and Julia Ann, of Barbour County, wife of Ransom Bennett.

John Rickmaier Williamson Smith so far as his literary education was concerned is a product of one of the old time schools now happily obsolete in West Virginia. Over the windows was pasted greased paper, there were slab benches for seats, no desks, and the material of instruction was almost as crude as the equipment. Mr. Smith continued to live at home with his parents for two years after passing his majority, and then married and went to farming in the same community. Eight years later he moved to the Philippi locality, and continued farming and stock raising here. In an early day he freighted coal for fuel for Philippi. Mr. Smith was old enough to observe some of the local events involved in the Civil war. He heard the guns at the battle of Philippi. He has been a resident of Philippi for thirty years, and is still keeping in touch with his farm. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and has voted the regular democratic ticket for half a century, beginning with Horace Greeley.

In Barbour County he married Miss Celia A. Wilson, daughter of Isaiah Wilson. An article on another page gives the very interesting history of this Wilson family, one of the most prominent in this section of West Virginia. Mrs. Smith was born at Galena, Ohio, in 1838, but was reared in Barbour County and was married November 29 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Smith had three children. The oldest is Winfield Scott Smith, the Philippi physician. The second is Alpheus, professor of physics in the State University of Ohio. The only daughter, Zanna Grace, died unmarried in March, 1904.

WINFIELD SCOTT SMITH, M. D. Graduated from medical college in 1899, Doctor Smith has been a busy practitioner ever since, chiefly in the community where he was born and reared, Philippi. While in general practice, his success as a surgeon has attracted attention. Doctor Smith represents through his father and mother two of the old and prominent families of West Virginia. He is a son of J. R. Williamson Smith, whose record is given separately, and Celia A. (Wilson) Smith, of the well known and historic Wilson family.

Doctor Smith was born on the Philippi townsite, where the Methodist Church now stands, September 7, 1873. As he grew to manhood he attended the public schools, worked during vacations on the farm, and had plenty of physical training to supplement the intellectual processes of school. After completing his work in the Philippi schools he passed the teachers examination, and for three terms had charge of a country school as teacher.

In the meantime he had definitely determined upon medicine as his life work, and he pursued the study in the Medical College of Virginia at Richmond, where he was graduated in 1899. Thus qualified for practice, he returned to his birthplace and opened an office at Philippi. His continuous practice here was interrupted in 1908 when he removed to Huntington, and was a physician in that city for seven years. For five years of that period he was associated with Dr. R. E. Vickers, one of the ablest surgeons of the state. For the past seven years Doctor Smith has resumed his post of professional duty in Philippi. He is a member of the Tri-county Medical Society, including Randolph, Tucker and Barbour counties.

Doctor Smith is a member of the Kiwanis Club, the Elks, Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows, has for a number of years been public school physician at Philippi. In politics he is an uncompromising democrat, having cast his first vote for Mr. Bryan in 1900. He served one term as city health officer of Philippi.

By his first marriage he has a daughter, Beatrice, who was educated in Marshall College at Huntington and Broadus College, and is now a teacher of Elkins. On March 4, 1915, at Huntington, Doctor Smith married Dei Gratia McWilliams. Her father, R. W. McWilliams, was one of the best known men in the public life of Cabell County, serving as circuit clerk for eighteen years. He was born at Grafton, was orphaned in childhood, was crippled by the railroad at Grafton while driving the village cars, and in spite of these two handicaps secured a liberal education and became a successful man, few citizens giving a better account of themselves in the community. Mrs. Smith is one of a family of four sons and four daughters, and she completed her education in the Huntington High School before going to college.

FREDERICK WILLIAM HORCHLER has always had his home at Newburg in Preston County, and has devoted fully a third of a century to the varied work and duties of coal mining. He is one of the coal operators of that section, and has borne his share of civic duties in the community.

Mr. Horchler was born at Newburg, May 28, 1869. His father, William Horchler, was born in Germany, son of a forester to the king. William left Frankfort on the Maine to avoid the enforced military duty in the German army. Two of his brothers, Frederick and August, also came to America, Frederick spending his life at Eckart, Maryland, where he left a family, while August lived as a neighbor to his brother William at Newburg, was a shoemaker by trade, later in the railroad service, and is now a retired engineer living at Cumberland, Maryland. William Horchler established himself at Newburg in 1857. He was young at the time, and at Newburg he applied himself to the trade he had learned in the old country, shoemaking. He soon became interested in railroad, first as a section hand, was then foreman of the section at Newburg, and from that transferred to the train service, beginning as a fireman, and he ran an engine for more than thirty years. He retired from the service at the age of sixty-five. His home was at Newburg for more than a half a century, and he died there in November, 1910, at the age of seventy-three. For a time he was a member of the town council, was a democrat and a member of the Lutheran Church. William Horchler married Mary Hilgartner, a native of Hesse Darmstadt, Germany. She came to the United States as a young woman and met her husband at Newburg. She was a working girl, and they were married at Independence in the home of her employer, Colonel Monroe, then a supervisor of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway. She died in November, 1913. The children of this good old couple were: Henry, who left a family at Newark, Ohio, at his death; Annie, wife of G. M. Frazier and living at Laurel Lee, West Virginia; Amelia, wife of J. P. Stanhagen, of Fairmont; Frederick W.; and Lena, wife of John M. Carrio, of Rowlesburg, West Virginia.

Frederick W. Horchler spent several terms in school at Newburg, but his substantial education has been the result of working experience. At the age of fourteen he entered the service of a coal company. Through successive duties as mule driver, coke worker, store clerk, boiler fireman at the mine, he eventually became mine superintendent, and for eighteen years had charge of the Austen Mine. Leaving the Austen Coal and Coke Company in 1916, Mr. Horchler became an operator on his own account and on his own capital. Under the name of the Horchler Coal Mining Company he opened a mine in the Upper Freeport vein, and this company when operating to capacity employed sixty men. He opened a new coal field at Newburg, the property being operated by the Horchler Big Vein Coal Company, working the Pittsburg and Bakerstown seams. Mr. Horchler was also one of the original stockholders and is a director of the First National Bank of Newburg. In the role of good citizenship he was elected in 1918 as county commissioner for Lyon District as successor of Commissioner O. W. Zinn. During his term on the court the Morgantown-Kingwood Pike was improved and a number of wooden bridges over the county replaced by concrete and steel structures. Mr. Horchler grew up in a democratic home, cast his first presidential ballot for Grover Cleveland, and has departed from party regularity only in local elections, where the man is more important than the ticket. Mr. Horchler is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. His two older sons, Frederick and Albert, are Masous, Frederick having reached the thirty-second degree of Scottish Rite, and his other son, Edward, is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the dramatic and social branch of that order.

At Newburg, August 5, 1901, Mr. Horchler married Miss Annie Brain, who was born at Newburg, October 4, 1869. Her father, John G. Brain, married a Miss Downey and their three children were: Frank Brain, who died in the Philippines as a member of Company C of the Tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers; Mrs. Horchler; and Ollie, who died at Connellsville, Pennsylvania, in 1910, wife of Samuel Moxley.

The oldest of Mr. Horchler's children is Frederick W., Jr., now associated with his father in the coal business and who was a member of Company C of the Thirteenth United States Marines during the World war, fighting with that organization in France one year and coming home after the signing of the armistice. The second son, also connected with his father's coal industry, is Albert Lee, who married Mary Dorsey, of Fairmont. The third son, Edward J., is a farmer at home. The two daughters are Mabel and Mary, the latter attending high school.

OMER P. FRAME, cashier of the Farmers and Mechanics Bank of Gassaway, is one of the astute financiers and solid citizens of Braxton County, who has won an enviable reputation for integrity and efficiency. He was born at Frametown, West Virginia, August 27, 1886, a son of Elliott and Rebecca (James) Frame. Elliott Frame was also born at Frametown, a son of Thomas Frame, an early settler of Frametown, for whom the town was named. Upon locating there he built a grist-mill, operated by water power, and this he conducted the greater part of his life, and his son, Elliott Frame, also operated this old mill. Elliott Frame was educated in the common schools of Frametown, and in early life was a teacher in Braxton County, but is now a carpenter in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. For many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he is active in Sunday School, and has a class. In his political convictions he is a democrat. There were two children born to him and his wife, namely: Etta, who was graduated from the common schools, is now the wife of J. L. Barker; and Omer P., whose name heads this review.

Like his father, Omer P. Frame was reared at Frametown and attended its common schools, remaining at home until he reached his majority. He has been cashier of his present bank since its organization, and associated with this institution in an official position are Dr. J. W. Smith, president; V. G. Bender, vice president, who with Mr. Frame and J. C. Kinton, S. W. Rosenberger, Leslie Frame, Dr. L. A. Jarrett, P. C. Belknap, Norman Sirk and A. C. James form the Board of Directors. The Farmers and Mechanics National Bank of Gassaway is one of the most solid institutions of Braxton County, and a very large banking business is carried on.

Mr. Frame was united in marriage with Elizabeth Sinclair Longwell, the ceremony being performed November 27, 1912. Mrs. Frame graduated from the common and high schools of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Frame have two children, namely: Eugene M., who was born May 27, 1915; and Evaline E., who was born August 27, 1919. They belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and he is a member of the local Official Board. Well known in Masonry, he belongs to Gassaway Lodge No. 133, A. F. and A. M., of which he has been past master five times; Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery No. 16, K. T., and Beni-Kedem Shrine of Charleston, West Virginia. He is also a member of Gassaway Lodge No. 196, K. of P., of which he is a past chancellor.

CHARLES C. RUSMISSELL, M. D., one of the physicians and surgeons of Gassaway, is one of the faithful and skilled members of the medical profession of Braxton County, and one who is held in affectionate esteem. He was born near Frenchton, Upshur County, West Virginia, July 15, 1877, a son of John D. and Amanda A. (Hull) Rumsissell, both of whom were born on farms near Frenchton, and both were reared in the rural districts and attended the local schools of the country regions. He is now retired, and they are still living on the homestead where they settled at the time of their marriage. The paternal grandfather of Doctor Rumsissell was Dr. Adam Rumsissell, one of the early physicians of Upshur County, to which locality he came from Virginia, and where he was engaged in practice for half a century. John D. Rumsissell and his wife had seven children, namely: Flora, who is the wife of Charles Marsh, of Buckhannon, West Virginia; Doctor Rumsissell, whose name heads this review; James A., who is a physician and surgeon of Buckhannon; Fred H., who is a contractor and builder of Buckhannon; John E., who is a farmer, is operating the homestead; Gay D., who is an oil driller; and Mrs. Wilda Duncan, who lives at Gassaway. The parents of these children belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics the father was a republican.

Growing up on the homestead, Doctor Rumsissell attended the district schools, and later took a commercial course at the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg, West Virginia, and after leaving college was for two years engaged in business. In 1901 he entered the American Medical College at Baltimore, Maryland, and was graduated therefrom in 1905 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and in 1906 located permanently at Gassaway, where he has built up a large and valuable connection. He is unmarried. Professionally he maintains membership with the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a stockholder in the Bank of Gassaway and of the Gassaway Development Company, and is much interested in the advancement of his home community. During the years he has been at Gassaway he has witnessed many changes, and is proud of the fact that he has participated in some of them, and that while he has advanced in material prosperity he has at the same time built up a solid reputation for professional skill and personal integrity.

J. B. FISHER, Gassaway, West Virginia, while not as important numerically as some other of the cities of the state, is known over a wide territory as one of the prosperous communities and as the home of some of the most dependable financial institutions and sound business houses. This prestige has been gained through the wholehearted efforts of men of high character and efficiency, among whom none stands higher than J. B. Fisher, cashier of the Bank of Gassaway and president of the Gassaway Development Company.

J. B. Fisher was born near Flatwoods, Braxton County, April 7, 1884, a son of F. R. and Nancy V. (Hyer) Fisher, natives of Flatwoods, where he was born in 1857 and she in 1859. They grew up in the rural districts, and acquired their educations in the district schools. She died in 1904, having been for many years a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He belonged to the Improved Order of Red Men. Their children were as follows: John L., who is a resident of Flatwoods; Frank, who is a farmer and merchant of Flatwoods; and J. B., whose name heads this review.

Growing up on his father's farm, J. B. Fisher attended the local schools and later the Glenville State Normal School, and taught school for a time in Braxton County. Entering the business field, he was store manager and bookkeeper for the Boggs Stave & Lumber Company, with which he remained for seven years, leaving that concern to enter the Bank of Gassaway January 1, 1915, as cashier, which connection he has maintained ever since. This is a state bank, and Mr. Fisher's fellow officials are: W. P. Bartlett, president; Alexander Groves, vice president; and Dr. Norman Good, J. B. McLaughlin, A. N. Lough and Alfred Walker, who with the president, vice president and cashier from the board of directors. In addition to his interest in the bank Mr. Fisher is active in real estate, and is the prime mover in the Gassaway Development Company, which has already done so much for the city, and which is planning many additional improvements in the near future.

In September, 1910, Mr. Fisher married Miss Grace Lloyd, who was born in Braxton County, West Virginia, and they have three children, namely: Earl, Carl and Eunice. Mrs. Fisher is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. A Mason, Mr. Fisher belongs to Gassaway Lodge No. 133, A. F. and A. M.; Sutton Chapter, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery, K. T., and Beni-Kedem Shrine. While a consistent democrat, he limits his participation in politics to exerting his right of suffrage. It has been Mr. Fisher's policy through life to do thoroughly what lay at hand, and at the same time keep in touch with other matters so that when the time came he would be ready for added responsibilities.

JOHN BYRNE. The most prominent, successful and capable men are not always those who started out in life with the ambition to achieve something especially great or famous, but almost invariably are found to be individuals who at the outset placed a proper valuation upon industry, integrity and determination. Possessing these qualities as a capital, John Byrne, of Sutton, entered upon his business career, and during the course of many years rose to a position of independence and prominence in his locality, where he is now living retired. For him the path to success was not an easy one, for his youthful advantages were limited and his earlier years were ones crowded with labor, but these facts made his success all the more welcome and gratifying when it had been achieved.

Mr. Byrne was born at Sutton, February 9, 1848, a son of John P. and Sabina C. (Sterrett) Byrne. He traces his ancestry back to George Byrne, a native of Wicklow, Ireland, who immigrated to America in the year 1720 and settled near what is now the City of Washington, D. C. He was the father of Samuel B. Byrne, whose son, Peyton Byrne, was the first of the family to migrate westward, locating in what is now Preston County, West Virginia, in 1794. He was the father of John B. Byrne, whose son, John P. Byrne, was the father of John Byrne. John P. Byrne was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, July 6, 1817, and acquired his education in a private school. During the greater part of his life he applied himself to agricultural pursuits, but was also prominent in public and political affairs and was a leader of the whig party. When Braxton County was organized, in 1836, he was made a deputy sheriff under the first sheriff of the newly-organized county, and later in life became county clerk, a position which he held for eighteen years and which he was occupying at the time of his death, February 2, 1860, when he was but forty-three years of age. He first married Sabina C. Sterrett, who was born in Missouri, in 1830, and died August 29, 1853, in the faith of the Presbyterian Church. They became the parents of three children, of whom John Byrne is the only survivor. In 1854 John P. Byrne took as his second wife Jane Hamilton.

John Byrne was but five years of age when his mother died, and his youthful education was somewhat neglected, although in later years he gained much practical knowledge through reading, experience and observation, and became a man of good education. When he was twelve years of age his father died, and he went to live at the home of his grandmother, Mrs. Sterrett, with whom he remained until reaching the age of seventeen years, when he began to be self-supporting. For some years he worked as clerk in a store and saved his money carefully, so that in 1871 he became a proprietor on his own account through the purchase of a modest stock of goods. This business he gradually built up from small proportions to become a flourishing and successful enterprise, and continued as its head until his retirement in 1916. Mr. Byrne gained success solely through his own efforts, aided by a reputation for fair and honorable dealing that has always been well-merited. During his career he has also interested himself to some extent in farming, and in this field, as in the other, hard work and intelligent management served as the media through which prosperity was gained. Like his father, Mr. Byrne has been active and influential in public and political life. For several years he was one of the leaders of the democratic party, and served as chairman of the Braxton County Democratic Committee. In 1876 he was elected sheriff of Braxton County, and acted in that capacity for a period of four years, giving the people an excellent administration.

Mr. Byrne was united in marriage with Miss Frances C. Squires, who was born near Sutton, October 17, 1858, a daughter of Norman B. Squires, a native of Braxton County, who died of wounds received during the Civil war while serving in the Federal Army. Mrs. Byrne is a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Sutton. She is the owner of farming land in Braxton County. To Mr. and Mrs. Byrne there have been born fourteen children, of whom ten are living: Sabina C., the widow of Joel S. Berry; Norman, of Nicholas County, this state; Ella, the wife of Dr. M. T. Morrison; John P., a farmer near Sutton; Charles M., printer of the Braxton Central newspaper; Robert E. and Ethel, at home; George C., a traveling salesman; Mary A., the wife of John Newlon, of Sutton; and Clarence, a resident of Sebring, Ohio.

DANIEL C. FEATHER, whose death occurred January 13, 1922, was a retired farmer at Terra Alta, lived fourscore years, was an honored veteran of the Civil war, and for thirty years or more after coming out of the army his time and energies were devoted to the labors of his farm.

His ancestors came to Preston County when it was almost an unbroken part of the great trans-Alleghany wilderness. The family originated in Germany. The grandfather, Jacob Feather, was the original settler in the Lenox locality of Preston County, where he spent the rest of his years clearing away the timber and making a farm. Zacheus Feather, father of Daniel Feather, was born at Lenox, July 14, 1805, and died March 1, 1891. He married Elizabeth Ervin, daughter of Isaac Ervin, and she was born August 6, 1814, and died January 26, 1898. They lived out their lives on the spot where their son Daniel was born, and were modest and unpretentious farmers. Zacheus Feather voted as a democrat until the issues of the Civil war made him a republican. Two of his sons were soldiers, Daniel and Isaac, the latter in the Seventh West Virginia Infantry. A brief record of all their children is as follows: Clara Jane, who married Thomas J. Welch, reared a large family and died in Preston County; Isaac B., who was a farmer and is buried at the Crab Orchard Cemetery; Jacob, who also lived at Crab Orchard and is buried there; Mary Ann, who married B. A. Conner and died at Kingwood; Daniel C.; Nancy M., who was the wife of J. C. Stokes and died at Parsons, West Virginia; John S., a resident of Logan, Ohio; Miss Eva Catherine, of Lenox; Amanda Ellen, Mrs. John K. Peaslee, or Lenox; Martin Luther, who died in Preston County; Sarah E., who married Scott Kelley, of Terra Alta; and Minerva Belle, wife of Elmer B. Feather, a farmer near Lenox.

Daniel C. Feather was born at Lenox, Preston County, February 12, 1842, and he always observed his birthday in conjunction with Lincoln's anniversary, but his great admiration for the martyred president had other substantial grounds. Mr. Feather was reared on the home farm and lived there until past twenty years of age. He then joined Company B of the Fourteenth West Virginia Infantry, under Captain Clinton Jeffreys and Colonel Daniel Johnson. He first trained at Terra Alta, then spent three months drilling on Wheeling Island, mobilized at Clarksburg and soon went to the front and remained during the winter on scouting duty at Keyser. His command was then returned west to Parkersburg, thence to Charleston, and then crossed the mountains into Old Virginia, along the Virginia and Tennessee Railway. At Cloyd Mountain Mr. Feather was struck in the right hip by a musket ball, fracturing the thigh bone, and but for the help of comrades said he would have been "down to stay." While the Confederates were beaten off, two days later General Morgan came in and took the Federal wounded as prisoners, including Mr. Feather. These prisoners were put in the Emory and Henry College Hospital, where Mr. Feather remained five months. He was then sent to Richmond and a week later was exchanged and put in a parole camp at Annapolis, Maryland, and subsequently sent to Baltimore for hospital treatment. While there his discharge, previously applied for, arrived at Annapolis, to which point he returned and was there the night President Lincoln was assassinated. Mr. Feather retained a vivid recollection of all the excitement attending that tragedy. He left Annapolis for home in April, and his discharge separated him from the army without a final muster out. The bullet that wounded him was never found and is believed to have remained somewhere in his body. The wound it made frequently broke out afresh, and caused him distress and misery until 1920, when it seemed to have permanently healed and his troubles ended.

For some time after the war he was unable to resume work, but when sufficiently recovered returned to the farming operations of his youth and established himself in his home community. He lived there until his removal to Terra Alta in 1894, except for a year and a half spent in Hocking County, Ohio, where he married. As a farmer Mr. Feather was a grain and stock raiser, and these departments, together with the improvements of his farm and the maintenance of its soil, constituted the daily and yearly routine of his life until he gained a competence through years of drudgery and retired to Terra Alta to spend his declining years in comfort. He established his home at the high point of the Alleghenies and lived there for more than a quarter of a century. He was a stockholder and one of the directors of the Terra Alta Bank. While in the army he cast his first vote for Mr. Lincoln for President, and every national election has called him out to vote the same party ticket. He filled the chairs in the Knights of Pythias Lodge of Terra Alta twice, was a representative to the Grand Lodge, and some thirty years ago was made an Odd Fellow at Bruceton Mills.

Deborah Ann Chidester was born in Preston County May 13, 1848, and as a young girl she entertained a high admiration of the youthful soldier, Daniel Feather. When she was nineteen years of age her parents moved to Hocking County, Ohio, and Daniel Feather followed her there, and on April 25, 1869, they were married. She was a daughter of Harrison and Sabina (Falkenstein) Chidester, her mother being a daughter of Samuel and Annie (Stuck) Falkenstein. Harrison Chidester was born near Bruceton Mills, in Preston County, May 6, 1826, spent all his career as a farmer, served with the West Virginia Militia during the Civil war, and in 1867 moved to Ohio and spent the rest of his days near Logan, where he died February 5, 1897. His wife was born March 23, 1828, and died May 15, 1906. Mrs. Deborah Feather was the oldest of their children, and the others were: Nancy, who married John Feather and died in Hocking County; James, a resident of Wichita, Kansas; Elma, widow of Alfred Nimon, of Delaware, Ohio; Cyrus W., of Delaware; Isabel, wife of Jeremiah Ringer, of Terra Alta; and Emma, wife of Wilber Coy, of Payne, Ohio. The only child born to Mr. and Mrs. Feather was Amy Louella, who died when almost eleven years of age.

ALEXANDER GROVES. Long and varied experience with the mercantile business has contributed to the equipment of Alexander Groves and has fitted him particularly for the position which he holds as manager and part owner of the Standard & Company store at Gassaway. Like many who have made a success in business life, he entered upon his career as a teacher, but the greater part of his life has been passed behind the counter and in the office, in which locations the people of Gassaway have seen him for the past sixteen years.

Mr. Groves is a native of Nicholas County, West Virginia, and was born July 2, 1873, a son of Harrison and Sallie (Davis) Groves, the former a native of Nicholas County, West Virginia, and the latter of Virginia. Harrison Groves was reared in the county of his birth and was a son of John Groves, a pioneer of Nicholas County, who came to that part of West Virginia at a very early day and was engaged in farming. Harrison Groves was reared on a farm and received a country school education, the same as acquired by his wife, and after their marriage they started housekeeping on a farm in Nicholas County, which they cultivated as long as they remained active. In the evening of life they retired and lived quietly in their comfortable home. They were the parents of three children: Alexander, of this review; Harrison, of Summersville, West Virginia; and Alfred, also of Summersville, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Groves were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Groves was a democrat in his political affiliation. The father of Mrs. Groves, David N. Davis, was a Confederate soldier in a Virginia infantry regiment during the war between the states, and was present at the surrender of Gen. Robert E. Lee at Appomattox Court House.

Alexander Groves, or Alex Groves as he is better known to his many friends, was given his primary education in the country schools of Nicholas County, and this was supplemented by a course at the county normal school. When he left the latter he engaged in teaching, and for eight years had classes in the country districts, where he gained a reputation as an efficient and popular educator. His first experience in the dry goods business was acquired in Nicholas County, where he was engaged until 1906, in the latter year coming to Gassaway, where he became identified with the business of Standard & Company in the capacity of manager, and since that time has also become part owner. This business is now incorporated and has the following officials: Oscar I. Standard, president; C. W. King, vice president; and Alex Groves, secretary-treasurer and manager. Under his direction this has been built into a very successful enterprise and does a flourishing business over a wide expanse of territory. Mr. Groves has other interests, and is vice president and a director of the Bank of Gassaway. His reputation is that of a thoroughly capable and reliable business man.

In 1906 Mr. Groves was united in marriage with Miss Cora Criss, a native of Braxton County, and to this union there have been born two children: Forest H., born July 5, 1907, who is attending high school; and Alex, Jr., born December 23, 1920. Mrs. Groves is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Groves is a democrat in his political affiliation, but has not cared for public office, although never neglecting the responsibilities of good citizenship. As a fraternalist he is affiliated with Gassaway Lodge No. 133, A. F. and A. M.; Sutton Chapter, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery, K. T.; and Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Charleston.

JOHN NEWLON. It is not given to all individuals to succeed along more than one line of work. Some achieve success in the learned professions, others find their life work in military or civic affairs, still others find themselves best suited to the directing of big business enterprises. In the business field alone there are comparatively few men who make an equal success out of more than one line of endeavor, but unusual as it is this has been the experience of John Newlon, of Sutton, who in addition to being general manager, secretary and treasurer of the Sutton Grocery and Milling Company, Incorporated, is an extensive trader in land in Braxton and Webster counties. His success in both lines has been all his own, for he has climbed every step up the ladder of advancement through hard work and intelligent application of his business gifts.

Mr. Newlon was born on a farm near Sutton, in Braxton County, January 13, 1877, and is a son of Camden and Dora (Sumpter) Newlon. Camden Newlon was born near Sutton, in July, 1850, and after receiving a common school education became an attendant at the State Hospital at Weston, West Virginia, where he met, and later married, another attendant, Dora Sumpter, who was born in July, 1852, in Gilmer County, West Virginia. After their marriage they settled on a farm near Flatwoods, where they spent the rest of their lives, Mr. Newlon dying in July, 1903, and Mrs. Newlon two years later. He was a democrat in politics, and she a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. They were the parents of eleven children: William, a bridge carpenter employed by the Baltimore & Ohio Railway; John, of this notice; Lulu, the wife of John Skidmore; Bertie, the wife of C. B. Eakle; Charles N. and A. C., residents of Ashtabula, Ohio; Mabel, the wife of Ward Huffman; Anna, the wife of Fred Lorentz; and G. R., Draper and Henry, all of Point Pleasant, West Virginia.

The education of John Newlon was not of an extensive character, for at the age of thirteen years he left the country schoolrooms to commence to make his own way in the world. At that time he went to Weston, where he secured employment in the drug store of which his uncle was proprietor, and following this was variously employed, accepting such honorable work as fell to his lot until he was twenty-one years of age. He was then made deputy county clerk, a capacity in which he served for four years, then joining the Sutton Bank as assistant cashier and later being promoted to cashier. In 1910 he joined the wholesale grocery and milling concern operating as the Sutton Grocery and Milling Company, of which he is at present general manager, secretary and treasurer. His fellow officials in this enterprise are: W. F. Morrison, president; P. B. Adams, vice president; and the above gentlemen, with C. C. Hines, G. P. Gillispie and Will Fisher, directors. This is a large and successful concern, with a trade extending over a radius of many miles, and much of its success can be accredited to the efforts and ability of Mr. Newlon, who is known as an aggressive business man and who has the full confidence of his associates. As before noted, in addition to his connection with this company Mr. Newlon has been for some years a heavy trader in land, and at present holds about 1,100 acres in Webster and Braxton counties. Mr. Newlon is a democrat in his political tendencies, but save for a short time in his youth has never found time to engage actively in political affairs, his business interests taking all of his attention. He is at the present time a member of the State Committee. He belongs to Sutton Lodge No. 76, A. F. and A. M.; Sutton Chapter No. 21, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery No. 8, K. T., and to the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, and is a past master, a past high priest and a past eminent commander. With his family he belongs to the Presbyterian Church.

In 1903 Mr. Newlon was united in marriage with Miss Mamie Bryne, a high school graduate, and they have had five daughters: Elsie, who is deceased, Frances, a graduate of the Sutton High School, and Dora, Mary B. and Margaret.

PEARSON B. ADAMS. The present county clerk of Braxton County, Pearson B. Adams, has an excellent public record for efficient discharge of the duties of his position. During his career, which has been an active and honorable one, he has had experience in several lines of endeavor, and on various occasions has been identified with educational work, financial matters and business affairs. In all these avenues of activity he has so governed his actions as to gain him the esteem and confidence of those with whom he has come into contact.

Mr. Adams was born on a farm near Sutton, West Virginia, his present home, March 2, 1886, and is a son of John and Nancy (Cogar) Adams. His father, also born in the same locality, was reared to agricultural pursuits, to which he applied his energies throughout life and made a success of his efforts. Educated only in the public schools, he was withal a well read man and wielded some influence in his community, where he was active in politics and was twice elected sheriff of the county on the republican ticket. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Masons, in which order he completed the York Rite and was a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. Mrs. Adams, who was also born near Sutton, was, like her husband, a product of an agricultural family and a graduate of the common schools.

Pearson B. Adams attended the common schools of his native locality, where he acquired his primary education, following which he pursued a course at Marshall College, Huntington, West Virginia, and the Mountain State Business College, Parkersburg, West Virginia. Following his graduation from the latter institution he taught school for four years in Braxton County, and then started to work as assistant cashier of the Home National Bank, with which he was identified for about three years. He next became interested in the Sutton Grocery and Milling Company, of which he is now vice president and a member of the board of directors, and is likewise a stockholder in the Bank of Sutton. A staunch republican in his political sympathies, in 1915 he was elected clerk of Braxton County, a position which he has since filled with the utmost ability. As a fraternalist he is a York Rite Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine.

Mr. Adams married Miss Bessie Mealy, who was born in Braxton County, where she received her education in the public schools. She is a leading and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Sutton. To Mr. and Mrs. Adams there have come three children: Ruth, who was born in 1912; William N., who was born in 1918; and Nancy V., born in 1920.

B. A. HALL, superintendent and principal of the Flatwoods High School, is one of the scholarly men of dignified bearing whose mature efforts are being directed toward the betterment of the public school system of his section and the advancement of the pupils placed under his charge. An educator from choice, he is fortunate in having a natural as well as acquired faculty for imparting learning, and his pupils show the results of his watchful care and constructive training.

Mr. Hall was born on a farm in Braxton County, West Virginia, December 20, 1884, a son of E. J. and Mary M. (McElwain) Hall, the former of whom was born in Braxton County, March 17, 1859, and the latter in Webster County, West Virginia, in 1866. They were reared and educated in the rural districts, and after their marriage, which occurred in Webster County, they settled on a farm in Braxton County. At present he is a farmer, lumberman and contractor. He exercises his right of franchise by voting the republican ticket. The children born to him and his wife were as follows: B. A., whose name heads this review; Bailey L., who is a resident of Buffalo, New York; Ida R., who is the wife of W. B. Peterson, of Western West Virginia; Floda, who is the wife of John Adams; T. S., who is a resident of Grafton, West Virginia; Hettie, who is the wife of Paul Lockhart; Ada S., who is the wife of Harry Bowen, of Parkersburg, West Virginia; Van F., who is at home; Clyde H., who is a student of the West Virginia University; Velma, who is attending the high school at Weston, West Virginia; and Mona, who is attending the high school at Grafton, West Virginia.

B. A. Hall was reared at Holstead, and first attended the common schools and later the state normal school, of which he is a graduate. He has also taken up special studies at the West Virginia State University, and is always studying. For nearly ten years he has been in charge of the Flatwood schools, with the exception of the time he spent at Washington, D. C., during the late war, when he was connected with the work of the Young Men's Christian Association.

In 1916 Mr. Hall married Miss Ada L. Hall, a graduate of the Glenville State Normal School, and prior to her marriage a teacher for about eight years. Mr. and Mrs. Hall have two children, namely: Evelyn and John N. Mrs. Hall is a member of the Baptist Church. A republican, Mr. Hall has taken an active part in politics, and is a member of the Republican State Committee from the Tenth Senatorial District. Fraternally he maintains membership with Sutton Lodge No. 133, K. of P. Mr. Hall is a man who feels his responsibilities and endeavors to discharge them conscientiously, and that he succeeds in doing so the results prove. Abreast of the times in his profession, he seeks to give his pupils the results of his experience and learning, and his influence upon their minds and actions is proving to be a strong factor in shaping their lives and determining their usefulness to their community in the years to come.

HON. JAMES H. STEWART, State Commissioner of Agriculture, and for many years director of the Agricultural Experiment Station at Morgantown, exemplifies the most admirable qualification for his present duties. He is a man of high character, represents the substantial social attainments of a family of long residence in the state, and has the advantage of thorough training and long and successful practice in the fundamentals of agriculture and stock raising.

Mr. Stewart was born on the Stewart plantation on the Kanawha River in Putnam County June 20, 1859, son of James and Martha Jane (Staton) Stewart. The Stewarts are a prominent family of Scotch-Irish origin, for many generations identified with old Virginia and later with West Virginia. Martha Jane Staton was a daughter of James Staton, member of the Staton family who first settled on the Kanawha River in Putnam County, about 1812. The original Staton plantation subsequently came under the proprietorship of James Stewart, who developed it into one of the famous estates of the Kanawha Valley. It remains in the family, being the birthplace of and still owned by James H. Stewart. The home of James Stewart in ante-bellum days was widely noted for its atmosphere of culture and refinement and its genuine hospitality. Many distinguished guests were entertained there, and the intellectual and social standards thus created have continued to this day. Martha Jane Staton was a rarely gifted woman in all the arts of the household, skillful in the making of fine woven fabrics and other furnishings for her home, and some of the counterpanes, table covers and kindred articles that she made with her hands are still in the home, priceless heirlooms.

James H. Stewart attended country schools, the Shelton College at St. Albans, graduated with the class of 1882 from the University of West Virginia, and also studied law in the University, graduating in 1885. However, he never practiced law, finding abundant occupation for his time and talents on the home plantation in Putnam County. In 1893 he was made one of the regents of the State University, and in the following year the University authorities literally took him away from the plow and placed him in charge as director of the Agricultural Experiment Station. He therefore removed his family to Morgantown, and remained director of the station fourteen years. Following that, until 1916, he was agricultural agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway system.

Mr. Stewart was first elected State Commissioner of Agriculture in 1916 and was reelected in 1920. In both elections he was on the republican ticket, and in the primaries and in the general election he received the highest vote ever accorded in West Virginia.

Under Mr. Stewart the Department of Agriculture has become one of the most vitally important and valuable in the state government. It comprises a number of bureaus and sub-divisions, each under the direction of a specialist, and in the aggregate it is performing work of genuine and lasting benefit not only for every interest that can be grouped under the general head of agriculture but for the welfare of the state as a whole. Some of the effective lines of its service includes the spreading of knowledge among farmers and stock raisers as to the best means of increasing crop yields, getting rid of blights and insect pests, grading up cattle and livestock, and teaching efficiency and business methods in farm management. Under this department cattle are being tested out in West Virginia at a lower cost per animal corresponding with the efficiency of results that any other state in the Union except Iowa. The department has done a great work in eradicating tuberculosis, and another source of valuable service is the promotion and supervision of agricultural fairs.

Mr. Stewart is also a member of the Board of Public Works in West Virginia, and a member of the Budget Committee which makes up the appropriations for the state. During the war with Germany the work of his department was given over almost entirely to measures leading to the winning of the war. Mr. Stewart was a member of the State Council of Defense, and accepted as his special province all questions relating to increased food production and conservation of food supplies.

While his official residence is in Charleston, Mr. Stewart retains his home at Morgantown, and he also keeps in close touch with the management of his old home estate on the Kanawha. This comprises several hundred acres of fine agricultural and horticultural lands, and its several units combine to make it one of the model farms and orchards of West Virginia. An important feature of this estate is the famous James H. Stewart apple orchard, one of the largest and most successful orchards in West Virginia.

Mr. Stewart married Miss Minnie Louise Vance, and they have one son, James Vance Stewart.

JOHN L. RHEA, JR. The life of John L. Rhea has been passed at Flatwoods, where he was born, and for over twenty-one years he has been one of its most enterprising and successful merchants. His interests are all centered here, and he is proud of the place and his connection with it. His birth occurred January 7, 1875, and he is a son of Dr. John L. and Sallie B. (McLaughlin) Rhea. The latter was a daughter of Col. Addison McLaughlin, now deceased, who represented Braxton and Nicholas counties in the West Virginia State Assembly when the capital of the Confederacy was at Richmond. For many years he was a prominent attorney. Dr. John L. Rhea was reared at Westminster, Maryland, was educated in the Baltimore School of Medicine, and after his graduation he engaged in the practice of his profession at Flatwoods. He was also a member and local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His death occurred in 1883. Two of his five sons survive, namely: his namesake son and Stephen A.

John L. Rhea, Jr., attended the common schools of Flatwoods, and from his youth has been a good business man. In addition to his large store he owns a farm adjacent to Flatwoods and a large amount of stock in an oil and gas well. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he belongs to Sutton Lodge No. 21, A. F. and A. M.; Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery No. 16, K. T., and has been advanced in the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, West Virginia, and he also belongs to Osiris Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Wheeling. For a number of years he has been one of the leaders of the local democratic party, was elected several times on his party ticket as mayor of Flatwoods, in 1913 represented Braxton County in the State Assembly, and while in the Legislature participated in the securing of some very constructive legislation.

In 1902 Mr. Rhea married Rebecca E. Floyd, who was born in Doddridge County, West Virginia, but was brought to Flatwoods in her girlhood, and here attended the common schools. Mr. and Mrs. Rhea have three children, namely: Sallie A., who is the wife of H. C. Hiveley; and Clara E. and Howard W., both of whom are in school.

RALPH T. ARMSTRONG, D. D. S. Dependable, highly trained and enthusiastic with reference to his profession, Dr. Ralph T. Armstrong is one of the leading dental surgeons of Braxton County, and is enjoying a large practice from the people of Gassaway and its vicinity. He was born at Sutton, West Virginia, July 25, 1886, a son of Cornelius and Elizabeth J. (Traxell) Armstrong, both natives of Braxton County. He died in May, 1911, but she survives and is still residing at Sutton, maintaining her membership with the Baptist Church of that city, to which her husband also belonged. In politics he was a democrat. They had four sons and two daughters, namely: W. L., who is an attorney practicing at the bar of Sutton; G. B., who is a graduated attorney, is now engaged in merchandising; Mary L., who is a business college graduate, is living at home; Jessie M., who is also a business college graduate, is the wife of P. H. Murphy, an attorney of Charleston; Doctor Armstrong, whose name heads this review; and A. P., who is a physician of Sutton and Morgantown.

Doctor Armstrong attended the West Virginia State University, and is a graduate of the Cincinnati Ohio, College of Dental Surgery. For some four years he traveled about, working at his profession, but in 1915 settled permanently at Gassaway, where he has built up very desirable connections and won proper appreciation from his patients.

In 1912 Doctor Armstrong married Ida E. Cool, of Webster County, West Virginia, and they have two daughters, Lucile and Louise. Mrs. Armstrong is a member of the Baptist Church, and active in church work. Doctor Armstrong belongs to the Loyal Order of Moose. While he has never cared to enter politics, he has always given a conscientious attention to civic matters, and voted the democratic ticket. He is a man of broad outlook on life, and not only is a skilled dental surgeon, but a highly educated gentleman and public-spirited citizen and one who is anxious to give his community the benefit of his knowledge and experience. Both he and his wife are popular, and are the center of a congenial social circle.

CLINTON W. FLESHER. In the profession of law in Braxton County a name that has become well known and that is invariably identified with legal ability and personal probity is that of Clinton W. Flesher, a successful practitioner of Gassaway. During his career Mr. Flesher has been a teacher and has had experience in the field of insurance writing, and while his prosperity has been gained in his present calling, a part of that prosperity is probably due to the experience gained through his connection with the other vocations mentioned.

Mr. Flesher was born in Pleasants County, West Virginia, September 10, 1870, and is a son of Crayton and Harriet R. (Taylor) Flesher. His father was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, in 1841, a son of Isaac Flesher, the latter also born in Lewis County, in 1810. Adam Flesher, the father of Isaac, was born in Lewis County, in 1754, at Weston (then called Flesherstown in honor of the family), he being the son of Henry Flesher, who was born in England and immigrated to America when a boy, settling at Weston. Henry Flesher settled as a pioneer in Lewis County, where he built a fort on the site of Weston as a protection against the savages in 1730, but in spite of this precaution he and his family were surprised and all slaughtered later by the hostiles with the exception of the mother and one son, Adam, who managed to make their escape to the distant fort at the point now known as Janelow.

Crayton Flesher grew to maturity in his home community, where he received his education in the public schools, and as a youth learned the trade of carpenter, which he was following at Parkersburg as an apprentice at the time of the outbreak of the war between the North and the South. He enlisted in the Union army and served bravely with an infantry regiment of volunteers until the close of the war, at which time he returned to Pleasants County and resumed his trade, which he followed with success until his death,

October 1, 1879, when his son was only nine years of age. His widow still survives him at an advanced age, being a resident of Williamstown, West Virginia. They became the parents of six sons, as follows: Clinton W., of this notice; Harry E., a graduate of the State Normal School at Fairmont, and now superintendent of the Industrial School for Boys at Pruntytown; T. Earl, who is engaged in agricultural operations in the vicinity of Fleming, Ohio; Forest F., who is engaged in the contracting business in Oklahoma; Okey J., who is following the machinist's trade at Jackson, Michigan; and Crayton, Jr., who is deceased.

Clinton W. Flesher was reared on a farm in Pleasants County, West Virginia, and received his early education in the graded schools. Later he pursued a course at the normal school at Fairmont, West Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1894, and for ten years thereafter taught school, his last work as an educator being in the office of superintendent of the city schools of Elkins, this state. During this time Mr. Flesher studied law, and, having been admitted to the bar, applied himself to the practice of his calling and the writing of insurance at Knoxville, Tennessee. In 1905 he came to Gassaway, where he has since been engaged in the practice of his vocation, with a constantly increasing practice. In September, 1916, Mr. Flesher was appointed referee in bankruptcy by Judge Benjamin F. Keller, and has served in that capacity to the present time. In the ranks of his profession he is held in high esteem, and his official record has always been an excellent one.

On September 1, 1896, Mr. Flesher was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. Powell, who was educated in the public schools of Elkins, West Virginia, where prior to her marriage she was engaged in teaching. To this union there have come two children. Lucille, born July 1, 1899, is a graduate of the high school at Buckhannon, and at present is a senior at Goucher College at Baltimore, Maryland. Clinton Wellrose, Jr., born December 16, 1905, is a freshman at the West Virginia University. Mr. and Mrs. Flesher are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Flesher was president of the Conference Laymen's Association from 1907 to 1919. He was a delegate to the general conference in 1912, 1916 and 1920. He has also served as a member of the Board of Sunday Schools and is a member of the executive committee of the International Sunday School Association. Mr. Flesher is a member of Bright Hope Lodge No. 557, F. and A. M., at Knoxville, of which he is a past master, is a thirty-second degree Mason, and belongs to Osiris Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Wheeling, West Virginia, in all of which he has numerous friends. His business interests are numerous and important, and he is nearly as well known as a capable business man as he is as a skilled and industrious attorney. He is a stockholder in the Gassaway Development Company and the Gassaway Pharmacy, and is owner of the Flesher Building, in which the postoffice is situated. He is counsel for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, the Gassaway Development Company, Standard & Company and the J. C. Penoyer Company, and represents R. G. Dun and other agencies. He and Mrs. Flesher belong to the Order of the Eastern Star, and Mr. Flesher is also a member of the Knights of Pythias.

LAWRENCE ARTHUR JARRETT, M. D. The medical fraternity of Braxton County contains in its membership men who by reason of their knowledge and attainments form a representative body of careful, learned and skillful physicians and surgeons, and among them one who has won deserved standing and patronage is Dr. Lawrence Arthur Jarrett. Engaged in practice at Gassaway since 1913, he has won his way into the confidence of a large practice and at the same time has merited the appreciation of his fellow-practitioners.

Doctor Jarrett was born at Jarrett's Ford (now Elk View), Kanawha County, West Virginia, February 1, 1880, and is a son of John T. and Cynthia E. (Copenhaver) Jarrett. His father was born in the same county and state, October 12, 1848, while Mrs. Jarrett was born in November, 1853, at Copenhaver Mills, Kanawha County, and both are now residents of Charleston, West Virginia. John T.

Jarrett was educated in the public schools, while his wife had a similar education, and following their marriage they settled down to farming in Kanawha County, where they resided until about 1898. At that time they disposed of their agricultural holdings and moved to Charleston, where Mr. Jarrett engaged in the lumber business. In this, as in his farming ventures, he proved successful, and at present he and his wife are living in comfortable retirement. Mrs. Jarrett is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the work of which she is active. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Improved Order of Red Men, and as a democrat wields some influence in his community, where he formerly served one term in the capacity of deputy sheriff. He and his worthy wife became the parents of five children: Elvin L., a graduate of the Charleston High School, who is now an engineer in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company; Dr. Lawrence Arthur, of this review; Erna M., the wife of John M. Nichols; Forrest L., a graduate of the common schools, who is a conductor in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company; and Clara M., the wife of C. O. Reveal.

Lawrence Arthur Jarrett was reared on his father's farm and attended the country schools as well as the Charleston High School. Later he pursued a course at the Capital City Commercial College, which prepared him for a business career, and for three years he was employed as a bookkeeper. From youth, however, he had possessed a predilection for the medical profession, and finally, finding that a business life was not congenial, he entered the Kentucky University at Lexington, subsequently pursuing a course in the medical department of the University of Louisville. Thus prepared, he entered upon the practice of his profession at Swiss, where he remained for three years, and in 1913 came to Gassaway, where he opened an office and where he has remained ever since, in the enjoyment of a constantly increasing practice. Doctor Jarrett has built up a reputation as a skilled and sympathetic physician, a close and careful student and a talented and steady-handed surgeon, one who gains and holds the confidence of his patients and the esteem and respect of his fellow-practitioners. He is a member of the Kanawha Medical Society, the West Virginia Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He has been successful in a material way, and is a director in the Farmers and Mechanics Bank of Gassaway and a number of other business enterprises. In politics he votes the democratic ticket. Fraternally he is affiliated with Clay County Lodge No. 97, A. F. and A. M.; Tyan Chapter No. 13, R. A. M.; Kanawha Commandery No. 4, K. T.; and Beni-Kedem Shrine at Charleston.

In 1907 Doctor Jarrett was united in marriage with Miss Mary Elizabeth Tallman, an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They are the parents of two children: John T., born March 13, 1910; and Virginia E., born June 3, 1912.

CARROLL LEWIS VICKERS. There is a class of men who, in their own communities, are naturally accorded leadership in public and private enterprises. This sovereignty is conferred by popular recognition of superlative ability. Varied talents adapt these few men to captain enterprises of a varied nature. In this class is found Carroll Lewis Vickers, a civil and mining engineer of Huntington, who has won a high place in his profession and has contributed to the success of various enterprises. Mr. Vickers was born at Madison, Boone County, West Virginia, December 3, 1882, and is a son of Lewis F. and Alice T. (Powell) Vickers.

John Vickers, the grandfather of Carroll Lewis Vickers, was born in Virginia, and died in Boone County, Virginia (now West Virginia), in 1845. He came to the Kanawha Valley when he was still a young man, and later became a pioneer into Boone County, where he engaged in agricultural operations and became an extensive and prosperous agriculturist. He married a Miss Cunningham, who was born in Virginia and died in what is now Boone County, this state.

Lewis F. Vickers was born September 10, 1837, in Boone County, where he was reared, educated and married. As a young man he became one of the pioneer school teachers of the rural districts, and later was elected and served two terms in the capacity of county superintendent of schools. Continuing in this calling, he became one of the distinguished educators of the state, and when he retired, in 1901, went to his pleasant home at Madison, West Virginia, where he now lives. Mr. Vickers is a staunch democrat, and during the early days served as deputy sheriff and deputy County Court clerk of Boone County. He is a veteran of the war between the states, in which he fought as a soldier of the Confederacy, serving through the entire struggle as member of the Thirty-sixth Regiment, Virginia Volunteer Infantry. He participated in the battle of Winchester, was at Fort Donelson, and took part in many lesser engagements and skirmishes. In the battle of Cloyd's Mountain, Virginia, he was wounded severely, being shot through the face and right arm. His commanding officers were General McCausland, of West Virginia, and Gens. John C. Breckinridge and John B. Floyd. Mr. Vickers married Miss Alice T. Powell, who was born in 1854, at Madison, Virginia (now West Virginia), and died at Madison in 1905. They became the parents of the following children: A son who died in infancy; John, who met death in an accident when only five years of age; and Carroll Lewis.

Carroll Lewis Vickers attended the public schools at Madison, West Virginia, but the greater part of his instruction was given him by his father, under whom he received a splendid preparatory education. He left public school at the age of twenty years and pursued a business course at the Massey Business College, Richmond, Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1902. It was at that time that he took up engineering, subscribing to a course in civil engineering with the International Correspondence school of Scranton, Pennsylvania. He graduated in 1906, but in the meanwhile had started getting the practical experience as a rodman with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad in 1904, and continued with them until 1907. From 1907 to 1909 he was employed by the Jefferson Coal Company of Cleveland, Ohio, as an engineer, and was next with the United States Coal and Oil Company of Holden, West Virginia, from 1909 to 1911, in the capacity of assistant engineer. His next position was that of chief engineer for the Yawkey & Freeman Coal Company and the Big Creek Development Company with headquarters at New York City, the metropolis being the scene of his activities until 1916, when he formed a partnership with G. K. Allman at Huntington, the firm styl being Allman & Vickers, civil and mining engineers. This association was dissolved by Mr. Allman's death in May, 1921, at which time Mr. Vickers took over Mr. Allman's interests. He has continued to carry on the business on his own account, and has built up one of the largest and most substantial enterprises of its kind in the State of West Virginia. His offices are situated at 1005-6-7 Robson Pritchard Building, Huntington. Mr. Vickers is secretary of the Virginia. His offices are situated at 1005-6-7 Robson and treasurer of the Goodby branch of the By-Product Coal Company of Huntington, with mines at Chapmanville Logan County.

In his political faith Mr. Vickers is a democrat, and his religious connection is with the Johnson Memorial Church, Methodist Episcopal, South, of Huntington. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Smithfield Lodge No. 182, A. F. and A. M., Smithfield, Ohio; Huntington Lodge of Perfection No. 4; Knights of Rose Croix Chapter No. 4, Huntington; West Virginia Consistory No. 1, Wheeling, thirty second degree; Beni-Kedem Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. Charleston; the National Masonic Club, of Wheeling; Masonic Club, of Huntington; Huntington Chapter No. 1, O. E. S.; and Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E. He is the owner of a modern and attractive residence at 809 Lincoln Place, Huntington, and a 200-acre farm in Boone County, this state.

On September 25, 1903, at Madison, West Virginia, Mr. Vickers was united in marriage with Miss Hattie M. Hager, daughter of John B. and Mary (Cook) Hager, the latter of whom is now deceased. Mr. Hager is one of the prominent attorneys practicing at the Madison bar. Mrs. Vickers died in February, 1921, leaving three children: Clifford S., born

C. L. Vickers

July 21, 1905, a student at the Huntington High School; Paul C., born September 8, 1914, who is attending the graded school; and Ruth, born February 21, 1917.

JOHN W. SMITH, M. D., is one of the honored and dependable members of the medical fraternity of Braxton County, and for some years he has been engaged in a general practice at Gassaway, although calls are made upon his skill from a large outside territory. He was born in Roane County, West Virginia, December 29, 1872, a son of W. R. T. and Catherine Jarvis Smith, who are now residents of Spencer, Virginia. And W. R. T. Smith was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, June 10, 1846, while his wife was born in Calhoun County, West Virginia, June 14, 1855. He was reared on a farm, and his educational training was confined to the instruction he received in the common schools, but for a time he was a teacher in the country schools. After their marriage he and his wife settled on a farm in Roane County, and lived on it until in 1913 they moved to Spencer, their present home. She is an Adventist. He is a republican. They are the parents of four children, namely: Doctor Smith, who is the eldest; Dora, who is the wife of C. C. Fruell; Lisette, who is the wife of S. E. Steele; and Waitman T., who is a physician and surgeon of Glenville, West Virginia.

Doctor Smith attended the common schools, the West Virginia State Normal School at Huntington, and the Barnes Medical College of St. Louis, Missouri, leaving the latter after two years and completing his medical studies in the medical department of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tennessee, from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Subsequently he took two post-graduate courses in New York City. Following his graduation Doctor Smith located at Rosedale, Braxton County, and practiced there for seventeen years, leaving it in 1918 to come to Gassaway. For a number of years he has maintained membership with the Braxton County Medical Society. He is a Mason and belongs to Gassaway Lodge No. 133, A. F. and A. M., and he also belongs to the Chapter and Commandery of his order. In politics he is a republican. He is president of the Farmers and Mechanics Bank of Gassaway, and interested in a number of enterprises at Gassaway and Braxton County, including some very valuable farm land. A man of energy and possessing natural and carefully trained abilities, he is one of the most active forces for advancement in this part of the county, and his efforts are always put forth for constructive measures.

In 1900 Doctor Smith married Miss May Trout, of Roane County, West Virginia. She left him one child, Hallie, at her death in 1906. In 1909 Doctor Smith married Miss May Stalnaker, of Calhoun County, West Virginia, and to his union two children have been born, J. Wesley and Emma Lucile.

WILLIAM H. LEE. All honorable success is based upon a definite aim in life and persistency of purpose in a given course. It is the man who does the work nearest at hand and whose industry leaves him no idle, wasteful moments who deserves the honor and respect of his fellow men. That men do not find the niche for which they consider themselves fitted is largely due to their inability to fit themselves for those places which they could occupy with profit and honor. Tracing the lives of prominent men in the business world, it is easy to see that progressive characters have never lacked opportunities, and that opportunities have often signified so much as the man. In the case of William H. Lee, a prominent and prosperous hardware dealer of Sutton, he has created his own opportunities and has worked his way along a definite channel to prosperity and position.

Mr. Lee was born in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, October 21, 1860, a son of Hugh and Phoebe G. (Averill) Lee. His father was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1816, and was reared in his native state, where he acquired a public school education. When still a youth he began to clerk in a general store at Cross Creek, Pennsylvania, then entering the wool and oil business at Pittsburgh, and finally embarking in the coal business, with which he continued to be identified until his death in 1885.

He was a successful business man of large affairs, and a man who merited and possessed the full confidence of those associated with him in any venture or enterprise. He was a republican in his political sentiment and a man of influence in his party in Pennsylvania, and during the Civil war period served with the rank of colonel on the staff of Governor Curtin. He was a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he served as an elder, and lived his faith. At Paris, Pennsylvania, in February, 1840, he was united in marriage with Miss Phoebe G. Averill, who was born in Jefferson County, Ohio, August 22, 1823, and they were the parents of one son, William H.

William H. Lee was still a child when taken by his parents to Carnegie, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, where he received his early education in the graded and high schools, this being subsequently supplemented by attendance at the Western University of Pennsylvania. As a young man he secured employment with the Keystone Coal Company as the traveling representative in Pennsylvania, with which he remained until June, 1880. In 1892 he came to Sutton, West Virginia, and embarked in business on his own account by purchasing the old Sutton Hardware Company. With the expansion of business under his capable management Mr. Lee realized the need for more extensive quarters to handle his trade, and he consequently bought a piece of property and built his present modern and commodious plant, in which he handles all kinds of hardware, wholesale and retail. He has made a great success of his venture and is rightly accounted one of the leading business citizens of Sutton, where he has built up an excellent reputation for sound ability and the highest integrity. Mr. Lee is also a director in the Sutton Electric and Water Works at Sutton, the officers of which are Patrick J. Berry, president and general manager; and Alf Watker, secretary and treasurer. This is likewise a going concern and one that has an important part in the business life of the city.

On January 13, 1887, Mr. Lee was united in marriage with Miss Martha J. Davis, who was born at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and educated in the public schools of that city. To this union there have been born three daughters: Genevieve, a graduate of Mary Baldwin Seminary at Staunton, Virginia, is the wife of A. C. Herolt; Florence M., who attended the Belmont Female School at Nashville, Tennessee, is now the wife of H. P. Hersperger; and Margaret G., who attended the Mary Baldwin Seminary, is now the wife of Mayor James A. Gartin, of Burkesville, Kentucky. The family belongs to the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Lee is a republican in his political allegiance, and as a fraternalist is affiliated with Sutton Lodge No. 21, A. F. and A. M.

A. P. ARMSTRONG. Without force of character no man can achieve to any eminence no matter what path he chooses in life. His aims may be high, his principles excellent and his ideas brilliant, but unless he possesses vim, energy and strength to make practical his plans his efforts will be vain. The county seat of Sutton has given Braxton County some of its most forcible men, and from them have been chosen the individuals who have acted capably in official capacities. Among these may be mentioned A. P. Armstrong, justice of the peace at Sutton and a member of an old and honored West Virginia family. Mr. Armstrong, who is still a young man for so responsible a position, has possessed the force of character necessary to bring him advancement, and his career promises to be a highly successful one.

A. P. Armstrong is a native son of Braxton County, having been born at Sutton, February 23, 1889, a son of C. and Elizabeth J. (Troxell) Armstrong. His father, a native of Glendon, West Virginia, was married there and as a young man was engaged in farming. Later, on coming to Sutton, he applied himself to the trade of blacksmith, a vocation which he had learned in his youth. He also served for some years as jail keeper and in other capacities, and was accounted a capable and reliable official. In politics he was a democrat. He died in 1910, in the faith of the Baptist Church, of which Mrs. Armstrong, who survives him as a resident of Sutton, is also a member. They were the parents of six children: W. L., a graduate of the law department of the University of West Virginia and now engaged in the practice of his profession at Sutton; Gideon, also a graduate of the State University, who is following a business career at Sutton; Mary, a graduate of the graded and high schools, who makes her home with her mother; Jessie, also a graduate of the graded and high schools and the wife of Patrick Murphy, an attorney of Charleston; Dr. R. T., who is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Gassaway, West Virginia; and A. P., of this review.

A. P. Armstrong is indebted to the public schools of Morgantown for his primary education, which was later supplemented by three years of study in the State University. With this preparation he returned to his native place of Sutton and embarked on his business career in the capacity of a public stenographer, a business in which he gained a wide acquaintance, made numerous friends and achieved some success. Urged by his friends, in the fall of 1920 he allowed his name to be used as a candidate for the office of justice of the peace, and in the November elections of that year was chosen for the office. Mr. Armstrong has discharged the duties of his position in an entirely capable manner, exercising the powers of his office with dignity, impartiality and expedition. So thoroughly has he gained the confidence of his fellow-citizens that he is often called upon to decide disputes outside of court as an arbitrator, in which capacity his quiet, unswerving strength has brought peace to disturbed conditions.

Mr. Armstrong was united in marriage at Sutton with Miss Laura Bryson, of this city, a graduate of the public schools, and to this union there has come one child, Bettie Lee, born December 1, 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong are faithful members of the Baptist Church and generous contributors to various worthy causes of an educational, religious or charitable nature. In his political allegiance Mr. Armstrong is a democrat, but has never allowed his political leanings to affect his decisions. As a fraternalist he holds membership in the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias and is a York Rite Mason and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine.

OLIVER SHURTLEFF. The work of the educator is very exacting in the demands which it makes upon its devotees. Ostensibly the duty of the instructor is to instill a practical, working knowledge into each of his pupils, but equally important in his correlative, though less direct, function of instilling character and worthy precepts through his unavoidable, personal influence. The first duty calls for an individual knowledge and of specialized training; the second for a capable and conscientious person whose life and mode of living provide a fit criterion for the younger generation. When an individual combines the possession of these attributes with the exclusion of strongly detrimental characteristics the early, formative years of future citizens may be safely entrusted to his care. Such a man is Oliver Shurtleff, superintendent of schools at Sutton, West Virginia.

Oliver Shurtleff was born at Humboldt, Nebraska, and is a son of Roberta A. (Grady) Shurtleff and Edgar W. Shurtleff, the former born in Ohio and the latter in West Virginia. They were both educated in the public schools of their respective places of birth, and after marriage settled in Nebraska, whence they later removed to West Virginia. Edgar W. Shurtleff was for a number of years a hotel keeper, and also followed the vocation of market gardening and was a man who was held in high respect and esteem. He and his worthy wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the parents of five children.

Oliver Shurtleff was reared at Fairmont, West Virginia, where he received his education in the graded and high schools. After his graduation from the latter he enrolled as a student of the State Normal School at Fairmont, where he took one academic course and one professional course in teaching. Later he was a student at the University of West Virginia, where he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and then began his career as a teacher in West Virginia. After completing the above work in West Virginia University he became a student in the Chicago University, where he is now working on his Master's degree. For ten years he taught in the district schools, and for the next four years was district superintendent of rural schools in Marion and Monongalia counties. He then became a teacher in the high schools of Marion County, and was thus engaged when elected superintendent of the public schools of Sutton, Braxton County, in 1919. Mr. Shurtleff has succeeded in elevating the standards of education in the Sutton schools, and is recognized as a progressive leader in the educational field. He has had very agreeable success in his chosen line of work. From the start he was exceptionally fitted for the duties and responsibilities involved, and has invariably given his best efforts toward the betterment and growth of the institutions in his charge. He has taken a personal interest where some others might have felt only a business obligation, and has instilled into the hearts and minds of his pupils a tenderness and respect. The Sutton schools include a normal department, which is in charge of Mrs. Shurtleff, who prior to her marriage to Mr. Shurtleff was Miss Mary McCulloch. She was born in Pennsylvania and had the same training as her husband, with the exception that her normal work was done at Shippensburg, Pennsylvania. They belong to the Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Shurtleff is an official member. As a fraternalist he is affiliated with the local lodges of the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

Mr. Shurtleff belongs to a family that came to the American continent in 1637, locating in the Plymouth Colony. Members of the family have participated in all the different wars of the country, including the World war, in which Mr. Shurtleff enlisted as an athletic director and public entertainer. He spent one year in the army, and then resumed his profession of teaching.

WALTER LEE TAYLOR, one of the West Virginia leaders in the promulgation and development of corporation law, is one of the members of the profession who has always been identified with large affairs. His connection as counsel and official with a number of the largest companies of the state has brought to the realization of the public his masterly knowledge of the law, his deep penetration into its foundation principles, the broad and high qualities of his mind, and his ability to apply his knowledge to circumstances and affairs. A large part of Mr. Taylor's legal career of thirty-two years has been passed in McDowell County, but at present his offices are maintained at Huntington.

Mr. Taylor was born in Giles County, Virginia, November 15, 1866, a son of Thomas Samuel and Nichatie Cherokee Tennessee Floyd (French) Taylor. The Taylor family was founded in America during Colonial days, when the first Taylor, emigrating from Scotland, located in Virginia. In Henry County of that state was born the grandfather of Walter Lee Taylor, Robert Taylor, who was a planter in Henry, Pulaski and Giles counties, Virginia, and died in the latter county prior to the birth of his grandson. He married Martha Minter, who was also born in Henry County and died in Giles County. The French family originated in England, whence the first American ancestor immigrated to Virginia prior to the Revolutionary war, in which struggle the great-great-grandfather of Mr. Taylor, John Clay French, held the rank of colonel in the forces of General Greene.

Thomas Samuel Taylor, father of Walter Lee Taylor, was born in Henry County, Virginia, November 21, 1838, and was nine years of age when taken by his parents to Pulaski County, that state, subsequently removing to Giles County where he was married. At the outbreak of the war between the states he gave up his position as a teacher in the rural schools and enlisted in a Virginia infantry regiment in the Confederate service, which was attached to Pickett's Division, Longstreet's Corps, with which he was connected throughout the war. Mr. Taylor participated in the memorable Pickett's charge at Gettysburg, through which he came safely, but three days before the surrender of General Lee, at Appomattox, he was captured at Sailor's Creek, near Petersburg, Virginia, and was a prisoner at Washington, D. C., on the night President Lincoln was assassinated. He was then sent to Johnson's Island and held there until July, 1865, when he was released. Mr.

Walter L. Taylor.

Taylor then returned to Giles County, where he resumed his school teaching and continued as an educator until 1876, when he became sheriff and deputy treasurer of Giles County. He served as sheriff for twelve years, during eight years of which he also acted in the deputy treasurer's capacity, and in 1900 was made deputy sheriff, a position in which he served eight years. He finally retired to his farm at Thessalia, and his death occurred at Lynchburg, January 22, 1914. Mr. Taylor was a democrat. He was a very active supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he was a Sunday school superintendent for thirty years. In Masonry he attained the thirty-second degree, was district deputy lecturer for the State of Virginia, and was considered one of the brightest and best informed Masons in the state, being called upon frequently to deliver the Masonic addresses at the laying of the cornerstones and other functions. Mr. Taylor married Miss Nichatie Cherokee Tennessee Floyd French, who was born April 16, 1845, in Giles County, Virginia, and died in that county in February, 1901. She was named by Governor John B. Floyd of Virginia for his sister. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor became the parents of the following children: Walter Lee, of this review; Albert Tyler Hicks, local attorney for the Norfolk & Western Railway Company and for several other large corporations and a well-known attorney of Giles County, where he died in 1897, at the age of twenty-eight years; Bertie A., who died at the age of twenty years; Mary A., the wife of Senator James A. Strother, a prominent attorney of Welch, West Virginia, and present representative to the State Legislature from McDowell County, this state; India F., the wife of Dr. Charles F. Shumate, of Lynchburg, Virginia, one of the leading osteopathic physicians of Virginia; Mattie N., who died at the age of two years; Marvin S., an attorney of Welch, West Virginia, and member of the firm of Taylor & Taylor, his partner being his wife, formerly Miss Rosa Quisenberry; Bayard H., engaged in the insurance business at Welch, who during the World war was sent by the governor of Virginia as the representative of that state of the Young Men's Christian Association to France, where he spent eight months at the front and was on the firing line when the armistice was signed; and Vera, who died at Lynchburg, Virginia, in 1918, as the wife of Dr. Charles F. Dickens, a dental practitioner of that city.

In 1905 Mr. Taylor married at Thacker, West Virginia, Laura J. Stafford, who was a sister of his first wife and lived happily with her until his death, and his widow departed this life at Huntington, West Virginia, in 1921. Walter Lee Taylor attended the rural schools of Giles County, Virginia, and at the early age of fifteen years began teaching school. During the following eight years he continued to work as an educator, having various schools in Giles, Bland and Tazewell counties, Virginia, and Sullivan County, Tennessee, and in the meantime applied himself to the study of law, being finally admitted to the bar in 1890. He immediately began practice in McDowell County, where he made rapid advancement in his calling, and where he still has a large and lucrative clientele. Mr. Taylor has risen to be known as one of the leading corporation lawyers of his state. He is attorney for the R. E. Wood Lumber Company and Montvale Lumber Company, both of Baltimore, Maryland; the Atlantic Fuel and Steamship Company of Huntington, and several large coal companies in McDowell County. In June, 1921, he established an office at 409 Robson-Pritchard Building, Huntington. He belongs to the various organizations of his profession and occupies a place high in the esteem and regard of his fellow practitioners.

In politics Mr. Taylor is a staunch democrat and was prominent in the ranks of his party during his residence in McDowell County, although his only public office was that of councilman of Welch, in which he served one year. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his fraternal affiliation is with McDowell Lodge No. 112, A. F. and A. M., of Welch, West Virginia. His business connections are numerous and important, he being president of the Torchlight Coal Company of Torchlight, Kentucky; vice president of the Pan Coal Company of Welch, West Virginia; president of the Southeastern Grain and Livestock Company of Jones County, North Carolina, owners of an 18,000-acre plantation; secretary of the Marvaer Mining Company, owning mines in Cherokee County, North Carolina; secretary of the New Garden Coal Land Company of Lockhaven, Pennsylvania; and a director in the R. E. Wood Lumber Company and the Montvale Lumber Company, both of Baltimore, Maryland. He owns the old Knabe homestead at Catonsville, Maryland, formerly the home of the well-known piano manufacturer of that name, and is interested also in farming land in Giles County, Virginia.

On September 9, 1891, Mr. Taylor was united in marriage in Giles County, Virginia, with Miss Ada Cecil, daughter of Daniel R. and Sophia (Anderson) Cecil, both of whom are deceased. Mr. Cecil was a substantial agriculturist of Giles County, and Mrs. Taylor is a graduate of the Wesleyan Female Institute of Staunton, Virginia. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Taylor. Nichatie Cecil, the elder, married Hon. Ryland G. Craft, of Gates City, Virginia, one of the five republican members of the Virginia Legislature of the session of 1922. He is a well-known attorney and agent for the Ford automobile in Scott county, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Craft have one daughter, Ann Taylor, born November 24, 1921. Walter Lee Taylor, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, is a graduate of the Baltimore City College of Johns Hopkins University, degree of Bachelor of Arts, and was honor man in his senior class year. During the recent war, at the age of nineteen years, he volunteered for service, was accepted in the United States Navy, and attained the rank of ensign. During a part of his two years of service he was on the U. S. S. Saranac. He is now a student in the law department of the University of Baltimore, Maryland, but resides at Catonsville, Maryland, and is acting as private secretary to R. E. Wood, president of the R. E. Wood Lumber Company.

CHARLES KENNA SWITZER. A special aptitude for mechanics manifested in boyhood has been turned to the account of useful service in the world by Mr. Switzer through his veteran relations with the grain milling industry. He has operated mills in several sections of his native state, and for many years has been one of the most active of the group of citizens in the Philippi locality in the promotion of local manufacturing and industry.

Mr. Switzer, who is manager of the Switzer Mill Company of Philippi, was born at Petersburg, Hardy County, April 8, 1853, son of David Nicholas and Frances Switzer. A more complete history of the Switzer family is given in another article in this work under the name P. A. Switzer. Charles K. Switzer spent his boyhood at Upper Tract in Pendleton County, where he remained until he was about eighteen years of age. He acquired his education in a country district, and when he left home he went to Fort Seybert and for five years operated the Jacob Cowger mill. Then moving to Kline Cross Roads in the same county, he took charge of and for some five or six years had the responsibility of managing the J. H. Harmon mill. Thus with a total of more than ten years in the milling industry he came to Philippi and was for several years located at the suburban town of Mansfield where he was a member of the mercantile and milling firm of Dyer and Switzer, his partner being Mr. E. R. Dyer.

In 1902 Mr. Switzer resumed his active business as a miller at Philippi, taking over the Haller Mill Company property and becoming its manager. It was conducted as the Philippi Mill Company until October 21, 1915, when the business was reorganized as the Switzer Mill Company, with C. C. Boyles as a partner. This mill is an important local industry and furnishes a market for the grain products raised in the county.

Mr. Switzer has carried a liberal share of community work since coming to Philippi. His chief enthusiasm, thought and study in a public way are devoted to education. For several years he was a regular contributor to the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, the Methodist School there. He was also one of the citizens of Philippi who joined their effort and money in securing the location of Broadus College here. In 1916 Mr. Switzer became a member of the Philippi Board of Education, and is still in service. This board has set a fine example of progressiveness in the matter of securing thoroughly up-to-date schools for Philippi. In 1922 was completed a splendid new high school building at a cost of about $120,000. This is one of the best school houses in Barbour County. It is the culmination of a long and active campaign carried on by the advocates of improved school facilities, and it was only after three efforts had been made that the people of the district secured an overwhelming majority for the bond issue required to put up the building.

Mr. Switzer is a democrat, having cast his first vote for Samuel J. Tilden, and only once has failed to vote for the democratic presidential candidate. He was reared a Methodist, is a member of the Official Board of the church of Philippi and a trustee. Fraternally he is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge and the Maccabees.

At Fort Seybert, Pendleton County, May 29, 1879, Mr. Switzer married Miss Minnie M. Dyer. She is a daughter of Mr. Allen Dyer and a sister of his former business associate at Philippi, and the history of the Dyer family is given elsewhere. Mrs. Switzer was born December 25, 1853. She and Mr. Switzer have three daughters: Ola, wife of W. G. Riley, of Gary, Indiana, and the mother of a daughter, named Jannis Irene; Fannie, who is the wife of W. H. Carter, of Middlebourne, West Virginia, and their children are Kenwood, Mary Frances and Ann; and Miss Nova, a graduate of Broadus College and a teacher in the public schools of Fairmont.

JAMES E. HENRY. Six miles southwest of Morgantown on the Fairmont Road is the village center of Laurel Point, formerly a postoffice but now served by rural route No. 1 out of Morgantown. It has been a trading point for a great many years, and the principal general store is conducted by James E. Henry, and he is the logical successor of a business of this kind that has been conducted for at least three quarters of a century.

Mr. Henry represents one of the sterling pioneer families of Grant District in Monongalia County. His ancestor was Franklin Henry, a typical pioneer, who acquired some 400 acres in Grant District. He moved to West Virginia in Indian times and frequently had to place his family in the local forts to protect them. His son Eli spent his life in the same district and died at the age of sixty. The third generation here was represented by Sylvanus, who succeeded to the ownership of the old homestead and lived there until his death at the age of seventy-two. The three sons of Sylvanus were: Jesse H. who was county superintendent of schools eight years; Omar C.; and Elroy, who is now principal of the Riverside school.

The father of the Laurel Point merchant was Edgar Henry, a son of Eli Henry mentioned above. Edgar Henry was a shoemaker and farmer and always lived on his farm in Grant District. He died at the age of forty-nine. His wife was Rachel Brand, daughter of Elliott and Susannah Brand, and she is still living at the age of seventy-seven. Edgar and Rachel Henry reared seven children: Emery Marcine, who was an able physician practicing in the home district where he died in 1909 at the age of forty-one after an operation in a hospital at Baltimore, and his son Otto is a professor in the Polytechnic College in Brooklyn, New York; Grace is the wife of Joseph R. Conway, one of the oldest teachers in Monongalia County living at Westover; Charles is a fruit grower in the Grand District; the next in age is James E.; Nettie is the wife of Amos Scott of Grant District; Otis is a farmer near the old homestead; and Ross is a commercial salesman.

James E. Henry was born January 1, 1878, and was reared and educated in Grant District. At the age of twenty he began traveling for a Fairmont wholesale grocery house, and continued that business four years. In 1905 he bought the old store at Laurel Point and has enjoyed a prosperous and growing trade extending his patronage over a large part of the surrounding territory.

Mr. Henry is one of the very popular citizens of Monongalia County, is justly esteemed for his integrity and executive ability, and is a staunch republican in politics. He was twice a candidate at the primaries for county assessor. Mr. Henry married Nora Lezier. They have six sons, Robert, Stanley, Lee, Frederick, Max and Hugo. The first two are attending the Morgantown High School.

HUGH WARDER. A number of sound achievements stand to the credit of Hugh Warder, primarily in the law, to the practice of which he was admitted more than a score of years ago, and also in the politics and public affairs of his home city and state.

Mr. Warder, who is senior member of the well known Grafton law firm of Warder & Robinson, was born at Webster, Taylor County, West Virginia, January 30, 1879. His father Francis S. Warder was born on a farm near Pruntytown, served as a government teamster during the Civil war, was a stone-mason by trade, and spent nearly all his life at Webster, where he died in 1892 at the age of fifty-one. He was a republican in politics, and for a time served as a school trustee. He married Lucinda Keller, daughter of Isaac and Nancy (Moore) Keller. She was born in Barbour County, but was reared at Gilmer, and she died in 1892 the same year as did her husband. Of their seven children, five survive: Miss Clara B., at the old home in Webster; Charles H., a dairyman at Grafton; Hugh, the lawyer; Miss Ina M., a teacher in the Grafton public schools; and Mrs. J. F. Fordyce, whose husband is a train dispatcher of the Baltimore & Ohio at Grafton.

To a large degree Hugh Warder was left to discover his own resources and make his own opportunities. He was thirteen when his parents died, and he had the direction of his career from that time. After a country school education at Webster, he graduated from the Grafton High School in 1896, and while a clerk in the office of the circuit clerk of Taylor County, under Frederick J. Burdett and J. B. St. Clair, he read his first lesson in law. Mr. Warder finished his law course in West Virginia University and was admitted to the bar in 1900.

Instead of beginning practice at once, Mr. Warder deemed it more to his advantage to continue his duties as book-keeper for the Speidel Grocery Company, a wholesale house at Grafton. Then in 1904 he became associated with Judge Ira E. Robinson and was his partner until the latter went on the bench of the State Supreme Court. At that time a new firm was formed by Mr. Warder and Jed W. Robinson, a nephew of Judge Robinson, and they have a splendid business and a widening reputation over the state.

Mr. Warder's first case in court was a justice trial involving the recovery of a watch. He was successful in regaining the timepiece for his client, but never got a fee for his service. He has since participated in much litigation of a general nature, and of late years an important share of corporation practice. The firm have been attorneys for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

In 1908 Mr. Warder was elected to the House of Delegates, and was in the session of 1909 under Speaker James H. Strickling. He was a member of a special committee to investigate the affairs of the penitentiary, served on the committee of cities, towns and villages, and devoted himself to the promotion of a number of worthy bills without having any pet measure of his own. Once he succeeded in getting the consideration of a bill that had been adversely reported in committee, and it passed the House.

Mr. Warder went to the Legislature as a republican, and he has acknowledged that political faith since boyhood. He cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley in 1900, and has attended a number of state conventions and was an alternate to the national convention in Chicago in 1916. Mr. Warder managed Judge Robinson's primary campaign when the latter ran for governor, and had charge of the Robinson headquarters at Grafton.

In Taylor County, June 10, 1903, Mr. Warder married Miss Anna M. Moran, a native of Grafton and daughter of Patrick and Anne (Grayston) Moran. Mrs. Warder was well educated, and left a position as stenographer in the Merchants & Mechanics Bank of Grafton to become the bride of Mr. Warder. They are the proud parent of seven children, Frederick B., Robert, Francis P., Thomas G., Anna M., Charles E. and John B. Frederick, the oldest son, is already on his way to distinction. He is a graduate of the Grafton High School, and is a cadet in the class of 1925 in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Arthur James Moore

JOHN M. L. SMITH is one of the young business men of Tyler County and has what is probably the busiest real estate organization at Middlebourne. He has been a practical farmer himself, and is also extensively interested in the oil and gas districts of this section.

Mr. Smith was born May 1, 1892, at Wilbur in Tyler County, where his father John M. Smith, now in his eighty-fourth year, is enjoying the comforts of an honorable and well spent life on his home farm. He was born in Tyler County in 1837 and has spent all his life there. The grandfather was also a native of Tyler County, and became owner of a large area of good farming land. John M. Smith took up farm work early, pursued it diligently and persistently through many years, and as a result provided for his family and accumulated the competency which now enables him to live retired. In younger years he served as county assessor, was a member of the board of education of his district, and is a staunch republican. As a young man he entered the Union army with a West Virginia regiment of infantry, and saw active service until the close of that struggle. He has been one of the leading supporters of the United Brethren Church in his community. John M. Smith first married a Miss Morgan, a native of Tyler County. She died leaving two daughters: Viola, wife of LeRoy Pierpont, a farmer at Alma, West Virginia; and Susan C., wife of Henry T. Pratt, a farmer in Tyler County. The second wife of John M. Smith was Cordelia A. Underwood, who was born in Tyler County in 1851, and died at the old home at Jefferson Run in December, 1920. Of her twelve children all but one remain to do her honor: Benjamin O., a merchant at Parkersburg; Estella, wife of Henry C. Williamson, a farmer at Friendly in Tyler County; Bertha, who died at the age of twenty-five; Florence, living at Alma, widow of Arch C. Moore, who was a farmer and merchant; Birkley J., who lives on a part of the old homestead at Wilbur; Wilbur M., Philip A. and Icy, all with their father on the farm; Orla S., who was a soldier, spending eighteen months in France and was on the battlefront 100 days, and is now at home; John M. L.; Maxie and Amy, both at home.

John M. L. Smith attended the rural schools of Tyler County, took the agricultural course in West Virginia University at Morgantown, and from the age of twenty-two did farming on his own account for two years. Since then he has been dealing in farms and building up an extensive real estate business with headquarters at Middlebourne. He individually owns a number of farms in the county and is a splendid judge of farm and land values in general. Since 1919 he has also done a large business in timber lands, and is financially interested in some of the oil and gas operations in the various West Virginia fields.

Mr. Smith is a republican, a member of Middlebourne Lodge, No. 34, Free and Accepted Masons, and during the war was associated with the various committees raising funds and carrying on other patriotic enterprises.

April 25, 1913, Mr. Smith married Miss Nannie Underwood, daughter of Lamar and Mary E. (Seckman) Underwood, the latter now deceased. Her father is a worker in the oil fields and lives at Clarksburg.

ARTHUR JAMES WOORE, an old and honored resident and business man of Martinsburg, is a native of England, but has no recollection of the picturesque and historic shire of his birth, since he was brought to the United States in infancy and spent most of his early youth and manhood in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia.

Mr. Woore was born in Monmouthshire, England. His father, Oliver Woore, Jr., was born at Llangatock Vibon Avel in Monmouthshire, July 5, 1839. His grandfather, Oliver Woore, was born in 1815, and was of pure English ancestry. Oliver Woore, Jr., married Hannah Prince, who was born near the village of Husk in Monmouthshire, May 13, 1839, and at an early age was left an orphan and was reared by her maternal grandfather, a wealthy farmer named Williams, in Monmouth County. She was married to Oliver Woore, Jr., May 8, 1862. Three children were born to them in England: Edith, born May 22, 1863; Annie, born December 23, 1865; and Arthur James, born October 31, 1868. In 1869 the family came to America, and first located near Alton in Madison County, Illinois, where Oliver Woore, Jr., followed farming for nine years. Leaving Illinois, he came to the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia and bought a farm in Frederick County, continuing his occupation as a farmer until acquiring a competence and thereafter lived retired in Winchester. He was a man of good education, and continued his intellectual interests all his life. He and his family were devout members of the Baptist Church. While in Winchester he cultivated a beautiful little garden during the summer season, but the rest of the year he devoted to reading in his private library. He died December 9, 1919. His widow is now eighty-three years of age and lives with her daughter in Frederick County, Virginia. The children born after the family came to America were: Edgar, born December 14, 1870, on the farm in Madison County, Illinois; Lucy, born December 23, 1873, and died October 20, 1875; William Oliver, born March 21, 1876 Julia, born June 29, 1878, and Frank Lee, who was born June 26, 1881, the only one of the family a native of Frederick County, Virginia. The daughter Edith married John L. Hauptman, a wealthy farmer in Frederick County. Annie became the wife of Joseph Cooper, a prominent farmer near Winchester. Edgar is a farmer and orchardist near Winchester. William Oliver is junior partner and manager of a large furniture store at Covington, Virginia. Julia married W. K. Alther, general superintendent of the Masonic Life Insurance Company, with headquarters in Buffalo, New York. Frank Lee, the youngest child, is a traveling salesman living at Winchester.

Arthur James Woore had his first conscious recollections in Southern Illinois, of the farm in Madison County, and there he first attended school; later he attended school in Frederick County, Virginia, working on the farm in the meantime, and began his active career as an extensive farmer and stock raiser in Clark County, Virginia. For several years he farmed, then took up contracting and building and has erected several fine residences and business buildings. Since 1912 he has been in business at his trade in Martinsburg.

December 28, 1893, Mr. Woore married Fredda Milton Darlington. Her father, Joseph Benton Darlington, was born on the old homestead at Gainesboro, Virginia, where his father and grandfather owned three large farms. It was on one of these farms where the British and Hessian prisoners taken at Saratoga in 1781, were kept, and one field on that farm, is to this day, known as the Barracks Field, being the one on which stood the barracks in which those prisoners were confined. He was born April 15, 1840, son of Meredith and Rachel Ann (Swartz) Darlington, and a grandson of Gabriel and Margaret (Edwards) Darlington. Gabriel Darlington was a son of Meredith and Sarah (Davis) Darlington, and a grandson of William and Mary Darlington, of Pennsylvania. An extensive genealogy of the Darlington family was compiled by Gilbert Cope and published in 1900. Mrs. Woore's father entered the Confederate Army, at the beginning of the war as a member of Imboden's Cavalry, served in Stonewall Jackson's Brigade, and at one time was a courier between General Jackson and Lee. A man of good education, he taught school for a time after the war, then learned the trade of house painter and decorator, and followed that business in Martinsburg until his death on March 9, 1913. Mrs. Woore's mother, Hannah Vincent, was born in Clark County, Virginia, daughter of John and Julia (McDonald) Vincent. John Vincent was a native of Scotland, came to the United States when a young man and was an American soldier in the War of 1812. He followed his trade as a miller in Clark County, Virginia, until late in life, and spent his last days in Iowa. Julia McDonald, his wife, was a native of Ireland and died in Clark County, Virginia. Mrs. Woore was one of four children. Her brother Lagona Vincent married Margaret Clark, of Frederick County, Virginia. Her sister Emma May married Charles H. Coachman, of Martinsburg, West Virginia. Her brother John Meredith married Cora Roberts, of Martinsburg, West Virginia.

Mr. and Mrs. Moore have three children, Emma Hannah, Arthur Meredith and Frank Randolph. These children are members of the Baptist Church. Miss Emma is a gifted musician, a professional singer, a teacher of vocal and instrumental music, and has been a lecturer on musical subjects in city schools. She is a member of the extension department of the National Academy of Music, and is a member of the Wednesday Afternoon Music Club at Martinsburg.

The son Arthur Meredith Moore enlisted as a volunteer August 15, 1918, and was assigned to duty at the University of West Virginia as a sergeant instructor in the Students Army Training Corps. He was honorably discharged December 15, 1919. He graduated from the Martinsburg High School in 1919, and is now a student of law in the University of Virginia.

Frank Randolph Moore received his education in the Martinsburg grade and high schools, and is now a clerk.

NOAH S. PARKS. Probably no business man is better and more favorably known in the agricultural districts of a number of counties around Philippi than Noah S. Parks. His active association with the farms and their owners in this extensive territory has come from his business as a salesman of agricultural implements and machinery. All along he has carried on some farming of his own, the occupation to which he was reared and trained as a youth.

His grandfather, whose name was also Noah S. Parks, came to this section of West Virginia more than a century ago and settled on Brushy Fork in Harrison County. He was one of five brothers who started west from old Virginia, and he was the only one to locate in West Virginia, the others going on into Ohio. Noah S. Parks was a man of God from boyhood, practiced his religion and contributed faithfully of the tenth of his income for the support of the Gospel. He was a man of good judgment as well, and left a good estate. When he settled on Brushy Fork he bought land at twenty-five cents an acre, and in subsequent years he gave each of his children a farm, on the condition that the property was to be held for the use and benefit of each child as long as he lived and at death it should be divided equally among the respective children. Noah S. Parks and wife spent their lives at their home on Brushy Fork. He was well read, especially in Bible and church literature. He voted as a republican. This pioneer died at the age of eighty-two. His wife, Rachel Willett, whom he married in Harrison County, died a number of years before him. Their children were: David, who died in Harrison County, leaving two daughters by his wife, Rebecca Lawson; Robert, who was a farmer in the home community, married Samantha Hickman, and left two daughters and a son; Mary Jane, who died in the community where she was reared, the wife of Amos G. Marple; Granville, the subjects' father; and Albert, who lived at the old homestead, married Ann Hart and is survived by one daughter and two sons.

Granville Parks was born on Brushy Fork in Harrison County, May 12, 1841. There were practically no schools for him to attend, and he learned to read, but could scarcely write. His life was devoted to the farm, and with more than an average degree of success. After the Civil war he moved to Barbour County, and his home for fifty-six years was on the waters of Elk Creek, where he died January 30, 1922. He was industrious, thrifty, accumulated property, and was very religious. He was reared in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, later was a member of the United Brethren Church on Brushy Fork, an institution he practically built, and in the last years of his life he was a communicant of Hall Church of the Methodist Episcopal, South, near Elk City. He was a sympathizer of the South during the war and a democratic voter. In early days he was a noted singer, and he taught singing school. He was a man of fine and rugged physique, six feet, four inches high and weighed about 200 pounds.

In Harrison County Granville Parks married Barbara Susan Hardman, who was left an orphan when a child and was reared in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Romine. She acquired a common school education, and has been an example of greatest loyalty to the duties and obligations of motherhood and of Christian conduct. Everyone loves and respects her for her splendid character. She is now eighty-two years of age. Her children were: Noah S. Parks; Mary Jane, wife of John Fridley, of Barbour County; Sidney L., of Tucker County; Homer Albert, a farmer near his father's old home; Jennie, who married Mordecai Reed, of Clarksburg; Martha, Mrs. Ira Woodford, of Philippi; Amos G., a farmer near the old home; Berthena, wife of William Nutter, of Clarksburg; John C., who has spent most of his life as a soldier in the Regular Army, was in the Spanish-American war, and during the World war was a drillmaster and did other work in the training of soldiers, and is still an officer in his regiment; Grover C., the youngest, a railroad man with the New York Central Lines in New York.

Noah S. Parks was born at Brushy Fork, Harrison County, August 2, 1863, and two years later his parents moved to Barbour County, where he has had his home ever since. He acquired a country school education, and was the only one of the children to remain on the home farm until he reached his majority. After leaving home he worked as a farm hand at 50 cents a day, and put in long hours to earn this modest stipend. The first money he made for himself was filling a contract with a neighbor farmer to cut and split 1,000 rails at 50 cents a hundred. He did this work with his ax in five days' time. After two years as a wage earner he married and settled on a farm near Philippi, and soon bought a small place in that locality, and continued to give his personal attention to his farming for about three years.

About the time he left the farm Mr. Parks entered business as a salesman of farm machinery. For four years he traveled for the International Harvester Company, and then joined the Peiser Manufacturing Company of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania. For twenty-two years he sold the goods of this firm. Since January 1, 1922, he has been with A. B. Farquar of York, Pennsylvania, selling the heavy machinery made by this firm, including saw-mills, threshers, boilers, traction engines and similar goods. The territory in all these years has been in his own state. His immediate jurisdiction is fourteen counties, and he is probably better informed as to agricultural conditions and has a larger personal acquaintance among farmers and farm owners there than any other man.

Mr. Parks for many years has been interested more or less in the lumber business as a manufacturer. He has shipped out large quantities direct from the saw-mills in the woods, and is still interested in that line. He is a half-owner of the city garage at Philippi, and was one of the firm that put up the building in the spring of 1916. The City Garage is the authorized Ford Agency in Philippi.

Mr. Parks is a democrat, having cast his vote regularly for the democratic candidates since the time of Grover Cleveland. In local affairs he is not particularly partisan, considering the man rather than the party. Mr. Parks has been a successful business man, he owns the old homestead where he grew up, and some valuable property in Philippi. He has filled the chairs in the Encampment degree of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is also a member of the Subordinate Lodge and the Grafton Lodge of Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the United Brethren Church, is liberal in his donations to other denominations, and the unfortunate and the afflicted have always had in him a generous helper and one ready to respond with his personal aid and his purse.

January 29, 1889, Mr. Parks married Miss Mary Etta Zinn, daughter of John Riley and Amanda (Simon) Zinn. She was born in Barbour County, February 23, 1865, the third in a family of six children, the others being: Ingabv, wife of Josiah Nutter; Margaret, who was the first wife of Josiah Nutter; Francis, a farmer in Barbour County; Jacob, who operates the old homestead; and Aldine, one of the very successful farmers of Barbour County.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Parks, Lulie, Opal, Rosa, Miss Von, Miss Zella and Lowell, were all liberally educated in the public schools. The daughter Lulie is the wife of William Brown, of Akron, Ohio, and has a son, Mrs. Arthur James Moore.

Blaine. Opal is the wife of George Hall, of Wheeling. Rosa married Fred Daddiswan, of Philippi.

LUTHER CLEARFIELD STEVENS. There has hardly been any time since he was ten years of age when Luther Clearfield Stevens has not been engaged in some work of practical usefulness to himself or others. For over twenty years he has been a resident of Philippi, and has built up a leading service in Barbour County as an undertaker and funeral director.

He was born not far from Grantsville in Calhoun County, West Virginia, June 4, 1871. His parents were David E. and Jane (Goff) Stevens, the former a native of Flemington and the latter of Clemtown in Barbour County. David E. Stevens was a small boy when his father died, and he grew up an aid to his widowed mother and acquired only a common school education. He was the only child to survive his father's death. His step-father was Johnson Kelley, and he had a half-brother, Luther Kelley. David E. Stevens was a carpenter by trade, and in 1869, after his marriage, moved to Calhoun County, where he became a farmer. Later he returned to Flemington and resumed the work of his trade, and was employed about the mines until he retired. He is a veteran Union soldier, having served as a private in the Fourth West Virginia Cavalry.

L. Clearfield Stevens spent the first five years of his life at his parents home on Sycamore Creek in Calhoun County. His parents then returned to Taylor County, and he grew to manhood at Flemington. He had only a common school education, and about the time he entered his teens he left home and began earning his own way. For two years he worked for a farmer, earning about 50 cents a day, and for four years drove team for Dilworth & Poling, merchants. His next employment was in a saw-mill, and while his industrious habits gave him instant employment at this and other occupations he saved little from his wages. After about six years with the saw-mill he operated a threshing machine around Flemington for two years. He then worked as a housebuilder for a year at Mountain Lake Park. In 1896 Mr. Stevens acquired a saw-mill in Barbour County, and conducted this with a fair degree of profit until 1901, when he sold the mill and, having since 1898 been located at Philippi, he took up the livery business in the county seat. He was in the livery business four years, and since then has been an undertaker and funeral director. He was attracted as a young man to this profession, but the idea was usually discouraged by his friends. It was only after he was able to command some capital of his own that he put his long cherished purpose into practice, providing himself with some equipment and establishing an office on Main Street at Philippi in 1905. The first call for his services was made in March of that year. In May the State Board of Embalmers licensed him after a correspondence course and demonstration work with H. S. F. Echols of Philadelphia. In the passing years Mr. Stevens has steadily added to his equipment until he has every facility of the modern funeral director, including motor hearse and office building provided with funeral chapel.

Mr. Stevens served for three years as deputy sheriff of Barbour County under Sheriff E. R. Dyer. He is a republican, and is affiliated with the Lodge and Encampment of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Rebekahs, is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the D. O. K. K. and the Maccabees.

At Philippi November 14, 1902, he married Miss Daisy Mann, who was born in Barbour County, in November, 1875, daughter of John C. and Sallie (Johnson) Mann. The other children of her parents were Willie. O. J., J. Rush, Basil and Mrs. Annie Stomp. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens have two sons, Edgar and Hayward Kemper. The latter is a student in Broadus College.

HARRY F. BRITTINGHAM is a veteran in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and since 1914 has taken care of the company's business at Philippi as agent. Except for two years he has been with this railroad in West Virginia since 1902.

He was born at Pocomoke City, Maryland, August 12, 1881. The family is of English origin, and his first American ancestor settled on the eastern shore of Maryland. His grandfather, Capt. William F. Brittingham, was a boat captain on Chesapeake Bay and a native of Maryland. He and two of his brothers were Union soldiers in the Civil war. By his marriage to Mary Daugherty he had eleven children, and his sons were Edward, who spent his life in Philadelphia; Harry, a resident of Jersey City, and George R.

George R. Brittingham, father of the Philippi railroad man, was born at Pocomoke City, was reared and educated there, and for many years was engaged in the barber supply business, his home being now in Baltimore. He married Laura B. Melvin, daughter of Josiah Melvin, of Worcester County, Maryland, and they had nine children, the seven survivors being Harry F.; George W., claim agent of the New York Central Railroad at Toledo, Ohio; Raymond M., yard master for the New York, New Haven and Hartford at Waterbury, Connecticut; Maurice, a hardware merchant at Baltimore; Russell, associated in business with his brother Maurice; Clarence and Lillian V., high school students at Baltimore.

Harry F. Brittingham was reared at Pocomoke City, where he attended the public schools, and subsequently took a business course in Bryant and Stratton's College at Wilmington, Delaware. Soon after completing this course he entered the service of the Norfolk and Western Railway Company as rate clerk at Bramwell, West Virginia, and was in that service five years. Then, in 1902, he became chief clerk in the freight office of the Baltimore and Ohio at Clarksburg, and was transferred from there to Grafton as car distributor. In 1907 he left the railroad to become an instructor in the commercial department of Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, where he remained two years. Then returning to railroad work, he was appointed agent at Wilsonburg, and from there came to Philippi in 1914 as successor of J. L. Ernest, who removed to Belington. Mr. Brittingham has popularized himself and the railroad by his efficient work at Philippi, and is deeply interested in community affairs. He is a member of the Kiwanis Club, and during the World war was a member of some of the relief committees. He is a past chancellor of Philippi Lodge No. 61, Knights of Pythias, and sat in the Grand Lodge at Parkersburg in 1918. He is also a Maccabee and is a member of the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In Mercer County, West Virginia, November 22, 1909, Mr. Brittingham married Effie May Honaker, daughter of Rev. John H. and Sarah (Belcher) Honaker. Her father is a retired Methodist minister of Mont Calm, West Virginia, and both he and his wife were born in this state, and their children are: Dr. George Honaker, of Chicago; William B., a retired coal operator of Huntington; Jasper, a merchant at Mont Calm, West Virginia; Mrs. Alice Neal, of Mercer County; Mrs. Sallie Necessary, of Huntington; and Mrs. Brittingham. Mr. and Mrs. Brittingham have one son, Clayton W., born December 22, 1911. Mr. Brittingham and wife recently completed an attractive new home at Philippi, a two story cement block house conveniently situated to the Baltimore and Ohio Station.

MONZELL M. HOFF, M.D. From the time he came home with his medical diploma and began practice in his native County of Barbour Doctor Hoff has been permitted no extended vacation or interruption to his serious duties as a professional man and citizen. He came into his profession well qualified and equipped from a technical standpoint, and he has also had the invaluable asset of being a "good mixer," with a praiseworthy ambition to work with and assist his fellow citizens in carrying forward the program of general improvement.

Doctor Hoff was born in Philippi District, at what is now West Philippi, August 20, 1859. His ancestors came from Germany to Pennsylvania in Colonial times. His grandfather was the first representative of the family in West Virginia, and spent his life as a farmer in Barbour County. He was a republican, performed a good deal of public service in his district, including membership on the Board of Education, and was a devout Baptist. Lamar M. Hoff, father of Doctor Hoff, was a native of Barbour County, born in 1838, had to depend upon his own exertions for his early education, and as a young man he followed the trade of photographer, but eventually became a farmer. He was a loyal Union man and a republican, and was reared a Baptist. Lamar M. Hoff married Melissa E. Crislip, who is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and lives with her son, Doctor Hoff. She was born in Barbour County June 14, 1840, daughter of Samuel and Eleanor (Board) Crislip. The Crislips were of an old Pennsylvania Colonial family. Samuel Crislip was a brother of Abraham Crislip, grandfather of Albert G. Crislip, under whose name will be found a more complete sketch of this interesting family. Lamar M. Hoff had the following children: Clifton M., who died January 20, 1920, in Taylor County, leaving a family; Monzell M.; Louisa, Mrs. Amos Stoalbarger, of Blue Jacket, Oklahoma. The mother of these children subsequently married Theodore Nutter, and had a daughter by that marriage.

Soon after the birth of Doctor Hoff his parents moved to Union District, and he was five years of age when his father died there. The widow then took her little family into Elk District, to the home of her father, where Monzell remained until he was past sixteen. He worked for his grandfather Crislip on the farm and also did farm labor for other men in that locality. This work gave him the funds to attend school. After leaving the home of his grandfather he went to Illinois, and spent two or three years as a wage worker, chiefly at farm labor at Carthage and in Hancock County. While he was there trouble arose between the fishermen along the Mississippi River and parties owning and controlling the land adjacent to the fishing grounds. An attempt was made to oust the fishermen, and this led to reprisals by not only the fishermen but by their allies, the roving tramps. Several farm houses and much property were destroyed, and to restore peace and order the state sent militia into the area. Young Hoff had been induced to join the Company of National Guards at Carthage for the benefit to be derived from military drill, and was orderly sergeant of the Carthage Company when it was called to active duty in the area of trouble. After a brief stay the tramps scattered and the fishery trouble gradually subsided. After returning to West Virginia from Illinois Doctor Hoff continued his education in select schools, and prepared himself for the duties of teacher. He taught school in the country, and for seven years taught the grammar department of the schools at Philippi.

All of this constituted a valuable experience to him as a preparation for the serious duties of life. From his earnings as a teacher Doctor Hoff was able to pursue his medical studies. While teaching he frequented the company and office of Doctor Rumsel of Union District, and he also studied anatomy under Doctor Bosworth of Philippi. For his regular course he entered the University of Maryland at Baltimore, and remained there until he finished his course and graduated in 1889. He took special work in physical diagnosis and general practice, and also specialized to a certain extent in eye, ear, nose and throat work at Bayview Hospital. When he returned home to begin practice he kept up his reading, but the demand for his service has been so insistent that he had never been able to get away for post-graduate study. Early in his career he did all the minor surgery that came to his attention, and continued that work until the establishment of local hospitals. He was health officer when the World war came on, and that put him in line for immediate service in connection with the Draft Board. He was associated as examining physician on the Draft Board with Dr. W. Scott Smith of Philippi. At the first call for men from Barbour County the requirements were so rigid that the county was unable to fill its quota, but in subsequent examinations the Government standards were somewhat relaxed, so that the Draft Board was able to keep the Barbour County quota full.

It was from a sense of public duty that Doctor Hoff accepted appointment as health officer of Barbour County. Ever since he began practice he has been a member of the Pension Board of the locality. As a consequence he has perhaps passed upon more applications for pensions than any other physician of the region. While acting as examiner for the Draft Board during the war he passed upon the physical qualifications of some thirteen hundred young men.

So far as his professional duties have permitted Doctor Hoff has been alert in responding to the obligations of good citizenship. In politics he is a republican, casting his first presidential vote for General Garfield in 1880. He served as chairman of the Barbour County Republican Central Committee several years, and until recently attended state conventions, being in the convention which nominated Judge Atkinson for governor and also Governor Dawson.

At Belington, West Virginia, September 4, 1890, Doctor Hoff married Ida May Teter, daughter of Colonel Jesse and Elizabeth (Phillips) Teter. The Teters were an early family in the rural district of Barbour County. Col. Jesse Teter was an officer in the Union Army, was stationed at Grafton and served on the Medical Board with Doctor Kennedy. After the war he returned to the farm. He served twenty years as justice of the peace, was active in the republican party, and was one of the most devout men in the performance of his Christian and church duties. His influence was wide and lasting, and altogether he was a noble character. Colonel Teter had three sons and two daughters: Thomas Benton, W. Worth, Floyd, Mrs. Hoff and Myrtle E., the latter of whom still lives on the home farm.

Doctor Hoff had the misfortune to lose by death on February 10, 1921, his good wife and the companion of more than thirty years. She was born in Valley District of Barbour County, May 31, 1860, was well educated in select schools and in college at Pittsburgh, and for several years followed the profession of teaching. During her married life she took a deep interest in local organizations for increasing the standards of school education and in behalf of every moral and reform movement. She was a very active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and did much to aid Doctor Hoff in preparing the recruits from Barbour County for active war service.

Doctor Hoff joined the Masonic Fraternity in 1884, and several times has been master of Bigelow Lodge No. 52, is past high priest of Philippi Chapter, R. A. M., a member of DeMolay Commandery No. 11, K. T., at Grafton, and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He became an Odd Fellow in 1888, is a member of both branches, and is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Maccabees.

EPHRAIM WILLIS MCKOWN, a dealer in real estate and timber lands at Spencer, has had an active association with the business and political life of Roane County for over a quarter of a century.

His family is one of the oldest in West Virginia, and it is one that has been represented with truest American citizenship in practically every important war of the nation. The remote ancestor was Andrew McKown, a native of County Antrim, Ireland, who came to America and settled in Pennsylvania with his son, Gilbert McKown, who was born in County Antrim. They spent their last years at Gerrardstown in what is now West Virginia, where Gilbert McKown died in 1803. James McKown, representing the third generation of the family, and a son of Gilbert, was born in 1752, and was the great-grandfather of E. W. McKown of Spencer. James McKown at the time of the Revolutionary war was a member of General Washington's staff, and was wounded at the battle of the Brandywine, afterward drawing a pension for a number of years. He lived in Pennsylvania, and about 1812 settled in Jackson County, West Virginia, where he died in 1850. In the history of Knox County, Ohio, is mentioned the fact that James McKown, this veteran soldier, was master of ceremonies at an ox roast celebrating the election to the presidency of William Henry Harrison. Gilbert McKown, son of James McKown, was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1787, and enlisted for service in the War of 1812. He moved to Jackson County, West Virginia, about 1814, but from 1822 until 1842 lived in Knox County, Ohio. He then returned to Jackson County, and in 1856 moved to Spencer.

E. W. McGowan

He was a miller, and was identified with the early upbuilding of Spencer, where he lived until his death in 1864. His wife was Lydia Fleisher, who died near Spencer in 1887.

Their son, Norman D. McKown, was born in Knox County, Ohio, May 4, 1840, but spent his early life in Jackson and Roane counties, West Virginia, was married at Spencer, and has had a very successful career as a farmer. He is still living on his farm a mile east of Spencer and is now eighty-two years of age. He and his brothers once operated their father's mill, a combined grist mill, sawmill and carding factory. The mill was the first establishment of its kind in Spencer. Norman D. McKown is a republican, a member of the Baptist Church, and has a veteran's record of service in the Civil war. He enlisted in 1862 in the Ninth West Virginia Infantry, and was in all the engagements of his regiment up to Winchester, where he was severely wounded, and did not recover for active duty for several months. Norman D. McKown married Rebecca A. Miller, who was born near Spencer and died there in 1893. She was the mother of a large family of children: Luverna L., who died in 1919 in Clay County, where her husband, D. V. Goodwin, is a farmer; Ephraim Willis; Ulysses S., who died near Spencer in 1894; Kearney, a road contractor living at Reedy in Roane County; Mrs. Emma Douglas, who died near Spencer in 1898; Maggie, wife of John Carpenter, a farmer at Hillsboro, Ohio; Isaac, a farmer in Roane County; Esley S., living with his father near Spencer and operating the home farm; Sarah C., wife of John Raines, a Roane County farmer; Norman D., a stone mason at Spencer; John M., in the produce business at Spencer; Margie, who died when one year old; Rufus, who died at the age of twelve years; and Chester, a farmer near Spencer and a veteran of the World war. Norman D. McKown married for his second wife Matilda (Miller) Smith, who was born near Spencer. His first wife, Rebecca A. Miller, was a widow when he married her. By her marriage to William Green, who was killed while a soldier in the Union Army, she had a son, Charles William, a mechanic now living in Oregon.

Ephraim Willis McKown was born near Spencer February 14, 1867, and grew up on his father's farm. He was educated in the rural schools, in normal training courses, and in 1890 graduated from the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. He began teaching rural schools in 1886, and altogether spent ten years in the school rooms. Beginning in 1896 he was in the lumber business at Spencer for four years, and since then has conducted some widely extended operations in real estate and the buying and selling of timber tracts. He is individually owner of much property in and around Spencer, including his own residence, a business building on Main Street, five dwelling houses, forty city lots, and a farm of seventy-five acres. He formerly owned and for one year managed the leading hotel at Spencer, which he sold in 1918.

Along with his business affairs Mr. McKown has played a spirited part in local politics and affairs. He was examiner of teachers for Roane County from 1896 to 1900. In 1898 he was republican candidate for Circuit Court clerk, being defeated by thirty-seven votes, the county at that time being normally democratic. In 1899-1901 he was clerk in the Senate under John T. Harris, and in 1904 was elected to the State Senate, representing the Fourth District, comprising Roane, Jackson and Mason counties. Mr. McKown made a splendid record in the Senate during his four-year term, 1905-09. He was appointed chairman of the commission to investigate all state institutions, as a result of which an important change was made in the management of such institutions, the board of control being the centralized authority for all state institutions except the schools, which were put under the board of regents. In the Senate he was also chairman of the committee on insurance, at a time when much important legislation was enacted for the regulation of life and other insurance companies, these laws standing effective today. Mr. McKown was mayor of Spencer in 1920, and inaugurated a bond issue to give the city complete sewerage facilities. He is now chairman of the advisory committee to the County Court in the matter of building permanent roads. Mr. McKown is a Methodist, a member of the Spencer Rotary Club, is president of the Spencer Board of Trade, and president of the Roane Grocery Company, a wholesale business. During the World war he was chairman of the Fourth Liberty Loan drive in the county, and was associated with all the other patriotic campaigns.

At Ernest in Roane County in 1896 Mr. McKown married Miss Florence F. Sarver, daughter of John A. and Amy (Ferrell) Sarver, her mother still living at Ernest, where her father was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. McKown had one son, a bright and promising boy who died when almost qualified for the serious responsibilities of life. He was born April 8, 1900, and died November 2, 1918, when a senior in the Spencer High School and preparing to enter the State University the next year. In honor of this son Mr. and Mrs. McKown have donated a scholarship to the Spencer High School for the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, the scholarship being awarded a member of the graduating class each year.

J. H. HUTCHISON. Prominent among the officials of Braxton County, one who has won and held the confidence of the people by reason of long, capable and faithful discharge of public responsibilities is J. H. Hutchison, occupying the office of sheriff. For a long period of years he was engaged in educational work, a field in which he became well acquainted with his fellow-citizens in various parts of the county, and during his entire career has been known as a straightforward and courageous executive in each of his several positions of authority.

Born in Braxton County, February 13, 1884, Mr. Hutchison is a son of William and Esther C. (Jones) Hutchison. His great-great-grandfather was Jacob Hutchison, who, on June 27, 1797, married Hannah MacMillan, and they had four children: John, born May 4, 1798; William, born May 6, 1800; Jacob, born May 22, 1802; and Joseph, born July 23, 1804. William Hutchison, of this family, great-grandfather of Sheriff Hutchison, married Jane MacMillan, and they had seven children: Nathan, Hannah, Joseph, Felix, Virginia, Miles M. and Ann. Of these Felix, the grandfather of Sheriff Hutchison, married Ann E. Kincaid, and they had the following children: William, Henderson B., John R., Elizabeth J., Ellis Lee, Nancy F., Clark and Winfield S.

William Hutchison, father of Sheriff Hutchison, was born in Braxton County, September 12, 1853, and was reared on a farm, his education being acquired in the country schools. He married in this county Esther C. Jones, who was born in Highland County, Virginia, April 15, 1854, and was about twenty years of age when she came to Braxton County. Following their marriage they settled on a farm near Flatwoods, West Virginia, where Mr. Hutchison was engaged in agricultural operations for twenty-two years. He then retired from active pursuits and lived quietly until his death, which occurred March 27, 1920. In politics he was a republican, and his religious faith was that of the Methodist Protestant Church. Mrs. Hutchison, who survives her husband and resides on the old home farm with one of her sons, belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She and her husband were the parents of four children: O. C., an agriculturist carrying on operations in Braxton County; Willis Lee, who died June 16, 1910; J. H., of this notice; and W. F., a farmer, who is married and lives on the old home place, which he operates for his mother.

J. H. Hutchison was reared on the old home farm near Flatwoods, and received good educational advantages in the public school and the normal school at Glenntown. After teaching in the public schools for eighteen terms he was elected and served four years as county superintendent of the Braxton County free schools, then becoming the republican candidate for sheriff, an office to which he was elected by a good majority and in which he is still serving. His record is a splendid one, and under his administration the law has been strictly enforced and has been given the respect which is its due. His deputies at this time are G. S. Hamrick, office deputy; and W. M. Toulim, field deputy.

On December 25, 1906, Mr. Hutchison married Blanche Mearns, who was born near Rock Cove, Upshur County, West Virginia, and educated in the common schools. To this union there have been born four children: Bernard M., who is attending high school; and William M., Velena M. and James Hollis, pupils of the graded school. Mrs. Hutchison is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church and her husband of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Fraternally he is affiliated with Corley Lodge No. 38, K. P.; and Bulltown Lodge No. 283, I. O. O. F. Mr. Hutchison is a man of considerable means, being the owner of a farm of 350 acres and one of the directors in the Bank of Sutton, West Virginia, in the county seat of Braxton County, where he resides in a comfortable and attractive home, surrounded by all conveniences and the center of a group of admiring friends.

WELLINGTON F. MORRISON. A man of large affairs, displaying at all times an aptitude for successful management, combined with keen sagacity in investment and marked ability in control of important interests, Wellington F. Morrison has long been known as one of Braxton County's most prominent business men, whose labors have been of great value in building up the interests of the community in which his home has been made for so many years.

Mr. Morrison was born in Braxton County, Virginia, June 30, 1845, a son of James W. and Nancy Logan (Grimes) Morrison. His father was born in Greenbrier County, Virginia, January 10, 1806, and after receiving a public school education moved to Pocahontas County, where he met and married Nancy Logan Grimes, who had been born in the latter county October 24, 1812. At about the time of their marriage, in 1830, they came to what is now Braxton County, West Virginia, and settled on a farm. In addition to carrying on extensive agricultural operations Mr. Morrison was a justice of the peace, a member of the old County Court and served as sheriff of the county for four years, being one of the prominent and influential men of his community. Likewise he was a pillar of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which he attended regularly, lived his faith every day, was a class leader, and made his home the home of the visiting preachers. First a whig, he later changed his allegiance to the republican party. Mr. Morrison was the father of fourteen children, of whom twelve grew to maturity and six are living at this time: Mary H., the widow of Franklin Beemer; Maria V., the wife of John D. Sutton; Leah T., the widow of Mortimer Rose; Nancy R., the wife of John F. Beemer; John G., of Wichita, Kansas; and Wellington F., of this record.

Wellington F. Morrison was reared on the home farm six miles east of Sutton, and acquired his early educational training in the old-time subscription schools. He was not yet sixteen years of age when the Civil war broke out, and when less than seventeen years old enlisted in the Union army, April 23, 1862. During the first year of his service he was engaged in the guarding of army supply wagons through West Virginia, but in January, 1863, his regiment went to the Tygart Valley, where he received his baptism of fire in the engagement at Droop Mountains. In July of the same year he was again under fire, at Beverly, and in May, 1864, saw plenty of action, when he entered the Valley of Virginia, his subsequent engagements including Leetown and Currence, July, 1864; Harper's Ferry, Snicker's Gap and Winchester, September 19, 1864; Fisher's Hill, September 22d; Cedar Creek, two engagements, in October and in December, 1864, on to Richmond. Mr. Morrison was in the Eighth Army Corps, commanded by General Crooks, and made up of West Virginians. He remained with his regiment until the close of the war, and was mustered out at Wheeling, West Virginia, receiving his honorable discharge May 3, 1865.

At the completion of his military service Mr. Morrison returned to his father's farm, and, realizing the need for further education, attended the common schools for one term and during one winter. He then taught for one year in the country schools, and September 27, 1866, was united in marriage with Miss Sarah E. Berry. At that time he started housekeeping on the farm, and remained until September, 1868, in the spring of which year his wife and baby went to Mrs. Morrison's father's home, and Mr. Morrison went to the private school of Mrs. Berry for one summer. In the fall he was rejoined by his wife and child at Sutton, where Mr. Morrison continued his school studies during that winter. He was next made deputy sheriff under his father, a position which he held for four years, and was then elected superintendent of the free schools of Braxton and served as such for two years. After this he acted as principal of the Sutton schools, and his next position was in the circuit clerk's office, where he remained six years as assistant, and a like period as clerk of the Circuit Court. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1900, held at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and in 1904 he was one of the electors from West Virginia who voted for Roosevelt and Fairbanks for president and vice president. He served as mayor of Sutton a number of terms. During his incumbency as mayor in 1905 and 1906 he was instrumental in having the present up-to-date paving, sewage and sidewalks installed, and also caused the undesirable of many classes to vacate and leave the city. When he left public office Mr. Morrison embarked in the general merchandise business at Sutton, in which he remained with success for ten years, and then sold out and embarked in the real estate and fire insurance business, a field in which he also met with success. While well advanced in years, he still takes an active part in business affairs and is president of the Sutton Wholesale Grocery and Milling Company, and a director of the Home National Bank, where he is acting as secretary of the board. Mr. Morrison is a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a member of the official board. As a fraternalist he belongs to Sutton Lodge No. 21, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past master; Sutton Chapter No. 4, R. A. M., and Sutton Commandery, K. T.

Mrs. Morrison died February 18, 1918, mourned by all who had known her. She had been the mother of nine children, of whom five are now living: Laura M., the wife of E. G. Rider, an attorney at Charleston and a member of the Public Service Commission of West Virginia; Elizabeth, the wife of Carey C. Hines, of Sutton; Audrey, the wife of Carl S. Walker, a pharmacist of Gassaway, this state; James T. B., identified with the Wholesale Grocery and Milling Company of Sutton; and Wellington F., Jr., a graduate of the law department of the State University, and chief of the land department of the state auditor's office at Charleston.

JOHN PATSEY. Few native Americans, with education and other advantages, accomplish a better aggregate of substantial results in a comparatively brief lifetime of less than fifty years than John Patsey, a native of Italy, who came to this country with the training only of a practical laborer and was a coal miner until he could put himself into a business of his own. For the past twenty years he has become very well and favorably known in Barbour County, where he is proprietor of a good business at Berryburg and has a number of other property and financial interests scattered over this section of the state.

He was born in Central Italy, at Introdeacqua, Province of Aquila, sixty-four miles east of Rome, March 21, 1874, son of Ponfilla and Magdalena (Juliani) DiPasquale. He was the third of their six sons. His parents spent all their lives in Italy. Five of the sons came to America. Charles, who after a residence of many years here returned to Italy; James, formerly a merchant in New York City, now a resident of Providence, Rhode Island; Ernest, who was killed while working in the mines at Thomas, West Virginia; and Louis, who died of typhoid fever in Cook's Hospital at Fairmont, West Virginia.

John Patsey grew up on a little farm, had to get his education with practically no attendance at school, and at the age of eight years was earning seventeen cents a day at farm labor. He continued to work on the farm until he was thirteen, and then took up railroad work. He did some of the hard labor of railroad construction, including tunnel work, and for nineteen months he was employed during the construction of a tunnel in Belgium. One of his brothers had preceded him to America, and his example encouraged John Patsey to come to this country. He sailed from Rotterdam for New York on the ship Rotterdam, landed in New York and immediately came on to Thomas, Tucker County, West Virginia, and did his first work in the mines at Coketon in that vicinity. He reached there October 29, 1898. In his early years Mr. Patsey was accustomed to the hardest kind of work, and even in the field of merchandising his success has been due to the habit and training of his earlier years. While at Thomas he made his first start in a mercantile way with limited capital, and after about two years he moved to Harding, but continued his store at Thomas until 1902. He also established a business at Colton, and for a time owned and operated a store at Lanta, on the Coal and Coke Railway. He disposed of these interests to concentrate all his capital and energy upon his new business at Berryburg in Barbour County, where he set up as a merchant in 1903. He established himself here as the successor of H. Cohen, and has been the leading merchant of the locality for nearly twenty years.

Aside from his business at Berryburg Mr. Patsey is owner of much real estate, including farm land and improved property in town, owns some business property at Philippi, associated with William Janes, and is part owner of a business block at Grafton. He was one of the promoters and is a director of the Peoples Bank of Philippi, a stockholder in the Citizens National Bank of the same city, a stockholder in the Monongahela Power and Railway Company of Fairmont, and had financial interest in the Wheeling Investment Association.

Mr. Patsey began the naturalization process about seventeen years ago, and since qualifying as a voter has been a republican, casting his first presidential vote for Colonel Roosevelt. He joined the Odd Fellows Lodge at Philippi.

At Newark, New Jersey, November 27, 1909, he married Miss Mary Angeline Zingone, who was born at Deliceto, Province of Foggia, Italy, daughter of Mattio Zingone. She came to America in 1907. Mr. Patsey suffered the tragedy of losing his wife, who was burned to death while starting a fire in a stove with gasoline instead of kerosene, on November 10, 1913. She was only thirty-two years of age when she died. She is survived by two children: Reva, born January 25, 1911, and Mary, born May 25, 1913.

WILLIAM FREDERICK REGER. For twenty years or more William Frederick Reger has been closely associated with the coal mining industry of the Berryburg locality in Barbour County. He is one of the oldest men in the service of the Consolidation Coal Company at that point, where he has been store manager for ten years.

Mr. Reger was born near Weston, Lewis County, May 1, 1881. The Regers are an old family of West Virginia. His grandfather, Henry Reger, was an early settler in Upshur County, locating there from one of the eastern states. His life was devoted to farming. He left a large number of children at his death. One of them was William Reger, only a child when his father died. William Reger was born in Upshur County, but spent most of his life in Lewis County. He enlisted from Upshur County in the Union Army as a member of the Upshur Battery, and was a canonier and corporal of his company. He participated in some of the heavy fighting of his regiment, but sustained no wounds or other injuries beyond disease contracted in the war. After the war he was satisfied to let others continue the memories of the great conflict, and he manifested little interest even in the G. A. R. He was a staunch republican without official aspirations, and was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. William Reger, who died at Weston in March, 1917, at the age of sixty-eight, married Mary Jones, daughter of Henry and Sallie (Tremble—formerly Turnbull) Jones. She is living at Weston, and became the mother of six sons and three daughters: Thomas L., of Pittsburgh; Avis, wife of C. G. Hinzman, of Weston; Gertrude, who died at Berlin, West Virginia, wife of J. E. Swisher; Charles H., of Philadelphia; Mattie, wife of A. M. Corathers of Weston; Robert V., of Clarksburg; William Frederick; Samuel Steele, of Burkburnett, Texas; and Earl, who is the postmaster of Weston.

William F. Reger grew up on a farm near Weston, and the routine of the farm constituted his early training and experience. He attended the common schools, and when past his majority he left home and began his career at Berryburg with the Southern Coal and Transportation Company. This company sold out to the Consolidation Coal Company in 1905, and along with the property and goodwill Mr. Reger went perhaps as a part of the contracting, since he was the only one of the store force to remain under the new management. He was promoted in 1912 to store manager for the company at Berryburg, and in addition to these responsibilities he is postmaster of the village and has accepted a share in every organized movement for the welfare of the community.

Two of his own children are teachers, and he has for years been an advocate of better schools at Berryburg, and is one of the local school trustees. He is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, and fraternally is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past chancellor and past representative, the Woodmen of the World and the Junior Order United American Mechanics.

At Weston, August 1, 1901, Mr. Reger married Miss Lillie Smith, who was born on a farm near that city, daughter of Clinton Smith. Her mother was a daughter of Isaac Rohrbaugh, and Mrs. Reger was one of six daughters and three sons, all still living. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Reger are: Scott N., Albert Paul, Evelyn, Frederick and William. Scott and Albert both finished their educations in Broadus College and are teachers in the public schools of Barbour County. Albert also took work as a student in an automobile school at Cincinnati.

HON. JOHN S. WITHERS. In Old and West Virginia and throughout the South the name Withers has been one of distinction since Colonial times. There have been soldiers of the name in all the important wars of the nation. Many of them have been eminent lawyers, and many public and private libraries in West Virginia contain a volume known as "Withers' Chronicles of Border Warfare," containing vivid narratives and descriptions of fights between the first white settlers and the Indians during the progress of civilization over the Alleghanies, accounts that have made this one of the important source books for the history of what is now West Virginia. The author of this work was the grandfather of the Hon. John S. Withers, banker, lawyer and prominent business man of Buckhannon.

The Withers family came from Lancashire, England, and joined the Virginia Colony in the seventeenth century. The great-grandfather of John S. Withers was Enoch K. Withers, who was born in 1760 and lived in Fauquier County, Virginia. He served as a sergeant in Peter Grant's Company, Col. William Drake's Regiment, during the Revolution, enlisting May 28, 1777, for three years. He was commissioned ensign in November, 1777. He died in Fauquier County in 1813. His wife, May Chinn, was a daughter of Janet Scott, a first cousin to Sir Walter Scott.

The author of the Chronicles of Border Warfare was Alexander Scott Withers, who was born in Fauquier County, Virginia, October 12, 1792. He was educated as a lawyer and wrote the Chronicles in 1831. In later years his time and energies were devoted to farming. He was a whig in politics, and during the Civil war was a staunch Union man. He died at Parkersburg January 23, 1865. His home for many years was in Harrison County, and it was while there that he wrote the Chronicles. He was a graduate of William and Mary College and was a Mason and a member of the Episcopal Church. In 1815 he married Malinda Fisher. Their oldest child, Janet S., married Cabel Tavenner.

Henry Howard Withers, son of Alexander S. Withers, was born in Fauquier County in 1824, but was reared at Weston, Virginia, now West Virginia, and was a merchant there and later a farmer. He served almost four years in the Union Army, and assisted with Col. T. M. Harris, and Lieutenant Colonel Hall in organizing the Tenth West Virginia Infantry, of which he was major. While serving in the war he was captured at Frostburg, in the Valley of Virginia and imprisoned in Libby Prison, Richmond, Virginia, where he served six months. About 1845 he acquired 1,000 acres of land at the head of Sinks Creek, but later sold this and bought a farm near Troy in Gilmer County. In the fall of 1869 he was elected sheriff of Gilmer County, and died while holding that office, in 1873. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. In 1844 Major Withers married Dorcas D. Lorentz, who was born at Weston in 1827. Of the seven children of Major Withers three are still living: John S.; Miss Emma, of Webster Springs; and Herbert H., of Glenville.

John Scott Withers was born at Weston July 29, 1847, and during the greater part of his youth lived on a farm in Gilmer County. He attended the public schools, and during the Civil war was a pupil in the Monongahela Academy at Morgantown. In 1870 he was appointed deputy under his father, then sheriff of Gilmer County, and in 1872 was elected superintendent of public schools of Gilmer County. For two years he was in the mercantile business at Glenville, and then studied law in the office of Robert G. Linn and was admitted to the bar in 1879. For twenty years he practiced law at Glenville with Mr. Linn, under the firm name of Linn & Withers, and during that time he was elected and served twelve years as prosecuting attorney of Gilmer County, being first elected in 1880. As a lawyer Mr. Withers became known over a number of West Virginia counties, but he finally abandoned the profession because of its confining nature and engaged in the timber and lumber business, forming a partnership with C. E. Vandevender in 1898. The firm of Withers & Vandevender have its chief offices at Parkersburg, and they also handle real estate and coal properties. Both partners spend their winters at St. Petersburg, Florida, where they own winter homes. Mr. Withers removed his family to Buckhannon some thirty years ago to secure the educational advantages of that city for his children. For many years he has been a stockholder in the Buckhannon Bank, and has been both vice president and president of that institution. He is also a director in the Kanawha Union Bank at Glenville. Mr. Withers is active in Masonry. He is a member of the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a teacher of the Bible Class and a member of the Board of Trustees of the West Virginia Wesleyan College for over thirty years, that institution having conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Laws.

At Glenville September 29, 1875, he married Miss Sabina Holt, who was born at Glenville October 25, 1856, daughter of John F. W. and Elizabeth (McKisic) Holt. Mrs. Withers graduated as a member of the first class in the Glenville State Normal School. Mr. and Mrs. Withers have five children: Olita, born in 1877, graduated from the Conservatory of Music at Granville, Ohio, and from Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, and is the wife of Nelson M. Hooker. Horace Holt Withers, born July 9, 1881, is a graduate of Wesleyan College of Buckhannon, and the law school of West Virginia University, and married Virgie Phillips. Irma, born in 1883, was educated in Wesleyan College and is the wife of Frank R. Ast. Janet Withers, born in 1885, is a graduate of Wesleyan College, and is the wife of Richard H. Packer, of Scottsdale, Pennsylvania. John Henry Withers, the youngest child, was born February 8, 1893, attended the Kentucky Military Institute, Havre Military School at Lima, Indiana, and the West Virginia Wesleyan College. He married Gladys Burkhardt, of Cumberland, Maryland. During the World war he was a sergeant and drill master.

JAMES E. AUUIL. With the sun of life still high and the vigor of mind and body undimmed, James E. Auvil has acquired a good competency through the many years of well bestowed labor and enjoys the comforts of a modern town home in the City of Philippi. His active years were devoted to his farm in Barbour County, and he is still one of the rural property owners in that section.

He represents a family that has been in Barbour County since prior to the Civil war. His grandfather, Daniel Auvil, a native of Germany, came to the United States when a young man and lived in Southern Pennsylvania, following farming. He was twice married, had children by both unions, and all his sons became identified with agriculture, while his daughters married farmers.

Elias Auvil, a son of his second marriage, was the founder of the family in West Virginia. He came from Pennsylvania when a young man and established himself near Valley Furnace in Barbour County. He was a farmer, for some years was a merchant at Valley Furnace, and he lived in that community until his death in December, 1892, when about sixty-eight years of age. He was a minister as well as business man and farmer, and for many years did much to sustain the Brethren Church in his community. His only participation in politics was to vote the democratic ticket. Elias Auvil married Mary Hershman in Preston County. She was a daughter of James Hershman and died in May, 1892. Their children were: George W., a farmer in Barbour County, who died near Valley Furnace, leaving several children: Andrew J., a retired farmer at Tracy; Margaret, now living at Parsons, West Virginia, widow of William Shaffer, who died at Valley Furnace, where he was a farmer; Martha J., who died near Valley Furnace, wife of D. J. Howdershelt; and James Elias.

James Elias Auvil was born near Valley Furnace in Barbour County, June 21, 1861. He attended the common schools, but even while in school had some share of the work on the farm. After reaching his majority he located on a farm in the same community, and he still owns a farm on the west side of the Tygart Valley River. His chief farming industry is grazing, and he made his best profits from handling and dealing in cattle and sheep. He gave many years of labor and intelligent management to the development of the old home place, and sold it in the spring of 1921 and moved to Philippi, where he purchased the property of E. H. Compton. That is now the home of his retired years.

During the many years he spent in rural districts he was a member of the German Baptist or Brethren Church, and took an intelligent interest in every matter affecting the locality. Mr. Auvil cast his first presidential vote for Grover Cleveland in 1884, but has not taken politics seriously.

December 3, 1883, at Valley Furnace, he married Miss Florence Belle Campbell, who was born in that community August 5, 1864, and was educated in the public schools there. She is a daughter of George E. and Elizabeth (Bryan) Campbell. Her father, who was born in Maryland, was educated in Baltimore, where for a time he was in business, and prior to the Civil war came to West Virginia and established a store near Nestorville in Barbour County. He was a merchant for several years and then took up farming. He is now living at Clarksburg, enjoying good health at the great age of ninety-eight. He was born in 1824. His father, George Campbell, was of Scotch ancestry, and came to the United States from England and for many years lived at Baltimore, where he was connected with the shipping and coast traffic. When he retired he joined his son in West Virginia, and died near Valley Furnace. Elizabeth Bryan, wife of George E. Campbell, was a daughter of William Bryan, and she died in 1913, at the age of eighty-four. She was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, was reared and educated in Petersburg, Virginia, and made use of her education to help in Sunday School work and also to provide her children with instruction while they were in school. The children of George E. Campbell and wife were: George, who was a farmer and physician near Kasson, Barbour County, where he died leaving two children; Bedford Campbell, a merchant at Philippi; Albert, a dairyman at Bauubridge, New York; Mrs. Auvil; Laura, wife of Alex Nestor, of Preston County; Littlewood W., of Clarksburg; and Rosa, wife of Albert Shaffer, of Simpson, West Virginia.

Mr. and Mrs. Auvil have seen their children grow up, receive their education and become established in homes of their own, and there are several grandchildren to call them grandparents. Their oldest child, James Britton, foreman of a pipeline company in Texas, is married and has three children, Virgil, Elva and Ray. Rose is the wife of Dorsey W. Cole, a farmer on Pleasant Creek in Barbour County, and they have a daughter, Olive Belle. Olive Myrtle, the second daughter, is a graduate of the West Liberty Normal School of West Virginia and a popular teacher. The youngest child, Anna Laura, is the wife of Loren Cornwell, of Preston County, and has a daughter, Marguerite Fay.

ODIE C. WILLIAMS has made a good accounting of the forty years of his life. He began work early, did farming and public work, but for a number of years his chief business interest has been a thriving general mercantile business at Junior in Barbour County, in the same locality where he grew to manhood.

He was born in Valley District of Barbour County, July 4, 1882. His father, Andrew J. Williams, was born in old Virginia, but spent his active life on a farm in Barbour County, where he died in 1901, at the age of seventy. He married in Barbour County, Miss Julia Row, a native of West Virginia and daughter of Benjamin Row. She died before her husband, the mother of ten children: Mollie, wife of Samuel Elbion, of Junior; Grant, who died in Barbour County, leaving a family; James, who was a farmer and died near Junior; Miss Laura V., deceased; Bird, who married Warren Corley and died near Junior; Dow, deceased; Dora, wife of Samuel Ball and living at Kingsville, West Virginia; W. J., a farmer above Junior; Henrietta, who died in Barbour County, wife of Peter F. Ware; and Odie Charles.

Odie Charles Williams grew up on a farm, gained his education in the country schools, and learned farming as a practical career while at home. He earned his first dollar following the plow, and after his marriage he established himself on a farm and was a grain and stock raiser, and in the intervals was employed on public works. He finally exchanged his farm for the mercantile business of E. E. Swick in Junior, and has since supplied the retail trade of this community from his stock of general merchandise.

Mr. Williams is a member of the County Court, elected in 1918 as the successor of E. A. Wall. He was chairman of the court in 1920. His associates on the board are Ishmael Haddix and Delbert Boyles. Since he became a member the court has in addition to its routine business accomplished a great deal of permanent road work. It has hauled the construction of about nine miles of class A road and six miles of class B, and has constructed a number of concrete bridges in the several districts of the county. Mr. Williams is a republican, having cast his first vote for Colonel Roosevelt. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In Barbour County, December 25, 1899, he married Miss Rosa J. Hymes. They grew up together as children in the Junior community. Her parents, John C. and Phoebe (Edmond) Hymes, had the following children: Mayor Matthew E., of Buckhannon; Mrs. Williams, who was born February 28, 1880; Monroe, who was accidentally killed when a young man while cutting timber; Henry C. and Sherman G., miners at Junior; Lloyd, who died, leaving a son; and James R., of Junior.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Williams are Hazel, Russell C., Buna E., Max Odie and Maxine. The daughter Hazel is the wife of Fred Simmons, of Junior, and they have three children, Mabel, Arlene and Russell.

ARTHUR B. SPENCER went into a coal mine at the age of fourteen. He had an ambition for something better than the routine of a miner's life, and in the intervals of his toil he studied the science and technic of the coal mining industry, testing each fresh instalment of theory in the practical environment of his work. For a number of years he has been one of the responsible executives of the coal business in West Virginia, and at present is superintendent of the Gage Coal & Coke Company at Junior, Barbour County.

Spencer is one of the older family names in the history of West Virginia. The family was first established in Monongalia County, where Arthur B. Spencer's grandfather, Caleb D. Spencer, was born. His grandfather moved to Newburg in the Scotch Hill locality about 1860, and was engaged in farming until the beginning of the Civil war, when he moved to Taylor County, to a new home nine miles east of Grafton. He was one of the very successful men in that agricultural community. He was a Union soldier, was twice wounded in battle, and was rated as one of the expert rifle shots in his company. He had several furloughs, and it is believed that he furloughed at the end of his three years and veteranized for the duration of the war. He was a private soldier, and after the final surrender he returned to the farm and lived at his place near Thornton until 1900. Thereafter he lived a retired life in Kingwood, where he died in October, 1915, at the age of seventy-seven. Caleb D. Spencer was a republican, and believed in doing a citizen's duty without taking the honors of responsibilities of politics. He was the most consistent and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church from boyhood. Caleb Dorsey Spencer, known among his friends as "Doc," married Jane Lewis, of Brandonville, Preston County, daughter of John Lewis. She was a woman of unusual ability and character. She was one of the first women to engage in school work at a time when school teachers were usually men. Her husband at the time of their marriage was unable to write his name, and she taught him writing so that he was able to correspond with her while he was in the army. She was an ideal companion for her husband in every other way, and was deeply concerned in the spiritual welfare of her children. This good woman died in 1900, at the age of sixty-seven. Her memory is particularly cherished by her grandson, Arthur Spencer, who lived with her several years and benefited from her instruction on literary subjects as well as morals.

The children of Caleb D. Spencer and wife were three in number: Thomas Ray; Christian Wilbur, who was killed at the explosion in the Newburg shaft in 1886; and John Lewis, general superintendent of the Twin City Traction lines at St. Paul, Minnesota.

Thomas Ray Spencer was born July 7, 1861, was educated in the common schools and entered the mining industry as a mule driver on Scotch Hill. He married while there, and a few years later went to Fayette County, Pennsylvania, where he followed coal mining three years, and on returning to his native state resumed mining in the Fairmont District. In 1892 he went to Glendale, Marshall County, for two years was fire boss of the Glendale shaft, and in 1894 returned to Fairmont and for two years was assistant foreman with the Newburg Oil, Coal and Coke Company. About that time he gave up mining to engage in farming on his father's old place in Taylor County. In 1897 he became a miner for the Davis Coal and Coke Company at West Virginia Junction, and in 1899 went to Preston County and was mine foreman of the Irona Coal Company, was made superintendent of that company in 1901, and later became general superintendent of the company's Irona and Atlantic Mines. This service he left in 1911, and for one year was at Masontown in the employ of the Elkins Coal and Coke Company, and since then has been a resident of Wellsburg, where he is still at work in the service of the Eagle Glass and Manufacturing Company. Among other experiences he was for eighteen months in charge of the pay roll of the Gage Coal and Coke Company, of which his son is superintendent.

Thomas R. Spencer has been a republican worker in the various communities where he lived and was a member of the Preston County Committee at one time. He has proved himself a friend of education, and has tried to secure better advantages for his own children and children of the same age than he had himself when a boy. By correspondent courses he fitted himself for the duties of foreman and mine superintendent. He has long been an enthusiastic worker in Sunday school organizations, and has organized a number of Sunday schools. He is a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and a Master Mason.

In Preston County in December, 1882, Thomas R. Spencer married Isabel Henry, daughter of William and Helen (McFarland) Henry. Her father was a brother of Lawrence Henry, the pioneer coal operator of Preston County, operating the Newburg Oil, Coal and Coke Company. The Henry Brothers were natives of Scotland, and for many years lived around Scotch Hill, where they are still represented by their children. Isabel Henry was one of thirteen children, eleven of whom grew to mature years, and the other survivors are Mrs. Marion Ralston, Mrs. Agnes Swan, John F. Henry, Lawrence Henry, William Henry, Mrs. Mary A. Jennings and Frank Henry. Isabel Henry was born in December, 1861, and she is mother of the following children: Arthur B., subject of sketch; Christian Wilbur, of Junior; Helen M., wife of G. G. Garner, of Wellsburg; Jane Lewis, wife of Clarence Noah, of Wellsburg; and Jessie, wife of Campbell Hall, of Wellsburg.

Arthur Blaine Spencer made good use of his advantages in the public schools, though the greater part of his education has come since he left school and entered the practical business of life. In 1914 he received his diploma for completing the coal mining course in the International Correspondence School of Scranton, and he has taken several courses on mining engineering. When he went to work at the age of fourteen he was under his father, and his first important promotion came in 1906, when he was made foreman of the Irona Coal Company in Preston County. When his father was promoted to general superintendent the son succeeded him as mine superintendent there. He remained with that company from 1899 until 1907, when he left Irona and moved to Mount Clair, Harrison County, becoming fire boss for the Hutchinson Coal Company. A year later he was transferred to the Meadowbrook Mine of the same company as chief foreman, and after another year he returned to Masontown and was made superintendent of Mine No. 6 of the Elkins Coal and Coke Company. He was in that position eighteen months, and then became mine foreman for the Pittsvein Coal Company in Taylor County at Flemington. In November, 1915, Mr. Spencer came to Junior as superintendent for the Gage Coal and Coke Company, and since November, 1918, has been manager of the company's affairs in this locality.

Mr. Spencer has been under the sense of an obligation to do all he could to provide better educational facilities for the younger generation. He was instrumental in securing the public school for the Gage community where he lived for two years. Since coming to Junior he has built two homes in the little town, was elected a member of the Council in 1918, and in 1920 was elected mayor.

In politics he has been a republican since casting his first vote for William Howard Taft. Fraternally he is a member of both branches of the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, joined the Lodge of Masons at Bridgeport, took the Chapter degree at Philippi, the Scottish Rite Consistory work at Wheeling and is a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is a member of the United Brethren Church, is president of its Board of Trustees, and endeavors to carry a full share of the activities of church membership.

At Terra Alta, September 28, 1903, Mr. Spencer married Mary Belle Bowermaster. The minister performing the service was Rev. Mr. Jones. Mrs. Spencer was born at Bruceton Mills, West Virginia, in October, 1884, daughter of Eben James and Hulda Adaline (Liston) Bowermaster. Her brothers and sisters are Marshall C.; Mrs. Cora Blanche Hawkins, who died at Kingwood; Ira Benjamin, of Kingwood; and John L., of Kingwood. Her father was a cabinet maker and carpenter in early life, later was in the undertaking and furniture business at Bruceton Mills, and about 1885 moved to Kingwood and was in the lumber business, later a hardware merchant, and subsequently developed a general mercantile enterprise there, with which he continued active until 1921, when he retired. He was one of the early members of the West Virginia Hardware Dealers Association. Even J. Bowermaster died March 2, 1922, and was buried on March 4th, his sixty-sixth birthday. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer became the parents of three children: Garold Ray, born November 7, 1904, and died December 7, 1904, Mildred Adeline and John Kenneth.

Some of Mr. Spencer's other activities in the Junior community should be noted. He was one of the promoters and first stockholders in the Merchants and Miners Bank of Junior, and has always felt a personal interest in its success. He organized and became the first president of the Mildred Coal Company, capitalized at $25,000.00, which developed and operated mines on the west side of the Tygart Valley River, near Junior. The Junior Concert Band was organized in March, 1921, and Mr. Spencer has regarded this as one of his hobbies and has been active in perfecting the organization of the body of musicians, which now has a membership of thirty, and is regarded as one of the best amateur bands in the state.

WILLIAM A. COX. While his residence has not been consecutive, William A. Cox was one of the first citizens of Junior in Barbour County, and has played a varied part in the affairs of that mining center. For the greater part of his life from boyhood until he retired he was engaged in mining and coal operations, and it was hard labor that won him substantial success.

He was born in Monongalia County, West Virginia, April 30, 1859, son of William Purnell and Sara Jane (Myers) Cox. His father who was born in Fairmont, in November, 1837, and died in the same city March 19, 1902. He was a boy playmate of Governor Pierpont, the first governor of West Virginia. He could not serve in the Union Army on account of some physical disability. He was a coal miner, and in later years a teamster. He was a republican and a member of the Christian Church. His wife was born in Pennsylvania, but near Blacksville, West Virginia, in August 1839, daughter of William and Mary E. (Walker) Myers. Her grandfather came from Germany and founded the family in this country. Mrs. Sarah Jane Cox is now living at Parkersburg, in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Annie Fleming, and has attained the age of eighty-three. Her children were: William Azareal; Mary, who died at Parkersburg in 1917, wife of William Haught; Clara, who died unmarried; John M., of Jackson County; Mrs. Annie Fleming; Minnie, wife of Frank Morris, of Parks, Texas; Lloyd; and Ella, Mrs. Omer Dils, of Ravenswood, West Virginia.

William A. Cox when a boy went with his parents to Germantown, Ohio, where his family had their home until 1867. Returning to West Virginia, they located at Palatine, now the First Ward of Fairmont. William A. Cox had little opportunity to attend school, and most of his reading and study were done by the light of the open fire in his home. At the age of fourteen he went into the mine with his father as a coal digger, later as mule-driver, and subsequently as boss driver. From Fairmont he went to Wilsonburg, where he dug coal four years, and in 1888 removed to George's Creek, Maryland, and dug coal at the Big Vein Mine there. In the fall of 1883 he opened a mine for the Atlantic and George's Creek Consolidate Company in Mineral County, and for this company was subsequently roadman and night boss. He returned to Fairmont, and for a year was with the Aurora mines, and then returned to Elk Garden, to the Atlantic Mine. In 1891 he made two openings at Womelsdorf for the Womelsdorf Coal Company, and the following year established his family there.

It was from Womelsdorf that he came to Junior in 1899. That place was still called Rowtown, and the name Junior was given the locality in honor of Junior Davis, a son of Senator Henry Gassaway Davis. Mr. Cox helped incorporate Junior as a town, carried the chain when the town site was surveyed, and he was chosen the first mayor of the new corporation. In the fall of 1894 he went to work in the local mine, later was promoted to mine foreman and spent seven years with the Davis Coal Company. From here he removed to Lillian as superintendent of the Baltimore Smokeless Coal Company, and was promoted to general manager before he left the service of that company a few years later.

This was his last active work as a coal man, though he has been more or less directly or indirectly interested in coal mining. For eighteen months he was a road salesman for the Friction Rail Brake Company of Charleston and gave up that business to take up the study of chiropractic at Belington, and practiced that profession at Middleport, Pomeroy and Racine, Ohio, and at Red Fox, West Virginia. For ten years Mr. Cox was in business Greensburg, Pennsylvania, as proprietor of the Key-Stone Bottling Works. He made a success of the business, probably expended more arduous labor in doing so than in any other occupation that engaged him. On leaving Greensburg in 1915 Mr. Cox returned to Junior, and to the first real vacation he had ever had. For about two years he lived at Parkersburg, assisting in the care of his aged mother, and did not leave her until her health was completely restored.

Mr. Cox grew up in a republican household, but cast his first presidential vote for James B. Weaver of Iowa, the populace and greenback candidate. He was reared a Methodist and leaned toward that faith, though his mother is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Cox was made an Odd Fellow in Philos Lodge at Westport, Maryland, in 1881, is a past noble grand of the lodge and a past grand representative. He became a member of the Knights of Pythias at Piedmont, West Virginia, and is a past chancellor of that Lodge and has sat in Grand Lodge a number of times. In March, 1902, he instituted a Knights of Pythias Lodge at Junior, and was made its first chancellor.

At Oakland, Maryland, November 23, 1882, William A. Cox married Miss Addie L. Fimple, daughter of John T. and Mary (Compton) Fimple, the latter a daughter of Henry Compton. The Fimples are a family of French origin, and her grandfather, Job Fimple, was the first to come to West Virginia. John T. Fimple was a Union soldier in the Civil war, under Capt. T. Maulsby. Mrs. William A. Cox died September 23, 1893, motherly of the following children: Mary J., wife of William Hunt, of Junior; W. Fred, who lives at Junior and married Amy Valentine; Grace, wife of William Miller, of Junior; Howard Dawson, of Junior; Myrtle, wife of Frank Pingley, of Lebanon Church, Virginia; and Charles, of Junior.

Howard D. Cox is one of the prominent coal operators at Junior. He had a public school education, and at the age of fifteen went to work in the mines with his father. On leaving the mine work at Lillian he spent three years in the stone quarry business as an employee of R. G. Haskins, of Barbour County. For another three years he worked in the mines and paper mills at Luke, Maryland, and Junior, West Virginia. For the following year he was at Winter Haven, Polk County, Florida, in the service of its old employer, Haskins, who was promoting an orange grove. On returning North he became associated in 1911 with his father in the bottling business at Greensburg, but on April 1, 1915, returned to Junior and again took up mining for the Davis Colliery Company. In August, 1916, he was made machine man for the Gage Coal and Coke Company, and since December of the same year has been that company's mine foreman as successor of Opha G. Shomo, who lost his life by accident at the mine.

Howard D. Cox was one of the active promoters of the Merchants and Miners Bank of Junior, has served it as director continuously and is its vice president. He also helped organize the Mildred Coal Company, was its first vice president and has been in charge of its operations. He has been a member of the Town Council of Junior and town recorder, and during the war was one of the leaders in the locality in promoting the sale of bonds and other securities. For almost a year he was acting postmaster of Junior. He is a republican, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternally he joined the Junior Lodge of Odd Fellows at the age of twenty-one, is a past noble grand, and in Masonry is a member of the Lodge at Belington, the Royal Arch Chapter at Philippi, and the Consistory at Wheeling.

December 14, 1912, Howard D. Cox married Hattie Price, daughter of Israel and Harriet (Arbogast) Price. She was born on a farm in Randolph County, West Virginia, September 29, 1893. The oldest child of her parents is Sherman, who has rounded out ten years of service with the Regular Army and was with the American Contingent of troops in Russian Siberia. Francis, the next son, lives at Grafton. George is a resident of Junior. The two youngest are Mrs. Cox and Israel, twins. Israel was a soldier in the famous Rainbow Division in France, and was with the first troops to reach Coblenz with the Army of Occupation. Mr. and Mrs. Howard D. Cox have five children: Forest Hugh, Christine May, Dorothy Ellen, Mary Frances and William Arthur.

CHARLES A. SINSEL, M. D. A thoroughly trained and educated physician and surgeon, Doctor Sinsel rendered his first service with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and this connection broadened into a permanent one. For over thirty years he has been medical examiner of this railroad company at Grafton. In the choice of this line of service there was doubtless exercised some influence from his father, who for many years was a local official of the Baltimore & Ohio.

Three Sinsel brothers came to America as British soldiers to fight the colonists in their struggle for independence. They were captured, and eventually found it congenial to their interests to remain in America, where they found useful employment in their trades as millwrights. They settled in Virginia. Elijah, son of one of these soldiers, was a native of Old Virginia and transplanted the family over the mountains to West Virginia, settling near Webster, in what is now Taylor County. There he obtained a large tract of land, put some of it into cultivation during his lifetime, and was buried at the family plot there.

John Sinsel, a son of Elijah and grandfather of Doctor Sinsel, likewise spent his life on the homestead near Webster and was laid to rest on the farm. His wife was Sarah Curry, a native of Barbour County. Their children were: Harmon, who became a civil engineer; William, Elijah and James, who were farmers; Mrs. Mary Ann Newlon; and Mrs. Williamson.

Arthur Sinsel, another of these children, was born on a farm near Pruntytown, Taylor County, in August, 1838, and was educated in the country schools and old Pruntytown College. He then taught school and learned the trade of cabinet-maker and carpenter with an uncle in Pruntytown. When the Civil war came on he was commissioned a lieutenant in the army, but he was soon detailed for civilian service in the bridge-building department of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. This fixed him in the service with which he remained to the close of his life. For many years he was supervisor of buildings, bridges and water stations. He was killed by being run over by an engine in the Wheeling yards January 25, 1889.

While never an applicant for the honors or offices, he was active in republican politics, a member of the State Republican Committee several years and also of the Executive Committee. For thirty years he was president of the Board of Education of Grafton District, was a deacon of the Baptist Church and a worker in the Sunday School, and was an ardent Mason, being a past grand high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter of the state.

Arthur Sinsel married Hannah B. See, who was born in Randolph County, West Virginia, December 31, 1837, daughter of Charles and Harriet (Bosworth) See. The Bosworths, an old family of the state, were direct descendants of the famous Warwicks of England. Mrs. Arthur Sinsel, who died in August, 1893, was the mother of eight children, the seven to reach mature years being: Columbia M., who was the wife of the late Judge A. G. Dayton; Miss Abbie T., of Grafton; Dr. Charles Arthur; Ala, wife of the distinguished Judge Ira E. Robinson, former judge of the State Supreme Court of Appeals and now connected with the Department of Justice at Washington; John W., who was United States revenue agent at New York for years and died at Philadelphia in 1919; Miss Mary H., of Grafton; and Carrie S., wife of C. Frank Sellers, of Mansfield, Ohio.

Charles Arthur Sinsel was born at Pruntytown, Taylor County, June 5, 1864, and may be said to have grown up in the atmosphere of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. While attending school he worked during vacations at civil engineering and at the machinist's trade. Following his public school course at Grafton came two years in West Virginia University and two years in Dennison University at Granville, Ohio. For a year he studied medicine under Dr. William L. Grant at Grafton, and then entered the University of Maryland, at Baltimore, where he was graduated in medicine in 1888.

His first duties after getting his medical diploma were as Baltimore & Ohio medical examiner for the west end of the Chicago division, including that city, his headquarters being at Garrett, Indiana. About a year later, on the death of his father, he returned home, and in a short time was inducted into the duties of medical examiner for the Monongah division and part of the Charleston division of the Baltimore & Ohio, and he has continued faithful and efficient in the discharge of his duties at this post for a third of a century. He is a member of the county and state medical societies, the American Medical Association, and the Railway Surgeons Association.

Doctor Sinsel is one of West Virginia's prominent Masons. He has taken all the work of the York and Scottish Rites and held offices in all the local bodies; is a K. C. C. H., a member of West Virginia Consistory at Wheeling, is a Past Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar, West Virginia, a life member of the Grand Encampment of the United States, and is inner guard of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is also affiliated with the Odd Fellows and Elks, is a deacon of the Baptist Church of Grafton and teacher of the Philathia Bible Class.

He has rather strengthened the ties that bound him by inheritance to the republican party. His first public service was as school commissioner for four years, then a similar time as president of the Board of Education. In 1914 he was elected to the House of Delegates for one term, and then elected a member of the State Senate. He entered that body under Lieutenant Governor Goodykoontz, and in the second session appeared as an eleventh hour candidate for president of the Senate, and after an interesting contest was elected. He went to the Senate as successor of a democrat who for eight years had represented the Eleventh District, composed of Marion, Monongalia and Taylor counties. He gave a studious and impartial attention to the program of legislation before that body, and at the special session was active in behalf of woman's suffrage. Doctor Sinsel was a spectator in the national convention at Chicago in 1884 when James G. Blaine was nominated, and he has been a delegate to a number of state, judicial and congressional conventions. He did much to defeat the aspirations of such well-known democrats as William L. Wilson and William G. Brown to represent the Second District in Congress.

April 4, 1889, Doctor Sinsel married in Taylor County Miss Bertie Creel, daughter of J. W. and Mary (Whitescarver) Creel. She died in February, 1897, the mother of two children: Charles A., Jr., connected with the Cambria Coal Company; and Lila, wife of D. L. Cather, of Flemington. On June 19, 1901, Doctor Sinsel married May Davidson, daughter of C. L. and Mary M. (Johnson) Davidson. Doctor and Mrs. Sinsel have twin sons, Rupert Austin and Richard Claudius, aged seventeen, and graduates of the Grafton High School in 1922.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SHOMO has been the source of a large amount of the business energy and enterprise that have made the town of Junior a good place to live in. He is an interesting example of what an ambitious young man without capital beyond his own earnings and savings can accomplish in the span of a few years.

His family has been in West Virginia from the early history of the state. In Colonial times the Shomos came to America from Germany, and the family was established in West Virginia from the eastern part of the Old Dominion. The grandfather of the Junior business man was Joseph Shomo, probably a native of Barbour County. He was a blacksmith and farmer, and had a shop near Junior on his farm. During the Civil war he was a blacksmith in the service of the Union Army. There have been numerous mechanics in the family, especially blacksmiths and carpenters. George N. Shomo had a limited education, but was a skilled workman and a good citizen. He was a Methodist and a republican. He married Jennie Viquesne, sister of L. N. and Jules A. Viquesne, mentioned elsewhere. His sisters and brothers were Charles, John, Ivy (who became the wife of Stephen Daniels), Irvin V. and Miss Sarah.

Frank Shomo, who is known by that brief name instead of his full christian name, was born in Barbour County, August 9, 1877, and is a son of George N. Shomo, a native of the same county. He was reared in Barker District, attended the common schools, and expended his early efforts on the farm. On reaching his majority he learned the trade of barber in Junior, and for several years was proprietor of a shop. This was the business that gave him his first capital, and he used it to take up photography, maintaining his art gallery for a number of years, his son finally succeeding him. At different intervals Mr. Shomo also worked in the coal mines around Junior.

He had an ambition to become a coal operator, and finally, with C. W. Sandridge, established the City Grove Coal Company and developed one of the producing mines at Junior. They operated the plant together for some time, and are still interested as owners of the lease and part of the property.

Another direction taken by Mr. Shomo's enterprise was the moving picture business. In 1912, with Walter Bales, he put on the first show at Junior and unrolled the first reel of pictures in the town. The opening night convinced the firm of the popularity of their venture, and Mr. Shomo has continued in the business ever since. The original plant was destroyed by fire in 1914, but was immediately rebuilt. Mr. Shomo is also associated with the Willys Light Plants Agency, for the sale of domestic light plants. His son has recently taken a course of practical instruction at Toledo, the home of the business, for the installation of these plants. Mr. Shomo was one of the first stockholders and is a director of the Merchants and Miners Bank of Junior. He has served on the Town Council, and in politics is a republican, casting his first vote for McKinley in 1900.

In Barbour County in 1901 Mr. Shomo married Miss Ieie M. Row, who was born at what is now the town of Junior, being the youngest of the family of two daughters of Jackson and Mary (Fitzgerald) Row. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Shomo is the son Cecil, who for several years has been an active associate of his father.

CLIFTON W. SANDRIDGE. The career of Mr. Sandridge represents a service of nearly thirty years to the great West Virginia coal industry. He has been mechanic and machinist, practical miner, superintendent and operator, and hardly anything important involved in the problems of coal mining in this state have escaped his experience. For a number of years his interests have been centered at Junior in Barbour County, where he is president of the Big Chief Coal Company.

Mr. Sandridge was born in Union District, Upshur County, December 12, 1871. His father John Frederick Sandridge, who was born at Monterey in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia in June, 1844, and was eight years of age when his parents, Lindsay and Lucy (Smith) Sandridge, moved to Upshur County, where Lindsay spent the rest of his life on his farm near Buckhannon. The three sons and two daughters of Lindsay Sandridge were: Sophie, who married Kinsey Ward and died in Upshur County; Luther, who was a Union soldier four years, and died in Upshur County; Jesse, whose life was spent in that county; John F.; Cornelia, who married David Oldaker, and died in Upshur County.

John F. Sandridge had few school advantages when a boy. He was only seventeen when he became a soldier of the Confederacy. Thus he differed from his brother in course of allegiance, and this was one of many families represented on both sides of the war. He was in General Lee's army, participated in many of the historic battles of the Virginia campaigns, but only once was wounded, by a spent ball which struck his right shin. The wound, though a minor one, always gave him trouble and eventually caused his death. After the war he followed farming and finally retired to Atlantic, West Virginia, where he died August 5, 1905. In Barbour County, 1867, he married Miss Almanza Layman, daughter of Wesley Layman. She died in Upshur County, October 26, 1895, mother of the following children: Rosa deceased wife of Jeff D. Kuhn; May, who married George Stillwell, of Grafton; Lee J., president of the Meriden Coal Mining Company of Philippi; Clifton Wade, of Junior; Annie L., wife of B. T. Duckworth, of Barbour County; Willis H., deputy state mine inspector living at Grafton; Apalona, who married Arthur Hoffman; Grace, who died in Upshur County, wife of Fred Wilson; Frank, superintendent of the Will Lukins Coal Company of Upshur County; and Bessie, who died in infancy.

Clifton Wade Sandridge lived on the farm with his parents until he was seventeen years of age, and in the meantime had attended the free schools a term or so every year. When he left home his first employment was in construction work of the grade of the Baltimore and Ohio branch from Buckhannon up to the Buckhannon River to Pickens. His salary was $1.35 for ten hours of work. Following that he worked three years at common labor around saw mills, part of the time with the Alexander Lumber Company and then for O. P. Stroh. After that he returned to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad as one of its bridge repair force.

This is a brief summary of his practical experience before he took-up the coal mine industry. His first work in that field was as carpenter for a company operating at Berryburg, and after a year he became machinist for the same company, and thus served two years. For another two years he was machinist for the Meriden Coal Company. For two years he was superintendent of the Atlantic and Irona in Preston County for the J. H. Weaver Coal Company. Returning to the Meriden Coal Company, he was for two years superintendent of its mine, and he then left West Virginia and after riding practically across the continent became superintendent of a mine at Bebo, Montana, where he remained eighteen months. On returning East Mr. Sandridge entered the service of the Davis Colliery Company, now the West Virginia Coal and Coke Company, but the mine in which he was employed soon closed and for two following years he was superintendent of the Raleigh Coal and Coke Company at Raleigh.

Since 1899 Mr. Sandridge's working experience has been in Junior, Barbour County. Here he engaged in merchandising and for two years or more sold goods. For eight months he was in the service of Arnold Brothers, prospecting a tract of land for coal. For three months he was a practical miner, digging coal for the Davis Coal and Coke Company. Mr. Sandridge became an independent coal operator in 1917, associated with E. F. Shomo, under the name of D. M. Sandridge Coal Company, operating the City Grove Mine. This mine was an active producer for about three years. In the meantime Mr. Sandridge became associated with G. W. Shomo, W. V. McIntyre and Ed Everhart in opening a new mine, the Big Chief, at Junior, which has been in active operation since the early part of 1921.

Mr. Sandridge has been personally interested in some of the enterprises at Junior requiring co-operation on the part of all progressive business men and citizens. His action in assuming the purchase of a block of unsold stock assured the success of the move to organize the Merchants and Miners Bank of Junior, and he is still a stockholder in that institution, which has grown and prospered. He served two terms as a member of the Town Council of Junior, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Sandridge cast his first presidential vote for Grover Cleveland in 1892. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for two years he was president of the Board of Stewards and is now superintendent of the Sunday School.

May 2, 1900, in Preston County, Mr. Sandridge married Miss Dossia May White, who was born near Kingwood, October 6, 1878, second among the six children of Jacob E. and Margaret (Feather) White, who were farmers in Preston County, and the daughter grew up on the farm and was educated in local schools. Her brothers and sisters were: Ida, Mrs. Walter Montgomery; Alice, wife of Walter Taylor; Sherman; Roy; Cora, wife of H. C. Daniels. Mr. and Mrs. Sandridge have four children, Ruth, Charles, Howard and Martha. Ruth is the wife of Cecil Shomo, and they have one child, Carroll.

GOLDEN FRANK ROW. The important industrial town of Junior stands on and adjacent to the original holdings of the pioneer Row family in this section of Barbour County, and some of the family were identified with merchandising there before the present name was given the village. Golden Frank Row is one of the younger generation of the family, and while he has been a miner, educator and in other lines of usefulness, his chief interest for some years past has been conducting a store.

His pioneer ancestors here were his grandfather, Andrew Jackson Row, and his great-grandfather, Benjamin Row, who came from Page County, Virginia, and the latter built a mill on the Tygart Valley River and continued its operation until his death, when he was succeeded in its ownership by his only son, Andrew J. Benjamin Row, is buried on the hill within the corporation limits of Junior. Andrew J. Row was a merchant as well as a miller, and he continued in business at Junior for a number of years. He died there in 1905, at the age of seventy-three. He was a member of the Dunkard Church and in politics a republican. Andrew J. Row married Delia Williams, and she was the mother of the following children: William A., Mrs. Mary Brady, James B., Mrs. Celia Wilson, Mrs. Virginia Thorn, Mrs. Roxanna Arbogast and Mrs. Margaret Thornhill. The second wife of Andrew J. Row was Mary K. Fitzgerald, and the children of that union were: Belle, who married S. S. Bolton; Fannie, who became the wife of A. K. Perry; and Lela, wife of B. F. Shomo.

William A. Row was born in Barker District of Barbour County, November 27, 1856. He attended local schools, and through all his active years has been connected with farming and mining. He became president of the Row Coal Company. He has always voted as a republican, and is a member of the German Baptist Church. William A. Row married Sarah E. Coffman, daughter of Frank Coffman. Their children were: William J., a farmer and minister of the Church of the Brethren at Junior, who married Pearl Hayes; Cora V., of Junior, widow of Charles Hillyard; Ada D., who married W. R. Shomo, of Junior; Mattie, wife of William Corrick, of Cumberland, Maryland; Golden P.; Leonard H., connected with the mines of Junior, who married Hazel Powley; Miss Zeta, a former teacher at Junior; Miss Hallie; and Gladys, wife of William McNemar, of Junior.

Golden Frank Row was born in Barker District, October 6, 1884, and the public schools gave him his early advantages and his work training was largely the labor of the farm until he went into the mines. He did work in the mines as early as the age of thirteen, and for six years was a factor in the actual mining at Junior. He turned from that vocation to become a house painter and paper hanger, and he supplied most of the service in this line in his community for about seven years. Following that he became a teacher in the Junior School, and taught there four terms. Since then he has been a merchant, engaging in that line of business in the early winter of 1913.

Mr. Row was secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Row Coal Company, incorporated November 27, 1918, with a mine at Dartmoore, near Junior. This property was sold in June, 1920, to W. J. Flanagan of Pittsburgh, and was then incorporated as the Ida May Coal Company. Mr. Row helped organize in 1918 the Merchants and Miners Bank of Junior, is a stockholder, is second vice president and a director. On July 28, 1917, he was commissioned for a term of ten years as notary public.

While a busy man with his private affairs, Mr. Row has performed some kind of public service practically since reaching manhood. He cast his first presidential vote for William Howard Taft, and has been influential in the republican party in his district. In June, 1919, he was appointed postmaster of Junior, as the successor of F. A. Matthew. He was one of the few republicans appointed to postmastership during the democratic administration. Besides acting as postmaster he has served since his election in 1918 as a member of the Barker District Board of Education, and in 1921 was appointed registrar of vital statistics by State Registrar Carl F. Raver, his duties being to record and report births and deaths and to issue burial permits.

At Junior, April 14, 1910, Mr. Row married Irma Yaple, daughter of William and Ellen (Bennett) Yaple. She was born in Athens County, Ohio, September 25, 1885, and had a grammar school education. Mrs. Row died October 14, 1918, leaving her husband and young children to mourn her loss. The children born to their union were: Maurice F., born February 11, 1911; Harold W., born May 12, 1912; Jessie, born September 6, 1913, and died in infancy; Orion Yaple, born May 7, 1915; and Eileen Ellen, born April 5, 1918.

NELSON B. MICHAEL, M. D. The good service proceeding from his knowledge and skill as a physician and surgeon Doctor Michael has exercised chiefly for the benefit of the people of the prosperous little mining community of Junior in Barbour County. His father was also a physician, and the family is one of the older ones of Preston County.

His grandfather, William G. Michael, was born in the vicinity of Brandonville, Preston County, and devoted his active life to the farm. He was in the Union army at the time of the Civil war, and received an injury while on duty, though not on a battlefield. He frequently attended the reunions of his comrades, was a republican and a member of the United Brethren Church. He died on his farm near Fellowsville about 1881. William G. Michael married Mary Forsyth, and they had a family of five sons and four daughters.

Dr. John F. Michael, father of the physician at Junior, was born near Fellowsville in Preston County, April 17, 1842, and his varied gifts made him a useful man throughout his career. At the time of the Civil war he enlisted in the Seventeenth West Virginia Infantry and served three years as a Union soldier. In one battle he was wounded in the thigh. Soon after the war he married, and then employed his liberal education to teach school for a number of years and also farmed. For about a dozen years he operated a grist-mill between Tunnelton and Fellowsville. He left milling to begin the study of medicine, reading in the office of Doctor Kennedy at Grafton, and with Doctor Harvey at Tunnelton, and later entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, where he graduated in 1883. He returned to his home community to practice, and was one of the busy professional men of Preston County for a quarter of a century. After two or three years he moved from his home in the country to Fellowsville, and a short time before his death he went to Morgantown to live with a son, E. W., where he died September 26, 1910.

Dr. John F. Michael married Annie Myers, daughter of Daniel Myers, who married a Miss Wiles. Mrs. John Michael is still living, and divides her time among her children. These children comprise a notable family of nine sons, and there is not a daughter in the family. A brief record of the sons is as follows: Rev. Albert E., a Methodist minister near Fairmont, who married Sarah C. Clair and has three children: Doctor Willis S., who is a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, in practice at Bower, West Virginia, and married Lena Roy and has three children: Ezra W., of Phoenix, Arizona, who married Della Bollyard; Oliver O., of Pittsburgh, who married Sarah Shahan and has four children; Doctor Nelson Burton; J. Frank, veterinary surgeon of Buckhannon, who married Annie Pratt; Jasper K., unmarried and associated with his brother in Arizona in the real estate business; Charles Walter, a Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph operator at Terra Alta, who married Annie Watkins, who died leaving four children; Harvey R., telegraph operator of the Baltimore and Ohio at Piedmont, who married Mattie Moore and has two children.

Nelson B. Michael was born near the village of Fellowsville, December 9, 1874, his birthplace being within three miles of that of his father. He had learned to support himself and provide for his needs before he became a physician, and was a teacher before he entered medical college. He acquired his own education in public schools and in the Fairmont State Normal School. He taught for five terms, his last work as a teacher being done at Thomas, West Virginia. He left there to enroll as a student in the Maryland Medical College at Baltimore, from which he graduated in 1904. Doctor Michael practiced for two years at Rock Cave in Upshur County, and in 1908 moved his residence to Junior. He carries on an extensive practice, largely among the miners of this locality for eight years, until the mines closed down. He then moved to Hendrick in Tucker County, where he practiced three years, after which he returned to Junior, and now regards that as his permanent home. Doctor Michael is a member of the Tri-County, West Virginia State and American Medical associations. He has been town health officer of Junior, also a member of the Common Council, but has never been in politics beyond voting the republican ticket, beginning with the McKinley campaign of 1896. Doctor Michael is not a member of any fraternity, and he and his wife are Methodists.

On July 29, 1908, at Hendricks, West Virginia, Doctor Michael married Rachel Roy, daughter of Washington J. and Catherine (Simmons) Roy. She was born in Tucker County, October 25, 1881, and was educated in the public schools. Of the two children of Doctor and Mrs. Michael, Blake Allison, the youngest, was born May 7, 1910. Loyal, the first born, died aged five months.

ELIJAH ELSWORTH CLOVIS, M. D. The State Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Terra Alta was established in 1911, and the initial quarters were first opened for the reception of patients in January, 1913. From the beginning the superintendent of the sanitarium has been Doctor Clovis, a West Virginia surgeon and physician who successfully combated the white plague as his personal enemy, and soon after recovering came to his present office and responsibilities.

Doctor Clovis was born at Hebron, West Virginia, August 27, 1879. His grandfather, Solomon Clovis, was a native of Pennsylvania and many years before the Civil war moved from Greene County, that state, and bought Falls Mills at Shiloh, West Virginia. Later he located at Hebron, where he became a manufacturer of brick and tile, also conducted a tan yard, and continued active in those lines of business the rest of his life. He married Elizabeth Wrick, a native of Hebron in Pleasants County. Their children comprised three sons and four daughters, and the three sons and one daughter, Mrs. Samantha Wagner, are still living. The sons are Benjamin, Theodore and Amos. The two older sons were Union soldiers in the Civil war. Amos Clovis was born in Pleasants County in 1854 and he took up farming as his vocation instead of giving his attention to the factory or the merchant's counter. He was active in this line until advanced years came on, and he still lives on the farm. He and the other members of the family have been very staunch republicans, but none of them have been active in political affairs. Amos Clovis is a member of the Church of Christ. In Hebron he married Martha J. Fleming, who was born at Fairmont in 1856, daughter of Enoch Fleming. Their children are: W. Edward, who has the Ford automobile agency at St. Marys, Dr. Elijah Elsworth; Cora, wife of Homer F. Simonton, of St. Marys; Harry T., of St. Marys; and Lawrence, a drug clerk at Huntington.

Elijah Elsworth Clovis grew up around Hebron, where the country air and the life of the farm contributed to his physical development. He attended the public schools, taught school four years in a country district, and at the same time carried on his studies in high school branches preparatory to entering medical college. Doctor Clovis was graduated in 1905 from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, where he specialized in diseases of the chest. After graduation he practiced five years at Hebron, giving up his professional work when threatened with a breakdown from tubercular trouble. He employed his will power and his professional knowledge in his own behalf, and for two years lived in the healthful atmosphere around

E. E. Glavin.

Asheville, in Western North Carolina. He practically recovered his normal health there and then returned to West Virginia, and in August, 1912, entered upon his duties as superintendent of the Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Terra Alta.

This institution had provision for only sixty patients when it was opened in January, 1913. By June of that year the full quota of patients had been received. Subsequent additions were made to the facilities by sixty more beds in 1916, forty more in 1919 and forty in 1920, so that at present there are accommodations for 200 patients, and there is a long waiting list of applicants, indicating the need for such an institution and also for additional facilities of that kind. During the past nine years the sanitarium has treated more than 2,000 patients, and a large number of them have been out five or six years after being discharged as cured.

Doctor Clovis, on account of his position and also his individual attainments, is one of the widely known professional men in the state. He is president of the Preston county Medical Society, a member of the West Virginia State and American Medical associations and the American Sanitarium Association. He was made a Mason at Elbon and is a past master of that lodge, a member of Isis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a member of the Official Board of the Terra Alta Methodist Church.

At Elbon January 1, 1904, Doctor Clovis married Miss ara McKnight, who was born there, a daughter of James McKnight. Mrs. Clovis finished her early education at the Carroll High School, and was a teacher before her marriage, doing her last work in the grade school at Whiskey Run, Ritchie County. Doctor and Mrs. Clovis have two daughters, Mildred and Madaline.

CHARLES W. SHOMO is a business man of sound judgment who has had responsibilities of an executive nature in the community of Junior for a number of years. He was the first president of the only banking institution in the town, and is now its cashier—the Merchants and Miners Bank.

He was born on a farm near the little town, October 13, 1873, and is a son of George N. and Virginia (Vignesne) Shomo. His mother was a sister of Jules A. Vignesne elsewhere mentioned in this work. Other pages likewise refer some detail to the history of the Shomo family. George Shomo died at the age of fifty-six, and his widow still lives at Junior, at the age of seventy. Their children were: Charles W., William R., a farmer near Junior; Benjamin ark, of Junior; Cora, wife of J. C. Bibey, of Junior; Madeline, who married John Montgomery and died at Junior, leaving three sons; George W., station agent of the Western Maryland Railroad Company at Junior; Eugene, a coal miner of Junior; and Carrie, who died as the wife of Charles F. Bennett.

Charles Winslow Shomo grew up on the old home farm, and his elementary education in the public schools, attended summer normals, and prepared for his business career with a course in Elliott's Commercial College at Wheeling. He taught school six terms, and for a time was charge of the school where he had learned his early lessons. He finished teaching in the West Junior School. Giving up a career as an educator, he turned to business as manager for the Miller Supply Company at Junior. He was with that firm three years and then became office manager for the Gage Coal and Coke Company, a corporation in which he remained from 1911 to 1919.

Mr. Shomo helped promote and organize the Merchants and Miners Bank at Junior. The bank was chartered in 1917 and opened for business March 4, 1918, with Mr. Shomo as the first president, while the other officers were W. Windom and A. K. Perry, vice presidents, and H. H. Drews, cashier, with Robert E. Davis and Howard D. Cox, directors. The president of the bank now is A. K. Perry, president, Howard D. Cox and G. Frank Row, and since 1919 Mr. Shomo has assumed the active executive duties of cashier. Other directors are J. W. Miller, B. F. Shomo and J. Corley. The bank retains its original capital of $25,000. The total resources at the end of the first year's business was $95,000, and this item has since reached the figure of $260,000. The bank has paid dividends from the beginning, and the deposits at a high mark reached $225,000. It has a surplus of over $7,000.

Mr. Shomo has been a member of the Common Council of Junior, city recorder and for five terms was mayor. He is also very familiar with the municipal history of the town. He is a republican, having cast his first vote for Major McKinley, and has served as district committeeman and delegate to conventions. He is a charter member of the Knights of Pythias Lodge at Junior, a past chancellor and has sat in the Grand Lodge. He is active in the Methodist Episcopal Church and is church treasurer and has served as superintendent of the Sunday school.

May 31, 1896, at Junior, he married Miss Maud M. Elbon, daughter of S. R. and Mary C. (Williams) Elbon. Mrs. Shomo was born on a farm in Valley District in April, 1880, the second in a family of four children. The only child born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Shomo was a daughter, Hazel Beatrice, born in 1897, and died in October, 1900.

WILLIE J. WILLIAMS. With the coal mining that constitutes the principal industrial activity of the Junior locality in Barbour County Willie J. Williams has been identified nearly all the years since he attained his majority, first as a practical miner and later as an operator. He is president of the Mildred Coal Company there.

Mr. Williams was born in Valley District of Barbour County, October 21, 1877. His father, Andrew Jackson Williams, was born in Bath County, Virginia, and as a young man accompanied his parents to West Virginia, the family locating near Laurel Hill Mountain, where his father spent the rest of his life as a farmer. Besides Andrew J. the other children were Robert S., George and Benjamin, all of whom went to the Western States; Mary, who married Milton Curtis and lives at Rich Mountain in Randolph County; Sarah, who became the wife of Mark Carter and died at Coalton, West Virginia; Celia, who married Bud Wright and both died near Belington; and Mrs. Noah Sluss, who lives in California.

Andrew J. Williams had only a limited education during his boyhood, and his working energies were bestowed almost entirely upon the farm. He was a Union man during the Civil war, and some of his brothers were in the Union Army. He died at his old home in Valley District in 1898, at the age of sixty-three. His wife was Julia Row, daughter of Benjamin Row, and she died, the mother of the following children: Mary, wife of S. R. Elbon, of Junior; Sarah, who married John Shomo; Henrietta, who became Mrs. Peter F. Ware; Lillie, who married Charles Shomo; Grant, twin brother of Lillie, now deceased; Julia and Celia, twins, both deceased, Celia, having been the wife of Warren Corley and Julia, wife of I. D. Shomo; James M., who died at Junior; Lorenzo, also deceased; Dora, wife of Samuel Ball, of Kingsville, West Virginia; and Willie Jackson.

Willie J. Williams spent his early life on the home farm in Valley District, and his education came from the old German school in that locality. As a school boy he became acquainted with systematic labor on the farm, and on reaching his majority began his career in the mines. His first employment was as a coal digger on the property of the Miller Coal & Coke Company, which subsequently was sold to the Gage Coal and Coke Company and finally to the West Virginia Coal and Coke Company. He was in the employ of all these organizations.

The Williams Coal Company was organized in 1917 by Willie J. and Grant L. Williams, Mittie Wiseman and Loma Lipscomb. These owners had in partnership some coal lands, and developed operations near those of the Gage Coal and Coke Company. During the World war the mine was operated first as a wagon mine and later under an arrangement with the Gage Coal and Coke Company. Willie J. Williams was manager. In 1920 the Mildred Coal Company opened its mine, and since November, 1921, Mr. Williams has been manager of the property and president of the company. This is one of the few coal mines in active production during the winter of 1921-22.

Mr. Williams has been a regular republican since casting his first vote for McKinley in 1900. He is a member and has served as steward of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

At Junior, February 3, 1899, Mr. Williams married Mrs. Lillie Williams, widow of his deceased brother Grant, and daughter of Jacob Spotswood Thacker of Philippi. By her first marriage she had three children: Grant L., Mrs. Mittie Wiseman and Mrs. Loma Lipscomb. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have the following children: Fax, a miner of Junior; J. Hop, J. Spotswood and Phletus. Grant L. Williams, son of Mrs. Williams by her first marriage, was a soldier in the World war, and was on the firing line ready to go over the top when the hour of the armistice arrived. After returning home he took up mining, and is now mine foreman of the Mildred Mine.

GEORGE W. SHOMO. In his younger years George W. Shomo had considerable experience as a farmer, barber and coal miner, none of which satisfied him as a permanent occupation. Railroad service proved more attractive. He entered it through the telegraphic branch, and for over fifteen years has been one of the efficient men of the Western Maryland Railroad Company. After several shifts elsewhere he came back to his home town of Junior, where he has been agent for the railroad and at the same time a valued citizen of the community.

Mr. Shomo was born on a farm near Junior, March 15, 1882, and is member of one of the old and well known families of this section of Barbour County. While on the farm he attended local schools, and at the age of eighteen took up the work of the barber's trade in a shop at Junior. He worked at that occupation four years, and then for two years was a miner, digging coal for the Davis Colliery Company at Junior. He left the mines to secure a technical and business education in the Morris School of Telegraphy at Cincinnati, where he finished his course in the Spring of 1906.

With this training he made application for service with the Western Maryland Railroad, and was first assigned to duty as assistant agent at Hendricks, West Virginia. He remained there two years as assistant agent and a year and one half as operator, and then after a brief service as relief agent at Harding returned to his native town and began his duties as agent April 19, 1911, succeeding S. S. Bailey. It has been his ambition to make his efficiency in behalf of the railroad company a source of effective service to the town and community, and that ambition has been well realized. During the past ten years he has acquired other interests, and was one of the promoters and is a partner in the Big Chief Mine. He served as mayor of Junior in 1913, and had been selected as recorder of the town of Hendricks just before leaving there. He is a charter member and still a stockholder in the Merchants and Miners Bank of Junior.

Mr. Shomo is strong in the faith of the republican party and cast his first presidential vote for Roosevelt in 1904. He is a Knight of Pythias, and for a quarter of a century has been a Methodist, has been teacher in the Sunday school and is superintendent of the home department of the Barbour County Sunday School Association.

May 29, 1902, at Belington, when he was twenty years old, Mr. Shomo married Miss Edna B. Bolton, daughter of Napoleon B. and Louise (Johnson) Bolton. The Boltons are an old family of this section. Mrs. Shomo was born August 8, 1881 on a farm between Philippi and Belington, third in a family of five children. The others were: Rev. John O., for some years a Methodist minister and now engaged in the centenary work of his church; Ella, wife of John Thompson, a farmer near Belington; Miss Myrtle, teacher in the public schools of Belington; and Lula, wife of Jesse Glenn, of Belington. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Shomo, but all of them died in infancy. Mrs. Shomo was a teacher before her marriage and was active in school work for eight years. She joins with her husband in a deep interest in the church and Sunday School.

JESSE E. KEYSER. Belington is one of the fast growing commercial centers, particularly well situated to enjoy the advantages arising from the developments in a vast territory on both sides of the Alleghenies. The first who made a sale business established here is now the Kane & Keyser Hardware Company, of which Jesse E. Keyser is president. He has been a business factor in the locality since 1901. At that time the corporation was started with a capitalization of $100,000. The capital was raised to a quarter of a million in 1921, but the official person remains practically the same.

The normal territory served by this house is all Eastern West Virginia, a portion of Virginia and the western part of Maryland. A staff of five salesmen covers this region. The company handles an extensive line of general hardware, and a large volume of the business is in builders, mine and railroad supplies. Besides the headquarters at Belington, the company maintains offices at 107 Chambers Street, New York, in the Union Area Building at Pittsburgh, and in the Continental & Commercial National Bank Building in Chicago. Mr. Keyser is a member of the National Hardware Jobbers Association.

Jesse E. Keyser has been a West Virginia business man for nearly thirty years. He is a native of Ohio and was born near Bellaire in Belmont County July 1863. The remote ancestor of the Keyser family settled in Philadelphia in 1688, coming from Amsterdam, Holland, where he had been a silk manufacturer. The Keyser home is still standing on Germantown Avenue, Philadelphia. The early generations of the Keyseers were of the Quaker faith, consequently opposed to war and did not participate in the Revolution, but later generations have departed somewhat from the anti-military custom and the family was represented on both sides in the Civil war. The grandfather of the Belington business man was Jesse Keyser, who lost his life while raising a house in Belmont County, Ohio. Isaac Keyser, father of Jesse E., was born in Belmont County, and his life was devoted to farming. He lived in Noble County, Ohio, from 1864 until his death in 1898, at the age of eighty-five. He was a democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church. He married Monica Porterfield, who died just two weeks before him, at the age of seventy-eight. His father, John Porterfield, arrived in New York City from the North of Ireland in 1800 and settled in Belmont County, Ohio. He married a member of the Robb family, pioneer in the Porterfield family there were sixteen children. Isaac Keyser and wife had six children, and of these Jesse is the only survivor.

Jesse E. Keyser was reared and educated in Noble County, Ohio, attending the public schools and the Normal School at Sharon, Ohio. While in an office at Dover, Ohio, he learned telegraphy, and he earned his first money as telegraph operator in the service of the Cleveland, Lorain and Wheeling Railroad, later the B. & O. system, in which he was connected for three years. Later he was with the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, and was with that company eight years, chiefly in station work. His work for the railroad was at Hayward, Wisconsin.

From there Mr. Keyser came to West Virginia in 1891, and, locating at West Union in Doddridge County, engaged in the hardware and oil well supply business as a member of the firm E. J. Kane and J. E. Keyser. Out of this relationship has since developed the Kane & Keyser Hardware Company, and in 1901 they moved their business to Belington, where it has grown and prospered to the position above noted.

Mr. Keyser and Mr. Kane came together from Ohio to West Union at the time Coxey's Army was making its way to Washington. Mr. Keyser left the railroad service just before the big A. R. U. strike under Debs. The young men were about the same age, had little capital, but a great deal of enterprise and confidence in themselves, and in spite of the business depression prevail-during most of the decade of the '90s, they more than realized their expectations, and out of their efforts has been developed the big wholesale house at Belington.

Mr. Keyser is also vice president of the First National Bank of Belington, of which he was one of the founders. He was a member of the City Council during the era of paving and sewerage construction. He has interested himself in party politics only as a voter of the democratic faith, is a deacon in the Belington Presbyterian Church and a member of the Allegheny and Cheat Mountain Clubs and the Business Men's Club of Belington.

At West Union, June 27, 1900, Mr. Keyser married Miss Dagmar Neely, daughter of Alfred and Mary (Morris) Neely. She is a native of Doddridge County, where her father was a well known country physician. She finished her education in the Fairmont State Normal School and was a teacher until her marriage. Mrs. Keyser is a sister of Matthew M. Neely, former congressman from the First West Virginia District. Her sister, Delmond, is the wife of C. H. Jones, secretary-treasurer of the Kane & Keyser Hardware Company of Belington. Mrs. Keyser is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, due to her service of her great-great-grandfather as a soldier in the war for independence. During the World War Mr. Keyser was active in home work, was a member of the Council of Defense, was vice chairman of the local Red Cross, and was chairman of the Y. M. C. A. drive and a worker in other local campaigns.

Mr. and Mrs. Keyser have two children. The son, Robb Neely, is a student in the Davis and Elkins College at Elkins. The daughter, Mary Monica, is a high school girl at Belington.

THOMAS J. SHAW. This is probably the last history of the State of West Virginia which will include representation of surviving members of the Civil war. All these survivors of the great conflict have passed the age of three core and ten. One of them, a highly honored citizen of Preston County, a retired farmer living in the Village of Denver, is Thomas J. Shaw, whose life as a civilian has been thoroughly worthy of his record as a soldier.

He was born in Preston County, Reno District, February 14, 1842. His grandfather, Thomas Shaw, was a native of England, spent many years as a sailor on the high seas, and after leaving the sea he lived near Philadelphia for a time and then came to West Virginia. He died in 1866 and is buried in the Israel Cemetery in Reno District of Preston County. His children were Thomas A., Nicholas C., and Mary, who became the wife of Henson Pointer.

Thomas A. Shaw was born in Monongalia County, West Virginia, about 1820, moved from there to Preston County, where he married Rebecca Stillwell, whose father had come from the vicinity of Philadelphia to Morgantown and later settled in Preston County. Thomas A. Shaw for more than half a century was a farmer in the Reno District. He was one of the pioneers there, purchasing land covered with heavy timber, and every acre put in cultivation was the result of arduous work with the axe and other implements required for clearing. He lived there until his death in 1897. He was a republican after that party came into existence, and was a member of the Methodist Church. His wife died several years before him. Their children were: Eliza A., who married Christian Nine and is now living at Terra Alta; Thomas Jackson, Lemuel Clark, whose home is in Colorado; Mary Elizabeth and Rebecca Jane, twins, the former of whom died as the wife of Jacob Miller, while he later is living in Reno District, the wife of James Graham; Mrs. Virginia Ford, of Reno District; Columbia, who first married Aaron Hardesty, then Mr. Bucklew, and finally Lloyd Bolyard, and is now living as a widow near Fellowsville in Preston County; Melissa, Mrs. Alexander Mahan, living not far from Fellowsville.

Thomas J. Shaw spent his youth in what might be termed a backwoods district. As soon as he was old enough he handled the axe and other tools, assisting his father to clear away the timber and brush from their acreage on the headwaters of the Sandy. He is a product, so far as his education is concerned, of one of the typical schools of that generation. The community provided only an old log shack as a schoolhouse, its furnishings being split logs for benches, greased paper windows, a fireplace, the fuel for which had to be chopped by the older boys. In this rude temple of learning he studied a spelling book, learned a little writing and figuring, and he considered it a good record if he was permitted to attend school four days out of the week.

He had barely completed his experience in this schoolhouse when the cloud of Civil war arose, and in 1863, when he was twenty-one, he volunteered for the defense of the flag in Company E of the Fifteenth West Virginia Infantry, under Captain Paul and Colonel Morris. He drilled with this company on Wheeling Island, went to Sir John's Run in Morgan County, then to the Big Kanawha, and from there the command was ordered to Lynchburg. He caught his first view of Confederate forces and engaged in his first battle at Cloyd Mountain. He also fought at Lynchburg, Cedar Creek, Winchester, Hatcher's Run, and in front of Richmond his division took the three Confederate forts of Harris, Gregg and Hill. Later his regiment was on a forced march to Appomattox, and his command came in contact with the enemy and had a skirmish before the final surrender. Thomas Shaw was in sight of the place where the negotiations for the surrender of Lee's army took place, and for a long time he owned a portion of a tree from McClain's orchard, the tree under which the terms of capitulation were written. After the surrender his regiment was sent to Wheeling, mustered out in June, 1865, and Mr. Shaw came out of the army with a record of active participation in thirteen different battles. His company went into service with 117 men, only 33 were mustered out, and he was one of the three who escaped wounds.

As soon as his discharge was in his hand Mr. Shaw hurried home to help on the farm, finding the harvest ready, and he aided in putting it away. For a time he worked at the sawmill of Martin L. Shaffer, later cut timber, worked as a carpenter on several houses, and for some twenty years he put up a strenuous fight to win existence from an old farm on Brushy Ridge, where all the land had to be cleared before any crops could be raised. This was the strenuous period of his existence, as he recalls it, since he worked from 4 in the morning until 8 at night, regardless of weather conditions. His grit and persistence while there laid the foundation of something like prosperity, and after he sold the coal under his land he established himself at Denver on a little farm; and here, too, the exertion of clearing had to be put forth before cultivation could be practiced. Then for some years followed a successive program of crops, grain and stock, with subsequent purchases of more land from time to time, until the evening of life found him prepared with an ample competence and now, with the companionship of the wife of his youth, he is enjoying the comforts of a good residence at Denver, and they look back over the past without regret and to the future without concern.

Thomas J. Shaw voted for Abraham Lincoln in 1864, while he was in the army. He has cast a vote at every successive national election, always in the same party faith. He has served as a trustee of the Methodist congregations at Denver and at Nazareth.

In Taylor County, near Grafton, Mr. Shaw married, on December 7, 1865, Miss Rosanna Rosier. She was born in Taylor County, daughter of John and Narcissus (Hull) Rosier. Her father was a native of Germany, was brought to the United States at the age of ten years, spent his active career as a farmer, and he and his wife are buried in the Knottsville graveyard. Their children were: Edgar Rosier, who served as a Union soldier and is living at Grafton; Sarah Ann, who died at Webster, West Virginia, wife of Balden Funk; Lemuel, also a Union soldier, who died in Taylor County; Mrs. Shaw, whose birth occurred April 10, 1844; Caroline, wife of Reuben Dillon, living near Knottsville; Sanford, of Grafton; Miss Hattie, living near Grafton; Amanda, who died unmarried; Jacob, a farmer at the old homestead in Grafton; and Belle, Mrs. Mart Thomas, of Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaw, who celebrated their golden wedding anniversary half a dozen years since, have one son, and a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The son, Charles Franklin Shaw, was born at Austen, Preston County, September 19, 1866, and is a successful merchant at Clarksburg. He married Cora Taylor, and their children are: Lula, Nellie Rose, Charles F., Jr., Carl J., and Ruby. The daughter Lula is the wife of Ned Edwards, and they have five children, named Catherine, Edward, Thomas, Susan and Lucile. Nellie Shaw married Roy Repard, and her children are Cloyd, Walter and Luella Jean. The grandson of Thomas J. Shaw, Carl J. Shaw, is married and has a daughter, Bettie.

CHARLES A. DUFFIELD. Three occupations, agriculture, merchandising and contracting, have occupied the activities of Charles A. Duffield, of Sutton, during a career that has been prolific in achievement. In each of these fields of endeavor he has won his way to the forefront through the exercise of close application, capacity for management and native ability, and also in each field he has maintained a well-earned reputation for high business principles and sound integrity. He also may lay claim to belonging to the self-made class, having worked his own way, unaided, to his present position.

Mr. Duffield is a product of the agricultural community of the section in which he now lives, having been born on a farm in Braxton County, June 15, 1873, a son of E. D. and Araminta (Keener) Duffield. His father was born in Clay County, West Virginia, in 1845, and as a youth came to Braxton County, where he married Miss Keener, who had been born in this county in 1850, and who, like himself, had received a country school education. After their marriage they settled down to farming, in addition to which Mr. Duffield also engaged in lumbering to some extent. Although he has reached his seventy-seventh year, he continues to be interested in agricultural matters and carries on operations in Braxton County on quite an extensive scale. He is a democrat in his political allegiance, but has never taken other than a good citizen's interest in public affairs, having never been an office seeker. He and his worthy wife are faithful members of the Baptist Church. They have been the parents of ten children, of whom nine are living: Sarah J., the wife of James Smith; Charles A., of this review; Emma, the wife of Wilbur Eckle; John, a resident of Sutton; Clarence, a resident of Charleston; James A., engaged in merchandising at Sutton; Will; Robert, a railroad man of Sutton; and Mollie, the wife of U. R. Duffield.

The childhood and youth of Charles A. Duffield were passed in the midst of an agricultural atmosphere, and his early education was acquired in the country schools. This was supplemented by a course at the Mountain State Business College of Parkersburg, West Virginia, and when he graduated therefrom he adopted the vocation of teaching school in the country districts of Braxton County. The country at large is beginning to recognize more fully than formerly that no better preparation can be given a man for his life work, no matter in what arena, than that afforded in the labors of an educator. Learning to discipline others, to impart to expanding minds many and varied facts, seem to give a man an insight into human nature and a knowledge of the motives which govern the masses. Mr. Duffield's experience in this line proved of great value to him when he later entered the business of lumber merchandising and water well contracting, fields in which he has risen to well-merited success. He has also found prosperity in his ventures as an agriculturist, and in each line his success has been all his own and by no means due to the assistance of others.

In October, 1902, Mr. Duffield was united in marriage with Miss Bessie Carper, who was born and reared in Braxton County, where she received her education in the common schools. To them have been born five children: Gertrude, who attended the State University and is a graduate of the Sutton High School, where she is now teaching a class; Genevieve, also a high school graduate, who is attending the State University; Joseph, who is attending high school; and Charles A., Jr., and Paul, who are attending the graded schools. Mrs. Duffield is a member of the Baptist Church, and the children are being reared in that faith. Mr. Duffield in politics is a democrat, but has not been a seeker for public office.

THOMAS I. FEENEY. One of Burnsville's well-known and reliable business establishments, which has a record for straightforward dealing and honorable action, is the furniture and undertaking enterprise of the Feeney Furniture and Supply Company, Inc. The president of this business whose name it bears, was born in Burnsville and has spent his entire life here with the exception of a short time during the World war and one year when he was absent in Fairmont, and is well known to the citizens of this community, not only as a business man but as one who has contributed in the way of splendid public service to the growth, development and advancement of the town.

Mr. Feeney was born December 15, 1888, at Burnsville, on the same street on which his business is now located, and is a son of John F. and Nora (Dolan) Feeney. His father was born January 5, 1856, on a farm in Lewis County, West Virginia, where he was reared and educated, and there married Miss Dolan, who had been born in 1862 in Gilmer County, but had been brought as a child to Lewis County, where she attended the public schools. Shortly after their marriage John F. Feeney, who was a cabinet maker by trade, embarked in business at Burnsville, first working at his trade and later opening a general store in which he sold all manner of goods. In him the business instinct was present in a marked degree, and he was successful in all his undertakings. He founded the furniture and undertaking business of which his son is now the head, and in his declining years disposed of his holdings. Mrs. Feeney died in 1893, firm in the faith of the Catholic Church. A democrat in his political views, Mr. Feeney was one of the influential men of his party, and was called upon to serve in several official capacities, among them on the Board of Education and as a member of the town council. He and his worthy wife were the parents of four children: Thomas I., of this record; John W., who graduated from the San Bernardino High School in California, and who married Adaline Morissy, of Chicago; Madeline, a graduate of the Parkersburg High School; and Rose E., who died January 20, 1919.

Thomas I. Feeney was reared at Burnsville, where he completed the prescribed course of the graded schools and spent two years in high school, and entered upon his industrial career in the capacity of a school teacher. After two years thus spent he decided that the educator's life was not his forte, and he accordingly went to Fairmont, where he secured a position as bookkeeper. This likewise failed to satisfy him, and after one year's experience he returned to Burnsville, where he became store manager for his father, a capacity in which he remained two years, at the end of which time he bought the elder man out. He then conducted the business until the World war, when he was compelled to close his business and enter the United States service as a member of the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Depot Brigade, on detached service at Camp Meade. After six months he received his honorable discharge and returned to Burnsville, where he incorporated his business, the officers being: President, Thomas I. Feeney; secretary, R. H. Kidd; treasurer, Russell T. Reed; and the foregoing, with the following, as the board of directors: F. W. Shrieves, H. C. Murphy, A. N. Stockart and H. C. Crutchfield. The company carries a full line of furniture of all kinds. Its undertaking department is likewise fully equipped, and Mr. Feeney and his representatives are prepared to advise with clients regarding a final resting spot, the details of funeral services, legal requirements, transportation, and all other necessary details in the reverent care of the dead. Mr. Feeney is also largely interested in the real estate business at Burnsville and the near vicinity, and has other matters of a business nature which require his attention.

In politics he is a democrat and has been prominent in public affairs, having served in various public offices, including those of mayor, councilman, recorder and member of the Board of Education, and in all has rendered excellent service. He is a member of the Catholic Church, attending services at Orlando. Mr. Feeney is unmarried.

C. B. CHRISMAN. Recognized as one of the thriving communities of Braxton County, Burnsville has been for many years accepted as one of the commercial centers of this section. Its geographical location and trade advantages make it a desirable market, and its growth and development along this and kindred lines have been largely due to the efforts of business men who have devoted themselves to its advancement. These men have also contributed to progress in encouraging the development of the large agricultural territory contiguous to this community. Among the energetic business men who have thus taken advantage of the opportunities offered and who while advancing their own interests have also assisted their community is C. B. Chrisman, manager of the Kanawha Grocery Company of Burnsville.

Mr. Chrisman was born September 20, 1876, in Gilmer County, West Virginia, and is a son of Ballard and Fannie (Stalnaker) Chrisman. Ballard Chrisman was born in June, 1847, in Virginia, a son of Floyd and Margaret (Neal) Chrisman, who brought their family to West Virginia at an early date and settled in Greenbrier County. Later they moved to Gilmer County and took up their residence ten miles from Glenville. There Floyd Chrisman spent the remainder of his long and useful life in the pursuits of agriculture, and died when in advanced age, with the respect and esteem of his neighbors and acquaintances. He was a highly religious man, a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church, and one of the organizers of the congregation of that denomination at Sutton. In political matters he was a staunch democrat.

Ballard Chrisman was a child when taken to Greenbrier County, and there grew up on a farm. His education was somewhat neglected, but he had the ambition that led him to educate himself, and so well did he do this that he was able to instruct others and was engaged in teaching for several years. After his marriage he settled on a farm in Gilmer County, and there his subsequent life has been spent in the pursuits of the soil. He has made a success of his operations and still resides on the old place, although he is now retired from active pursuits, having reached the ripe old age of seventy-five years. He is a democrat in his political belief, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His first wife died in 1876, leaving one child, C. B., of this record. Later Mr. Chrisman married again, and by his second union had five children.

C. B. Chrisman was an infant when his mother died and he was taken into the home of his paternal grandmother, who cared for him until his father married again, when he went to the home of his father and stepmother. After attending the common schools of his native community he pursued a course at the Glenville Normal School, and then entered upon his career as a teacher in the rural districts. He was thus engaged when the United States declared war against Spain, and he enlisted in Company L, Second Regiment, West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, with which he went first to Charleston and then to Middletown. This regiment was not called into active service, and at the close of hostilities Mr. Chrisman received his honorable discharge and went to Flatwoods, West Virginia, where he secured employment as clerk in a general store. After being thus employed for some time and learning the details of the business, he, in 1901, came to Burnsville and engaged in the mercantile business. Later he went to Erbacon, West Virginia, for three years, and then returned to Burnsville and became associated with the Burnsville Grocery Company of which he later became president. In March, 1921, he became general manager of the Kanawha Grocery Company, a large and prominent concern, which is incorporated with the following officers: Dr. D. P. Kessler, president; C. F. Engle, vice president; and F. D. Lemon, secretary-treasurer. Mr. Chrisman is a man of superior business ability and one who has won and held the confidence and esteem of his business associates.

In April, 1902, Mr. Chrisman married Miss Georgie Armstrong, a product of the public schools, and to this union there have been born three bright and interesting children: Mabel, Fred and Bonnie, all of whom are attending school. Mr. Chrisman belongs to Burnsville Lodge No. 87, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past and the present master and a member of the Grand Lodge; Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M.; Sutton Commandery No. 16, K. T.; Lodge of Perfection, Clarksburg, and Consistory at Wheeling, being a thirty-second degree Mason. In politics he is a democrat.

LANTY H. WALKER. No more genial, better informed or diplomatic class of men can be found than those identified with the sales departments of the larger mercantile houses and department stores, for the nature of their work demands the possession of these attributes in order that they may succeed. Outside of the big cities the manager of the department store is supposed to have a wide acquaintance and to be familiar with the opinions and tastes of his customers, likewise a good salesman. Salesmanship is an art, involving an intimate knowledge of psychology, and a man's status as being an expert salesman carries the implication of a wide-spread popularity, a cleverly trained mind and a more than adequate equipment in other directions. In none of these attributes is Lanty H. Walker found lacking, and it is because of their possession, as much as anything else, that he is making a creditable success of the enterprise of which he is manager at Burnsville, the Walker Department Store.

Mr. Walker was born in Nicholas County, West Virginia, October 21, 1888, and is a son of L. O. and May L. (Eads) Walker. L. O. Walker was born at Tipton, Nicholas County, October 3, 1845, and was reared in his native county on a farm, securing his educational training in the district schools of the rural communities. On reaching manhood he met and married May L. Eads, who was born in Roanoke County, Virginia, October 4, 1860, and was brought as a child by her parents to Nicholas County, West Virginia, where she attended the public schools. Following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Walker settled on a farm, and for some time devoted their whole attention thereto. Later they started a small store, handling only the more common necessities, and this soon grew to be quite an enterprise, necessitating much more attention. In 1900 Mr. Walker decided upon a more aspiring venture and moved his stock of goods to Summersville, where he carried on a successful mercantile business until selling out and going to Gad, West Virginia, where he likewise carried on an enterprise of this nature. In 1913 he made another change, this time coming to settle permanently at Burnsville, where he remained in business until his death in 1919. At the start of his career Mr. Walker was only a son of the soil, without any specialized training for business pursuits, but possessing the inherent ability so necessary to the man who would succeed in the marts of commerce and trade. He was likewise a man of the strictest integrity and had the confidence, well-merited, of those associated with him in any enterprise. He was a democrat in politics, but did not seek public favor or preferment as a holder of public office. His religious affiliation was with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to which also belongs Mrs. Walker, who survives him as a resident of Burnsville. They were the parents of nine children, of whom seven are living in 1922, as follows: Ora, the wife of A. E. Legg; Ollie, the wife of C. L. Evans; Laura, the wife of Dr. E. J. Summers; Bertha, the wife of E. V. Summers; Lanty H., of this record; Mamie, the wife of W. Lambert; and Pearl, the wife of Hugh Mearns.

Lanty H. Walker was born on a farm, but much of his boyhood was passed in the environment of small towns, where he secured his education in the public schools. From the start his business training was along commercial and mercantile lines, for when he was but a youth he entered his father's store and learned the business in all its details. At Burnsville he was associated with his father in the Walker Department Store until the elder man's death, since which time he has been managing the business for his mother. Mr. Walker is a man of energy and of ideas, and is conducting the establishment along the same policy of straightforward dealing and honest representation that gained it a reputation under his father's management. He is a democrat in politics, but has not found time to enter political matters, although a public-spirited citizen of civic pride who assists good movements which promise municipal advancement. Fraternally he is a popular member of Burnsville Lodge No. 87, A. F. and A. M., and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

CHARLES E. TREMBLY. The first settled communities were planted in Preston County in the closing years of the eighteenth century. The work of development has been continuous since then, being participated in by several generations from the first pioneers. The land has been cleared, the resources exploited, roads and railroads have been built, towns have sprung up, and, while not one of the oldest of these, Terra Alta, situated on the mountain skyline has been a place of trade and community life for a long period of years. That it is now one of the progressive and thriving small cities of the state is due to forces put in motion by a younger group of citizens within the past two decades. One of the active leaders, in fact one of the indispensable men in the newer life of the mountain town, has been Charles E. Trembly, banker and man of affairs. Mr. Trembly from the first had the outlook of one who is not satisfied with half plodding performance, and the spirit of progress strong within him he has linked with a similar spirit in others like minded, and together they have accorded a respectful hearing to old tradition without being bound to its rate of progress, and the sum total of what they have accomplished comprise the improvements and the institutions of which Terra Alta is most proud as a progressive municipality.

Mr. Trembly represents one of the oldest families of Preston County and was born on a farm near Albright April 14, 1873. His Americanism is the product of almost two centuries. About 1730 the first of the Trembly family came from Scotland and settled on the eastern shore at Trembly's Point, near Elizabeth, New Jersey. It is said the house in which he lived is still standing. This Scotch immigrant was descended from French Protestants who during the era of religious persecution fled from the Province of Rochelle, France. One of the New Jersey family, Benjamin Trembly, just before the outbreak of the American Revolution, moved on west in company with some of the McGrew family and settled around Cumberland, Maryland. Samuel Darby, a Scotchman from the same New Jersey colony, accompanied them, but did not arrive in Preston County until after Trembly, who established his family at Bruceton Mills, while the Darbys located at Millers, west of Clifton Mills. Patrick McGrew came on in 1786 and located a mile south of Brandonville. Thus by previous associations there was a link between these three prominent families in the wood and mountain region of Western Virginia.

Benjamin Trembly was born April 13, 1763, at Tremby Point, and was drowned at Ice's Ferry in Cheat River in 1818. His wife, Eunice Pennington, represented a leading family of New Jersey. Their children were: Josiah, John, Mary, Sarah, James and Ephraim. The son John was born March 20, 1786. He married Sarah Darby at Bruceton Mills, and in 1811 bought the Trembly farm near Albright. He remained there half a century and died in 1863, while the Civil war was in progress. His three children were: Eunice, who became the wife of John Bishop; Samuel and Benjamin, twin brothers.

Benjamin Trembly, who was born October 16, 1816, married Mary Hartman. They lived their lives about Albright, and their children were George H., Joseph, Sarah, who became the wife of Guy A. Bishop, Michael, John, Samuel and Adam.

George H. Trembly was born near the little Cheat River Village of Albright April 7, 1837, and died in 1899. January 9, 1868, he married Eva Charity Smith, who was born near Albright February 3, 1849, daughter of Jacob Smith. The children of this marriage are: Frank H., of Jacksonville, Florida; Jay S., of Terra Alta; Charles E.; and Ella M., wife of A. W. Hawley, of Morgantown.

Charles E. Trembly while growing up at Albright had a great ambition to get a liberal education, and after much persistence, thrift and earning his own way, he accomplished that end. He attended the public schools, at the age of twenty-one graduated from the Fairmont State Normal School, subsequently was a student in the Peabody Normal College at Nashville, Tennessee, and in 1899 graduated in the scientific course from the University of West Virginia. The qualifications represented in this liberal education were a splendid preparation for the work of education which he had chosen, and in 1898-99 he was assistant principal of the Davis High School, and for three years was acting principal, until he resigned in 1902 to become a citizen of Terra Alta and assistant cashier of the Terra Alta Bank. Mr. Trembly has been a factor in the success and prosperity of this institution as one of its managing officials for twenty years, and since November 14, 1910, has been cashier. Throughout this time he has kept in touch with men similarly minded with regard to what constitutes the commercial and civic prosperity of the community. He has been a member of the City Council and recorder, and the steady influences and efforts emanating from him and his associates have brought to Terra Alta such modern facilities as water works, gas light, street paving and other improvements.

In Preston County August 5, 1915, Mr. Trembly married Miss Marjorie Crane, daughter of Dee Crane, who is potato expert with the University Extension Bureau of West Virginia. They have a son, Gray Crane. Mr. Trembly is a past master of the Masonic Lodge, is affiliated with West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias Lodge, an Odd Fellow, and has served officially as an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

STANTON TRIMBLE, M. D. The physician and surgeon of today not only is a highly trained individual whose every faculty has been brought to the highest perfection, but also one whose broad experience with people and affairs enables him to act with the efficiency of a really high-grade man, and to energize those with whom he comes into contact. The practical physician does not work for spectacular results, but for sane, sound, progress, not only in his profession but in other directions. One of the men of Braxton County who stands high among the physicians and surgeons of this class is Dr. Stanton Trimble, who has been engaged in practice at Burnsville since 1914.

Doctor Trimble was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, August 24, 1852, a son of John A. and Euphasia E. (Young) Trimble. John A. Trimble was born in 1848 in Barbour County, where he received his education and was reared as a farmer's son, and as a young man went to Harrison County, where he met Miss Young, a native of that county, born in 1849, who, like her husband, had enjoyed a rural school education. Following their marriage they went to Barbour County, where they settled down to agricultural pursuits, and through industry and good management became prosperous in this world's goods, being the owners of 300 acres of well-cultivated and highly improved farming land. After a long and honorable career John A. Trimble died on his farm, where his widow still makes her home in advanced age. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church and is highly esteemed for her many admirable qualities of mind and heart. Mr. Trimble was a staunch republican in politics, and for some years served in the capacity of postmaster at Pepper, West Virginia. They were the parents of six children, of whom five are living in 1922: Camden, an agriculturist of Barbour County; Huffman, who is also carrying on agricultural operations in that county; Daisy, the widow of Dr. Erle Kennedy; Dr. Stanton, of this notice; and Voie E., the wife of Clarence House, Ida May died January 9, 1916.

Stanton Trimble passed his boyhood on the home farm in much the same manner as other farmers' sons of his day and locality, receiving his early education at the rural schoolhouse. He had no inclination, however, to pass his life in agricultural pursuits, early deciding upon a professional career, and accordingly was sent to the State Normal School at Fairmont for his preparatory work. Completing the course there satisfactorily, he then entered upon his professional studies at the Baltimore Medical College, Baltimore, Maryland, from which he was duly graduated as a member of the class of 1908, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Doctor Trimble's first field of professional work was at Kremling, Colorado, but after eight months in that community he returned to West Virginia and opened an office at Orlando, where he remained from 1909 until 1914. In the latter year he settled at Burnsville, where he has since succeeded in building up a large, lucrative and representative practice. He possesses ability and sympathy, and has gained the confidence and good will of the people of his community and the respect and esteem of his professional associates. Doctor Trimble belongs to the various organizations of his profession, including the American Medical Association, and has maintained throughout his entire career a high standard of ethics and honorable practice. In politics he supports the principles and candidates of the republican party. His fraternal affiliation is with Orlando Lodge of the Odd Fellows order.

In 1910 Doctor Trimble was united in marriage with Miss Callie Stout, who was born at Bridgeport, Harrison County, West Virginia, and educated in the public schools, and they are the parents of two children: Stanton C., who was born June 26, 1913; and Mary E., born July 13, 1919.

HENRY B. MARSHALL. In annotating the qualities which have brought Henry B. Marshall to a position of importance among the bankers of Braxton County, those of persistence and singleness of purpose should not be overlooked. While he possesses other qualities which add to his equipment for successful participation in financial affairs, almost from the start of his career he has devoted himself wholeheartedly to one line of effort and has persevered in one avenue of activity. The result is that he is a thorough master of every detail of his special line of work, and as cashier of the Burnsville Exchange Bank occupies a place high in the esteem of his associates and firm in the confidence of the people of the community.

Mr. Marshall was born in Ritchie County, West Virginia, January 4, 1876, and is a son of Benjamin P. and Virginia (Jackson) Marshall. Benjamin P. Marshall was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, and as a youth was brought by his parents to Ritchie County, West Virginia, where he received a common school education, grew to manhood and married Virginia Jackson, a native of Ritchie County, and also a product of the public schools. Following their marriage they settled on a farm near the Village of Petroleum, in that county, and there spent the remainder of their well-governed lives. They became prosperous in a material way and in the respect in which they were held by their neighbors, and were active and faithful members of the Methodist Protestant Church. Mr. Marshall was a republican in his political views, and served one term as a member of the County Court. At the outbreak of the war between the states he enlisted in the Eleventh Regiment, West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, with which he served for five years, or until the close of the war. He and his worthy wife were the parents of twelve children, of whom five died in infancy, the others being: One who died after reaching maturity; Fannie, the wife of R. M. Foutty, living in Wood County, West Virginia; Jennie, the wife of A. M. Douglass, of Cairo, this state; Viola, whose home is at Akron, Ohio; R. C., a hardware merchant at Cairo; C. A., who is carrying on operations on the old home farm in Ritchie County; and Henry B., of this review.

Henry B. Marshall was reared on the home farm in Ritchie County, where he obtained his primary education in the rural schools, and in the summer months assisted his father and brothers in the cultivation of the home fields. Subsequently he took a business course in a commercial college situated at Cairo, then returned to the farm, whence he removed to Cairo to accept a position as bookkeeper with the Bank of Cairo. During the time that he was identified with that institution he rose to the post of assistant cashier, and it was in a like capacity that he first joined the Burnsville Exchange Bank in 1903. In 1907 Mr. Marshall became cashier of this institution, a position which he has since retained. His fellow officials are: Hon. John I. Bender, president; W. C. Hefner, vice president; and Frank Amos, assistant cashier, the board of directors consisting of the following: John I. Bender, G. D. Marple, C. A. Wade, H. B. Marshall, E. A. Stockert, W. C. Hefner, F. G. Hoover, Frank Amos, John M. Marple, R. D. Dennison and W. G. Wilson. This is one of Braxton County's sound and reliable institutions, and Mr. Marshall has contributed to its success in no small degree.

In 1902 Mr. Marshall was united in marriage with Miss Matilda Gilbertson, who was born at Blair, Nebraska, where she was educated in the public schools, and who first met her future husband while on a visit to relatives at Cairo, West Virginia. Three children have come to this union: Helen B., born September 23, 1903, a graduate of the Burnsville High School; Virginia May, born August 9, 1915; and a son that died in infancy in 1907. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall are members of the Methodist Protestant Church, Mr. Marshall being a member of the official board and a contributor to all religious movements. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Burnsville Lodge No. 87, A. F. and A. M., is a past noble grand of Burnsville Lodge No. 252, I. O. O. F., and belongs to the Grand Lodge of that order. In politics he is a republican.

WILLIAM CLAUDE HEFNER. Braxton County has always held its own among its sister counties of West Virginia for high rank in her banking system, and in this field of activity the business is represented at Burnsville by many men of high standing and of more than local prominence. Among the men, alert and enterprising, who during recent years have utilized the opportunities offered for business preferment and attained thereby success, one whose career is typical of modern advancement is William Claude Hefner, vice president of the Burnsville Exchange Bank. Mr. Hefner's career has in the main been devoted to the pursuits of agriculture, but his business judgment and foresight are greatly appreciated by his associates in the banking field.

Mr. Hefner was born on the farm which he now owns at Burnsville, May 23, 1864, and is a son of William S. and Rachel McNeil (Wallace) Hefner. His father was born in Greenbrier County, West Virginia, November 20, 1817, and his mother, in Pocahontas County, this state, August 12, 1820. William S. Hefner was reared on a farm in Greenbrier County and received only a limited education, the most of which was self gained. As a youth he left home and went to Pocahontas County, where he learned the blacksmith trade and for four years conducted a shop. He made a success of this venture, was married in Pocahontas County, and then came to Braxton County and purchased the nucleus for a farm, a part of which is now included in the property of his son William C. From a small beginning William S. Hefner became the owner of a tract of 560 acres of splendid farming land, and at one time was the largest taxpayer in the northern end of Braxton County. He was one of the pillars of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the movements of which he supported with a willing hand and an open purse, and throughout his life he was at all times ready to go to the assistance of the poor or the besidies of the sick. Fraternally he was affiliated with Sutton Lodge No. 21, A. F. and A. M., and at the time of his death was the first member of Weston Lodge. His political belief made him a democrat. The fact that his own education had been neglected always made him a staunch friend of the public schools, and for a number of years he served as a member of the local Board of Education. He and his worthy wife were the parents of eleven children, of whom seven survive in 1922: B. L., who is engaged in blacksmithing at Burnsville, where his father conducted a shop for many years in connection with his farming operations; Samuel, who is a resident of Missouri; M. W., of Burnsville; William Claude, of this record; Edna, the wife of A. J. Knight; J. B., of Clarksburg, West Virginia; and Rachel, the widow of Hugh Amos.

William C. Hefner was reared on the home farm, on a part of which he still makes his home, and acquired his education through attendance at the rural schools. His schooling completed, he began farming in association with his father, and remained in this connection until he was twenty-three years of age, when he decided he would like to have a view of the western country. Accordingly, the next year was passed in the West, after which he returned to the home place and spent one year in agricultural pursuits. Following this he ventured into mercantile pursuits at Burnsville, and during the next years was a successful merchant, but the call of the country proved too strong, and at the end of that time he disposed of his holdings and returned to the farm. Since that time he has been engaged in agricultural operations with much success, and at the present time has 195 acres of valuable land, all in a high state of cultivation and with the latest modern buildings and substantial improvements. Mr. Hefner is also interested in the oil and gas business in this region, where he has some valuable holdings, represented by producing and paying properties. He is a vice president and a member of the board of directors of the Burnsville Exchange Bank, in which he is likewise a heavy stockholder, and through his wise counsel and business acumen has contributed materially to its success.

On January 24, 1899, Mr. Hefner was united in marriage with Miss Mary Hamilton, who was born and reared in Highland County, Virginia, where she was educated in the public schools, and was still a young woman when brought to West Virginia by her parents. Of their children nine are still living in 1922, as follows: Elizabeth, a graduate of the Burnsville High School, who took a short normal course at Sutton and is now a primary teacher in the Burnsville public schools; Wallace Hamilton, attending Marshall College at Huntington; Leah, a graduate of the Burnsville High School; Mary, who is attending high school; and Lorena, Charlotte, Marjorie, Rachel and Lillian. The family belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mr. Hefner being a member of the official board, on which he succeeded his father. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Burnsville Lodge No. 87, A. F. and A. M.; and Burnsville Lodge No. 92, K. P., in which he is a past chancellor and a member of the Grand Lodge. In politics he is a democrat. Like his father, he has taken a genuine and helpful interest in school matters, having been a member of the Board of education for the past seventeen years, and was the original promoter of the movement which resulted in the building of the high school at Burnsville.

EMERY B. DUFFIELD. It was at a time when development and progress were just reaching their full force that Emery B. Duffield located at Burnsville. He had already demonstrated business ability and shown foresight in fostering and furthering enterprises in several sections where he had a tentative home, but it was not until he located at Burnsville that he permitted his progressive ideas full scope for expression which resulted in the founding and solid upbuilding of a successful hardware enterprise. Like many another successful man, he began at the bottom of the ladder, being first a rural school teacher, and when he left that calling worked with his hands, a fact of which he has never been ashamed.

Mr. Duffield was born on a farm in Braxton County, West Virginia, November 17, 1873, and is a son of Jonathan and Martha (Hamrie) Duffield. His father was born in the same neighborhood, in 1848, and received his education in the country schools, following which he helped his father on the home farm until his marriage to Miss Hamrie, who was born in his home locality in 1844, and who, like her husband, had a common school education. Following their marriage they settled on a farm situated nine miles southwest of Sutton, where Mr. Duffield through industry and good management accumulated a good property, on which he installed valuable and substantial improvements and there rounded out a long, useful and worthy life, passing away in 1900, when fifty-two years of age. A man of integrity and public spirit, he had the respect and esteem of his fellow citizens. He was a democrat in his political allegiance. His religious faith was that of the Baptist Church, to which belongs Mrs. Duffield, who survived him at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. They were the parents of four children, of whom three are living in 1922: Henry C., of Sutton; Tabitha, the wife of J. E. Baughman, of that city and Emery B.

Emery B. Duffield received his education in the public schools and resided on the home farm until he was twenty-seven years of age. In the summer months he assisted his father, but in the winter terms, from the time he was sixteen years of age, he taught in the neighborhood schools, and became widely and popularly known as an educator. In 1903 he was elected superintendent of schools of Braxton County, an office which he filled with credit until 1907, in which year he located at Sutton and established himself in the insurance business. This venture occupied his time and attention until 1912, in which year he came to Burnsville and established himself in the hardware business, a line which he has followed with gratifying success to the present time. In his modern and well-arranged establishment Mr. Duffield carries a full line of shelf and heavy hardware, furnaces, stoves, tinware, etc., and enjoys a large trade, attracted alike by the modern stock, the popular prices and the genial and obliging nature of the proprietor. Among his associates Mr. Duffield is accounted a strictly reliable and capable man of business and one who has succeeded through none of the practices of the business charlatan, but along strictly legitimate channels of trade.

On December 27, 1902, Mr. Duffield was united in marriage with Miss Nettie Shaver, and to this union there were born two sons: Vaughn H. and Henry K., the former now attending Broadbush College. Mrs. Duffield died in February, 1908, and Mr. Duffield married Miss Cora Dulin. They have two daughters: Ethel and Martha. Mr. and Mrs. Duffield are members of the Baptist Church, in which he is a deacon and clerk, and in the work of which he has been helpfully active. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Crystal Lodge No. 125, I. O. O. F., and the Grand Lodge. His political sentiments cause him to support the democratic party.

HON. GARNETT KEER KUMP, of Romney, lawyer and for eight years a member of the State Senate, has been a leader in educational and good roads legislation, and one of the very useful and progressive citizens of his section of the state.

He was born near Capon Springs, Hampshire County, West Virginia, December 9, 1875, son of Benjamin Franklin and Margaret Frances (Rudolph) Kump and a lineal descendant of Henry Kump, a soldier of the Revolution. His father was a confederate soldier in Company K of the Eighteenth Virginia Cavalry, and after the war lived on his farm in Hampshire County, where he was a leader in civic and religious affairs.

Garnett Kerr Kump acquired a good literary education and for a number of years applied himself to the vocation of farming in summer and teaching in public schools during the winter. He prepared for the bar in West Virginia University, leaving the university about April 1, 1909, and since then has enjoyed an exceptionally good practice at Romney. Besides his law practice he has some business interests and investments, and is president of the South Branch Tie & Lumber Company.

His public service began early in his career, and he represented Hampshire County in the House of Delegates in the session of 1905. His eight year term in the Senate ran from December 1, 1912, to December 1, 1920, and he was not a candidate for re-election. He represented the Fifteenth Senatorial District and in the Legislature as well as in his capacity as a private citizen he has been thoroughly progressive in thought and action. He is a democrat, and has been keenly interested in the great national and international problems of the last few years. Mr. Kump is convinced that he would have made an effective soldier of the nation during the World war, but the examining authorities rejected his application for the Officers' Training Camp and also on several other occasions when he endeavored to enlist.

Mr. Kump is affiliated with the Masonic Order, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Woodmen of the World. Since 1911 he has been a member of the Romney Literary society, one of the oldest organizations of the kind in the state, it having been incorporated by the State of Virginia by special act of Legislature in 1819. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church of Romney.

EDMUND SEHON is president of the Sehon, Stevenson & Company, Incorporated, wholesale grocers, one of the very earliest wholesale houses established at Huntington and a business that has been steadily associated with the remarkable growth and expansion of that city during the last three decades. No one could surpass Mr. Sehon in pride and satisfaction over the achievements of Huntington, and for years he has been counted one of the city's most enthusiastic and substantial boosters.

Mr. Sehon, who is one of the advisory editors of this history of West Virginia, was born in Mason County this date, September 14, 1843, son of John Leicester and Agnes (Lewis) Sehon. His mother, Agnes Lewis, was a granddaughter of Col. Charles Lewis, who was killed at the battle of Point Pleasant in 1774, a battle described in the pages of West Virginia history as one of the most decisive conflicts on the American frontier.

Mr. Sehon acquired his education at Westchester, Pennsylvania, and early took up the study of law and began practicing soon after the close of the Civil war. In 1868 he was elected state's attorney of Greenbrier and Mercer counties, but in 1870 he returned to his native county of Mason. In 1875 he was elected a member of the Legislature. Mr. Sehon has been a resident of Huntington since 1890, in which year he organized the wholesale firm of Sehon, Stevenson & Company. This was the second wholesale house in Huntington and is a business that is justly regarded as one of the most important units in Huntington's growing greatness as a commercial center.

Mr. Sehon was elected mayor of Huntington in 1915, and as head of the municipal government for three years. He has been an active factor in the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and practically every other organization designed to promote the effective growth and development of the city. He is a democrat, has been a member of the B. P. O. Elks since 1913, and for half a century has been a working member of the Episcopal Church and now vestryman and senior warden of Trinity Church at Huntington.

June 30, 1870, in Greenbrier County, Mr. Sehon married Elizabeth Jane Stuart, daughter of Robertson Stuart, whose grandfather Col. John Stuart was one of the earliest pioneers of Greenbrier County. Mr. and Mrs. Sehon have four children: Lucy, wife of J. M. McCoach; John Leicester who married Lillian Gragard; Bess, wife of M. N. Cecil; and Douglas, unmarried.

HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ began the practice of law at Williamson in 1894. The range and importance of his law practice, his substantial interests in the community, were the solid foundation for his public and political career, and for all his varied and active service in the State Legislature and in the halls of Congress he is still actively connected with his profession and his business at Williamson.

Mr. Goodykoontz was born near Newbern, Pulaski County, Virginia, June 3, 1872, son of William M. and Lucinda K. (Woolwine) Goodykoontz. His paternal ancestor, Hans Georg Gutekunsch, immigrated to this country in 1750 and fought through the Revolution. His grandfather on his mother's side, Robert McCrum Woolwine, was born near Beverly in Randolph County. He attended good schools and at the fortune of coming under the supervision of some very able educators. At Oxford Academy in Virginia he was under John K. Harris, a graduate of Williams College and a Presbyterian minister. At Floyd, Virginia, he read law under Judge Z. T. Dobyns, and in Washington and Lee University he came under the instruction of John Randolph Tucker and Charles A. Graves. Mr. Goodykoontz was licensed to practice June 9, 1893, and established himself at Williamson February 23, 1894. He began his career as a lawyer at Williamson when the great coal industry of that section was just being developed. At the present time he is a junior member of the law firm of Goodykoontz, Scherr & Laven. Mr. Goodykoontz became a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of West Virginia on April 1, 1896, and was admitted to practice as "an attorney and counsellor" in the Supreme Court of the United States, December 13, 1909. His standing and popularity with the profession are indicated by the fact that he was chosen president of the West Virginia Bar Association in July, 1917.

Since its founding he has been president of the National Bank of Commerce of Williamson. It was one of the first banking institutions founded in that region. It was started as a state bank. Since 1911 the same has operated under a national charter and under the above name. The prosperity of this section is reflected in the comparative bank deposits. Its deposits aggregated about $450,000 in 1915 and at the beginning of 1921 were over $1,400,000. Mr. Goodykoontz is the president of the Kimberling Land Company and the Burning Creek Land Company, and a director in several other corporations engaged in local enterprises.

Mr. Goodykoontz had been a successful lawyer nearly twenty years before he became a candidate for public office. Mingo County sent him to the House of Delegates in the sessions of 1911-12, and in 1914 he was nominated without opposition by the republican party for the State Senate. He was chosen to represent the Sixth Senatorial District, comprising McDowell, Mingo, Wayne and Wyoming counties, and led the ticket in each of these counties by a plurality of 3,009. In the session of 1915-16 in the Senate, Mr. Goodykoontz was majority floor leader, and January 10, 1917, was elected president of the Senate, thus becoming ex-officio lieutenant governor of the state. He held that office until December 1, 1918. Harris' Legislative Handbook, 1918, gives him the distinction of being the first president of the Senate from whose rulings no appeal was ever taken.

November 5, 1918, as candidate of the republican party, he was elected to the Sixty-sixth Congress, over W. M. McNeal, democrat, by 2,936 majority. November 2, 1920, he was reelected as a member of the Sixty-seventh Congress—again over Mr. McNeal—by a majority of 6,799. The Fifth District, which he represents covers the Pocahontas coal field and is composed of the nine counties of Lincoln, Logan, McDowell, Mercer, Mingo, Monroe, Summers, Wayne and Wyoming. Mr. Goodykoontz entered Congress when the republicans resumed control of the House, and he has been one of the active members during the protracted sessions of that body. He is a member of the Judiciary Committee, the lawyers committee of the House, having been assigned to this committee upon his entering Congress. It is seldom that a new member is permitted a membership on this major committee.

During the World war, Mr. Goodykoontz was chairman of the Central Committee of Lawyers that headed the West Virginia bar in assisting registrants and aiding, by advice and otherwise, soldiers and sailors, their families and dependents. In this connection Mr. Goodykoontz was author of the "Legal Booklet," of which 30,000 copies were distributed, giving information as to the more important laws, State and Federal, affecting soldiers and sailors.

Mr. Goodykoontz is a past master of the Williamson Masonic Lodge. On December 22, 1898, he married Miss Irene Hooper, of New Orleans.

SAMUEL V. WOODS. In the forty-one years since his admission to the bar Samuel V. Woods has proved himself the possessor of many of the distinctive abilities of his honored father, the late Judge Samuel Woods, whose career is briefly given in sketch following.

In the broad field of general practice, particularly in chancery, and as a trial lawyer Samuel V. Woods has few equals.

He possesses a generous and abundant equipment and knowledge of the law, and his personal character, which is of the highest order, has combined to make his career a source of genuine public service, though comparatively little of his time has been spent in public office.

He was born in Barbour County on the 31st of August, 1856, and was educated by private tutors, in the public schools, and at the West Virginia University.

He studied law under his distinguished father, Judge Samuel Woods, and was examined before and admitted to practice by the Supreme Court of Appeals in 1881, upon the motion of William L. Wilson. Since that time he has been a steady practitioner in the County of Barbour, where he has resided, and in other counties in that section of the state, and before the Supreme Court of Appeals.

He has handled a great volume of business covering an immense range in the practice of his profession. For many years in Barbour County nearly every important trial found him engaged therein on one side or the other, and he always acquitted himself with great credit and with a high degree of satisfaction to his clients.

A brief professional opinion of his work is as follows:

"In his court work he has always been distinguished for the thoroughness of his preparation, the tact of his examination of witnesses, is accurate knowledge of all the details of pleading and practice, and coolness and self poise, which he exhibits under circumstances of the most adverse and trying nature. As an advocate he is gifted with logical powers and a faculty of expression remarkably simple and lucid. His diction is clear and correct, his language forceful and pointed, and on all occasions he shows the power of an able public speaker and debator, and is an honorable, upright and reliable attorney."

Men who have been so fortunate as to come within the friendship or professional association of Samuel V. Woods pronounce him as one of the most genial men in all their acquaintance. He possesses and exhibits the courtesy of the old school gentleman, and his personal character and attainments give special force to this disposition.

He has always been interested in the discussion of political questions, and is an unusually forceful and eloquent platform speaker in the discussion of political questions and questions of public policy, and he has always been an earnest independent democrat. And while he has lived in a strongly republican county and republican senatorial and congressional district, he was elected to the State Senate in 1910, and for four years represented the Thirtieth Senatorial District. While a member of the Senate, which was equally divided politically, he was unanimously elected president of the Senate, and under the constitution of this state he thereby became in effect lieutenant governor of West Virginia.

He was twice the democratic nominee for Congress in the Second Congressional District. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1900.

Mr. Woods has been a life long member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in 1916 was elected as a delegate to the General Conference, which is the law making body of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in 1920 he again served in the General Conference of the church.

Since 1903 Mr. Woods has been a member of the Board of Trustees of the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, and has been consistently one of the most generous supporters of that institution, of which his distinguished father, Judge Samuel Woods, was one of the founders and for many years president of its Board of Trustees. He has from that College the degree of LL. D.

For the past fourteen years Mr. Woods has been the president of the Citizens National Bank of Philippi, the strongest and one of the oldest banking institutions in Barbour County, of which he was one of the founders and organizers.

Mr. Woods married on the 9th day of March, 1893, Miss Mollie Strickler, and they have had one child, Ruth Neeson Woods, who is now the wife of Arthur S. Dayton, a distinguished member of the Philippi bar, and the only son of the late Judge Alston G. Dayton.

JUDGE SAMUEL WOODS was the son of Adam Woods and his wife, Jane Long. They came to America in 1818 from the North of Ireland, and their people had come to the North of Ireland from the North of Scotland.

Samuel Woods was educated at Allegheny College, and graduated from that institution about 1846, at the head of his class, and he was thereafter made principal of the

He studied law with his old friend, Timothy John Fox Alden, an able lawyer of the Pittsburgh bar. The home of Mr. Woods had been at Meadville, Pennsylvania. He was admitted to the bar in 1848, and located at Philippi, where the new county of Barbour had just been formed, and there formed a partnership-at-law with John S. Carlisle.

His brother-in-law, the late James Neeson, who likewise lived at Meadville, settled about the same time at Fairmont where he was a distinguished lawyer.

Mr. Woods was six feet high, large of frame, weighed about 210 pounds, had a clean shaven face, and was at straight as an arrow, physical characteristics which belong to all of his sons.

He was elected a member of the Virginia Constitutional Convention of 1861, which passed the Ordinance of Secession, and he voted for that instrument and signed the same and was afterward a soldier in the Confederate Army, in Stonewall Jackson's Army Corps.

In 1871 he was elected a member to the Constitutional Convention, which framed the present Constitution of West Virginia, which has stood the test of time for more than fifty years. In that convention he was one of its most able and distinguished men, and took a very prominent part in the work which was there done.

In January, 1881, he was appointed judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, and was afterward elected thereto, and continued in that position until the 1st of January, 1889.

Mr. Woods was a great lawyer, practising his profession in the courts of West Virginia for more than thirty years before he went on the bench. He was undoubtedly one of the ablest and most distinguished lawyers in the State of West Virginia, and had long enjoyed a large, extensive and profitable practice when he went on the bench.

Judge Woods was born on the 19th of September, 1822 in East Canada, at Three Rivers, and in his childhood his family moved to Meadville, Pennsylvania, where he attended the public schools, worked at the trade of plasterer, and worked his way through Allegheny College, from which he graduated at the head of his class when he was twenty years of age, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Mr. Woods was a devoutly religious man, through all of the vicissitudes of the Civil war, and was a constant member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He always took the right side of every high and moral question, and never apologized for his opinion, nor feared any adversary in public, private or professional debate. He was a distinguished man in personal appearance, distinguished in his public service, distinguished in his professional and private life.

In the history of the bench and bar of West Virginia Judge Woods is described as "large in brain and stature over six feet tall, weighing over two hundred pounds, round of face and handsome, of commanding appearance, and stalwart in moral as in physical qualifications. He possessed strong religious convictions, and never apologized for his faith and demonstrated his faith by his work. It was his character as well as his long experience and knowledge in the law that enabled him to achieve such remarkable success in his profession. He was a gifted orator, and one of the strongest advocates who ever appeared in a court trial in the state. Perhaps one of his most striking characteristics in an age when professional men generally were given to conviviality was his abstinence from the use of alcoholic liquors and narcotics. He possessed an excellent literary taste, and his literary style appears in all of his opinions on the bench."

In 1848 Mr. Woods married in Meadville, Pennsylvania Isabella Neeson, and they had six children. Their three sons all became lawyers, Frank Woods, who died in Baltimore in the year 1900, J. Hop. Woods, who died at Philippi West Virginia, on the 25th of October, 1921, and Samne V. Woods, who still lives at Philippi, West Virginia.

Judge Woods was a democrat in politics, and was on of the most forceful and effective political platform speakers of his day within the State of West Virginia. He was a great orator, a just judge, a fine lawyer, a model citizen, loved and respected by all who knew him, and in the later years of his life, about the year 1888, Allegheny College conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. Mr. Woods was a Mason, and he died in his home at Philippi on the 17th of February, 1897, in the seventy-fifth year of his age.

FRANK WOODS was born at Philippi, West Virginia, July 20, 1850, and was the oldest son of Judge Samuel Woods. He graduated from the West Virginia University in 1874. He was a member of the faculty and tutor in that institution until his admission to the bar in 1877, when he formed a partnership and practiced law at Grafton, West Virginia, with the late Benjamin F. Martin, under the firm name of Martin and Woods. He was a remarkably successful and clear headed lawyer, with a style and diction which were unusually scholarly, lucid and forceful, and his pleadings were models, and will be found models to this day. In 1887, after having practiced law in the courts of West Virginia for about ten years with unusual success, he moved to the City of Baltimore, and practiced his profession there in the courts of Maryland until his death in the year 1900.

Mr. Woods attained a remarkably high standing in the bar of Baltimore City, and was held in the highest respect by all who knew him. He was a devoutly religious man and a consistent member of the Monumental Methodist Episcopal Church in Baltimore, and was for a long time the superintendent of the Sunday School of that church.

While he lived in Baltimore his services were in great demand. He had a large practice in questions of title and property relating to interests of clients in the state of West Virginia, and he frequently appeared and practiced in the Federal courts in West Virginia and for a long time in the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia after his removal to the City of Baltimore.

Mr. Woods took great interest in educational and religious affairs, and was very active and generous in charitable activities in and about the City of Baltimore. He was for many years a member of the Board of Trustees of the Cheltenham School for colored boys near the City of Baltimore.

Mr. Woods was a democrat of the most independent character, but took no active personal participating interest in political affairs.

He was six feet high, wore a dark beard, was as straight as an Indian, was always a deeply and devoutly studious and religious man, and was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him.

He married Miss Harriet L. Deering, of Morgantown, West Virginia, in June 1879. They had no children. Mr. Woods died suddenly in Atlantic City, New Jersey, on the 21st day of August, 1900.

J. HOP. WOODS was the second son of Judge Samuel Woods. He was born at Philippi, West Virginia, on the 23rd of November, 1853, and died at Philippi on the 25th day of October, 1921. He was educated by private tutors, in the public schools, at the West Point Military Academy and at the West Virginia University.

He came to the bar in 1879, and for a long time practiced his profession in Barbour County with his father, the late Samuel Woods, under the firm name of Samuel Woods & Son, and until his father went on the bench as judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals.

In Barbour County, where he resided and was respected and loved by everybody, he had a large and lucrative practice and he was an unusually diligent, studious and faithful lawyer in respect to every matter which was committed to his care.

He was remarkably studious and industrious to a degree, and never failed to make every effort and apply every energy to the successful performance of the many duties which were entrusted to his supervision, at a bar which during his time was composed of able, eloquent, successful and commanding lawyers, among whom he attained and always maintained the highest rank. At the time of his death he was the oldest and perhaps most honored member of the Barbour County bar. He was the president of the Barbour County Bar Association. He had been president of the West Virginia Bar Association, and for the year 1921 he was a delegate to the National Bar Association from West Virginia, and attended its meeting in Cincinnati.

Mr. Woods was a deeply religious man of sincere and devout religious conviction. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and one of the finest Bible teachers the local church at Philippi ever had. He was happily married, had a beautiful home and enjoyed the companionship and society of his fellowmen. He lived with his head among the clouds, and he was a master of high thinking and had a deep and profound respect of all right living people.

In 1898 he married Miss Jennie Canter, and they have one son, Neeson Canter Woods, who is in his twentieth year and is preparing himself for the legal profession. He has recently graduated from the Staunton Military Academy, and is now a student in college, and the hope of his father was that his son might become a lawyer and keep up the high standard of learning, capacity, and efficiency at the bar which has so long distinguished the talented family of lawyers through which he is descended.

Mr. Woods was a consistent and out-spoken democrat, unusually proud and assertive of the political view which he entertained. He was an interesting, clear headed and convincing public speaker, and when at his best was a powerful and formidable adversary before the bar and before a jury. He was the kind of a man who did not ask nor expect any quarter at the bar from judge, jury or advocate, and was quick and ready to have them all understand that that was his attitude in every legal and forensic contest in which he was engaged as a lawyer or practitioner.

Mr. Woods was dearly loved and his death was deeply deplored by all who knew him, and in the community where he lived he is greatly missed. His noble life and humble Christian fortitude stand as monuments among his neighbors which neither time nor tide can efface.

VAN B. HALL. The profession of the law offers unexampled opportunities for advancement, not only along professional lines, but in politics as well, and it is a notable fact that many of the distinguished men of this country today, as they were in the past, are recruited from the ranks of this learned calling. One of the leading men of Braxton County, who has won laurels both as an attorney and in the office of prosecuting attorney, is Van B. Hall, engaged in practicing at the Sutton bar.

Van B. Hall was born in Meigs County, Ohio, March 30, 1870, a son of R. M. and Sarah A. (Duvall) Hall, the former born in Marion County in 1828 and the latter born in Harrison County in 1830. R. M. Hall was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They moved to Braxton County when their son Van B. Hall was six years old. Mr. Hall was a Mason and a most exemplary man in every respect. The democratic ticket received his hearty support. Four of his eight children survive, namely: Homer C., who is a railroad engineer residing at San Francisco, California; Burke P., who is an attorney of Sutton; S. L., who is a resident of Frametown, West Virginia, and Van B., whose name heads this review.

From childhood, determined upon a professional career, Van B. Hall worked steadily with that end in view, and after attending the public schools of Braxton County, where he was reared, he took a course at the Glenville State Normal School, and then engaged in teaching in the free schools of Braxton County. While thus engaged he read law, and was admitted to practice in the courts of West Virginia in 1896. A few years thereafter he formed a partnership with his brother, Burke P. Hall, in the practice of law, under the firm name of Hall Brothers, at Sutton. In November, 1920, he was elected prosecuting attorney of Braxton County, being the only candidate on the democratic county ticket, having opposition to win in that election. His success came to him because of his personal popularity, and the realization of the people of his special fitness for this important office.

On September 24, 1901, Mr. Hall married Sarah Anne Boggs, who was educated in the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Hall became the parents of four sons, namely: Byron W., who graduated from the Sutton High School, and is now attending the West Virginia State University; Robert M., attending the Sutton High School; Boggs C. and Harold Lee, both of whom are attending the grade schools. Mr. Hall belongs to the Baptist Church, and is an active worker in the Sunday School, which he is now serving as superintendent, and is president of the Braxton County Sunday School Association and one of the trustees of Broadus College at Philippi, West Virginia. A Mason, he belongs to Sutton Lodge No. 21, A. F. and A. M., of which he is a past master; Sutton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M., of which he is a past high priest; and Sutton Commandery, 16, K. T., of which he is generalissimo. He is a member of Sutton Lodge No. 73, K. of P., of which he is past chancellor, and he also belongs to the Beni-Kedem Temple at Charleston, A. A. O. N. M. S. Some years ago he served as moderator of the Elk Valley Baptist Association, and is one of the leading Baptists in this part of the state. It is needless to say that he has faithfully and capably discharged every responsibility reposed in him, and that he holds in high degree the confidence and full respect of his fellow citizens.

SETH A. MORTON. With the possible exception of honesty and integrity, there is no other quality so in demand in the business world of today as practicality. Energy, push, enterprise, courage and rapid and sure decision mark the men who become the compelling forces in the upbuilding of the trade and commerce of the country. Seth A. Morton, a well-known lumberman of Sutton, has been so marked. There has been no element of chance in the success which he has achieved; on the contrary, it has been the inevitable result of what he has put of himself into his energies. No fortunate circumstances gave him any early advantage, for he began his business career with only the endowments with which nature had favored him, coupled with the sound principles instilled in his home during his boyhood.

Mr. Morton was born in Clay County, West Virginia, April 7, 1868, a son of Daniel and Charlotte (Roger) Morton. His father was also born in Clay County, a son of John T. Morton, the latter being a son of Thomas T. Morton, who was a soldier during the Revolutionary war and the War of 1812. After the close of the latter struggle he went to Clay County, where he and his wife passed the rest of their lives. His son, John T. Morton, was reared in Clay County, where he married the widow of Samuel Holcomb and became the father of six children, among them Daniel Morton. Daniel Morton was reared in Clay County, where he was given only limited educational advantages, and as a young man adopted the vocation of agriculture, which he followed throughout his life. He was a republican in politics, although not an office seeker. Of his ten children the following are living at this time: G. P., of Molino, Florida; Seth A., of this review; Chloe, the wife of John D. Ramsey; Moses S., of Harriman, Tennessee; Mary S., the wife of W. J. Ramsey, and Esther, the wife of H. J. Walker. It is interesting to note that of this family three of the Morton daughters married three brothers of the Ramsey family, while one of the Morton boys married one of the Ramsey girls.

Seth A. Morton was reared on his father's farm in Clay County, where he was given his education in the district schools, and until he reached the age of twenty-one years was his father's associate in the work of the home place. While thus engaged he became interested in the lumber business, which he finally entered on his own account and eventually established an office and yard at Sutton. Following his marriage he lived for a time on the old home farm in Clay County, where he divided his time between farming and lumbering, subsequently moving to Webster County, where he owned and operated a sawmill until 1918. He then disposed of his interests in Webster County and moved to Sutton, and has here built up a splendid business and placed himself among the leading business men of the place.

In October, 1896, Mr. Morton was united in marriage with Miss Hattie M. Ramsey, who was reared on a farm in Clay County and was educated in the public schools, and to this union there have been born four children: Mabel, the wife of F. J. Howie; Mamie, the wife of W. A. Robinson; and Marco O. and Olive, who are attending public school. Mr. and Mrs. Morton have one grandchild: Elnora Robinson, born December 26, 1921. By a previous marriage Mr. Morton had two children, of whom one is living, Fred G., of Webster County, West Virginia, a veteran of the World war. In his political allegiance Mr. Morton is a democrat, but has not cared for public office, his business interests having been of sufficient importance and size to keep his attention and energies occupied. He has some valuable realty holdings in this region, which include 300 acres of coal lands, as well as a modern home at Sutton and a dwelling at Charleston.

CLYDE HAMILTON SNEDEGAR. The part public utilities have played in the development of the country has never, perhaps, been fully realized by those who enjoy the benefits accruing therefrom, but as time progresses people are coming more and more to appreciate the debt owed by them to the men who keep these conveniences in working order. Particularly is this true with reference to the great railway systems, although the general public usually bears only about the heads of these companies and little about those in more humble positions, whose duties, however, are just as exacting and important in comparison, and whose responsibilities are numerous and heavy. In this connection is mentioned Clyde Hamilton Snedegar, of Huntington, trainmaster of the Huntington Division of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, a man who has worked his own way up to responsibility, and who in his present capacity is working along lines of mutual interest, confidence and opportunity.

Mr. Snedegar was born at Ona, Cabell County, West Virginia, July 3, 1877, a son of Robert Jesse and Mary Elizabeth (Douglas) Snedegar. His father was born in 1843, in Greenbrier County, Virginia (now West Virginia), where he worked on his father's farm until 1861. At the outbreak of the war between the states he enlisted in the Union army, joining a West Virginia infantry regiment which was later consolidated with the Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Mr. Snedegar saw four years of service, was severely wounded in the left shoulder and participated in the second battle of Bull Run and other notable engagements. He had a splendid record for valiant service and fidelity to duty, and on the receipt of his honorable discharge served on United States Government surveys in Missouri, Indian Territory and other sections of the then West. In 1871 he returned to Huntington, where he became a pioneer fireman for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, and in 1873 was promoted to the post of locomotive engineer, a position which he held until his death at Huntington in November, 1917, at which time he was one of the oldest engineers of the road in point of service. He was a republican in his political convictions, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. While with the surveying party, at Kansas City, Missouri, he was initiated into the mysteries of Masonry, and continued to be a member of that order until his death. He also held membership in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Mr. Snedegar married Miss Mary Elizabeth Douglas, who was born in 1858, in Rockbridge County, Virginia, and died at Huntington in April, 1918. They became the parents of seven children, as follows: Clyde Hamilton, of this notice; Pearl, who is unmarried and an employee of the Anderson-Newcomb Company department store at Huntington; Vesta McCorkle, the wife of Eli McComas, of Huntington, a locomotive engineer for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway; Lilla, the wife of Wiley Agnew, of Earling, West Virginia, store manager for the Logan Coal Company; Percy D., of Huntington, a conductor for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway; Lillian, unmarried, a clerk in the time-eeper's office of the same road; and Robert, a Chesapeake Ohio locomotive fireman, residing at Huntington.

Mr. W. Smith

Clyde Hamilton Snedegar received his education in the graded and high schools of Huntington, leaving the latter at the age of sixteen years to become a telegraph operator for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, a vocation which he followed for four years on the Huntington Division. In 1904 he was made train dispatcher at Huntington, and in 1918 was advanced to the post of trainmaster, which he has since held, his offices being situated in the passenger station building of the road, on Seventh Avenue, between Ninth and Tenth streets. He is a thoroughly competent railroad man, who has the confidence of his superiors and associates and the good will and friendship of his men. In politics he is a republican, and his religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church. He belongs to Syracuse Lodge No. 2, K. of P., of Huntington; Huntington Camp, M. W. A.; and the Huntington Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Snedegar was a modern residence at 1664 Sixth Avenue, a comfortable and attractive home in one of Huntington's exclusive residence districts.

In February, 1902, at Milton, West Virginia, Mr. Snedegar married Miss Mary Agnes Martindale, a daughter of Hugh and Matilda (Irwin) Martindale, the latter of whom had deceased. Mr. Martindale, who was formerly a school teacher and farmer, is now retired from active life and is making his home with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Snedegar. The latter have five children: Mildred, who is a freshman at the Huntington High School; Robert Hugh, a freshman at the Junior High School; Ruth, who is taking a preparatory course at Marshall College; Helen, attending the graded school; and Creth, the baby.

WILLIAM WINFRED SMITH. To those who are interested in the facts concerning the development of their community there is something attractive in the lives of those who have been connected with the law. The jurist and legislator occupy a place which can be filled by no others in our country and under our form of government. While all may aspire to and attain positions of high distinction in public life, the man versed in the laws of the country must be depended upon to conserve human rights and to see that each class of our citizenship may have its representation in a legal way. Of the lawyers of Cabell County who have attained distinction in their profession during recent years, one whose career has been more than ordinarily successful and who has been the recipient of numerous honors is William Winfred Smith, of Huntington.

Mr. Smith was born in York County, Pennsylvania, February 24, 1877, a son of Henry N. and Mary A. (Hildebrand) Smith, and received his early education in the public schools of his native county and of Ceredo, Wayne County, West Virginia, where he was a member of the first graduating class, of 1894, graduated from the Ceredo High School. He then entered Marshall College, Huntington, graduating in 1896, following which, in 1897 and 1898, he was principal of the public schools of Kenova, West Virginia. In 1898 he entered West Virginia University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1902, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in the year 1904 was given his Master of Arts degree from the same institution. He completed the law course in 1905 and received the degree of Bachelor of Laws and was admitted to the West Virginia bar in the same year at Morgantown. Mr. Smith had a somewhat remarkable college career. He was admitted to membership in the Phi Sigma Kappa Greek letter fraternity, as president of the college Young Men's Christian Association in 1901, was president of the Parthenon Literary Society during 1901, was editor-in-chief of the College Weekly, The Athenaeum, in 1902, and during his senior year of the academic course took the Wiles prize in oratory, $100 in gold; the W. C. T. U. prize for an essay, and the State Tax Commission prize for an essay, the subject of the last named being "Taxation in West Virginia."

On leaving college Mr. Smith practiced law at Morgantown from 1905 until 1910 and then came to Huntington, where he has since carried on a general civil and criminal practice, his offices being located at 300 and 301 First National Bank Building. During his residence at Morgantown Mr. Smith was elected a member of the city council, and rendered the service of compiling the ordinances of that city. At present he is attorney for the town of Ceredo. He holds membership in the Cabell County Bar Association, the West Virginia Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He took an active part in all local war movements, helping in all the drives, serving on the Legal Advisory Board of Cabell County and speaking throughout the county as a "Four-Minute Man" in behalf of the Liberty Loan campaigns, Red Cross and other patriotic organizations, which he also assisted liberally with his means. He is the editor and compiler of "The Honor Roll of Cabell County, West Virginia," an illustrated historical and biographical record of Cabell County's part in the World war, perhaps the most elaborate work of its kind of any county in the United States. In January, 1922, Mr. Smith was appointed by Governor E. F. Morgan as a West Virginia representative to the Illiteracy Commission of the National Educational Association, and attended the first conference, held at Chicago, February 24 and 25, 1922, at which conference the slogan coined by Mr. Smith, "No Illiteracy by 1930," was adopted. He is also a member of the Advisory Board of the Prisoners' Relief Society of Washington, D. C., and served as its managing director for a time, and his interest in this direction is also indicated by his membership in the American Sociological Congress.

Mr. Smith has a number of important business connections, being secretary of the Bungalow Land Company, president of the Park City Oil & Gas Company, secretary and treasurer of the Huntington Cannel Coal Company, and secretary of the Cabell Oil and Gas Company, all of Huntington, and secretary of the Williams Sanitarium Company of Kenova. He owns a modern residence at 232 Sixth Avenue, a comfortable home in an attractive and exclusive residential section of the city, and also holds some suburban property. In politics he is a republican, and during 1904 and 1905 was a member of the city council of Morgantown. His religious connection is with the Congregational Church, of the movements of which he has been an active and generous supporter, and formerly served as state president of the West Virginia Christian Endeavor Union.

Mr. Smith has been very prominent in fraternal affairs. He is a member of Reese Camp No. 66, W. O. W., and is past head consul of the jurisdiction of West Virginia of the Woodmen of the World, this jurisdiction including West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia. He was twice sovereign delegate to the national conventions and is a member of the sovereign law committee of the Woodmen of the World. He is also a member of Huntington Lodge No. 33, Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor, and was for four years chairman of the judiciary committee of the Grand Lodge of West Virginia of the Knights of Pythias, now being grand inner guard of the Grand Lodge of West Virginia of this order. He belongs also to Huntington Council No. 191, Junior Order United American Mechanics, and Huntington Lodge No. 347, Loyal Order of Moose, and is treasurer of the Fraternal Society Law Association of Chicago, Illinois, a national fraternal legal association. Mr. Smith likewise holds membership in the Huntington Chamber of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club of Huntington.

On March 7, 1907, at Morgantown, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Lida Allen Evans, a daughter of Thomas R. and Delia (Allen) Evans, the latter of whom resides with Mr. and Mrs. Smith. Mr. Evans, who died at Morgantown in December, 1920, was a business man of that city. The Evanses were pioneers into that part of Virginia now included in West Virginia. Mrs. Smith is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution and of the Mayflower Society of Connecticut, and is a direct descendant of Elder William Brewster.

WILLIAM JOSEPH QUINN, president of the General Coal Company at Huntington, has secured standing as one of the progressive and substantial business men of the younger generation in this city. He was born at Girardville, Pennsylvania, April 7, 1894, and is a son of William Joseph Quinn, Sr., and Lucy (Griffiths) Quinn, both natives of the old Keystone State, where the former was born in 1863 and the latter, in Schuylkill County, in 1866. The father became fire boss for coal mines in the district near Girardville, Pennsylvania, and was only thirty-three years of age when he met his death in a mine explosion at Lost Creek, Pennsylvania, in 1896, his widow being still a resident of Girardville. Mr. Quinn was a staunch republican, was affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, and was a communicant of the Catholic Church, as is also his widow. Of the children the subject of this review was the fourth in order of birth, and he was two years of age at the time of his father's tragic death; James is a resident of West Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and is a railroad employee; Thomas is superintendent of the A. D. Cronin Coal Company at Accoville, West Virginia; Anna is the wife of Arthur Brown, of Girardville, Pennsylvania, Mr. Brown being an electrician in the service of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company; Robert S. is superintendent of the U. S. Block Coal Company, with residence at Woodville, West Virginia.

William J. Quinn graduated from the high school department of Girard College in June, 1910, and thereafter he worked in various clerical capacities until 1912, at Girardville and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Atlantic City, New Jersey. In 1912 he became a clerk for the Berwind Lumber Company at Berwind, West Virginia, and six months later became shipping clerk for the New River & Pocahontas Consolidated Coal Company, which one year later transferred him to similar service in the City of Charleston. In 1914 he accepted a position as salesman with the Winifrede Coal Company, the mines of which are in Kanawha County, this state, and he was a representative of this corporation at Cincinnati, Ohio, until 1917, when he organized a company to take over the properties and business of the Ruffner Coal Company of Accoville, Logan County, West Virginia. He was concerned in the operation of the mine of this company until August, 1920, and was vice president and general manager of the company. In 1920 the Ruffner Coal Company sold its mine and business to the A. D. Cronin Coal Company, in which Mr. Quinn retained an interest and was made general manager, a position of which he is still the incumbent. In 1919 the Ruffner Coal Company acquired the Franklin Mine in Boone County, and this mine likewise is now owned by the A. D. Cronin Coal Company, the aggregate output capacity of whose mines is 175,000 tons of coal annually.

In 1919 Mr. Quinn purchased the U. S. Block Coal Company's mine and business, the mine having a capacity for the production of 50,000 tons of bituminous coal a year, and this property he still owns. In 1919 also he effected the organization of the General Coal Company, for the handling of the output of the mines with which he is identified, and of this sales company he has since continued the president. He is president also of the U. S. Block Coal Company, and his executive offices are at 918-919 Robson-Prichard Building in the City of Huntington. Mr. Quinn is a staunch supporter of the cause of the republican party, and is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In March, 1920, at Covington, Kentucky, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Quinn and Miss Vivian Brown, who was born at Millersburg, that state, and who is a popular factor in the social circles of Huntington.

WILLIAM F. SMITH, vice president and general manager of the Kanawha Dock Company at Point Pleasant, Mason County, and also of the Point Pleasant Dry Dock Company, has been a potent force in the development of these substantial and important industrial corporations. The Kanawha Dock Company was organized in 1902, and is incorporated with a capital of $75,000. The company owns modern docks and sawmills, and has the best of facilities for the building and repairing of all types of vessels plying the rivers of this section of the Union. John W. Hubbard, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is president of the company; Mr. Smith has been its vice president and general manager since June, 1918; and C. E. Lawhead, formerly connected with the Merchants National Bank of this city, is its secretary and treasurer. The Point Pleasant Dry Dock Company was organized in December, 1909, the general equipment of its plant having been purchased from the Pittsburgh Coal Company, which had constructed its dry dock at Pittsburgh in 1884. The officers of the Point Pleasant Dry Dock Company are identical with those of the Kanawha Dock Company. The dry-dock company met with a financial loss of fully $200,000 when its property was swept away by the steamer Otto Marmett on the 14th of January, 1918, this steamer having been carried down the river by the floating ice, and from a total of twenty-one pieces the Point Pleasant Dry Dock Company recovered only its dry dock: its floating sawmills, tow boats, gas, steam and timber boats all being destroyed. The dry dock was recovered below Cincinnati, Ohio, and forty-two feet had to be cut off the dock in order to return it to Point Pleasant. The dock is now 56 by 219 feet in dimension and can accommodate nearly all types of river craft, and is of the most approved modern type, so that its operative facilities insure the best of service. This is the best dry dock plant between Pittsburgh and New Orleans, and plays an important part in connection with the navigation interests of the Kanawha, Ohio and Mississippi rivers. In rehabilitating the plant after the disaster mentioned above, a large expenditure of money was entailed, including the purchasing of the property of the Kanawha Dock Company. The company now has a river frontage extending two city blocks, and on the land is a sawmill and four dwelling houses for employees. The company also leases from the state 600 feet of frontage on the Kanawha River and 80 feet on the Ohio River. This leased frontage covers the site of the Tu-endie-wie Park, in which is erected the monument commemorating the battle which occurred at Point Pleasant on the 10th of October, 1774. The two companies with which Mr. Smith is thus identified employ an average force of more than 100 men, and the two enterprises are the ones of major importance in connection with the general prosperity of Point Pleasant, which depends largely upon the river traffic for its business and civic stability. Mr. Hubbard, president of these two corporations, is president also of the Cincinnati & Louisville Packet Line, besides being interested in several other important enterprises in West Virginia and other states, his residence being at Pittsburgh.

Mr. Smith was reared in the City of Pittsburgh, and there he had been associated with the operation of docks for eighteen years prior to coming to Point Pleasant. As a young man he had been employed on steamboats in the coast trade plying between Ohio River points and the City of New Orleans. Since establishing himself at Point Pleasant he here built the steamer W. F. Smith, which is now owned by the LaBelle Steel Company of Portsmouth, Ohio. Mr. Smith has been concerned with river navigation activities for fully forty years. He is the owner of his attractive home property at Point Pleasant, and is here a stockholder in the Home Building Company, of which he was the principal organizer, besides which he is one of the original stockholders in the Marietta Manufacturing Company at Point Pleasant, West Virginia.

In 1881 was recorded the marriage of Mr. Smith to Miss Susan M. Deem, of Point Pleasant, and in the same year he had charge of bringing the Ashland docks to Point Pleasant. He had the management of the docks at this place a year and for the following two years was similarly engaged at Evansville, Indiana. He then returned to Pittsburgh where he remained until 1909, since which year he has maintained his home at Point Pleasant, where both his eldest and youngest children were born. William Russell, the eldest of the children, is associated with his father's business activities. The maiden name of his wife was Belva Blag Henry Sidney likewise is connected with the business of her father. Bessie Virginia is the wife of Roy Condee, of San Diego, California. The younger children are Raymo Hartley, Susie, Howard Finley and John Hubbard.

ABRAHAM RUSH MCQUILKIN was one of the prominent residents of Berkeley County during the last century.

Wm F. Smith.

was a merchant, successful and vigorous in the prosecution of his affairs, and exemplified the highest standards of personal character in his contact with his fellow citizens.

He was born on a farm near Bedington in Berkeley County in 1817. His father, Thomas McQuilkin, was probably born in Pennsylvania, and spent his active life on a farm near Bedington and finally lived with a son in Jefferson County until his death. He married Sally Rush, and they reared three children: Abraham R.; William T.; and Mary, who married Thomas Van Metre.

Abraham Rush McQuilkin commenced his life of usefulness as clerk in a store at Shepherdstown, learned a business here, and a few years later set up in the mercantile business on his own account at Scrabble in Berkeley County, carrying a stock of general merchandise. This business was continued with uninterrupted success until the outbreak of the war between the states. He was a strong Union man, and during the war he removed his family to Hagerstown, Maryland. After the restoration of peace he returned to Scrabble, and finally came to Martinsburg to give his daughter the advantages of the schools there. In Martinsburg he lived retired until his death at the age of eighty-five. He and his wife were active members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

He married Ellen G. Rush, who was born in Jefferson County, and was very young when her father died. Her mother married a Jefferson County farmer named Marshall, and with them she remained until her own marriage. Mrs. McQuilkin died at the age of seventy-three. They reared two daughters, Sally and Eliza. Sally married G. S. DeFrance, of Frederick, Maryland, and is now deceased. Her children were named Abraham R., Don G., Henry Clay, Heloise, Garrett and Nater. Heloise is now Mrs. Edward Odham and lives at Worcester, Massachusetts. Henry Clay married Mrs. Steck, of Winchester, and is an orchardist. Miss Eliza McQuilkin remained with her parents and gave them her utmost care and solicitude during their declining years, and she still occupies the old home in Martinsburg.

JASPER L. GRAVES, a native of Berkeley County, is one of the prosperous young business men of Martinsburg. He began acquiring experience in mercantile lines before he left school, and has built up a satisfactory business by steady application and industry.

Mr. Graves was born on a farm near Jones Springs in Berkeley County, son of John M. Graves, a native of the same county and grandson of William Graves. William Graves was of early English ancestry, and on leaving Pennsylvania located in Berkeley County, on a farm on Stuckey ridge. He married Sarah Stuckey, of a pioneer family of that community. Both were stricken with diphtheria and died a week apart, leaving two small children, the daughter Barbara dying at the age of five years. John M. Graves was only five years old when his parents died, and he was reared for by his uncle, Michael Stuckey, with whom he lived until he was twenty-one. As a young man he did farm work, later bought a small tract of land near Jones Springs, as a tract farmer for several years, and on leaving his farm and moving to Martinsburg, was employed at Bishops mill and lived at Martinsburg until his death at the age of fifty-two. On December 25, 1878, he married Sarah Catherine Albright, who was born on a farm in Berkeley County, daughter of Lewis Grantham Albright, a native of the same county, and granddaughter of William Albright, who is said to have been of Pennsylvania-Dutch ancestry. Lewis G. Albright learned the trade of shoemaker, when all coats and shoes were made to order, and he followed that trade in connection with farming. He married Sally Shimp, and both lived to a good old age. Mrs. Sarah Catherine Graves is a resident of Martinsburg. She became the mother of the following children: William Lewis, James Ranklin, Nellie Gertrude, Jasper L., Ernest Cleveland and Andrew J. The son Andrew died at the age of twenty-two, while attending a training camp at Morgantown during the world war. William L. is a machinist by trade, and is now foreman in the Southern Pacific Railroad shops at Oakland, California. He married Grace Arvin, and they have three children, named Lester, Francene and Howard. James Franklin Graves lives at Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, is a Pennsylvania Railroad conductor, and by his marriage to Alice Gift has children named Marvin, Virginia, Sarah, Jasper and Lealie. Nellie Gertrude is the wife of I. F. Hyle, foreman at the Kelly Island Stone Quarry and has a daughter, Catherine, now a student in the Martinsburg High School. The parents of these children were both active members of the United Brethren Church and reared their family in the same faith.

Jasper L. Graves at the age of fourteen began clerking in a grocery store, doing that work after hours and on holidays. After leaving the city schools he continued clerking until 1911, then he engaged in the grocery business on his own account, and with a very small stock of goods. He now has one of the leading stores of the kind in Martinsburg. He lives with his mother. Mr. Graves is a member of the United Brethren Church and has been prominent in the church in various official capacities, having been a member of the board of trustees, is a teacher in the Sunday school and has served as president of the Christian Endeavor Society.

ARTHUR MERRYMAN GILBERT is one of the veteran business men of Martinsburg, where he has been a druggist over forty years and where his judgment has been enlisted in the service of several other substantial institutions. He has been a public-spirited citizen as well, and a brief account of his career and of his family merits a place in this publication.

He was born on a farm bordering on Opequan Creek, one mile from Middleway, in Jefferson County, Virginia, now West Virginia. His father, Jacob Gilbert, was born at Middleway in 1801. His grandfather, Henry Gilbert, was born in Scotland, learned the trade of weaver, and on coming to the American colonies settled in Jefferson County, at Middleway. Here he put up his hand loom and did a thriving business greatly needed in a community whose people still depended upon the home art of manufacturing cloth from the wool grown on sheep and the cotton raised in the fields of that locality. He reared three sons, Bernard, Henry and Jacob.

Jacob Gilbert spent his early life as a farmer. His first wife was Mrs. Walter Burrell, of Jefferson County, owner of two plantations, upon which they continued to live and at her death he succeeded to the ownership of the property, together with many slaves. At the breaking out of the Civil war he freed the slaves and moved to Middleway, where he owned a large stone house set amidst pleasant surroundings, and remained there until his death at the age of seventy-eight. For his second wife Jacob Gilbert married Sarah Harvey Merryman, who was born at Tomonium, Baltimore County, Maryland, daughter of Nicholas and Rebecca (Harvey) Merryman. The Merrymans and Harveys were well known old families of Maryland, and Doctor Ridgley, of Baltimore, has compiled a history of the family. Nicholas Merryman was a farmer and breeder of thoroughbred race horses, and was well known on the turf. Mrs. Sarah Gilbert died in 1879, at the age of thirty-seven. She was the mother of five children: William H., who died at Middleway in 1906; Arthur Merryman; Mary Elizabeth, of Middleway; Roberta, who married T. A. Milton, a lawyer of Kansas City, Missouri; and Sarah M., who married Dr. D. P. Fry, of Hedgesville.

Arthur Merryman Gilbert attended private schools at Middleway, and soon after completing his education, in 1876, he came to Martinsburg and began an apprenticeship in the drug store of William Dorsey. It was in 1883 that he established himself in the drug business, and for many years had conducted one of the best drug stores in the Eastern Panhandle.

In 1893 Mr. Gilbert married Mabel Rodrick, a native of Frederick County, Maryland, daughter of Daniel W. and Mary Priscilla Rodrick. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert have two sons, Arthur M., Jr., and Webster Rodrick. The son Arthur is a graduate of the Martinsburg High School, spent two years in Washington and Lee University, and in 1918 joined the service at Camp Lee at Lexington, Virginia, and remained there until the signing of the armistice. He is now a teller in the Old National Bank at Martinsburg. Webster, the younger son, is a sophomore in the Martinsburg High School.

Arthur M. Gilbert was a member of the city council at Martinsburg from 1892 to 1894 and was city treasurer in 1913-16. He cast his first presidential vote for Grover Cleveland, and has been active in the interest of the democratic party. He has been a director of the Martinsburg National Bank and its successor, the Old National Bank, for a quarter of a century, is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., and for upwards of thirty years has been a member of Trinity Episcopal Church.

GEORGE BARLEY has been a resident of Welch, McDowell County, since 1905, and has been an influential force in the material upbuilding of the city, as well as in its advancement along civic lines. He here organized the McDowell Engineering & Construction Company, and has been not only a specially successful contractor and builder, but has also built houses in an individual way, which he rents.

Mr. Barley was born at Introdacqua, Italy, on the 26th of June, 1869, a son of Michele Barley, a successful agriculturist. Mr. Barley passed his childhood and early youth on his father's farm, attended the schools of his native land, and after leaving the farm he became identified with railroad construction work, his more advanced education having been gained by his study at home, in otherwise leisure hours. He learned to read and write the English language after coming to the United States in 1899. After coming to this country he was for a time employed as a stone cutter in quarries at Peekskill, New York. After a period of four years he returned to his native land, and five months later he came back to the United States. His wife and children, who had remained in Italy, came to America two years after Mr. Barley made his last trip. Mr. Barley found employment in a coal mine near Elkins, West Virginia, and later he worked as a miner in the employ of the Beaver Creek Coal Company at Weaver, and was a merchant at Tallmansville and Wilsonburg, in which last mentioned place he for a time had a general store. Upon coming to Welch he found employment in the mines of this district, and finally he established a general store here, which he conducted six years, with marked success. As a contractor and builder he has achieved substantial prosperity and an excellent reputation, he being known as one of the reliable and progressive business men of McDowell County and as one who has achieved success through his own ability and efforts. Mr. Barley is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery of the Masonic fraternity, is a member also of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston and the Loyal Order of Moose, his political support being given to the republican party and he and his family being members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In his native land Mr. Barley wedded Miss Mary Dizenzo, and to them have been born eleven children, the seven sons being known and referred to as the Barley Seven, and all being notable for industry, business ability and sterling character. The children of George Barley and wife are: John, Felix, Bena, Madyln, Lorraine, Albert, Henry, Lina, Daniel, Charles and George, Jr.. The son John has served for a number of years as manager of the foreign department of the First National Bank of Welch and recently (in the winter of 1922) was commissioned Italian consular agent at Northfork, McDowell County, to serve during the absence of the regular incumbent, another effort being now in process to cause the transfer of this consular office to Welch, the county seat. The entire family enjoys unqualified popularity in the community.

ORION H. GALL, cashier of the First National Bank of Belington, has been actively associated as a young man with the commercial interests of this thriving city, though nearly two years out of his young manhood were given to the service of his country at the time of the great war. Almost immediately on his return from France he took up the duties of a civilian, and soon afterward came to his present post with the bank.

The Galls are a prominent old family of Barbour County. His ancestry runs back some four or five generations to George Gall, who was a Virginian and a soldier of the Revolution. A son of this soldier was John J. Gall, the founder of the family in West Virginia. His early home was near the Natural Bridge in Virginia, and from there he moved to West Virginia and established his home in what is now Barbour County, on Elk River, and from that region his descendants have scattered over this state and other states. George W. Gall, grandfather of the Belington banker, was sixteen years of age when the family moved to Barbour County. He was a strong Union man, but two of his brothers were soldiers under Stonewall Jackson.

John Jay Gall, father of Orion H., was born at the Village of Arden in Barbour County November 15, 1851. He is now past three score and ten, but is still active in his work as a general farmer and stock man. He has been one of the more successful stock raisers in this county, handling a good grade of beef cattle. He has taken an interest in the affairs of his community, has served as a member of the School Board, is a democratic voter and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. John J. Gall married Elizabeth Carpenter in Barbour County, daughter of Allen and Harriet (Hoffman) Carpenter. Their children are: Alva D., of Hammondsville, Ohio; W. Bradford, of Belington; Marvin, of Morgantown; Dessie, wife of Charles S. Row, of Belington; Orion H.; Audra A., teacher in the public schools of Barbour County; Dewey L., a travelling salesman living at Morgantown; and Hugh who is still in school and assists his father on the farm.

Orion H. Gall was born near Arden in Philippi District August 1, 1893, but subsequently his parents moved from Laurel Creek to Bill's Creek in Barker District, where he spent the greater part of his early life. He had the opportunities of the public schools, but his education and training have been primarily a matter of practical experience. At the age of eighteen he began teaching in the country, and was one of Barbour County's educators for four years. He left the schoolroom to go into the service of the First National Bank of Belington as bookkeeper, and kept up this work steadily until he left after Christmas in 1917 to join the colors.

Mr. Gall enlisted at Pittsburgh, and from there was sent to Camp Joseph E. Johnston near Jacksonville, Florida where he was first assigned to Receiving Company No. 3 then to Clerical Company No. 2, and in May, 1918, was assigned to Supply Company No. 314. With this last named company he sailed from Newport News on the transport Martha Washington, was landed at Brest June 19, 1918, and during the remainder of the period of hostilities was at Gieves in the General Intermediate Supply Depot. The company remained on duty there until June, 1919, when Mr. Gall was transferred to the Quartermaster's Detachment, which put the camp in condition to turn over to the French Government. This transfer was completed August 21, and then he and his comrades left for Brest and sailed on transport Aeolus, August 26, reaching Brooklyn on September 5, was in Camp Merritt until September 11, and then moved to Camp Dix, where he received his honor discharge September 13, 1919. On the 19th of the same month he arrived home, after an absence of nearly two years. Mr. Gall was a private until June, 1919, when he was made sergeant and was discharged with that rank.

For a time after returning home he was bookkeeper for the Kane & Keyser Hardware Company of Belington, but on April 1, 1920, took up his work as cashier of the First National Bank. He is also one of the bank's directors. The First National Bank of Belington was chartered in 1903, with a capital of $40,000.00. It has capital a surplus of $50,000.00, deposits of upwards of $300,000, and total resources of over $400,000.00. The president is B. B. Rohrbough, J. E. Keyser is vice president, and the assistant cashier is W. W. Thomas.

Mr. Gall, is a democrat, casting his first presidential ballot for Woodrow Wilson. He is secretary of the Business Men's Club of Belington, and is affiliated with the Masonic Order. He is unmarried.

George Barley

FLOYD TETER, banker and business man of Belington, is a native of Barbour County, and some important history pertinent to this section of the state as well as to the family is involved in an account of his forefathers.

The name Teter is a corruption of "Dietrich," the pure German spelling of the name. The Dietrichs were in the Valley of Virginia at the close of the American Revolution and are said to have settled from Pennsylvania. From the Valley of Virginia, branches of the family moved westward, one going into Pendleton County in what is now West Virginia. In Barbour County the family were pioneers. Teter's Creek was named as early as 1783, and four years later George Teter acquired title to land here, evidence of which is found in the Virginia land books.

However, the first permanent settler of old Randolph County on the west bank of Tygart Valley River and in what is now the County of Barbour, was Jacob Teter, great-grandfather of Floyd Teter. It was about 1800 that he came to Barbour County from Pendleton County. He was a son of Philip Teter, whose other children were Joseph, Isaac, James, Nancy and, perhaps, Mary. There is record of a Mary "Tidricks" who was married in Randolph County to Enoch Osborn in 1803, and in 1811 Solomon Yeager married Mary, a daughter of Jacob Teter.

The great-grandfather Jacob Teter settled on the west side of the Tygart Valley River at what is now the town-site of Belington. When he came here from Pendleton County he was accompanied by a boy, and also carried a gun, and they were followed by his dog. He and the boy built a little cabin not far from the river bank. This historic log building was still standing in 1890. The well at the site is still marked by a depression near the Belington West Side school building. Mr. Teter acquired a large tract of land, including all the present West Side of Belington. After his home was built he was joined by his family. When he started back to Pendleton County to bring on his family the Tygart Valley River was high and he built a raft to cross it. On the raft he put the boy, together with his dog and gun and a scant supply of food, and, tying one end of a withe to the craft, he put the other end between his teeth and, swimming across, pulled the raft and landed the cargo safely on the opposite shore. Jacob Teter was a sturdy frontiersman who cleared much of his land from the virgin forest. Abundant prosperity attended his labors. He erected a comfortable house on his farm, planted an orchard, and from some apple and cherry trees of this orchard his great-grandson has eaten fruit, though all of the trees have now disappeared. As one of the first settlers he built and operated the first grist mill, and at that mill continued to serve the second and third generations. He was also active in founding the first Methodist Church. Evidence of his deep piety is found in the story that the only method by which some boys were able to capture a prized melon in his fine melon patch was to wait until he was engaged in prayer. He has told the boys that if they could steal that special melon without his detecting them they were welcome to it. He founded a strong race of people, having been twice married. Among his sons were Jacob, Joseph and Isaac, and among his daughters were Mrs. Mary Yeager, Mrs. Stonestreet and Mrs. Patrick McCann.

His son Jacob, grandfather of Floyd Teter, was born in the pioneer log cabin mentioned above. His older brother, Joseph, was born in Pendleton County May 8, 1796. Jacob Teter became one of the substantial farmers of Barbour County, his farm being half a mile further up the Tygart Valley than the old home. In his generation he was as vigorous and efficient as his father, and his life was ordered on a high plane of integrity and honor. He died at the age of seventy-six. His wife was Mary Coberly. The oldest of their children was Jesse Teter. Oliver was a Union soldier, a pioneer in road improvement in Barbour County, and died in that county. James was a Union soldier, a successful farmer and at the time of his death lived in Oklahoma. Abel was also in the ranks of Union soldiers, and died on his farm in his native county. Peyton was killed by a falling tree when a young man. Margaret became the wife of Charles Groves. Eliza was the wife of Major Felonhouse; Elizabeth married Josiah Wilson. Delphia died in young womanhood. All the son-in-laws were Union soldiers, so that the patriotic and military record of the family is exceptional.

Jesse Teter, father of Floyd, was born May 14, 1823, and his entire life was passed in the vicinity of his birthplace. He attended the subscription schools and was a successful teacher for a time. His chief business was farming and cattle raising, but he also performed a constructive service in the clearing of land and making his section of the county more available for general improvement. He served thirty-seven consecutive years as justice of the peace, and in the Civil war period was active and influential in the recruiting of troops for the Union. He was a leader in public and political affairs, and he and his wife were devoted members of the Concord Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a liberal contributor in the erection of the church building, and served as class leader and teacher in the Sunday School. His death occurred September 14, 1901, and that of his widow on the 12th of March, 1912. In 1849 he married Miss Elizabeth Phillips, whose father, Thomas Phillips, a cabinet maker by trade, was a pioneer settler in Randolph County and later in Barbour County. Of the children of Jesse and Elizabeth Teter the first born was William Worth, who was a farmer merchant and civil engineer in Barbour County at the time of his death; Thomas B. was a farmer and live-stock dealer in this county at the time of his death, February 12, 1917, and under the administration of President Cleveland he served as Government Indian agent at Pocatello, Idaho; Ida who is dead was the wife of Dr. M. M. Hoff, a leading physician at Philippi, Barbour County; Floyd is the youngest son; and Miss Mertie E. remains on the old home farm, just southwest of Belington.

Floyd Teter was born October 7, 1857, and is indebted to the public schools of his native county for his early education. He continued to assist in the work and management of the old home farm until his marriage. For some twenty years thereafter he was associated with the lumbering operations conducted by Charles G. Blachley, for whom he purchased timber on an extensive scale, besides conducting an independent business enterprise. Afterward for several years he actively engaged in the buying and selling of West Virginia coal lands. He erected one of the first brick buildings at Belington, where he also built and sold other buildings, and thus contributed much to the material advancement of the little city. He was one of the organizers of the Citizens Bank, the first established in Belington, and became a director of the institution. Since its conversion into the Citizens National Bank he has continued a director of the latter, and is now vice president. His civic loyalty was distinctly shown in his two terms of service as a member of the City Council, but he has no liking for public office or political activity. He is a staunch supporter of the cause of the republican party, is affiliated with the Loyal Order of Moose, and he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. On December 18, 1884, Mr. Teter married Miss Dollie Hinkle, who was born in Randolph County, this state, January, 17, 1867, a daughter of Bernard L. and Albina (Mouse) Hinkle. The town of Elkins is situated on the old farm of Mr. Hinkle, who died there. His widow is now a resident of Belington. Mrs. Teter was their only child. Charles Edward, eldest of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Teter, resides at Belington, where he is an automobile machinist. He married Delia Curry, who died, survived by one child, Delia Ruth. Jessie, who graduated from the Belington High School, is a talented pianist, is a popular factor in the social life of the community and remains at the parental home. Bernard L., a graduate of the local high school, is assistant cashier of the Citizens National Bank of Belington.

ERNEST A. BARTE was born and reared in Barbour County, and has here proved a versatile and constructive force in the furtherance of industrial and business enterprises of important order, his status being that of one of the progressive and representative citizens of his native county.

Mr. Barte was born on his father's farm in Barker District, this county, July 12, 1873, and is a son of Henry and Mary (Vierheller) Barte, the former of whom was born in Hanover, Germany, of French Huguenot ancestry, and the latter of whom was born in Monroe County, Ohio, she having been the posthumous daughter of Philip Vierheller, who came to the United States from Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and whose death occurred within a short time after he had established his home in Monroe County, Ohio. The widow of Mr. Vierheller subsequently became the wife of Christian Eberhart, and she passed the closing period of her life at Belington, West Virginia, where she died at the age of ninety-three years, six months and sixteen days—in May, 1899, her son-in-law, Henry Barte, having died in the preceding month. Mrs. Barte survived her husband by more than twenty years and passed to the life eternal in October, 1921, at the age of seventy-four years. Elizabeth, eldest of the children, became the wife of William T. Right and was a resident of Belington at the time of her death; Caroline, the wife of Edward Smith, died in Randolph County, this state, Emma is the wife of Tazewell Digman, a farmer near Belington; Ernest August is the immediate subject of this sketch; Lenora is the wife of Edward Whitescarver, who is identified with the West Virginia Industrial School for Boys; Clara, who is Mrs. Robert McCutcheon, resides at the old home of her mother in Belington; William Henry is with the Kane & Keyser Hardware Company of this place; and Savanna is the wife of Clyde Nestor, a dairyman at Elkins, Randolph County.

Henry Barte, whose father was a farmer and weaver in Germany, was a young man when he left his native land and came to the United States, and he was a cooper in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, at the outbreak of the Civil war. Thence he made his way to Wheeling, West Virginia, in search of work at his trade, and here he entered the Union service by enlisting in Company A, First West Virginia Light Artillery, he having been made a corporal and his service having continued three years and six months. Exposure and other hardships he endured while in the army left their effect upon him for the remainder of his life. He was mustered out at Wheeling at the close of the war, and in after years he was actively affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic until the time of his death. His political allegiance was given to the republican party, and he served many years as a member of the School Board of his district. After the war he became one of the successful exponents of farm enterprise in Barker District, Barbour County, and here he and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, secure in the high regard of all who knew them. Their marriage was solemnized at Wheeling shortly after the close of the war.

Ernest A. Barte was reared on the home farm and attended the rural school of the neighborhood. At the age of nineteen years he found employment at a planing mill and sawmill plant at Belington, and later he learned the blacksmith trade, and here conducted a shop for some time. Thereafter he was employed in the lumber woods and in connection with the operation of sawmills in both West Virginia and Maryland, besides which he gained experience as a railroad section-hand. After his marriage he engaged actively in farm enterprise near Belington, and here he has since continued his successful association with agricultural and live-stock industry, he being the owner of the fine old homestead farm formerly owned by his father-in-law. He has supplied beef to the local markets and has shipped at times to the Baltimore market, besides having purchased cattle in the Cincinnati market. In addition to his progressive farm activities Mr. Barte was associated with L. L. Bennett in establishing at Belington the handle factory which now represents one of the substantial industries of this little city. He was secretary and treasurer of the company operating this factory until he sold his interest in the business. He is a director of the Citizens National Bank and a stockholder of the First National Bank of Belington. He is treasurer of the Dayton Construction Company, which is doing effective service in the construction of improved roads of the best modern type and which has a number of important contracts for the year 1922, including those for the construction of eight miles of road in Barbour and Randolph counties.

Mr. Barte gives his allegiance to the republican party, and he has given effective service as a member of the City Council of Belington, besides having been mayor one term and having given a most vigorous administration. He was reared in the faith of the Lutheran Church, but he and his wife are now active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Belington, of which he is a trustee. Mr. Barte has at all times shown a lively interest in all things touching the welfare of his home city and native county, and he served from 1917 to 1921 as deputy sheriff of the county.

May 6, 1899, recorded the marriage of Mr. Barte and Miss Monta Phares, who was born and reared in Barbour County, her father, the late W. S. Phares, having come to this county from Randolph County and having developed a fine farm adjacent to Belington. Mr. Phares was born in Randolph County, was a scout and guide in the Union service in the Civil war, was captured by the enemy and was for a time held at the infamous old Andersonville Prison. He was a successful farmer and was one of the substantial citizens of Barbour County at the time of his death, when sixty-seven years of age, his wife, whose maiden name was Virginia Pritt, having survived him by several years. On their five children only two attained to maturity: Mrs. Kate Ward, who resides at Belington, and Mrs. Barte. Thelma, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Barte, was born April 4, 1900, and died October 30, 1918, after a lingering illness.

GEORGE E. CAIN owns and conducts the Belington Garage, a modern and well ordered establishment in the fine little City of Belington, Barbour County, where he is known and valued as a progressive business man and liberal and loyal citizen. He was born in Tyler County, this state, August 28, 1876, and there continued his association with farm industry until he was twenty-three years of age, his educational advantages in the meanwhile having been those of the rural schools and the summer normal schools. He made a record of three years of effective service as a teacher in the rural schools, and at the age of twenty-three years he took the position of bookkeeper for the Kane & Keyser Hardware Company at West Union. As secretary of this company he assisted in the opening of the branch store at Belington in 1901, and here he continued his connection with the company until 1903, when he here engaged in the ice and bottling business, in which he continued until his business plant was destroyed by fire in 1910. In the spring of 1911 he established on the site of his present garage an enterprise in the handling of farm implements and machinery, feed, etc., and this he continued until 1914, since which time he has been one of the leading representatives of the automobile business in this locality. He was local agent for the Ford and Overland automobiles for six years, and still continues representative of the latter and also of the Buick cars, he having dropped the Ford agency in 1919. In the past six years he has sold in Barbour County a greater number of Overland cars than the combined sale of all other make of cars. In 1918 Mr. Cain erected the main building of his present large and modern garage plant, a concrete structure 100 by 120 feet in dimensions, a part of the building being two stories in height and the upper floor being now fitted out as one of the most attractive club rooms in the state. The equipment of the sales rooms and repair shops is of the best modern type, and the business constitutes an important feature in the vital activities of Belington.

The political allegiance of Mr. Cain is given to the democratic party, but he has had no desire to enter the arena of so called practical politics. He served two years as city recorder of Belington and is now secretary of the local Chamber of Commerce. He is affiliated with the Masonic Blue Lodge at Belington and the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Philippi, the county seat. He and his wife are members of the Christian and Methodist Episcopal Church respectively.

In April, 1904, Mr. Cain wedded Miss Olive Wilson, who was born and reared in Marion County and who is the elder of the two surviving children of W. D. Wilson, her ster Flossie, being the wife of L. V. Atha, a passenger train conductor on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, with residence at Grafton, this state. Mr. and Mrs. Cain have four children: Wilson and Kathryn are, in 1922, students at the Belington High School, Lucile is attending the Junior High School, and Richard Lee is an infant.

J. W. Caldwell

Mr. Cain is a son of Nathan and Elizabeth (Freeman) Cain, both representatives of old and honored families of east Virginia and both residing on the fine old homestead farm in Tyler County, where they established themselves on after their marriage. Nathan Cain was born in Tyler County, in 1845, and in what is now West Virginia was so born his father, Lorenzo D. Cain, who was a farmer by vocation. The family name of his wife was Hanes, and they became the parents of eight sons and four daughters. Mrs. Nathan Cain was born in Doddridge County, a daughter of Smith Freeman. George E. Cain, of this review, is the eldest of the family of four children: Emma is the wife of L. B. Strickling, of Wellsburg, Brooke County; Maude is the wife of J. L. Walton, of Clarksburg, this state; and Orpha is the wife of Ranza Pitts, an oil well driller in Tyler County.

I. WAYMON CALDWELL is general manager of the Yellow Pine Lumber Company of Charleston, one of the largest retail organizations in the lumber trade of the state.

The present business originated in the enterprise of Mr. H. O'Neill, who some twenty-five years ago established the Georgia Lumber Company at Bluefield, West Virginia. He was a sash and door manufacturer of Rome, Georgia. On afterward the management of the business at Bluefield was turned over to Walter Perkins, thus enabling Mr. O'Neill to concentrate his attention more fully upon his manufacturing business, in which he succeeded his father. When, in 1903, in association with Mr. Perkins, he incorporated the Yellow Pine Lumber Company. Mr. O'Neill is also responsible for the establishment of the Southern Pine Lumber Company at Clarksburg, and he was financially interested in the Carolina Pine Lumber Company at Huntington. Each of these enterprises attained an enviable success. Mr. O'Neill finally withdrew altogether from the business at Clarksburg, but continues as president of the Yellow Pine Company. This company has prospered in proportion with the growth of the Kanawha Valley in health, population and industry, and operates a retail yard that can meet practically every demand for standard lumber.

For the past three years the business at Charleston has been under the personal supervision of Mr. I. W. Caldwell, who is a veteran employe of the company, and it was his duty for getting things done and his broad knowledge of the lumber business in general that won the recognition resulting in his appointment as general manager. In this it he has proved his ability to broaden the business and vice of the company.

Mr. Caldwell is a very active and public spirited member of the community, is affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club, and recently was the prime mover in co-operating with other local business men and citizens in securing the grounds and financing the organization of the Kanawha Country Club. He is a Mason, an actor and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Caldwell married Clara J. Copham, of Wheeling.

JACOB McLEAN, a venerable and honored retired farmer residing at Belington, has been a resident of Barbour County nearly seventy-five years—since the time of his boyhood. He was born in Randolph County, Virginia (now West Virginia), June 12, 1838. He is a son of William and Hannah (Weese) McLean, his father having been born and reared in the timbered section of the Tygart River Valley, Randolph County, and his entire life having been marked by close association with farm industry, though in earlier years he worked more or less at the carpenter's trade. He was born about the year 1800, and he was fifty-nine years of age at the time of his death, his remains resting in the old-time cemetery at Chenoweth, Barbour County, as do those of his wife, who survived him by about twenty years and who was a daughter of Jacob Weese. William McLean was a son of Daniel McLean, who was born in the vicinity of Petersburg, Virginia and whose father, a Scotsman, there settled in the early pioneer days. Daniel McLean died in the early '40s, in the present Randolph County, West Virginia, and his remains rest in the little cemetery about two miles north of Beverly, that county. Of the children of William McLean the eldest was Aretus, who was one of the substantial farmers of Barbour County at the time of his death; Sarah Ann is the widow of Newton Chenoweth, and, in 1922, still resides on her old home farm near Belington, at the age of ninety-two years; Martha became the wife of Joseph Rohrbough, and they became pioneers in the State of Oregon; Daniel was a resident of Scotland County, Missouri, at the time of his death; Jacob, of this review, was the next in order of birth; Mary and her husband, George Ice, went to Kansas after the Civil war, and her death occurred at Lawrence, that state; Elizabeth, the wife of Zebulon Holland, resides in Upshur County, West Virginia; Susan became the wife of Perry Mason, and they established their home in Scotland County, Missouri; and Minerva, the wife of Francis Finley, still resides in Barbour County.

The pioneer log schoolhouse, with its primitive equipment and facilities, afforded Jacob McLean his early education, which was necessarily limited in scope, and he was an active exponent of farm enterprise in Barbour County at the inception of the Civil war, but he was not called into military service. As a young man familiar with slavery, he had no prejudice against that institution, but in later years he has realized the injustice thereof and recognized that war between the states was inevitable and the cause of abolition was just. After their marriage Mr. McLean and his young wife established their first home in a two-story log house on his father's old farm, the house having five rooms and being superior to most domiciles of the locality and period. A part of this ancient building is still standing, two miles distant from Belington. Mr. McLean remained on the old homestead and continued as one of the substantial farmers of Barbour County until advancing age justified his retirement, and he removed to Belington, where he has since maintained his home and enjoyed the rewards of former years of earnest and worthy endeavor. He purchased the interests of his brothers and sisters and thus became the owner of a valuable farm property of 144 acres, upon which he made many improvements. He served as school trustee, lived at peace with his neighbors and never was personally involved in a law suit, though he had his share of service on petit and grand juries. His first presidential vote was cast in 1860, and he has continuously given his allegiance to the democratic party since that time. He and his wife are earnest members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as was also his first wife, and his identification with the church has covered a period of forty-five years. In 1863 he wedded Mary, a daughter of Samuel Kelley, and her death occurred in 1907. Of the eight children of this union six are living: Samuel is a resident of Clay County; Hanning F. lives in the State of Nevada; Arthur resides at Cedar Grove, West Virginia; Fleming is a resident of the State of Idaho; Edmond resides at Fallon, Nevada; and Charles resides at Elkins, West Virginia, where he is a postal clerk. For his second wife Mr. McLean married Mrs. Sarah Pitzer, widow of Silas Pitzer. She was born on Laura Creek, Barbour County, June 14, 1840, and is a daughter of the late Willis and Nancy (Dignan) Stalnaker. The first husband of Mrs. McLean was Ikney Poling, and they became the parents of eight children: Adolphus D., Rachel (Mrs. William Talbott), Ellen (Mrs. Samuel Talbott), Blue Dell (Mrs. George Haller), Willis (married Nora Nestor), and three who are deceased. No children were born of the second marriage of Mrs. McLean (to Silas Pitzer). She and her husband are passing the gracious evening of their lives in peace and comfort and surrounded by friends who are tried and true.

CLARK L. ROHRBOUGH, M. D., is one of the able and representative physicians and surgeons of Barbour County, where he has been established in successful general practice since 1883, with residence and professional headquarters at Belington.

The Doctor was born on a farm near Buckhannon, Upshur County, February 23, 1858, and is a son of John M. and Matilda (Butt) Rohrbough, the latter having been born in Lewis County, as was also her father, William Butt, who was a member of one of the sterling pioneer families of that county. John M. Rohrbough was a son of Anthony Rohrbough, who came from the vicinity of the north branch of the Potomac River and became one of the very early settlers of what is now Upshur County, West Virginia, his farm having been two miles east of Buckhannon and he having there reclaimed his land from the wilderness. He was a member of the first class, of ten members, that established the first Methodist Church in that county, and his Christian faith was ever shown in his daily life. He and his wife remained on the old homestead until their deaths, and there were reared not only their children but also a number of their grandchildren. The eldest son, George, removed to Illinois and there remained until his death in Hancock County; Anthony remained in Upshur County until his death, as did also Benjamin; John M., father of the subject of this sketch, was the next younger son; Jacob died at Buckhannon and Isaac in Lewis County. Doreas, the elder daughter, became the wife of Michael Strader after the death of her first husband, whose name was Tenny, and Mahala, who became the wife of John Love, died in Barbour County.

John M. Rohrbough continued as a successful farmer in Upshur County until his death, in the spring of 1860, and his widow survived him by more than thirty years, her death having occurred in 1893, on the old home place near Buckhannon. All of their ten children attained to adult age: Elizabeth is the widow of Seth Williams and resides at Buckhannon; Marietta is the widow of John Griffith and now resides at Harlingen, Texas; Virginia, the wife of John Hyer, died in Upshur County, when still a young woman; William lives at Beverly, Randolph County; Jemina, wife of Jerome Fultz, died in Lewis County; Matilda is the wife of S. S. Leonard of Buckhannon; Columbia is the wife of Archibald Hinkle, Jr., and they maintain their home at Belington; Ardelia, the widow of Tillotson Martin, resides in Barbour County; Vermont died unmarried; and Dr. Clark L., of this review, is the youngest of the number.

The public and county normal schools afforded to Doctor Rohrbough his early education, and for six years he was a successful teacher in the schools of his native county, his earnings enabling him to realize his ambition and begin preparation for his chosen profession. After reading medicine two years under the preceptorship of Dr. J. P. Miller, of Buckhannon, he entered the Medical College of Ohio in the City of Cincinnati, and in the spring of 1883 he received from this institution his degree of Doctor of Medicine. For five years thereafter he gave his attention to a wide rural practice in Barbour County, with residence at Talbott, and he then removed to Belington, where he has continued in practice as one of the leading physicians of the county and where he has status as one of the loyal, public-spirited and influential citizens. He is actively identified with the Tri-County Medical Society (Randolph, Barbour and Tucker counties) and also with the West Virginia State Medical Society. He has served as health officer of the Belington independent school district, was city recorder one term, and later gave two terms of specially effective administration as mayor of Belington, he having been very strenuous in his efforts to eliminate the liquor traffic in the city. He has given unflinching allegiance to the republican party, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he has been an active member of thirty years.

On the 27th of January, 1885, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Rohrbough and Miss Hulda Carpenter, who was born and reared in Barbour County and who was the third in order of birth of the five children of Coon and Julia (Harris) Carpenter. Doctor and Mrs. Rohrbough have four children: Pearl, wife of Herbert Sparks, of Niles, Ohio; Otis C., of Davis, West Virginia; Flossie, wife of Frank Phillips, of Belington; and Mrs. Hazel Dunlap, of Mount Clemens, Michigan.

GARRISON J. STALNAKER, of Belington, Barbour County is a popular representative of one of the old and honored pioneer families of what is now West Virginia—a family that has contributed much to the civic and industrial development and progress of this favored commonwealth. He was born on a farm near the present village of Gilman, Randolph County, June 11, 1858, and he was a lad about seven years when the family home was established, in the spring of 1865, on a spot that is now within the corporate limits of the City of Belington and near the old home of John Belin, in whose honor the city was named.

Granville Stalnaker, father of Garrison J., was born and reared on a farm in Randolph County, and in his home community was solemnized his marriage to Mary, a daughter of Jacob Hilkey, who was born near Patterson and who passed his mature life as a farmer in Randolph County. Granville Stalnaker became one of the substantial farmers of Barbour County, and was fifty-four years of age at the time of his death, his wife having died in 1867, and Garrison John, of this review, was the only child of this union. The father subsequently contracted a second marriage, with Amanda Phillips, and she likewise preceded him to the life eternal. His father, Garrettson Stalnaker, who passed his entire life in Randolph County, was a son of Isaac Stalnaker, a native of Virginia and of German ancestry, the family having been founded in Virginia in the Colonial days. Garrettson Stalnaker married Rachel Taylor, and their mortal remains rest in a little cemetery near Gilman, Randolph County. They became the parents of six children: Granville, Hyre, Tallman, Alfred, Almira (Mrs. Randolph Phares) and Elizabeth (Mrs. Haymond Summerfield). Alfred Stalnaker was identified with the Union service in the Civil war.

Garrison J. Stalnaker received the advantages of the rural schools and also attended select schools. As a youth he taught two terms of school, and his success gave evidence that he had profited by the scholastic advantage that had been his. He thereafter initiated his independent career as a farmer, and after a time he engaged in the operation of a sawmill, he having been for nine years manufacturer of lumber in Barbour, Randolph and Upshur counties. He finally sold his lumber mill and business and confined his activities to the management of his farm, though his sons now have charge of the productive affairs of the excellent old homestead farm, where they are giving special attention to dairy farming and supply milk to the City of Belington. As a prerequisite in the dairy business, a modern silo was erected on the farm, and thereafter was built a dairy barn with cement floor and drain, improved stanchions, adjustable feeding troughs, watering system and an effective ventilating system. From a modest inception this has been developed into one of the best dairy plants in this section of the state.

Mr. Stalnaker is a charter stockholder and a director of the Citizens National Bank of Belington. He served four years as justice of the peace, and had the distinction of being the first mayor of Belington, an office to which he was later elected for a second time. He played a large part in organizing and making effective the municipal government of Belington, and in 1900 he was elected commissioner of the County Court, a position which he retained for the prescribed term of six years. Within that period the new Court House was completed, and he also supported the granting of licenses to saloons, as he and other members of the County Court believed such action would be better than the toleration of all manner surreptitious and often disgraceful sales places for liquor. His attitude in this matter brought to him criticism on the part of the prohibition element, but his conviction as to the question was not changed thereby, but he had no desire for re-election to office. He is a staunch advocate of the cause of the republican party, and his service to the community has included his incumbency of the position of ci-recorder of Belington and deputy sheriff of the County, under Sheriff A. F. Bennett. He and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In May, 1879, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Stalnaker and Miss Mary Magnolia Newlon, who was born at the "head of the river" near Mount Liberty, Barbour County, in October, 1861, a daughter of Burr P. and Sallie Ann (Lake) Newlon. The Newlon family was established in Taylor County in the early pioneer days. Mrs. Stalnaker is one of a family of ten children, the names being recorded: Elijah, Adolphus, Benjamin, Charles, Melissa (Mrs. Ira Shockey), Virginia (Mrs. Frank Shockey), Amanda (Mrs. Andrew McCauley), Olive (widow of Warren Shurtliff), Mary M. (Mrs. Garrison J. Stalnaker), and Martha (Mrs. C. W. Hillyard). Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Stalnaker the eldest was Allman J., who was cashier of the Citizens National Bank of Belington at the time of his death. He married Mannah E. Holbert, who survives him, as does also their one child, Edrie. Porter K., the second son, is one of the principals in the conducting of the Stalnaker dairy farm. He married Rose Harvey, and they have two children, Neil and William. Lenora is the wife of Frederick E. Thompson, of Belington, of whom individual mention is made on other pages. Leoral O. is identified with the family dairy farm. The maiden name of his wife was Opal Williamson, and their two children are Willon and Wilda. Mary Ila, the youngest of the family of children, died in infancy.

BERNARD E. WILMOTH. A distinction significant of service rendered, duty, loyalty and efficiency, belongs to Bernard E. Wilmoth, in that he is the oldest locomotive engineer in active duty on the Monongah Division of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. He has worked forty years as a railroad man, and for a quarter of a century has been a resident of Belington in Barbour County.

Mr. Wilmoth was born in the old town of New Interest, Randolph County, West Virginia, May 24, 1864. His father is Isburn Wilmoth, the venerable and aged citizen of Grafton, whose life has been spent chiefly as a brick mason. He early took up contracting, and much of his work in building at Elkins and also at Grafton is still in evidence. He has been a good business man, faithful to his obligations, but has sought no honors of politics or public life. He is a democrat and a Methodist. Isburn Wilmoth married Rebecca Stalnaker, who was reared in Randolph County, and was a distant cousin of Garrison J. Stalnaker, mentioned elsewhere. She died at the age of fifty-two. Her children were: Perry L., who lost his life by accident at Sturgeon Lake, Minnesota, and was unmarried; Charles, who died in 1919, a locomotive engineer on the Cumberland Division of the Baltimore and Ohio; Lucy, who died unmarried in a hospital at Clarksburg; Bernard E.; and French, a locomotive engineer living at Grafton, with a son on the Buckhannon branch of the Baltimore and Ohio; Dollie, unmarried and is the companion of her aged father; Walter, who is unmarried and is a house painter at Grafton.

Bernard E. Wilmoth lived in Randolph County until he was ten years of age, when his parents established their home at Grafton in Taylor County. He grew up there, acquired a common school education, and at the age of sixteen started out to earn his living by practical work. For a time he was employed in a livery stable, worked twelve months with an engineer corps in the preliminary survey and finally with the locating survey for Grafton for the Greenbrier Railway. He was then made tie inspector for the railroad, and two months later was given the congenial task of firing the first locomotive to run over the new road. After eighteen months he was promoted to engineer, and now for forty years has been in charge of the throttle of an engine until he has become the oldest in the service on the Monongah Division of the Baltimore and Ohio. Most of his service has been between Grafton and Belington, and for a time he had the run between Belington and Morgantown and from Belington to Fairmont. His work is now with the Berryburg branch.

Mr. Wilmoth in 1913 finished one of the fine and substantial homes of Belington. It is an eight room brick veneer building, comfortable, attractive and a perfectly appointed home. Mr. Wilmoth is a charter member of the Citizens National Bank of Belington, is one of its directors, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternally is a Lodge and Chapter Mason, an Odd Fellow, and since reaching his majority has been affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past chancellor. As a young man he also received his card in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and is one of the older men in that organization.

In September, 1889, at Grafton, Mr. Wilmoth married Mary Williams, who was born at Buckhannon, West Virginia, July 13, 1869, daughter of Jerome B. Williams. Her mother was a Miss Hyer. Mrs. Wilmoth was the youngest of four daughters, and her two surviving sisters Mrs. Dora Butcher, of Weston, and Mrs. Rose Lilly, of Grafton. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Wilmoth is a daughter, Serva R., who graduated from the Belington High School, later from Westminster College in Maryland, where she rounded out her education in vocal music, and she is now one of the High School teachers at Belington.

WALTER E. CLARK. The enviable success of The Charleston Daily Mail both as a newspaper and a business institution is credited to its proprietor and editor, Walter E. Clark. Mr. Clark has been a newspaper man all his life, and he brought to this West Virginia journal an exceptional range of experience.

Mr. Clark was born at Ashford, Connecticut, January 7, 1869, son of Oren Andrus and Jeannette (Jones) Clark. He graduated from the Connecticut Normal School at New Britain in 1887, and from the Wesleyan University of Middletown, Connecticut, with the Ph. B. degree, in 1895.

From a local sphere of experience in journalism in his native state Mr. Clark went in 1895 to Washington, where for a year he was telegraph editor on the Washington Times. For more than a dozen years he was Washington correspondent for a number of leading newspapers, including the New York Commercial Advertiser in 1897; was assistant to the Washington correspondent of the New York Sun from 1897 to 1909; was Washington correspondent for the Seattle Post-Intelligencer from 1900 to 1909; and of the New York Commercial and Toronto Globe from 1904 to 1909.

In 1909 Mr. Clark was called from the busy routine of a newspaper man to the important post of governor of Alaska Territory. He served in that office until 1913, and soon after his return to the United States in 1914 he acquired The Charleston Daily Mail.

Mr. Clark is a republican, a member of the Congregational Church, is affiliated with the Chi Psi college fraternity, and was editor of its magazine during his early career at Washington. He has membership in the Metropolitan and Chevy Chase Clubs of Washington, the Arctic Club of Seattle and the Edgewood Country Club of Charleston.

June 15, 1898, at New York, he married Lucy Harrison Norvell, daughter of Captain Edward Norvell of Lynchburg, Virginia.

FRANK H. KNEISLY. Early in life Frank H. Kneisly learned to depend upon himself and his exertions, and his industry and good character have brought him both prosperity and the general esteem of the people of Berkeley County, among whom he has lived the greater part of his life.

Mr. Kneisly was born in Washington County, Maryland. His father, Joseph H. Kneisly, was born on a farm a mile from Columbia in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, and as a youth learned the trade of shoemaker. This was then a good business for which to qualify, since there were few factories for the manufacture of shoes by machinery, and a shoemaker was in reality the proprietor of an important local business. However, he did not follow his trade long, but, moving to Washington County, Maryland, bought land on the road leading from Hagerstown to Half Way and in connection with farming he engaged in the transport of produce and merchandise between Hagerstown and Williamsport. He lived there until his death at the age of seventy-three. He married Leah Huber, a native of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, who died in early life, her only child being Frank H. Kneisly.

Frank H. Kneisly attended public schools, acquired a good business education, and at the age of nineteen left home and since then has been self-supporting. He was employed as a farm hand until 1890, when he moved to Berkeley County and at Martinsburg established a transfer line, fully equipped for all the demands put upon it. About that time he also bought the farm he now occupies on the Martinsburg and Williamsport Pike, two miles from the courthouse. This farm has few superiors in that section of the country in the way of equipment of buildings and other improvements.

On August 28, 1890, Mr. Kneisly married Lucy Helena Kensel, who was born on a farm in Falling Waters District of Berkeley County. Her father, John J. Kensel, a native of Franklin County, Pennsylvania, was left an orphan at an early age, was reared by an uncle in Berkeley County and as a youth returned to Franklin County to learn the trade of tailor. Eventually he returned to Berkeley County and located in Falling Waters District and engaged in farming. Subsequently he lived in Arden District eight years, eleven years in Dry Run District, and then moved to the Williamsport Pike, where he spent his last days and died at the age of eighty-two. He married Elizabeth Turner, who was born in Falling Waters District, daughter of James and Sophia Turner. Elizabeth Kensel died at the age of eighty-five. Mr. and Mrs. Kneisly have five children, James Franklin, Hamilton Bernard, John Joseph Arlington, William Adrian and Lucy Helen, and they lost a daughter, Berkeley Virginia, at the age of five and a half years. The son James married Lucy Shriver, and they have three children: Paul Preston, James Kenneth and Paulina. The family are all members of St. Joseph's Catholic Church.

SAMUEL SHOWALTER FELKER is a citizen of varied and important interests in Berkeley County, a successful business man, a democratic leader, and at all times cultivating the best interests of the community.

Mr. Felker was born on a farm two and a half miles west of Greencastle, Pennsylvania. His father, Jacob Felker, was born on a farm near the line of Franklin County, Pennsylvania, and Washington County, Maryland, and at an early age was left an orphan. He then lived, until he was grown, with his uncle, Abraham Felker, in Franklin County. At the beginning of the Civil war he enlisted as a Union soldier and served in a Pennsylvania regiment. In 1869 he moved to Berkeley County, West Virginia, buying a farm in the Hedgesville District. He remained there working and prospering until his death at the age of seventy-two. He married Mary Showalter, a native of Washington County, Maryland, who died at the age of eighty-two. They reared a family of nine children: Kate, who married James Robinson; Annie, who married Moses Kilmer; Louise, who became the wife of Calvin Zentmeyer; Charles H.; David, who died at the age of thirty-three; John D.; Calvin G.; Rebecca, who married George A. Mason; and Samuel S.

Samuel S. Felker attended school in the Hedgesville District, and at the age of seventeen began learning the trade of miller in Brown's Mill in Pennsylvania. After three years there he returned to Berkeley County, and for two years operated Kilmers Mill, for one year the Back Valley Mill and for two years the Darkesville Mill. Ill health compelling him to make a change of vocation, he then became agent for the Cumberland Valley Railroad Company at Darkesville, and at the same time conducted a general mercantile business there for three and a half years. On leaving the railroad service Mr. Felker moved to Martinsburg, and since then has been one of the progressive business men of this city. For three and a half years he was in business on West King Street, near the Square, following which he bought property on West King, near the postoffice and continued his store in that location about three years. Selling out, he entered the real estate business, and in 1904 was elected a justice of the peace, an office he filled eight years. For three years Mr. Felker had a rather widely extended business in the sale of coal rights and coal lands. He and D. W. Shaffer were then partners in the real estate business for two years, and since then Mr. Felker has continued alone, dealing in city and farm lands, and he makes sales over the three states of West Virginia, Maryland and Virginia.

At the age of twenty-two Mr. Felker married Alice Virginia Shipper, a native of Berkeley County and daughter of James B. and Hester (Stuckey) Shipper. Mr. and Mrs. Felker had one son, Guy G., who was educated in the city schools, prepared for college in Washington and Lee University and subsequently entered the University of West Virginia. He graduated in the law department and had already achieved a substantial place in his profession when his early death occurred at the age of twenty-nine. For some time prior to his death he had been in the service of the income tax department of the Federal Government. Guy G. Felker married Gertrude Manown. He is survived by a son, Samuel Showalter Felker, who lives with his paternal grandparents.

Mr. and Mrs. Felker are active members of the Presbyterian Church, and he is president of the board of deacons. Mr. Felker is prominent in the Masonic Order, being a past master of Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., past high priest of Lebanon Chapter No. 2, R. A. M., past eminent commander of Palestine Commandery No. 2, K. T. was president of the class that took the Scottish Rite degree at Wheeling in 1920, and is a member of the Martinsburg Masonic Club. He is also affiliated with Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, and for six years was representative to the State Lodge and is a past grand master of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is also a member of the Loyal Order of Moose.

Mr. Felker has had a deep interest in public affairs throughout his active career, and has served as delegate to numerous county, district and state conventions of the democratic party and for ten years was chairman of the county committee.

GRANT GRAHAM for over twenty years has conducted a place of business as a druggist that is a source of pride to all the people of Belington. He is a licensed pharmacist, thoroughly knows the business as well as the profession, and has found most congenial associations in this thriving town of Barbour County.

The census shows that more than four-fifths of the population of West Virginia is native born, and Mr. Graham is no exception. His family have lived in the limits of the present state for considerably more than a century. He was born near Kingwood in Preston County, May 31, 1867. His grandfather, Samuel Graham, was probably a native of Preston County, spent his active life as a farmer, and died about 1880, when past four score years. His children were: James; David, who was a farmer in Preston County; John, who died while a Union soldier in the Civil war; Rosanna, who married Nicholas Posten; Lucinda whose husband was Richard Field; Jimmah, whose last husband was Peter Hartlet; and Mrs. Groves.

James Graham, father of the Belington business man was born in Preston County, August 8, 1825, and died at Reedsville November 16, 1910. He acquired a liberal education for his day, and for some years was a teacher. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Union army, in Company B of the Fourteenth West Virginia Regiment and served until the close of the struggle, participating in many of the engagements and skirmishes of Old Virginia. One wound received in battle afflicted him all through his subsequent life. He manifested no interest in soldiers' organizations, and did not even become a member of the G. A. R. He was a Presbyterian, a staunch republican and served on the local School Board and in other capacities in his community. James Graham married Miss Nancy Field, who was born in Preston County,

J. N. Wilkinson

October 10, 1823, and died January 19, 1910. Her father, Hiram Field, was of English ancestry and a farmer. James Graham and wife reared three sons and two daughters: Joseph, a farmer in Preston County; Sanford, cashier of the Traders National Bank of Buckhannon; Grant; Rebecca, who died as Mrs. A. J. DeBerry; and Jennie, wife of A. J. Barker, of Morgantown, West Virginia.

Grant Graham grew up on his father's farm, and his best advantages were acquired in the common schools and in the school of "hard knocks." Being the youngest son, he failed to acquire as good an education as his older brothers. At the age of sixteen he was earning wages as a farm hand, and subsequently worked on a saw mill and for two years with a drilling outfit, drilling water wells. With a moderate capital acquired through a number of years of industry, he established a drug business at Kingwood, and while hiring a pharmacist he diligently studied the profession and passed the State Board examination January 24, 1899. With his license as a pharmacist he came to Belington the same year and took over the only business of that kind in the little city. Since then two efforts have been made to share in the drug trade of this locality, but the competition soon faded out, and ultimately he occupied the whole field. He conducted his early stores in some of the old buildings of the town, but in 1913 erected a two-story brick building, which is now the home of his Rexall Store. He carries the drug equipment of the Rexall system, itself the highest guaranty of excellence and quality, and in addition he has store equipment and facilities that would do credit to a city much larger than Belington. He keeps his store in a spotless condition and in perfect order and system.

Mr. Graham has served as a member of the City Council at Belington. He is a director of the Citizens National Bank, and has voted at every National election for a republican candidate for president since first supporting Benjamin Harrison. He is a Presbyterian, while Mrs. Graham is a Methodist, and fraternally is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge, Scottish Rite Consistory and Shrine, has filled the chairs in the Subordinate and Encampment Degrees of Odd Fellowship and has sat in the Grand Lodge many times.

At Buckhannon June 28, 1899, Mr. Graham married Miss Etta Hinkle, a native of Upshur County and daughter of Arch and Columbia Hinkle. She was educated in the common schools. Her oldest sister, Ida, was the late Mrs. I. R. Post, of Buckhannon. Mr. and Mrs. Graham had no children of their own, but they took as a child Mrs. Graham's niece, Pearl Post, who has grown up under their care and in their companionship and finished her education in the Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, graduating in 1919. This training was supplemented by study elsewhere, and she is one of the very successful teachers in the state.

WILLIAM JACKSON COONTZ has found satisfaction for ambitions to be both useful and successful in the trade and business of carpenter and builder, an occupation in which his father also excelled. Mr. Coontz is one of the honored residents of Belington, and has done some of the most distinctive work in his line in that section of Barbour County.

He represents an old family of West Virginia, his grandfather having been the pioneer of the name in the western region of old Virginia. His father is the venerable Samuel Morgan Dallas Coontz, who was born in Barbour County, and as a youth had only the advantages of the subscription schools. His inclination for study enabled him to realize a great deal of value out of that limited education. He sympathized with the South in its contest for independence, but did not serve in the Confederate army, although he was in Virginia during the war. After the war he took up the work of his life, that of carpenter and millwright, and some of the mills he built still stand, including the Johnny Booth Mill on the head waters of Mill Run, several mills on the waters of Laurel and Sugar Creek and the mill at Nestorville on Teter Creek. He did his work chiefly in Taylor, Barbour and Randolph counties, and continued his labors with his favorite tools until recent years. Now, at the age of seventy-eight, he is living in comfortable retirement at Belington. He is a democrat, but never took a serious interest in politics beyond voting for good men for office. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is one of the occasional self-made men who can express themselves in public, and he has proved an entertaining and instructive talker before an audience as well as in general conversation.

Samuel M. D. Coontz married Isabel F. Poe, who was born in Taylor County, December 14, 1851, daughter of William D. and Mary (Davis) Poe. Her father was born, reared and spent his life in Taylor County, dying at his farm home on a hill overlooking Grafton. His father was Jonathan Bore Poe of German ancestry and also a West Virginia farmer. Samuel Coontz and wife had five children: Zura May, who died in Barbour County, wife of Frank Moore; Amanda, who lives in Belington, wife of Riley Moore; William J.; A. Thayer, of Akron, Ohio; and Grover C., of Belington.

William Jackson Coontz was born on a hill overlooking the City of Grafton, August 24, 1877, but a short time after his birth his parents moved to Barbour County, and he grew up near Belington. He attended the free schools there, and as a youth learned his trade from his father, beginning at the age of fourteen and working as apprentice and journeyman under his father until he was twenty-two. At that time he yielded to an ambition to see something of his own country, and he went to the Pacific Coast, going out by the Southwestern route, and spent three years in San Francisco in the employ of the United Railroads, a street car corporation. While in San Francisco he learned the sensation of being in an earthquake, and one year in the month of February there were twenty-eight shocks, as many as four occurring in one day. When he left California he returned by way of the Northwestern States, and soon after reaching home he married and built a residence near Belington and resumed work at his trade. Mr. Coontz has contributed much to the development and growth of Belington, and also the surrounding country. He has constructed some of the tipples at the coal mines in this vicinity. Among conspicuous examples of his work as a building contractor are the residences of John W. Coontz, William Hill and Charley Kittle, the Lambert Chapel Church and the Shoekey and Laurel Hill school houses.

Mr. Coontz is also a painting contractor and has lent beauty to the town through this art as well as through his organization of carpentering. He was also the foreman in laying the base course over part of the Morgantown and Fairmont road improvement and the Fairmont-Beverly Pike. In March, 1922, Mr. Coontz was elected a member of the Belington Council, as representative of the First Ward. He is a democrat, casting his first presidential vote for Judge Parker.

Mr. Coontz and family are members of the Methodist Church, South, and he is a member of both branches of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Rebekahs.

In Barbour County, September 30, 1905, he married Miss Nettie J. Sturm, daughter of Henry J. and Frances (Poling) Sturm. Her mother was a daughter of Abraham Poling, a Confederate soldier and member of one of the real pioneer families in this section of West Virginia. Mrs. Coontz, who was born June 6, 1885, third in a family of twelve children, acquired a liberal education in the public schools. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Coontz are: Clark R., Maxine, Josephine and Arline.

JASPER N. WILKINSON. After a busy career marked by successful and worthy achievement Mr. Wilkinson is now living virtually retired at Bridgeport, Harrison County. He was born on a farm not far distant from the village in which he now resides, and the date of his nativity was January 22, 1841. He is a son of Jesse and Mary Ann (Preston) Wilkinson, the former of whom was born in Virginia and the latter in Allegany County, Maryland. The family was founded in Virginia in the Colonial period of our national history, and the maternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch was a patriot soldier in the War of the Revolution. Jesse H. Wilkinson was one of the successful early farmers of Harrison County, and continued to reside on his homestead farm near Bridgeport until his death. His widow passed the closing period of her life in the home of their only daughter, Sarah A., in Knox County, Missouri. In the family were four sons.

Jasper N. Wilkinson was reared on the old home farm, early began to assist in its work, and he continued to attend local schools at intervals until he was twenty years of age, when, in 1861, he went to Morgantown and became a student in Monongalia Academy, of which Professor J. R. Moore was the principal. In 1865 Mr. Wilkinson graduated from this institution, with the degree of Civil Engineer, and thereafter he passed about one month in Iowa, whither he went to visit in the home of his aunt, Mrs. Rebecca Hansel, in Clayton County. He next made his way to Arcola, Douglas County, Illinois, where he found employment in the line of his profession and did surveying work of important order. In Illinois he aided in the defining of the section lines of Grand Prairie in Moultrie County, which borders Douglas County on the west. It is interesting to record that at that time land in that section of Illinois could be purchased at prices ranging from $1.25 to $2.50 an acre. In the autumn of 1865 Mr. Wilkinson returned to his native county, and for the ensuing three years he assisted his father on the home farm. In 1868 he engaged in the general merchandise business at Bridgeport, and he successfully continued this enterprise until 1874, when he sold out. In 1870 he had been elected county engineer, an office of which he continued the efficient incumbent four years and then was re-elected for a second term of equal duration. After his retirement from this office he served four years as deputy county engineer under T. Moore Jackson, and he then became associated with J. N. Camden as civil engineer, and had charge of the running of all of the lines on the coal lands owned and controlled by Mr. Camden, said lands lying on both sides of the river and running back three miles.

In the autumn of 1888 Mr. Wilkinson became civil engineer for the South Pennsylvania Oil Company of Pittsburgh, and in 1890 this corporation gave him assignment as superintendent of its operations in the West Virginia District, where he had supervision of the company's title rights and other matters pertaining to its land holdings in this state. In this connection he did a large amount of important and responsible executive and technical service, and he continued his alliance with the company for a term of years. In 1910 Mr. Wilkinson was placed in charge of the Hope Gas Company, and this position he retained until 1913, when ill health compelled his retirement. During these years of consecutive and well ordered activity in his profession Mr. Wilkinson did not neglect extraneous opportunities for forwarding his individual prosperity. He made judicious investments, and these today mark him as a man of substantial financial status. He owns and occupies one of the beautiful residences of Bridgeport, the same commanding a fine view of the surrounding country, and here he is enjoying the peace and prosperity that properly crown his former years of earnest endeavor. He is aligned loyally in the ranks of the democratic party, has been affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows since the year 1865, and he holds membership also in the Knights of Pythias. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church, and his wife is a member of the Baptist Church.

April 30, 1868, recorded the marriage of Mr. Wilkinson and Miss Anna Barbee Heflin, of Bridgeport, and in conclusion of this review is given brief record concerning their children: Guy C., who was born June 1, 1871, succeeded his father as superintendent of the Hope Gas Company and retained this position until his death, December 11, 1915, he having been a bachelor and having been one of the popular and representative business men of this section of his native state. Mary Bessie, who was born July 1, 1873, died on the 13th of February, 1909. She became the wife of Dr. C. L. Lyon, and after her death her only child, Helen, then six years of age, was taken into the home of the maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Wilkinson, with whom she has since remained, she being now a student in the University of West Virginia. Anna Heflin, who was born July 15, 1875, became the wife of Wilbur Gaines, of Salem, this state, and they now reside at Bridgeport. Nellie Virginia was born November 8, 1878, and her death occurred March 8, 1908. Irma N., who was born September 24, 1881, is the wife of Leroy H. Martin, a member of the firm of Martin Brothers of Haywood, Harrison County. Lucy E., who was born August 2, 1884, remains at the parental home. All of the children were afforded the best of educational advantages.

JAMES E. FORNEY has been a resident of West Virginia for thirty years, and his work and business in the construction trades of bricklaying and masonry have many visible evidences in and around Belington, his home town. That community long since learned to appreciate his worth and value as a citizen.

Mr. Forney was born in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, May 10, 1864. His father, Alfred A. Forney, was born on Double Pike Creek, Carroll County, Maryland, left there when a young man having learned the trade of blacksmith, and followed that occupation in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, during the Civil war, in which one of his brothers participated as a Union soldier. He subsequently moved to Beaver County, Pennsylvania, and about middle age he devoted his time to farming. He died in 1914, at the age of eighty-four. His wife was Martha Johnson, who was born in Allegheny County, daughter of James and Mary (Parks) Johnson. She died in 1896, when about fifty-nine years of age. They were Presbyterians, and in politics Alfred Forney was a republican. Their children were: Mary, wife of I. U. Campbell, of Erin, Tennessee; George, who died unmarried in Pittsburgh; James E.; Annie, deceased wife of Henry Ruckhart, of Beaver County; Miss Lillian; Will, who died in Beaver County; and Calvin, of Lawton, Oklahoma.

James E. Forney grew up at Sandy Creek in Beaver County, acquired a public school education near Freedom, and was with his father until he was about twenty years of age. He learned the trade of brick layer with W. W. Rickard of Blairsville, Pennsylvania, remaining with him two years, the following summer was an employee of the Lisenring Coal Company, owned by Frick and Company, for about a year was with the Cochran and Brown Coal Company in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, and for another year with J. W. Rainey. Then, in 1892, he came to West Virginia and established himself in Belington.

In his business Mr. Forney has performed a long and interesting service in brick, stone and concrete work. His first work of consequence was at Dartmore, where he helped construct the coke oven, and about that time he set down the foundation for a store in front of the Luzerne Hotel in Belington, then the hotel foundation itself, and the foundation for the Methodist Church. When he first came to Belington only three houses stood on the west side of the Tygart Valley River, and he has been a factor in the mason and concrete work in the development of that side of the town. He also did brick work on the chimneys for the houses in Coalton and at Elkins.

As a public spirited citizen Mr. Forney has been a member of Belington Council several times and a member of the Board of Education. He is a republican, having cast his first ballot for James G. Blaine in 1884. His family are Missionary Baptists.

In Barbour County, July 8, 1894, Mr. Forney married Miss Grace Day, who was born in Barbour County, September 16, 1876, daughter of Daniel Webster and Martha (Wilson) Day. Her mother was a daughter of W. P. Wilson. Daniel W. Day was born in Barbour County, as was his wife, and he was a farmer. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Day are—Orestes, of Belington; Mrs. Forney; and Scott Day, who lives near Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. Forney have reared an interesting family of children, named Cecil Alfred, Wilbur Orestes, Beulah, Ruth, Ralph, Wilson, George (who died at the age of eighteen months) and Lena. The son Cecil, who now lives at Middletown, Ohio, married Edna Sipe. He went overseas with the air-craft machine gun battalion from Camp Lee, Virginia, and lay between the front lines and the heavy artillery of the American Troops shooting down enemy airplanes. His only injury was gassing. His command returned to the United States in May, 1919, and he was discharged at Camp Dix, New Jersey. The son Wilbur Orestes, who lives at Belington was in the last draft of the World war. He first responded to the Government's request for an operation was in the Crozier Hospital at Chester, Pennsylvania, four and one-half months, and finally recovered his health and strength sufficiently to be accepted, but the armistice was signed about that time. The daughter Beulah is now a student in Shenandoah Collegiate Institute at Dayton, Virginia, while the younger children are attending the local schools.

THOMAS W. HARRISON has given a good account of his active years as a prosperous and progressive farmer of Lewis County, still owns a farm, but is now practically retired and enjoys the comforts of a good town home at Weston.

He was born at Weston August 15, 1854, son of Mathew W. and Sarah L. (Hoffman) Harrison, his father born in Clarksburg in 1825 and his mother at Weston in 1828. Mathew Harrison was reared and educated in Clarksburg, studied for the law, and for many years practiced his profession in Weston. He was also vice president of the National Exchange Bank and was treasurer of the State Hospital at Weston from 1856 until he resigned a short time before his death. He was also treasurer and paymaster of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway. He was considered one of the wealthy men of the county and left a large estate. He was a democrat and served in the Legislature one term. His wife was a member of the Episcopal Church. These parents had seven children, and the five now living are: Thomas W.; Mary, wife of A. A. Warren; R. H., a farmer at Weston; Emma, wife of James Ralston; Anna M., wife of E. G. Davison.

Thomas W. Harrison grew up at Weston, attended the public schools there, had a good business training under his father, and while identified to some extent with commercial lines his main work has been farming.

On April 22, 1890, he married Genevieve Ralston, who was born at Weston July 11, 1867, daughter of Er and Matilda (Bailey) Ralston. Mrs. Harrison was educated in Weston in private schools, and attended a musical conservatory at Warren, Ohio.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Harrison moved to a farm two miles east of Weston, and lived in the country until 1918, when they returned to Weston. Mr. Harrison had a place of 451 acres, but has since sold part of it and uses the remainder chiefly for the grazing of cattle. He has been an interested worker in the democratic party of the county, and at one time was nominee for the County Court. He is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Modern Woodmen of America and Weston Lodge No. 43, Knights of Pythias. He and his wife belong to the Episcopal Church.

They are the parents of a family of ten children, nine living. Ernestine R. was educated by private tutor and is now superintendent of the West Virginia Children's Home at Elkins. Mary M. is the wife of Dr. John Owens, an army surgeon; Mathew W., a graduate of the Weston High School, enlisted and served as a private during the World war, going overseas with the Eighty-third Division, and later being assigned to the Third Division and was on front line duty for three months, being wounded in the Argonne Forest. He is now a student of agriculture in the West Virginia State University. Eva E. is a graduate of the Weston High School and of the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. The younger children are: Genevieve, a graduate of the Weston High School; Thomas W., Jr., also a graduate of the Weston High School; William R., deceased; Sallie, in the senior class; Fannie E., in the sophomore class in High School; and Gertrude in the seventh grade of the grammar school.

HON. WILLIAM JANES, several times mayor of the City of Philippi, is an able lawyer and business man, whose activities have had much to do with the exploitation of the material resources of the state. He is of English ancestry, but is the direct descendant of a young Englishman who fought on the side of the colonists in the struggle for independence, and the family has been in West Virginia for over a century.

His Revolutionary ancestor was his great-grandfather, John Janes, who was born in Staffordshire, England, about 1752, and as a young man came to America. He enlisted from Pennsylvania for the War of the Revolution, and was with the American troops when General Cornwallis surrendered to General Washington at Yorktown in 1781, that being the concluding act of the war. John Janes lived for many years in Barbour County, West Virginia, and is believed to be the only soldier of the Revolution buried there. He died in 1842, since in that year he drew his last pension from the Government as a soldier. He was about ninety years of age when he died.

His son, Alexander Janes, was a stone mason, and examples of his work were on the bridge abutment on the Parkersburg and Staunton Pike and across Greenbrier River and the steps and the foundation of the old Court House of Randolph County at Beverly. These old steps are still in use. He spent his last days at Moatsville in Barbour County, where he is buried. Alexander Janes married Louisa Casteel, of the Casteel family of Preston County. Their children were: William, who retained the old English spelling of the name Jennings, and was a prominent resident of Preston County and a member of the County Court; Noah Janes, whose record follows: Thomas Janes; Nancy, who became the wife of George Nestor; Maria, who married James Isner; Margaret, who was the wife of A. J. Cline; Alice, who married Winfield Cox; and Calore, wife of Edward Freeman.

Noah J. Janes, father of Mayor Janes of Philippi, was born in Barbour County, in Cove District, February 19, 1849, and spent his active life as a farmer and lumberman. He acquired a common school education, was elected as president of the Board of Education of Cove District, and spent his last days at Fox Hall in Pleasant District, where he died August 13, 1911, at the age of sixty-two. He was a republican. He was distinguished by certain strong traits of character, he dealt in nothing but the truth, despised shams and camouflage, but in spite of the strength of his convictions was reasonable in his relations with all men. Noah Janes married Catherine England, daughter of Archibald England. She died December 6, 1889, being the mother of William and Ida B., the latter the wife of T. E. Phillips, of Fox Hall, West Virginia.

William Janes was born in Cove District of Barbour County, spent his early life on the farm, and beyond the advantages of his immediate home community he had to depend on his own exertions for the higher education which he craved. After completing the work of the common schools he taught school, his first school being in the Bull Run District in Tucker County. While teaching he attended the Fairmont Normal School, and in his senior year was given a scholarship under the Peabody fund as a student in the Peabody Normal College at Nashville, Tennessee. This appointment was conferred by the state superintendent of schools of West Virginia, and it paid in addition to the railroad fare both ways $100 a year toward the maintenance of a student in the Normal College. Mr. Janes continued his studies there two and one half years, and subsequently entered West Virginia University, where he graduated A.B. in 1900, and subsequently received the law degree.

In the meantime he had done his duty as a volunteer soldier at the time of the Spanish-American war. He enlisted at Morgantown, and at Kanawha City was sworn in as a member of Company D of the First West Virginia Volunteers. The company was sent from Charleston to Chickamauga Park, Georgia, thence to Knoxville, Tennessee, and to Columbus, Georgia, and he was in that camp until discharged in the spring of 1899. After leaving the army he returned to Morgantown to finish his university work. Mr. Jones taught for a brief time, and then located at Philippi, where for some time he was engaged in the business of securing options on coal lands. Thus he became interested in some of the companies that were organized for the opening of mines and the development of the field. Although establishing himself in a business way in the community, he entered the practice of law, being admitted to the bar at Philippi. For a time he practiced with Senator W. H. Carter, now of Middlebourne. Mr. Jones has devoted his talent primarily to the business side of law and as a counsel and adviser rather than in court practice. Among other professional connections he is attorney for the Peoples Bank at Philippi and one of its directors.

Mr. Jones is a republican, and has done a great deal of work for the party, being acting secretary of the County Committee in 1904, and has been a delegate to congressional, judicial and other conventions. In politics he is primarily interested in good government, and puts the interest of the community and people above party.

The most notable era in the progressive administration of the municipal affairs at Philippi coincides with his term of mayor. He was elected mayor by the City Council in 1918 as the successor of Brown Shafer. He then was elected by popular vote for five successive terms, now in 1922, serving his fifth term. Among other outstanding steps of his administration was the extension of the electric light plant, the power for which is purchased from the Monongahela Power Company. When he became mayor the income of the light plant was about $200 a month, and now the gross revenue from the same source is $1,400 a month. A sewerage system has been installed, providing not only for present needs but for future growth. About $20,000 bonded indebtedness has been discharged, and the outstanding debt of the city at the present time is $33,500. Altogether Philippi is on a sound financial basis, and is working out a program of municipal improvements that gives it rank among the best cities of its size in the state.

At the signing of the armistice closing the World War Mayor Jones issued a proclamation to the citizens of Philippi, and in the course of the proclamation he said: "The war is over, the rights of man have been vindicated, righteousness and the allied arms have triumphed. Despotism and imperial Germany has been crushed. Downtrodden man now stands erect on the broad plain of equal rights to all. American principles and American ideals have permeated the old world and the Declaration of Independence has become the political textbook of all countries. It is right that we should be thankful and it is but right that we should celebrate this great world triumph with all that it means to humanity, and in order that we may more effectually do so I, William Jones, Mayor of the City of Philippi, call upon our citizens to take such steps to recognize the importance of the event by such public ceremonies as befit the occasion."

October 2, 1901, Mr. Jones married Miss Jessie Lee Semmelman, a native of Barbour County, who was reared and educated there. Her father, Samuel L. Semmelman, was born in Baltimore, has spent most of his life as a merchant, coming to West Virginia when about twenty-one years of age, and for some years lived in Grafton, where he married and later was a merchant at Nestorville in Barbour County. He married Mollie (DeHaven) Hubbard, widow of William Hubbard. Both of them now live in Philippi. Mrs. Semmelman by her first marriage has the following children: Granville Hubbard, of Delphi, Indiana; Perdita, who died as Mrs. Mont Burley; Nettie, Mrs. Howard Bailey, of Flemington; Mrs. Iva Marple, of Hamilton, Ohio. The Semmelman children are: Alice M., wife of J. C. Annon, of Philippi; Charles, of Columbus, Ohio; Mrs. William Jones; Mrs. Gay Murphy, of Philippi; John Semmelman, of Moatsville; and Carrie, wife of D. C. Gall of Philippi. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have one son, Aubrey Howard Jones, born August 15, 1902.

EDMOND ROGER DYER. In the course of a long and active life Edmond Roger Dyer has exercised his abilities in an unusually substantial range of duties and achievements. He has been a farmer and stockman, mill owner and operator, merchant, a leader in introducing and using new improvements, also a public official and liberal contributor to the educational advancement of his community and state. Mr. Dyer has been a citizen of Barbour County since 1886, and his home through these years has been about two miles from the Court House at Philippi.

He was born in Pendleton County January 25, 1851. Among his ancestors was at least one Revolutionary war soldier, and the Dyers have been in Virginia since Colonial times. One of the family name was at Fort Seybert during the Indian massacre. The grandfather of Edmond R. Dyer was Roger Dyer, who was born in Pendleton County, and died at the close of the Civil war, at the age of ninety-six. His active years were devoted to a farm. In politics he was first a whig and then a republican. He married a Miss Dyer, and both were of Scotch-Irish ancestry. This old couple are buried near Fort Seybert. Their sons were named Zebulon, James, Morgan and Allen. Their daughters were Susan, who married Jacob Trumbo, and Dianna and Mary, who died unmarried.

Allen Dyer, father of Edmond R., was a native of Pendleton County, spent his active life there on a farm, and is buried near Fort Seybert in the same county. He served a brief time as a Confederate soldier toward the close of the Civil war. He was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Allen Dyer died in 1907, at the age of ninety-one. He married Martha Miller, a daughter of John Miller, and she died in January, 1894. They reared four sons and four daughters, and the six surviving children are: Edmond R.; Mary M., who married C. K. Switzer, of Philippi; Dianna, who is the wife of W. A. Judy, of Pendleton County; Susan L., wife of Elias McWhorter, of McWhorter, West Virginia; Florence, wife of Isaac E. Bolton, of Morgantown; and W. M., of Pendleton.

Edmond R. Dyer spent his early life on his father's farm, attended the country schools, and lived at home until past his majority. His early training was largely that of manual labor, and through farm work he earned his first money. His independent career may be said to have begun when he engaged in merchandising at Pendleton. He remained there until 1883, and then moved to Lewis County and was a merchant at Jane Lew four years. From there he came to Barbour County in 1886 and established his home on a farm two miles from Philippi while his home has been in the country, few city men have had wider interests in the program of important affairs. In his home neighborhood he developed what is practically an industrial suburb of Philippi. There he built a gristmill, sawmill and planingmill, erecting the Dyer Mill in 1890, and he still continues this operation. He also opened a store, but abandoned merchandising after 1902. Since then his business interests have been associated with his farm, his live stock and his mill.

His progressive character is illustrated in the fact that he was the first farmer to introduce such modern machinery as the grain drill and the tractor, and his reaper was one of the first in the county. The Delco Lighting Company declares that his was the first residence in West Virginia equipped with a Delco lighting system. The first residence telephone was also placed in his home. He and another party started the first telephone line in Barbour County. In Philippi, Mr. Dyer took part in the organization of the Citizens National Bank, and has been vice president and one of the directors of that institution from the beginning.

One of the outstanding qualities of his good citizenship has been his deep interest in matters of education. He was elected and served for eight years as president of the Board of Education for the Philippi District. He was also associated with a group of citizens in Philippi in building up a college center in that town. These men purchased the property of Broadus College at Clarksburg, and secured the relocation of the institution at Philippi. His was one of the first live subscriptions to the college fund.

Mr. Dyer gave the people of Barbour County a highly efficient administration in the office of sheriff, to which he as elected in 1904, succeeding Sheriff Isaac C. Woodford, and served four years. He was elected as a republican, and is been affiliated with that party since young manhood.

In Lewis County, West Virginia, June 22, 1882, Mr. Dyer married Miss Philena McWhorter, a member of a very old and prominent family of the state. Her father, Mansfield McWhorter, was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church and married Sarah Ann Davis. Both are buried at McWhorter in Harrison County. Mrs. Dyer was born in Lewis County June 14, 1858, the only child of her parents, and was reared and educated at Jane Lew.

In some respects the outstanding achievement of Mr. and Mrs. Dyer is the splendid family of children they have reared and prepared for the serious duties of life. These children are twelve in number, and there are now a number of grandchildren. The oldest child is Otto M., of Buckhannon, who married Grace Proudfoot, and their children are: Mansfield McWhorter, Delbert Proudfoot, Otto McWhorter and John Edmond. The second child, Allen M., in a transfer business at Philippi, married Venna Burner and has four children, Arthur Burner, Mary Louise Allen Miller and Philena Grace. Audrey, the third of the family, is the wife of J. Stanley Corder, cashier of the People's Bank at Philippi, and they have a daughter, Ruth Reynolds. Mary was married to T. A. Wilson, of Kingwood, and she is the mother of two daughters, Sallie Lue and Philena Sue. Joseph P., the fifth of this family, is in the dairy business at Clarksburg, and by his marriage to Maud Woodford has children named Sarahel, Lucille, Irene, Inajane and Edmond. Josephine, the sixth, was married to M. M. Strader, of Philippi, and has two daughters, Rosa Lee and Alberta. The seventh is Mrs. Henry J. Peterson, of Graham, Texas. Paul D., the eighth child, is a farmer near Philippi and married a Martin. The younger children, all still in the home circle, are Annie Lee and Harry (twins), Clifford A. and Stephen.

JOHN W. WHITTAKER, manager of the Whittaker Grocery Company of Terra Alta, has had an earnest and hard working career, and has progressed from a boy laborer in the mines through successive grades of commercial enterprise, until the net results of his life's activities in Preston County comprise an impressive achievement and a place of honor in the community.

He was born at Austen, Preston County, December 24, 1867. His father, Joseph M. Whittaker, spent all his active life as a miner and mine foreman. A native of England, he came to the United States at the age of twenty-five, and spent the rest of his career at Austen, West Virginia, in the mines of that locality. He died in 1901. His wife, Elizabeth Price, was a native of Wales and came to the United States when a girl of five years. She died in 1916, aged seventy-three. Their children were: Anna, wife of J. D. Montgomery, of Tunnelton; John W.; Mary Sophia, wife of G. M. Renshaw, of Pomeroy, Ohio; Martha Ellen, wife of B. F. Renshaw, of Newburg, West Virginia; Joseph L., of Lorain, Ohio; Edward, a mine foreman at Tunnelton; and William, of Bradley, Ohio.

John W. Whittaker lived in a miner's home in the environment of a busy mining district at Austen, attended the common schools there and during intervals did what work he was able to do in the mines. At the age of fifteen he began earning his living, his first work being as a "trapper" in the mines, following which he was a coal hauler and coal miner. After four years in the practical life of coal mining, during which time he gave his earnings to the support of the family, he took a place in the mine company's store at Austen, clerking for two years, and then acting as buyer. After five years with the mining company's store a shortage of work caused a shutdown of the commercial establishment, and Mr. Whittaker, using his own modest savings and borrowing other capital, started business for himself at Tunnelton under the name John W. Whittaker. He was a merchant there seven years and did build up a large and successful establishment, finally selling to A. J. Bonafide, whose son is a leading coal operator in that vicinity. After leaving his own business Mr. Whittaker went on the road as a traveling salesman for Pugh & Beavers, of Terra Alta, wholesale grocers. During the next five years he built up a large business for the firm in West Virginia and Maryland, and was then taken into partnership, the name of the house being changed to the Pugh & Beavers Grocery Company. A branch house was established at Grafton and another at Elkins in 1906, Mr. Whittaker remaining as manager of the Terra Alta business. He continued in that capacity for ten years, and in December, 1916, he and his associate, Mr. Wotring, bought the Terra Alta house, the result of that deal being the present Whittaker Grocery Company, of which Mr. Whittaker is manager and Mr. Wotring accountant and office man. Under the energetic administration of Mr. Whittaker and his partner this business has grown apace, and it is already in excess of its warehouse and office facilities at Terra Alta. The company has an extensive trade over a district twenty-five miles north and south of Terra Alta, and along some seventy-five miles of railroad. Mr. Whittaker is also a stockholder and is vice president of the Terra Alta Bank, with the management of which he has been identified for several years.

His participation in politics has been only that of a republican voter, and only once did he consent to accept public office, one term on the common council. During that term the council eliminated the cigarette license, making it unlawful for a cigarette to be sold within the corporate limits, an ordinance still prevailing. Mr. Whittaker is a member of the Masonic Order, Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows. He was reared a Methodist and for many years has been active in the church of that denomination at Terra Alta, serving on the church board a dozen years, and for thirteen years has been superintendent of the Sunday School and twice has been a delegate to the West Virginia Conference.

January 22, 1892, at Newburg, Mr. Whittaker married Miss Mary Jane Hebb, daughter of Sibrant and Ellen (Blackburn) Hebb, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania. Of the children born to their marriage, the oldest is Percy, now a traveling salesman for the Whittaker Grocery Company and who was in camp at Parkersburg getting ready for service in the World war, but was never called out. He married Nellie Shaffer, and they have a daughter, Irene, and twins, Percy H., Jr., and Betty Jean. The second child, Bernice Marie, is in the service of the National Home and School Association of New York City, an organization for the purpose of drawing the school and home closer together. The third child, Elsie Elizabeth, is the wife of H. H. Parsons, bill clerk of the Whittaker Grocery Company. The two younger children are Paul H. and John W., Jr., both in grade school at Terra Alta.

PHILIP A. SWITZER. When a boy just in his "teens" Philip A. Switzer worked in and had the chief responsibilities of mechanical management of a country mill. After that he was otherwise engaged, picking up a somewhat varied experience in business, but milling has remained his chief occupation. He is one of the prominent men of Philippi in the suburban industrial village of Mansfield, where he is a member of the firm E. R. Dyer & Company, millers and lumber dealers.

Mr. Switzer was born in Pendleton County, at Upper Traet, June 15, 1857. His father, David N. Switzer, was a native of Hardy County, West Virginia, and was of Swiss ancestry. He married Frances Wilson, also a native of Hardy County and of an old family of Western Virginia. David Switzer was a miller, and lost his life by accident in 1859, when the mill headgate fell upon him. His wife survived and died at the village of Mansfield in 1900, when eighty-five years old. Her children were: Miss Mary, deceased; Virginia A., who was the wife of John A. W. Dyer, of Mulvane, Kansas; Daniel S., who died unmarried at the age of twenty-five; David P., who became a miller and died at Spencer, West Virginia; Jesse O., who died in Harrison County; Gabriel T., who died in Pomona, California, leaving a son, Claude; Charles K., of Philippi, who married Minnie Dyer and has three daughters; and Philip Anderson.

Philip A. Switzer grew up in Pendleton County, attended the free schools for four months each year, and was thirteen years old when he took charge of the operation of an old water mill at Upper Tract. He remained at that work about a year, and subsequently was placed in a country store and had a considerable mercantile experience in different parts of Pendleton County. His first independent experience as a merchant was in partnership with Edmond R. Dyer, his present partner. For about four years they conducted a business at Ruddle, until Mr. Dyer left the county. Mr. Switzer was then a member of the firm Snell and Switzer, wholesale and retail grocery merchants at Harrisonburg, Virginia, for about two years. Leaving there he returned to Pendleton County, and in the fall of 1888 engaged in milling, conducting the mill of E. D. Ruddle until March, 1891.

At the latter date Mr. Switzer again became associated with Mr. Dyer at Philippi, and for over thirty years has been a partner in the Dyer Mill at Mansfield. This milling enterprise is the chief feature in that community and comprises a flourmill, with a capacity of fifty barrels daily, a sawmill and planingmill. The output of these mills is sold almost entirely in the local market. With a record of over thirty years operation the plant has never shut down except for repairs, and has proved itself one of the large, healthy and growing concerns of Barbour County. Around the mills and depending upon them as the chief source of livelihood has sprung up a village community. Mr. Switzer is a partner with his brother C. K. Switzer in the Mansfield Mercantile Company, conducting a mercantile business in the village of Mansfield.

Mr. Switzer is a business man and has never been what might be called a leader in politics, though he has performed his duty when required. He served as a member of the County Court of Barbour County from 1910 to 1916, and during the last year was chairman of the court. During his term the old bonded debt of the county was liquidated and the last of the railroad bonds were paid off. Mr. Switzer was elected as a democrat in a district normally republican by more than 400, and his own majority was 430. His colleagues on the board were E. A. Waugh, Z. Taylor Crouso, L. P. Bennett and William Seringeour.

July 1, 1887, Mr. Switzer married at Baltimore, Maryland, Miss Rachel Virginia McClung, who was born in Highland County, Virginia, and was reared in Pendleton County, West Virginia. Her father, Silas B. McClung, has spent his life as a farmer and is living in Pendleton County at the age of eighty-eight. He was a Confederate soldier going into the war at the beginning and doing his duty in the Army of Northern Virginia until the close of the struggle, and was never wounded. He married Miss Nannie Lemmon, of an old family of Botetourt County, Virginia. She died in 1916. Her children were: Mrs. Switzer, who was born January 20, 1869; Warren, who died in Pendleton County in May, 1921; Clarence, a farmer on the old McClung homestead in Pendleton County; Josie, who married Rev. William Compton, of Jarrettsville, Maryland; Henry McClung, of Los Angeles, California; and Edgar, a traveling salesman out of Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Switzer have reared three children, all of whom are now established in vocations or homes of their own. The oldest is Lena Virginia, connected with the auditing department of the Income Tax Bureau of the U. S. Treasury Department. The son, Charles McC., graduated from Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, in 1915, and on August 25 of that year became a chemist in the laboratories of the Dupont Corporation, continuing with that great industry until 1920 and is now a manufacturer of cellulose product at Rutherford, New Jersey. The youngest child, Ethel C., is the wife of Austin C. Merrill, deputy United States clerk at Philippi.

Mr. and Mrs. Switzer are members of the Crim Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Philippi. In Masonry he is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling, is a past noble grand of Philippi Lodge No. 59, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a member of the Encampment of that order, and is a charter member and for ten years has been recordkeeper of the Knights of the Maccabees.

J. BLACKBURN WARE has earned a deservedly high place in the bar of West Virginia during the twenty odd years he has practiced. At the same time he has exercised an important influence in republican politics, has served as mayor of Philippi, has labored consistently for educational advancement, and at all times has endeavored to give his talents in proportion to his abilities.

Mr. Ware was born near Belington on a farm in Barbour County, November 15, 1872. His grandfather was James R. Ware, one of the strong and rugged citizens and characters of his time. He was a farmer, a man of great energy and endurance, and was described as "straight as an Indian" when he died at the age of seventy-five. He lived in Randolph and Barbour counties, and is buried near Belington. He married Dorothy Mace, and they reared a family of twelve children.

Elliuh Ware, father of the Philippi lawyer, was born in Randolph County, grew up during the Civil war, and consequently had a limited education in schools. For many years he was a farmer in the Belington locality, but in 1890 moved into that town and was a merchant there until 1920. He has been a good citizen, a republican voter and a member of the United Brethren Church. Elliuh Ware married Lucretia Booth, a daughter of James Booth, whose wife was a Yeager. Mrs. Elliuh Ware died in 1890. Of her six children only three grew to mature years; William G. pastor of the United Brethren Church at Fairmont; J. Blackburn; and Roxanna, who died in 1917, wife of Frank Luzader.

J. Blackburn Ware laid the foundation of his education in the country schools near his birthplace. He also attended the old Normal and Classical Academy at Buckhannon, maintained by the United Brethren Church, and was teacher after graduating. His last work as teacher was done at Belington, where he was principal of schools. This was followed by taking the law course in West Virginia University at Morgantown, where he graduated in 1897. Mr. Ware was admitted to practice in Tucker County, and was at Parsons as a spectator in the murder trial of Robert Eastman for the murder of Thompson. This was one of the famous criminal trials in the history of that locality, and there was an imposing array of counsel on both sides of the case. In the spring of 1898, Mr. Ware established himself in practice at Belington, where he remained for ten years. He began practice alone, and subsequently was associated with J. A. Viquesney, under the firm name of Ware and Viquesney, until that partnership was dissolved by the appointment of Mr. Viquesney as game warden of West Virginia. Mr. Ware then moved to Philippi, in 1909, where he has enjoyed a busy career as a lawyer, not only in the state and local courts, but in the Federal courts as well, having been admitted to practice in the Federal courts soon after his admission to the state bar. The greater part of his law business has been in the civil, and in the criminal law he has been associated chiefly in the defense, though in one or two noted cases he was on the side of the prosecution.

Mr. Ware cast his first presidential vote for Major McKinley, and for many years has helped hold the republican party organization together in Barbour County. He has attended several state conventions. One of these was the exciting convention which divided into two factions, each nominating a candidate for governor. Both these candidates subsequently withdrew and Governor Glasscock was chosen as the harmony candidate and elected governor. In 1920 Mr. Ware took an active part in building up support in Barbour County for the present Governor Morgan. He believed in Mr. Morgan's qualifications for governor, and he also felt an additional interest in him since they were classmates together in law school. Mr. Ware's service as mayor at Philippi was rendered in 1910 and 1911, two terms. During his term a large amount of street paving was done.

During the several years he was a resident of Belington, he was secretary of the Board of Education. At Philippi his efforts in behalf of education have been directed chiefly through his membership in the Kiwanis Club. He introduced the resolution before that club to memorialize the Legislature to pass a law permitting the city to vote a bond issue of 5 cents on the dollar to build a high school and grammar school combined. He prepared the bill, secured its passage by the Legislature, and the city is now enjoying the conveniences of this splendid building. Mr. Ware is a prominent factor in the local Kiwanis Club, is vice president and chairman of its committee on public affairs, and was representative of the club at the International Convention at Cleveland in 1921. He is affiliated with Grafton Lodge of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, and is deputy grand chancellor and has attended the last five sessions of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias. He is also a member of the Pythian Sisters and the Rebekahs, and is a member of the D. O. K. K., social order of the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Ware is a prominent layman of the United Brethren Church, and attended two of the national conferences, one at Wichita, Kansas, and the other, in 1921, at Indianapolis. His active church work has been primarily in the direction of arousing interest in the Sunday School, and he has spoken at a number of local conventions of Sabbath School workers.

At Parsons, Virginia, in March, 1901, Mr. Ware married Miss Tillie Glenn. She was born near Terra Alta, March 7, 1880, daughter of Rev. C. E. Glenn, still living at Terra Alta. Her parents have two daughters and six sons. Her sister is Mrs. Forrest Trickett, of Elkins, West Virginia. Her brothers are: Asa, of Clarksburg, Victor, of Terra Alta, Walter, of Fairmont, Karl Glenn, of Grafton, Frey Glenn, of Calloway, Ohio, and Jesse Glenn, of Belington.

The oldest of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Ware is Paul Blackburn, who has completed his sophomore year at the University of West Virginia. James Ralph, the second son, is a junior in the Philippi High School. Evelyn Glenn is a sophomore in high school, Ruth Elizabeth is in the eighth grade, and David Ray, the youngest, is in the sixth grade of the local grammar school.

CHARLES B. WILLIAMS, M. D. The distinction of Doctor Williams has been his devotion for more than a quarter of a century to the practice of medicine in the community of Philippi. He began practice with a superior education and training, and has sought opportunities since then to keep in touch with men of prominence and the growing knowledge in the profession of medicine and surgery.

Doctor Williams was born at Grafton, Taylor County West Virginia, October 1, 1872. His father, George Williams, was a native of Maryland, and his father was a native of Wales. George Williams died at Grafton in 1874, while master mechanic in the Grafton Shops of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. He was twice married. By his first wife he had two sons and three daughters. The daughters all died in childhood. The sons were: George, who died at Grafton, and Chester, who died at Pittsburgh, both leaving families. The second wife of George Williams was Christina See, a daughter of Charles See, a farmer in Randolph County, West Virginia, where Mrs. Williams was born. They were married in Taylor County, and Doctor Williams was their only child. The mother of Doctor Williams subsequently married Moses H. Crouch at Lee Bell, West Virginia, and died at the home of her son in Philippi in 1916.

Doctor Williams was only two years of age when his father died. He attended his first school in Grafton, and was a pupil of Miss Amanda Abbott, the venerable primary teacher of Taylor County, who is still active in the service of the schools at Grafton. When Doctor Williams was seven years of age his mother removed to Lee Bell, Randolph County, and he lived there until he went away to college, completing his work in the public schools. Later he became a student in the Augusta Military Academy at Fort Defiance, Virginia, and in June, 1895, graduated from the University of Virginia Medical School at Charlottesville. Immediately after completing his medical course Doctor Williams located at Philippi, and with only brief interruptions has been steadily engaged in his private practice in that city ever since. During 1911 he was absent for a time making work in the New York Post-Graduate Medical School in New York City, and the following year he did post-graduate work in the University of Maryland at Baltimore. Outside his private practice he has served several terms as county health officer and is now city health officer and county health officer. He is also Baltimore & Ohio Railway surgeon at Philippi, and is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations and of the Baltimore and Ohio Surgeons Association.

During 1918 Doctor Williams was commissioned as Captain in the Medical Corps, and for six months was on duty at Camp Greenleaf, Georgia, until discharged there December 24, 1918. He is a charter member of Barbour County Post No. 44 of the American Legion. Doctor Williams is a republican, and voted at all the national elections since casting his first vote for Major McKinley. He took his Masonic degree in Bigelow Lodge No. 52, A. F. & A. M., at Philippi, has filled all the chairs in that lodge and been representative to the Grand Lodge, and is a member of Tygart Valley Chapter No. 39, R. A. M. He and Mrs. Williams are Presbyterians, and Mrs. Williams took a considerable part in the work of the local Red Cross Chapter during the war.

At Philippi June 30, 1898, Doctor Williams married Miss Annie Bosworth. Her father was the venerable Doctor J. W. Bosworth, who is still living at Philippi at the age of eighty-five, a pioneer physician of the city and also a former Confederate soldier. Doctor Bosworth married Mattie Dold, of Waynesboro, Virginia, and Mrs. Williams is her only child. Mrs. Williams finished her education in the Mary Baldwin Seminary at Staunton, Virginia, and married soon after leaving that school. Doctor and Mrs. Williams have one son, George Woodbridge, who finished his preparatory education in Broadus College at Philippi, and is now a student in the Augusta Military Academy at Fort Defiance, Virginia.

W. BRUCE TALBOTT had to pay his way while preparing himself for the bar, and that experience brought him to the practice with considerable more than the qualifications of the young law graduate, so that his subsequent advancement was rapid. Most of the time since his admission to the bar has been devoted to his duties as prosecuting attorney of Barbour County.

Mr. Talbott was born in Pleasant District, Barbour County June 7, 1888. His people have lived in that section of the county for several generations, and farming has been their chief vocation. His grandparents were Silas and Sarah (McKinney) Talbott. The father of the prosecuting attorney was the youngest of the twelve children of his parents and was born on a farm in Pleasant District in 1853. Farming has been the work of his life. He was educated in the country schools, and his success on the farm and elsewhere has shown him to be a man of good business judgment. He helped organize the Citizens National Bank of Philippi, and is a director of the People's Bank of that city. In politics he has been satisfied to cast his vote as a democrat, and is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, though his parents were old-school Baptists. Mr. Talbott married Edith Bartlett, daughter of Judson Bartlett. Their children are: Iva, wife of W. D. Corder, of Philippi; W. Bruce; Hazel, who died in infancy; Ruby, a teacher in Barbour County; E. Wayne, who graduated A. B. from the University of West Virginia and is now taking his law course there; and Ralph, a student in the Philippi High School.

Mr. Bruce Talbott had the old home farm as his environment until he was about twenty years of age. He knows more about the practical side of farming than perhaps many other lawyers. The public schools near the old home gave him the foundation of his education, and subsequently he attended West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, where he graduated in 1908. He taught two terms of school before graduating and another term afterward, and then for three years worked as office man for the Consolidation Coal Company. Through this employment he earned the money to complete his law course. Mr. Talbott graduated LL. B. from West Virginia University in 1915, was admitted to the bar at Philippi the same year, and began practice alone. He won his first case, though an unimportant one, in the Circuit Court, and he was soon in possession of a growing law practice. He had practiced about a year before he was elected to the important duties of prosecuting attorney.

His election to this office occurred in 1916. He had to contest his nomination in the primaries, but in 1920 he had no competition in the primaries. A distinction that is something out of the ordinary is the fact that Mr. Talbott is the first prosecuting attorney of Barbour County to be elected for two consecutive terms during the past thirty years. The basis of his hold upon the people at the time of his second candidacy was his strong enforcement of the law during his first term.

Mr. Talbott cast his first vote for president in 1912 for Mr. Taft, and was a delegate from Barbour County to the Judicial Convention at Huntington in 1916. He is a member of the College Fraternity Beta Theta Pi and in Masonry has taken both the York and Scottish Rite degrees and is a member of Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is a member of the Baptist Church.

In Barbour County July 9, 1909, he married Miss Mabel Right, who was born at Belington, March 13, 1893, daughter of James and Martha (Bennett) Right. She was one of ten children. Mr. and Mrs. Talbott have a family of four children, named Lucille, Rex, Robert and William.

H. FOSTER HARTMAN, a former sheriff of Preston County, has for many years been one of the keen and resourceful business men of that section of the state. He was a merchant before reaching his majority and is now proprietor of a prosperous lumber and planing mill business at Kingwood.

Mr. Hartman was born on a farm near Tunnelton in Preston County December 25, 1880. His grandfather, Henry Hartman, was a farmer at Craborchard in the same county, and was buried in that locality. He was twice married and had two sons and four daughters. George W. Hartman, father of the Kingwood business man, was born in the Whetsell settlement of Preston County, grew up on a farm and acquired a common school education, and was a Union soldier in the Civil war, being in Company F of the Sixth West Virginia Infantry. He saw some of the fighting within the borders of his native state, and at the end of the war he came out of the army, and thereafter his chief interests were centered on farming, though he also invested some of his capital in merchandising as a means of getting his sons in business. He was without ambition for public office, voted as a republican, and was a leader in the Camp Chappel Methodist Church, and is buried in the churchyard there. George W. Hartman, who died December 7, 1917, married Susan Bonafield, daughter of Thornton and Sarah Bonafield. Her father was a life-time farmer, and was probably born in Preston County. Mrs. George W. Hartman died February 9, 1913, and her children, besides H. Foster, were: Edward Thornton, of Boston, Massachusetts; Arnold W., of Tunnelton; Mabel, wife of B. T. Gibson, of Masontown, West Virginia; L. Bert, of Tunnelton; Alice, wife of Bruce Falkenstein, of Mountain Lake Park, Maryland; and Lessie, of Kingwood.

H. Foster Hartman grew up on the old farm near Tunnelton and acquired a common school education there. At the age of nineteen he went to Lenox and took charge of the mercantile business known as George W. Hartman & Son, owned by his father and brother. He was conducting this store when he reached his majority, and subsequently bought the stock and altogether was a merchant there three years. When he sold out this business he moved a portion of the stock to Terra Alta, but after a time closed out his line of general merchandise and made the candy and ice cream feature his line. About three years later he sold to Ezra B. Hanger, and then went on the road as a traveling salesman for the Rowlesburg Wholesale Grocery Company. He had been on the road about a year when he decided to make the race for sheriff. It was an interesting campaign before the primaries, and there were five candidates, so that Mr. Hartman's qualifications and popularity were thoroughly tested. He was elected sheriff in the fall of 1912. Mr. Hartman had cast his first vote for President in behalf of Colonel Roosevelt in 1904. The year 1912 was the year of the great split in the republican party, and the division extended to Preston County, where however, Mr. Hartman succeeded in defeating his competitor by a good margin. He entered the office as successor to Charles Spindler, and served the legal limit for sheriff, four years.

On retiring from the office of sheriff Mr. Hartman turned his attention to business interests he had already acquired, a garage and planing mill. He soon sold his garage, but the planing mill is still a prominent factor of his enterprises. This factory is located at Albright, near Kingwood. In April, 1921, he purchased the old site and building of the Kingwood Glass Company, and now uses that for handling a large stock of lumber and builders' supplies.

Besides this substantial participation in the commercial life of Kingwood, Mr. Hartman is a stockholder in the Bank of Kingwood, is a stockholder and director of the Englehart Woolen Mills Company, and a director and stockholder in the Rowlesburg Wholesale Grocery Company, which he formerly represented as a traveling salesman.

At Lenox, Preston County, April 23, 1901, Mr. Hartman married Miss Belle Kelley, who was born and reared in the Lenox community, daughter of Winfield Scot and Sarah Elizabeth (Feather) Kelley. Mrs. Hartman was past nineteen when she married. They have three children: Ruby Beatrice, attending the Martha Washington Seminary at Washington, D. C.; Donald Kelley, a student in Kingwood High School; and Harland Spencer.

The Hartman family are Methodists, and Mr. Hartman is one of the Official Board of the Kingwood Church. His home is one of the very modern and attractive ones in the county, and in other ways he has contributed to the substantial improvement of the city.

JOHN F. HEWITT. The clerk of the County Court of Barbour County is one of the most popular and efficient members of the Court House circle at Philippi. The distinctive feature of his career has been his determination and ability to rise above his environment and find the work for which he has unique talent and qualifications.

Mr. Hewitt was born on a farm in Valley District of Barbour County July 12, 1872. His grandfather came to West Virginia from Pennsylvania, settling in Barbour County. He was one of the early teachers in that locality. His family consisted of three sons and three daughters. The sons were: John, Joel and Hiram. The daughters were: Margaret, who married Benjamin Tallman, Mrs. Jane Phillips and Purdy.

Joel Hewitt spent his life in Barbour County as a farmer and died in Valley District in 1917, when past eighty-three years of age. He secured only a limited education, was a republican voter, and a member of the United Brethren Church. He married Hulda Hayes, whose father, Isaac Hayes, was a shoemaker and farm owner in Barker District of Barbour County. Mrs. Hulda Hewitt died in 1918, when almost eighty years of age. Her children were: John Franklin; Perry, connected with a lumber mill in Randolph County; and Hayes, a farmer in Valley District.

John F. Hewitt grew up in a community where work in the field or in the woods was regarded as the maximum qualification for earning a livelihood and achieving one's destiny. He had only such advantages as the country schools offered. When he was about twenty years of age he left the farm to become a teacher, and for nine years had charge of country schools and during the summer vacations attended school himself. His last work as a teacher was done at Junior in Barbour County. He left the schoolroom to establish and conduct a barber shop at Junior and learn the trade from his employe. For fifteen years he had a shop at Belington and later at Philippi. While conducting his shop he was a student in the West Virginia Business College at Clarksburg, where he graduated.

Mr. Hewitt's great gift and talent is skill in penmanship. Few penmen have acquired the art or mastery of the pen to such a high degree. This talent manifested itself during his childhood, but was never encouraged at home. "John is a good writer" was the common remark about home his writing was regarded as something of a curiosity freak and not as a means by which he could render peculiar service to the world. Therefore, the talent lay dormant until he was a man of nearly middle age, when he awakened it himself through correspondence courses with several schools. Mr. Hewitt made his first penholder out of a stick, which he split at one end so as to insert a pen and secured it by wrapping the end with thread. He also made his first ink out of pokeberries. In penmanship Mr. Hewitt holds diplomas specifying to his skill and proficiency from the Francis B. Courtney School of Penmanship of St. Louis, Mo., from F. W. Tamblin of Kansas City, Missouri, and from the Sexter Business College of Worcester, Ohio.

H. Foster Hartman

About the time he graduated from business college, he came a clerk with the Consolidated Coal Company at Berryburg, West Virginia, but before the end of a year turned to Philippi and was elected and served two years as city clerk. He then became deputy under Sheriff Kennedy, and held that office four years. In 1920 he was elected county clerk, and entered upon his duties January 1, 1921, the successor of S. F. Hoxman. He defeated his predecessor for the office in the primary, and in the election received a majority of 1,310 votes.

While a resident of Belington Mr. Hewitt married, on March 21, 1896, Miss Margaret Monahan, who was born in Allegheny District, Barbour County, daughter of Andrew and Emily (Wiseman) Monahan, farmers. Mrs. Hewitt, who received a public school education, is the second in a family of ten sons and three daughters, the other children surviving being Henry, William, Simon, Irvin, Archie, Ray, Mrs. Essie Perkins of Richmond, Virginia, and Ethel, who is married and lives in Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Hewitt have five children and two grandchildren. Their oldest daughter, Lillie May, is the wife of Charles Leary, of Richmond, Virginia, and they have a son, called W., Jr. The second daughter, Ella Pearl, is the wife of Charles Marple, of Grafton, and has a son, Charles Lee. The only son of Mr. and Mrs. Hewitt is Andrew Archie, who is now in the United States Navy.

During the World War Mr. Hewitt was deputy sheriff, and much of his time was devoted to assisting the selective service men in filling out their questionnaires. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Junior Order United American Mechanics and the Knights of Pythias, and is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

JUDGE WILLIAM T. ICE. In the annals of pioneer settlement in West Virginia one of the first family names to appear is that of Ice. Many branches of the old family have been conspicuous in different parts of the state. The following is a brief sketch of the late Judge William T. Ice, who conferred additional honors upon the name through a long and active career as a lawyer and judge in Barbour County.

He was born in Marion County in March, 1840, one of the several sons and daughters of Andrew Ice, who lived in Marion County, where he was a farmer and surveyor. William T. Ice grew up on a farm, attended rural schools and was mainly self educated. He probably taught in early years, read law at Fairmont, and was admitted to the bar.

Philippi, where he established his practice and where he spent for his official work he was continuously engaged in a profession until his death.

Judge Ice was elected and served as prosecuting attorney in Barbour County, was for several years a member of the House of Delegates, and in 1880 was elected judge of the Circuit Court, composed of Barbour, Tucker, Randolph, Preston and Taylor counties. He was a judge with a wide turning in the law and a sound knowledge of human nature. He was dignified, impartial, and made a splendid record on the bench. After retiring he resumed private practice, and continued it until his death in February, 1908. Judge Ice was a democrat, was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

He married Miss Columbia Jarvis. They were the parents of five daughters, and the only son is William T. Ice, Jr.

EDMOND WHITEHAIR, though past the age of three score and ten, still bears a part in the business affairs of Philippi. He was a boy soldier of the Union in the Civil war, and for the greater part of his active career lived in Preston County, where the Whitehairs are one of the oldest and most prominent families. The family history is given with more detail on other pages of this publication.

Edmond Whitehair was born near Terra Alta in Preston County, January 19, 1848, son of Daniel and Sarah (Messenger) Whitehair. His mother was a daughter of Edmond and Louisa (Hardesty) Messenger. Edmond was one of a family of eight sons and four daughters, and his boyhood was spent on the farm close to the little city on the mountain top. At that time country schools were poorly equipped and conducted only a few months of each year, and it was from such schools that Edmond Whitehair acquired his education. He worked with his father, and though only thirteen years of age when the Civil war broke out, he was eager to get into the service, and after being rejected on account of his age he was finally accepted in February after his fifteenth birthday. At Grafton he enlisted in Company I of the Seventeenth West Virginia Infantry, under Captain Samuel Holt and Colonel Day. He joined his company at Wheeling, did some training there, was in training at Clarksburg, and during the remainder of the war was on scouting duty. There were many Confederate prisoners gathered in, some of them being deserters from the Confederate Army while others were bona fide soldiers. The Seventeenth Regiment was ordered back to Wheeling and Company I was discharged in July, 1865.

After his return to Terra Alta Edmond Whitehair joined Senator Jones in the "shook" business, making shocks for molasses and sugar barrels. This was an industry with which he was identified about eight years. Mr. Whitehair then returned to farming, and was an active factor in the agricultural community near his birthplace for many years. On leaving the farm he retired to Terra Alta, and about twelve years later, in 1904, came to Philippi, where he purchased the marble business of Mr. Joseph Crim, acquiring the plant and goodwill. He took charge and has since conducted this local industry, known as the Tygart Valley Marble Works, a corporation of which Sylvanus Talbott is president, Ira H. Byers, secretary, and Mr. Whitehair, treasurer and general manager. The company is capitalized at $5,000, and it does a business over a large adjacent section of West Virginia and extending into Pennsylvania and Maryland.

Mr. Whitehair was one of the promoters and stockholders of the First National Bank of Terra Alta, and is also a charter member and one of the stockholders of the Peoples Bank of Philippi. He is a republican, having cast his first vote for General Grant, and has supported the national ticket for half a century. He was a member of the City Council of Terra Alta and president of the Board of Education of Portland District, Preston County, for fourteen years, resigning that office when he came to Philippi. In this city he has served two terms as a member of the council, but after his second term declined to serve longer. Mr. Whitehair has been a member of the United Brethren Church for half a century and has been superintendent of the Sunday School. He is affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic.

In Preston County he married Miss Lucinda Freeland. Her father was Benjamin Freeland, who married a daughter of Samuel Messenger. Mrs. Whitehair died seven years after her marriage. She was the mother of three children. Her son Walter was killed in an explosion at Cumberland, Maryland, leaving a wife and four children, whose names are Nora, wife of Clarence Mullendor, Blanche, Stanley and Mrs. Mildred Jennings. The only daughter of Mr. Whitehair by his first marriage is Lizzie, wife of M. N. Taylor, of Terra Alta, and the living son is Samuel Whitehair, of Philadelphia. For his present wife Mr. Whitehair married in Garrett County, Maryland, Susan Sanders, daughter of John F. and Elizabeth (Baker) Sanders. Mrs. Whitehair was born in Garrett County February 22, 1851. The one child of Mr. and Mrs. Whitehair is Missouri, wife of Floyd

H. Smith, of Philippi, and they have one child a daughter, Pearl, a student in the Philippi High School.

WINFIELD SCOTT SIMON is serving his second term as county assessor of Barbour County. He is one of the leaders in county republican politics, and his earnest, hard-working citizenship has won him a strong and loyal following of friends who repose implicit confidence both in his words and his actions.

His grandfather was Anthony Simon, a native of old Virginia, who for many years conducted a farm on the waters of Stewart's Run in Barbour County. He married Minerva Corder. They had three sons and one daughter: Joseph B. A., Stephen, John and Helen, the latter of whom married J. R. Dickenson. Joseph B. A. Simon, father of the county assessor, was commissioned an officer in the Union Army, but was never called to active duty. He has been a farmer, is a member of the Baptist Church and is affiliated with the Junior Order United American Mechanics. Joseph B. A. Simon married Mildred McCoy, daughter of Benjamin and Mathilda Johnson McCoy. Of their ten children seven reached matured years: Winfield Scott; Tella, wife of O. J. Paugh; Addie, wife of Clark Wood; Icie, who is Mrs. Elbert McWhorter; John, of Junior, West Virginia, and there were also triplets in the family, named, Dora, Cora and Ora, the two survivors being Dora, wife of Albert McWhorter, and Cora, wife of James White. J. B. A. Simon is now seventy-six years of age, and lives with his son Scott. By a second marriage, to Miss Nettie Russell, he has a daughter, Frasier, wife of John Woodford, of Pittsburgh.

Winfield Scott Simon was born in Elk District of Barbour County June 4, 1867. His parents were poor. He was fourteen years of age when his mother died, and he and the other children were scattered and grew up chiefly among strangers. Scott Simon had only the advantage of the free schools in his neighborhood, and his environment was the farming district. He had no capital by inheritance, and his first means were supplied from farm labor and work at the carpenter's trade, which he learned and followed for a number of years. During dull seasons at the trade he worked at farming, and he continued in this way until he was chosen superintendent of the county farm. His administration of the county farm for seven years was a very efficient one, and during that time the farm became self supporting. When he turned it over to his successor the cash balance was greater than it had ever been at any previous transfer of administration.

Mr. Simon left the superintendency of the county farm to become candidate for county assessor. In the republican primaries of 1916 there were five candidates, and he defeated his nearest opponent by 137 votes. In the election he defeated Shaffer, the democrat, by 117 votes. He entered the office as successor of C. E. Corder. In the primaries of 1920 he was nominated over two competitors, and he defeated his democratic opponent, Lloyd England, by a majority of 1,756. This was a larger vote by 700 than was given to President Harding in 1920 in Barbour County. His reelection is a high testimony to the judgment and fairness with which he has administered his office. Incidentally it should be noted that the total assessed valuation of property in Barbour County in 1916 was $13,000,000, while five years later the valuation rose to $22,000,000.

So far as his financial means permitted Mr. Simon has contributed generously to matters affecting the general welfare of Philippi and Barbour County. He was one of the contributing stockholders of the old woolen mill, which failed under the first management, but is now one of the live industries of the county. Mr. Simon has never voted any other ticket than republican, and is one of the able and influential workers of the party in the county. He was a delegate to the state convention at Huntington for the naming of supreme judges. Fraternally he has served the chairs in the Knights of Pythias Lodge, is a member of the social branch of the order D. O. K. K., is a member of both branches of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Junior Order United American Mechanics.

In Barbour County November 6, 1889, Mr. Simon married Miss Cora Reed, daughter of Nathan and Sallie Ree. She was born in Barbour County and died June 24, 1907. Her two children are Otto Simon and Helen, the latter the wife of Dellett Lanham. At Oakland, Maryland, October 13, 1909, Mr. Simon married Miss Alta West, a native of Gilmer County, West Virginia, and daughter of S. V. and Hanna (Wiseman) West, being one of their four sons and four daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Simon have one child Paul, now eleven years of age.

CHARLES FLETCHER LUCAS. While several lines of business and industry have claimed his abilities during his passing years. Mr. Lucas would probably classify himself among occupations as a farmer and stockman. From him has proceeded not a little of the enterprise responsible for the development of the commercial interests of Harrison County, particularly Shinnston, of which community he is a native son.

Mr. Lucas was born near Shinnston, June 14, 1868. His paternal grandparents were George R. and Amelia (Rogers) Lucas. His grandfather was born near Baltimore, Maryland, September 26, 1806, and was twelve years of age when his family settled in Harrison County, West Virginia. He became a farmer there, lived a useful life, was highly respected as a citizen, and died December 5, 1892. He married in 1830 Amelia Rogers, and they had a family of three sons and four daughters.

James E. Lucas, father of the Shinnston business man, was born in Harrison County, July 26, 1841, and is now past the age of four score and retired after many years of successful efforts devoted to farming and cattle raising. At one time he was interested in the operation of the flour mill at Shinnston. He served as a teamster in the Union Army during the Civil war. James E. Lucas married for his first wife Minerva Chalfant, who died in 1867. His second wife was Virginia Robinson, but his children were all by his first marriage.

Charles Fletcher Lucas as a boy on the farm attended school regularly, and acquired a substantial training for his career of usefulness. There has probably never been an important length of time in which he has not had an active interest as a farmer and stock raiser. When he was quite a young man he and his father were associated in the operation of the Shinnston Flour Mill, and eventually he became owner of this establishment. In connection with the mill for twenty years he looked after a number of other business affairs. He was financially interested in the Clarksburg Wholesale Company, the Clarksburg Auto Company, the Clarksburg Trust Company, of which he is one of the vice presidents, and is a director of the First National Bank of Shinnston.

Mr. Lucas is a republican, a member of the Methodist Church, and is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner.

May 8, 1902, he married Sarah Marie Fowler, who was born and reared at Pittsburgh, a daughter of Van Buren Fowler. The two sons of Mr. and Mrs. Lucas are William Edward and Van Buren Lucas. Their home is a large and handsome residence, the scene of generous hospitality to the part of its owners.

JOHN ROBERT POLAND is one of the substantial and progressive business men of the City of Martinsburg, Berkeley County. He was born on a farm on Black Oak Bottom bordering the Potomac River, in Allegany County, Maryland, and the date of his nativity was March 25, 1871. He is a son of Guinn and Anna V. (Holt) Poland, both native of Maryland. The latter's grandfather, L. O. Holt, represented Allegany County in the Maryland Legislature and served also as county sheriff. The grandmother of John R. Poland was Ruth Cresap, a daughter of Colonel Cresap, who was the founder of the City of Cumberland, Maryland. In memory of Colonel Cresap the Cresap Family Association has erected a handsome monument in one of the parks of Cumberland, Maryland. Colonel Cresap was a resident of Allegany County, Maryland, at the time of his death. Guinn Poland was born at Dawson, Maryland, in 1844. In his native state he served several years as steward of the Mineral County, West Virginia, Infirmary. Thereafter he established his residence at Keyser, Mineral County, West Virginia, and engaged in the transportation of merchandise between that place and Burlington. He died at Keyser in 1902, at the age of fifty-eight years, and his widow now resides at Clarksburg, this state. Of their two children, John R., of this sketch, is the elder. Bessie Lynn married P. Sonders, and they have two children, Lawrence and Ethel Holt.

John R. Poland attended the public schools at Burlington and thereafter became a clerk in a general store at Elk Garden. He continued his service as a clerk ten years and then engaged in an independent mercantile enterprise. In 1899 he became a merchant in the City of Richmond, Indiana, where he remained until 1902, when he came to Martinsburg, West Virginia, and with a partner established the Perfection Garment Factory. From a small inception the business has developed to one of substantial order, a second factory having been established, in the City of Charles Town, and a retail store, known as the Garment Shop, at Martinsburg.

Mr. Poland served as the first president of the Martinsburg Chamber of Commerce, and he is a former vice president of the local Rotary Club, in both of which progressive organizations he takes deep interest. He cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Harrison, and has continued independent in politics. He served one term as a member of the city council of Martinsburg, is a member of the board of directors of the local Young Men's Christian Association, and he has twice served as vice president of the West Virginia State Sunday School Association, of the executive committee of which he is now a member. Both he and his wife are zealous members of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in their home city. In the Masonic fraternity Mr. Poland's affiliations are with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M.; Lebanon Chapter No. 2, R. A. M.; Neptune Commandery No. 2, Knights Templars; Scottish Rite Lodge of Perfection at Martinsburg; and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Wheeling.

In 1908 Mr. Poland married Miss May Supples, who was born at Baltimore, Maryland, a daughter of Thomas A. and Mary E. Supples. Mr. and Mrs. Poland have three children: John R., Jr., Anna Mary and James Lloyd.

RICHARD WILLIAMS. The coal industry of West Virginia has furnished an opportunity for the achievement of success and position by many men of the younger generation, who have assumed responsibilities formerly assumed and gained only by men many years their senior. It is doubtful, however, if there are many who have accomplished the same length of time what has been achieved by Richard Williams, who has already become a well-known figure in the industry mentioned and who occupies the position of president of the Glogora Coal Company of Huntington.

Mr. Williams was born at Shamokin, Pennsylvania, February 6, 1891, a son of Morris and Jennie (Stager) Williams. His father, now a resident of Overbrook, Pennsylvania, was born in 1855, in Monmouthshire, Wales, and was one year of age when brought to the United States by his parents, the family settling near Hazelton, Pennsylvania, where he was reared. Morris Williams received the equivalent of a college education, studying under a private tutor, and was married at Hazelton, following which event he was the perpetuator of a Wyoming gold mine for a time. Returning to the East, he became president of the Susquehanna Coal Company, residing at Overbrook, a suburb of Philadelphia, whence he directed the policy of this concern as the head of the Pennsylvania Railroad coal interests. Mr. Williams retired in 1918. He is a Presbyterian in religion and for many years has been an elder and member of the board of trustees in the Philadelphia Presbyterian Church. In politics he is a republican, and his fraternal affiliation is with the Masonic order. Mr. Williams married Miss Jennie Stager, who was born in 1863, at Audenried, Pennsylvania, and they became the parents of three children: Margaret Morris, who is the wife of George B. Garrett, a broker of Germantown, Pennsylvania; Richard, of this notice; and Jean Stager, who is unmarried and makes her home with her parents at Overbrook.

Richard Williams attended a private institution of learning, the Lawrenceville School, of Lawrenceville, New Jersey, following which he enrolled as a student at Princeton University and attended that college until through the junior year. By this time he was anxious to enter upon his business career, and accordingly secured employment as a member of the engineer corps of the Susquehanna Coal Company, which position he retained for one year. For the following six months he was in the mechanical engineering department and for one year in the electrical engineering department, and then formed a new connection, going to the Southeast Coal Company as mine superintendent at Seco, Kentucky. He spent one and one-half years with this firm and then went with a selling company, the Middle-West Coal Company, of which he became Western sales manager, with headquarters at Detroit, Michigan. Both of these companies were ones in which Mr. Williams' father was importantly interested.

On May 18, 1917, Mr. Williams enlisted at Philadelphia in the United States Navy, and went to Cape May, where he spent two months, being then transferred to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, where he was commissioned an ensign November 17, 1917. He was then assigned to the cruiser Des Moines, on convoy duty for the remainder of the war, and received his honorable discharge in December, 1918. Like others engaged in the same duty, he had numerous thrilling experiences during his naval duties, but came through all his adventures safely and with a creditable record. Upon his return to civilian life he came to Huntington and established the Glogora Coal Company, which is incorporated under the state laws of West Virginia, and which operates a mine on Beaver Creek, Floyd County, Kentucky, and another on Coal River, Raleigh County, West Virginia, these mines having an approximate capacity of 400,000 tons a year. Mr. Williams, who occupies offices at 704-5-6 First National Bank Building, Huntington, is president and treasurer of this concern, and is likewise vice president of the Northeast Coal Company. He is a young business man of the energetic and result-attaining type, and has the fullest confidence and regard of his associates. In politics he is a republican, but political matters have played only a minor part in his career, and his religious identification is with the Presbyterian Church. He holds membership in the Guyan Country Club of Huntington and the Union League of Philadelphia.

In June, 1919, Mr. Williams was united in marriage at Philadelphia with Miss Louise Brown, daughter of George and Lucy (Buckner) Brown, the latter of whom is a resident of Philadelphia, where Mr. Brown, who was vice president of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal and Iron Company, died. Mrs. Williams is a woman of numerous graces and accomplishments and a graduate of Dana Hall, Wellesley. To Mr. and Mrs. Williams there has come one daughter, Janet, who was born at Philadelphia, July 2, 1920.

WILLIAM FONTAINE ALEXANDER. Educated for the law, William Fontaine Alexander found his early practice only a threshold to a more practical business career, mainly in the field of insurance and banking. He has for many years been an influential citizen of Charles Town and represents one of the historic families in this section of the state.

Mr. Alexander was born at Duffields in Jefferson County, son of Dr. William F. Alexander, born on a farm in Kabletown District in the same county, and grandson of William P. Alexander, a native of Virginia and of Colonial ancestry. William P. Alexander after his marriage settled on a plantation in Kabletown District, this plantation being his wife's inheritance. It was operated with slave labor. The wife of William P. Alexander was Hannah Lee Washington, a daughter of Bushrod Washington (Cunningham), and granddaughter of Corbin and Hannah (Lee) Washington. Hannah Lee was a daughter of Hon. Richard Henry Lee. Corbin Washington was a son of John Augustine Washington, youngest brother of President George Washington.

Dr. William F. Alexander acquired his early education under private tutors, and early took up the study of medicine, entering the University of Pennsylvania, where he graduated after completing his medical course. He then established his home at DuFields in Jefferson County, and practiced successfully there until his death. Death came to him early in his career, at the age of thirty-five. He was the father of four children: Herbert Lee, of Martinsburg; Mary Virginia, of Charles Town, widow of Rev. Dallas Tucker; William Fontaine; and Hannah Washington, wife of Edward Esten Cooke.

William Fontaine Alexander attended private school until he was twelve years of age, then entered the Charles Town Male Academy under Edmund Randolph Tucker, the principal, and when he had completed his course of study there took up the subject of law in the office of Col. Forrest W. Brown. He was admitted to the bar and practiced two years. He was then elected county clerk, and by re-election held that post of duty in the county for twelve consecutive years. After retiring from office Mr. Alexander became a member of the firm of Washington, Alexander & Cooke, proprietors of a general insurance agency. This is one of the leading firms of the kind in the Eastern Panhandle. The members of the firm are also interested in the manufacture and sales distribution of commercial fertilizer. Mr. Alexander besides his active connection with this firm is vice president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Charles Town.

At the age of twenty-seven he married Cecily de Graffenried Woolley. She was born at Lexington, Kentucky, a daughter of Frank W. and Lucy (McCaw) Woolley. They have two children, Cecily Fontaine and Ann Catherine. Mr. Alexander is a vestryman of Zion Episcopal Church and is affiliated with Malta Lodge, F. and A. M.

SAMUEL CLIVE BRYARLY. The Bryarlys have been a family of farmers, landowners and of industry in other lines in Berkeley County for several generations. Samuel C. Bryarly lives at Martinsburg, where for a number of years he has been in the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company.

He was born on a farm located between Darkeville and Tablers Station, in Berkeley County. His great-grandfather, Robert Bryarly, was an early settler in Berkeley County, where he owned a large amount of land, including the present site of Tablers Station. He married Sally Rust. Both were of Irish ancestry, but were members of the English Church.

Thomas Bryarly, grandfather of Samuel C., was born on the Federal Hill farm near Tablers Station, inherited a portion of his father's estate and continued a life-long resident and farmer there. He married Susan Glass, and their seven children were Robert Pressly, Elizabeth, Sally, Thomas, Susan, Annie and Mary Eugenia.

Robert Pressly Bryarly was born in the same locality as his son Samuel C., grew up on the farm, and at the very beginning of the Civil war entered the Confederate army as a member of Company B of the First Virginia Cavalry. He was in the service until severely wounded in the right arm at the battle of Towns Brook, and thereafter was incapacitated for further active duty. After the war he bought a portion of the old homestead, and was busily engaged in its duties until 1890. He then lived for a time in Winchester and Martinsburg, and for ten years was station agent at Inwood. He finally retired on account of ill health and died February 14, 1919. His wife was Cordelia J. Schendel, who was born in Washington County, Maryland, in 1842, daughter of Samuel and Julia Schendel. She died January 17, 1912. The six children of these parents were Thomas Cox, Robert Pressly, Julia Ann, Elizabeth Miller, Mary Louisa and Samuel C.

Samuel Clive Bryarly acquired his first school advantage in the Grange Hall School, later attended school at Martinsburg and Inwood, and as a youth he clerked in a store and assisted in a grain elevator at Inwood. Leaving these occupations, he removed to Pittsburgh in 1910, and for three years was employed in the Pennsylvania Railroad Machine Shops. Leaving Pittsburgh, he returned to Martinsburg, and for three years was with the Auburn Wagon Works and since then has been a machinist with the Baltimore & Ohio Company.

In 1901 Mr. Bryarly married Sabina Lee Graham, who was born at Gerrardstown, Berkeley County. Her great grandfather was a native of England and an early settler in Franklin County, Pennsylvania, where he followed farming. Her grandfather, John Graham, was born in Franklin County, served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, became a building contractor, and some barns and other buildings are still standing in Franklin County that testify to his workmanship. He died there at the age of seventy-nine. John Graham married Sabina Lancaster, who was born in Franklin County, and died there when about eighty years of age. Andrew Maxwell Graham, father of Mrs. Bryarly, was born on a farm in Montgomery Township of Franklin County, March 28, 1828. He was educated in the rural schools, and the Lancaster Normal School, began teaching at the age of eighteen, and in 1862 enlisted as a private in Company F of the Eighth Pennsylvania Infantry. He was in the Army of the Potomac under General Meade and was in nearly all the battles of that army at General Grant's command. He remained until the surrender at Appomattox. For meritorious conduct he was commissioned first lieutenant, and received his honorable discharge with that rank. After the war Lieutenant Graham came to Martinsburg, for several years taught at Gerrardstown and vicinity, and is now living retired at Martinsburg.

December 24, 1861, he married Isabella Brencizen, daughter of William S. and Sarah (Wilson) Brencizen. She was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. On December 24, 1921, Mr. and Mrs. Graham celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage, and both are still in good health and have excellent memories. Mr. and Mrs. Bryarly have three children, named, Robert Pressly, Andrew Clive and Donald Graham.

JOHN BENJAMIN WYATT. Since his admission to the bar in 1910, John Benjamin Wyatt has performed a useful and effective service as a lawyer. He is well established in his profession and in civic affairs at Shinnston, and is a native of Harrison County.

He was born at the Village of Wyatt in Harrison County, January 3, 1886, a son of Zechariah White and Florence Augusta (Portney) Wyatt, and grandson of Russell and Sidney Ann (White) Wyatt. Russell Wyatt was a native of old Virginia, and was of English ancestry. On leaving Virginia he went to Athens County, Ohio, and while there enlisted as a Union soldier in the Seventh Ohio Cavalry. After the war he returned to Greene County, Pennsylvania and lived out his life as a farmer there.

Zechariah White Wyatt was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, December 25, 1846, was reared in his native county and as a young man went to Marion County, West Virginia, where he married Ellen Harvey. She was the mother of four children. Florence Augusta Portney was his second wife. She was born in Harrison County, daughter of Jacob H. Portney, a native of Preston County. By the second marriage there were five children. Zechariah W. Wyatt was a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, and was one of the capable and hard working physicians of Harrison County for many years. The little community where he lived and from which he extended his professional service came to be known as Wyatt. He also lived at Shinnston, and his residence was at that place when he died, January 31, 1907. He was elected and served as a member of the Legislature in 1898, was a republican, a Baptist, was affiliated with the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, and his name and character commanded the highest degree of general esteem.

John Benjamin Wyatt has lived at Shinnston since his father located in that town in 1890. He acquired a common school education there, spent three years in the library department of West Virginia University, and completed his university law course in 1910. After being admitted to the bar Mr. Wyatt practiced three years at Fairmont, and since then has had his office at Shinnston.

John B. Hyatt

Besides looking after his general practice as a lawyer he takes an active part in republican politics, was for one term mayor of Shinnston, and in 1920 was elected to the House of Delegates. Mr. Wyatt is a Master Mason and Knight of Pythias and a member of the Methodist Church.

In 1914 he married Miss Jane Westfall, of Fairmont. They have a son, John Benjamin, Jr.

DANIEL R. WHITTAKER, store manager and purchasing agent for the Crozer Coal & Coke Company at Elkhorn, McDowell County, is one of the efficient and popular executive employes of this important industrial corporation. He was born in Giles County, Virginia, on the 4th of March, 1875, and is a son of George and Matilda (Shimalt) Whittaker, both natives of Virginia and representatives of families there established in an early day. George Whittaker has long held prestige as one of the successful farmers and merchants of Giles County, and is one of the sterling and influential citizens of his community.

In 1896 Daniel R. Whittaker graduated from the high school at Giles, Virginia, and within a short time thereafter he became a clerk in the McQuail general store at Ennis, McDowell County, West Virginia. Later he was made manager of this store, and in 1913 he severed this connection and took the position of manager of the large and well-equipped general store of the Crozer Coal & Coke Company. He has given most effective administration in this position, and the business has been specially successful under his vigorous and progressive management.

Mr. Whittaker is a democrat, he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and he is a Knight Templar Mason, besides being affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

September 17, 1898, recorded the marriage of Mr. Whittaker and Miss Elizabeth Saubers, daughter of Alvin and Lavelett (Miller) Saubers, natives of Virginia, in which state the father became a representative farmer near Parisburg. Mr. and Mrs. Whittaker have one son, Julian, who is married and who is now his father's assistant in the store. Julian Whittaker was a student in the Virginia Military Institute at Staunton at the time when the nation became involved in the World war. He entered the Officers' Training Camp at Camp Lee, Virginia, and had been stationed there about five months when the armistice brought the war to a close.

PHILIP HAGER, state senator from the Fifth District, and proprietor of one of the best mercantile establishments in the county, is one of the leading men of Hamlin, and a natural leader of men. Quiet and unassuming in manner, he is so sincere and thoroughgoing that he gains the confidence of his associates almost without effort, impressing all with whom he comes into contact as being a very safe man. He was born February 23, 1872, a son of Philip and Elizabeth (Dalton) Hager, natives of Boone County, West Virginia, and Taxwell County, Virginia, respectively. The grandfather bore the name of John M. Hager, and the father and great-grandfather bore the name of Philip. They settled on an island near the present site of Logantown, cutting the first timber in that part of West Virginia. The family originated in Virginia, and was established in this country prior to the American Revolution.

The father was a Baptist minister for fifty years, and died February 12, 1917. During his ministry he had churches at points in Southern Ohio, Eastern Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia. During the war between the North and the South he served in Company D, Thirty-sixth Virginia Cavalry, C. S. A., and served for three and one-half years. He was wounded in battle at Bluntsville, Tennessee, and lost some of the bone of his leg as a result of the injury, but recovered the use of that limb. After leaving the service he resumed his ministerial duties.

Senator Hager attended the common schools of Lincoln County. He took a course in civil engineering and surveying, at Columbus, Ohio, under a special instructor, and then followed this work for several years, doing a great deal of land surveying, and acting as county road engineer for Lincoln County from 1909 to 1913, inclusive, and during this period he became interested in the timber and lumber business. Since 1913 he has been occupied with operating sawmills and handling lumber in the southern part of Lincoln County and in Logan County. In May, 1921, he opened a mercantile establishment at Hamlin, in which he is doing a large business. During nearly all of his career he has been a notary public and at one time was secretary of the school board for the Harts Creek District of Lincoln County. In November, 1920, he was elected to the Upper House of the State Assembly, and is gaining considerable prestige in this office.

On July 12, 1894, Mr. Hager married in Lincoln County Sarah A. Ferrell, who died May 10, 1902. She was a daughter of James P. and Almie (Toney) Ferrell, farming people. Senator and Mrs. Hager became the parents of the following children: Madge M., who married R. L. Adkins, a contractor and builder of Lincoln County, was appointed postmistress of Hamlin, and is one of the best officials the city has ever possessed; Pearl married J. A. Vickers, superintendent of the Holden High School of Holden, West Virginia; and Ida G. and Elizabeth Edna are both at home. Senator Hager is an earnest member of the Baptist Church. He is a Chapter and Knight Templar Mason, and also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. For years he has been one of the leading republicans of this section, and he was nominated without opposition and elected by the largest majority ever given a candidate in the Fifth Senatorial District. His election to office on his straight party ticket was but a just reward for his efforts in behalf of his constituents and his energetic actions looking toward the improvement of Lincoln County.

EDGAR B. GIBSON is a superintendent of the Logan Chilton Coal Company on the Guyandotte River near Henlawson in Logan County. Well versed in all the details of mine development and operation, he first became a factor in the mine industry as an electrician and electrical engineer. Practically all his working experience has been with the Leckie interests in West Virginia.

Mr. Gibson was born at Cooper in Mercer County, West Virginia, August 25, 1889, son of William B. and Lou E. (Butterworth) Gibson, the former a native of Washington County, Tennessee, and the latter of Campbell County, Virginia. The mother is still living on the old homestead farm at Watauga, Tennessee. William B. Gibson, who died February 5, 1922, at the age of sixty-four, spent a number of years in the coal mines of the Tug River District of West Virginia, chiefly at Elkhorn, where he was in the service of the Pocahontas Consolidated Fuel Company in all the varied positions from track layer to superintendent. He finally left the mines to return to his farm in Washington County, Tennessee. He was a republican, a Baptist and an Odd Fellow. All of his five sons at some time were connected with the coal mining industry: A. J., now a farmer at Princeton in Mercer County, spent twenty years with the Pocahontas Fuel Company and other mines; C. C. was killed by accident while with the Tidewater Coal and Coke Company as hoisting engineer; C. S., a farmer at Princeton, was formerly associated with the Tidewater Coal Company, Bottom Creek Coal Company and other mines; and M. P., a resident of Princeton.

Edgar B. Gibson attended a seminary near his old home in Washington County, Tennessee. His training in electrical engineering was gained by a practical course of apprenticeship and instruction at the Jeffrey Manufacturing Company's plant in Columbus, Ohio. He has been an electrical engineer for twelve years. His first work was in the mines at Leckie on Tug River in McDowell County as a hoisting engineer. He spent six years at Leckie, and was chief electrician when he left there. His next location was at Alex in Pike County, Kentucky, on the Tug River, where for two years he was electrician and assistant superintendent. For three years he was chief electrician at Fireco in Raleigh County, at the same place during the succeeding year was superintendent of Leckie Mine No. 3. Then, in May, 1921, he came to Logan County for the purpose of opening the Logan Chilton Mine, and all its equipment was installed under his supervision. He also opened mines at Adlex and Leekie No. 3.

In 1915 Mr. Gibson married Viola V. Phipps, daughter of Herbert Phipps, of Sullivan County, Tennessee. Their two children are Helen and Alma. Mrs. Gibson is a Presbyterian. He is a democrat, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Elks.

CLARENCE D. HOWARD, of Cowen, Webster County, has been identified with the lumber business since his early youth, he and his brother, C. T. Howard, being owners of the Smoot Lumber Company, with main office at Cowen. The mills are located at Areola, this county. He is also a director of the First National Bank of Cowen, and is one of the progressive and substantial business men and representative citizens of the county.

Mr. Howard was born in Preston County, West Virginia, September 12, 1865, and is a son of Thomas D. and Mary S. (Holt) Howard, both likewise natives of Preston County, where the respective families were founded in the pioneer days. Thomas D. Howard was educated in the common schools at Independence, Preston County, and at the time of the Civil war he showed his loyalty to the Union cause by enlisting in Company I, Sixth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until the close of the war. After the war he engaged in lumbering operations near Newburg, Preston County, and with this important line of industrial enterprise he continued his association until his death, when his two sons succeeded him, both being still actively identified with the lumber business at the present time. Mr. Howard's lumbering operations included development work in the vicinity of Grafton, Taylor County, and while a resident of that city he served as its mayor. He was an ardent advocate and supporter of the principles of the republican party and was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. Of the three children Clarence D., of this review, is the eldest; Charles T. likewise is engaged in the lumber business; and Nellie is the wife of J. B. Hess, of Cowen.

Clarence D. Howard gained his earlier education in the schools of Taylor County, and for one year was a student in Simpson College at Indianola, Iowa. He became actively associated with the lumber business when he was nineteen years of age, and his career in this line of enterprise has been one of continuous success to the present time.

He and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Cowen, and he is serving on its official board. He is affiliated with Glade Lodge No. 205, Knights of Pythias, at Cowen, and is one of the leaders in the councils and campaign activities of the republican party in Webster County. He was an alternate delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago when Hon. Charles E. Hughes, the present national secretary of state, was nominated for the presidency.

August 12, 1896, recorded the marriage of Mr. Howard and Miss Andree Ford, of Taylor County, she being a graduate of the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, of which school Mr. Howard has been a trustee for a number of years. Mr. and Mrs. Howard became the parents of five children: Edna, who since her graduation at the West Virginia Wesleyan College, her mother's alma mater, has been a teacher in the Cowen High School; Agnes died at the age of seventeen years; Helen is, in 1922, a student in Wesleyan College; Harry F. is attending the Staunton Military Academy at Staunton, Virginia, and Elsie is attending the public schools of Cowen.

GEORGE E. SUTHERLAND, manager of the Kanawha Land Company, is a member of a family that has played a conspicuous part in the development of Charleston and the adjacent Kanawha Valley for eighty years. He represents the first native generation of the family, both his father and grandfather, each of whom bore the Christian name James, having been born in Scotland.

James Sutherland, Sr., brought his family to the United States about 1840 and settled on the Kanawha River, two miles above Charleston, in Kanawha County. He established the first foundry in that region, at what is now Kanawha City. Its chief product was furnaces and other machinery, and especial equipment for the salt mines in that vicinity. Salt mining was then the foremost industry of the valley. James Sutherland, Jr., who was brought to America in infancy, after reaching manhood engaged in similar enterprises. On one occasion, while drilling for salt at Big Chimney on the Elk River, he struck oil. This was one of the first recorded discoveries of oil in West Virginia.

George E. Sutherland, who was born and reared in Charleston, acquiring his education in the schools of that city, has found many practical enterprises in which to engage his time and talents. For several years past he has been in the general insurance business as a member of the firm Gallagher & Sutherland, conducting one of the largest general insurance agencies in the state. He is also vice president of the Kanawha County Bank and is vice president and general manager of the Standard Brick & Supply Company, brick manufacturers and dealers in building supplies.

The Kanawha Land Company, of which he is secretary and manager and of which former Governor William A. MacCorkle is president, has been the corporation through which the primary impulse was directed for the development of South Charleston. This development since the beginning of the World war has resulted in one of the most prosperous and attractive industrial cities of West Virginia. The leading institution of South Charleston is the naval armor plant of the Government.

Mr. Sutherland has been active in the firm of Gallagher & Sutherland since it was established in 1912, and prior to that for about ten years was trust officer of the Kanawha Banking & Trust Company. He is a former director of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, served several years as a member of the city council, and is chairman of the board of deacons of the First Presbyterian Church. Mr. Sutherland is married and has four children, named Margaret, Edwin, William A. and Anne Elizabeth.

LEONIDAS HAMMAN KELLY, former United States district attorney for the Southern District of West Virginia, has been engaged in his profession nearly thirty years, and his experience as a lawyer has always been accompanied with such forcefulness of character that account for his leadership in the bar of the state. His career as a lawyer has been steady and of substantial merit, whether as an attorney for an individual client or as prosecutor for the Federal Government. He is careful, clear-headed, systematic and thorough in his work, prepares his cases carefully and without undue haste, and has a record of many most effective and vigorous prosecutions. His history as a citizen and as a lawyer is a record of manliness in every detail.

Mr. Kelly was born at Sutton in Braxton County, January 28, 1871, son of John McH. and Alzira Virginia (Hamman) Kelly. He acquired his early education in the public schools of his native county, and in 1887, at the age of sixteen, he was at Charleston as mailing and banking page of the Senate. In 1893 he graduated LL. B. from Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Virginia, and several of his classmates are now prominent in Charleston, including Capt. S. B. Avis, Herbert Fitzpatrick, Jake Fisher and Wells Goodykoontz. Mr. Kelly was deputy circuit and county clerk of Braxton County, was mayor of Sutton, and for four years was prosecuting attorney, at which time he exhibited his qualifications as a strong and vigorous administrator of this office. He has been a member of the law firm Hines & Kelly at Sutton since 1894. He was mayor of Sutton in 1896, and his term as prosecuting attorney was from 1897 to 1900, inclusive.

In 1916 Mr. Kelly was appointed assistant United States attorney for the Southern District of West Virginia, and in the official work of that position he moved his headquarters to Charleston, though he retained his residence at Sutton. In 1917, by appointment of President Wilson, he was advanced to the office of United States district attorney, and served from October, 1917, until January 31, 1922. Mr.

THOMAS LAZZELL II.

MARY PRUDENCE POPE LAZZELL

C. C. Suzzell

Rufus F. Lazzell.

Kelly in 1914 became secretary of the Democratic State Executive Committee of West Virginia. He was grand master workman of the Ancient Order of United Workmen in 1910-12, and is now a member of the law committee of the Supreme Lodge.

Prior to the conclusion of his term as district attorney, Mr. Kelly was appointed attorney for the Law and Order League of Kanawha County, and from January 1, 1922, has devoted practically his entire time to this office. The Law and Order League of Kanawha County was organized in Charleston in the fall of 1921 for the purpose of combatting and prosecuting crime and disorder of every nature in the county. It was brought into being through the necessities of the times, and was organized and is sponsored by the best and most substantial citizens. It was his highly specialized attainments as district attorney that caused Mr. Kelly to be considered as the one best fitted for the work of attorney and prosecutor for the organization. He has always been outspoken in his advocacy of civic righteousness and the maintenance of law and order. Commenting upon his selection, John B. White, superintendent of the Law and Order League, said: "Mr. Kelly has been a vigorous prosecutor and is regarded as one of the ablest lawyers of this part of the state. He is a man of wonderful energy and one whose integrity is unquestionable. Since Mr. Kelly came to this city several years ago his entire time has been occupied with the arduous duties of the United States district attorney's office, and as a result he is not identified with any particular interests or class in Kanawha County and is on this account particularly acceptable to those citizens of Kanawha County desiring a vigorous enforcement of the laws without fear or favor. His long and varied experience as prosecuting officer both as prosecuting attorney of Braxton County and then as assistant district attorney and district attorney for the United States for five years render him especially well qualified for this position as chief counsel for the league in co-operation with the county and state authorities."

Mr. Kelly is a member of the Presbyterian Church and affiliated with the Masonic Order and Knights of Pythias. March 3, 1897, he married Miss Bertha Gorrell, of Sutton, who died in 1904. On June 19, 1907, he married Nellie Eddy, of Buckhannon, West Virginia. Mr. Kelly has the following named children: Robert G., born April 30, 1889, attended West Virginia University, and also Washington Lee University, spent two years in France and is now king his second year of the law course in the University of West Virginia; Janet, born April 10, 1900, graduated on Goucher College at Baltimore, in 1922; Virginia, born March 5, 1910, now a student in the Public Schools of Charleston, to which city Mr. Kelly removed in November, 1921.

RUFUS FENTON LAZZELL. The Lazzell family in Monongalia County dates back to the period immediately following the close of the Revolutionary war. The first Lazzell is an itinerant Methodist minister as well as a farmer. Agriculture and stock raising have claimed the energies of all the subsequent generations, though several of the name have achieved prominence in the professions and public service.

The name is of French origin. Geoffrey de Lascelles lived in the twelfth century, left his home in Normandy and went to live in England, and was probably the ancestor of the English branch of the family.

In 1647 John Lasell came to Hingham, Massachusetts, on Lincolnshire, England, and he and his wife, Elizabeth Gates, are the ancestors of the Lazzell family in America. The name appears in fourteen different forms in spelling.

Thomas Lazzell, the ancestor of the family in West Virginia, was born in Massachusetts in 1753 or 1754 and married there about 1775 Hannah Beck, who was also born in Massachusetts, in 1757. They settled in Cass District, Monongalia County, at a time when Indians were hostile, and when every condition was that of the savage frontier. He was tireless and devoted as a Methodist minister, and performed his work in the midst of obstacles and dangers, and became widely known through all the Scottish settlements of the Upper Monongahela Valley.

Their son, Thomas Lazzell, II, was born in Cass District in 1787 and died in 1867, at the age of eighty. He was a man of great energy, and was known for his wonderful leadership and versatility. He made a success of farming, stock raising and merchandising, and came to own 1,800 acres of land, which later was discovered to be underlaid with heavy veins of coal. He was a class leader and steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he was a whig and later a republican, voting for Lincoln in 1860. In 1810 he married Rebecca Bowlby, daughter of James Bowlby and Lydia (Carhart) Bowlby, who were also pioneers in Cass District, coming from Sussex County, New Jersey.

One of the ten children of Thomas and Rebecca Lazzell was Cornelius Carhart, who was born in Cass District in 1829, and died on the farm where he was born in 1908. Farming and stock raising claimed the energies of his active years. He was a man who believed in and demonstrated in a broad sense the philosophy of economy, and was known for his generosity, especially to those less fortunate than himself. In politics he was a republican, and he was an active member of the Methodist Church.

In 1857 he married Mary Prudence Pope, who was born in Monongalia County in 1841. She was the daughter of Colmore and Elizabeth (McVicker) Pope, and a descendant of Lieut.-Col. Nathaniel Pope, one of the first colonists of Virginia. Mrs. Lazzell died in 1891. She was a woman of marked ability and refinement. Their home was the center of hospitality in that community. The children of their marriage were: Rebecca E., deceased, wife of John W. Hall; Colmore Thomas, of Morgantown, who married Etta Ridgway; Carrie C., wife of James A. Comley, of Morgantown; Rufus F.; Ulysses Grant, who lives on the old homestead in Cass District, and who married Maude Jones; Mollie J., wife of Ulysses J. Courtney, of Morgantown; Flora C., who died in 1893, at the age of twenty-one; Nora Vella, wife of A. W. Bowlby, of Morgantown; Myrtle Matilda, wife of W. I. Reed, of Morgantown; Nettie Blanche, an artist, who now lives at Provincetown, Massachusetts; and Bessie Belle, wife of Arlie Ridgway, of Morgantown.

Rufus Fenton Lazzell represents the fourth generation of the family in West Virginia. He was born on the old homestead in Cass District, near Madsville, February 20, 1864. He is of pure Colonial descent, having ancestors among the officers and soldiers of all the early wars. As a boy he attended the public free schools and for a time he was a student at West Virginia University, where he showed great ability in mathematics, but as time went on his love for the freedom and independence of country life led him back to his father's farm before graduating. But soon his mathematical mind was working on real problems which paved the way for the future. The traits that have always distinguished the family are strong characteristics in Mr. Lazzell: Tenacity, perseverance, temperance and an unlimited energy, which have led to his success. On the other hand, we find in him a keen sense for beauty, a refinement, and a love for home. As a young man he engaged independently in the livestock business and farming, and he has never departed altogether from agricultural pursuits. He still does an extensive business in the raising, buying and selling of livestock.

In 1897 he took up dealing in coal properties, buying acreage coal land. In the meantime his interests have accumulated so as to justify his friends and associates in referring to him as a capitalist. Since 1900, Mr. Lazzell has had his home in Morgantown, where he owns a beautiful residence and other city property.

December 20, 1913, he married Wenona Elizabeth Friend, who was born in Birmingham, Alabama, December 5, 1890. She is the daughter of Lemuel Elsworth and Lulu Gertrude (Michael) Friend, both of whom were born and reared in Garrett County, Maryland, but now of Morgantown. Mrs. Lazzell is of pre-Revolutionary ancestry, being a descendant of Capt. Andrew Friend, who fought in both the French and Indian and Revolutionary wars.

Mr. and Mrs. Lazzell have one son, Rufus Fenton, Junior, born July 6, 1915. Mr. Lazzell is a director in the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Morgantown, a post he has held for over fifteen years. He is prominent among the livestock men of West Virginia and Southwestern Pennsylvania and a member of the Farmers' Association of West Virginia. His business acumen has made him one of the strong, influential and reliable men of Morgantown. His public spirit and unselfish interests in all that pertains to the welfare of the community have always been prominent characteristics.

THE OHIO VALLEY ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY operates the city street car lines in Huntington and interurban connections with the surrounding territory. The total mileage operated by the company is forty-six miles.

Very excellent street car service is provided on the lines, which extend from the heart of the city over the principal thoroughfares to all out-lying points, and the cars operated are of a commodious, modern type, being all steel in construction. Much of the system is double tracked. A schedule of frequent headway of cars is maintained so as to convenience the needs of the traveling public on the various lines.

This company also operates an interurban system which extends west along the Ohio River through the cities of Ceredo and Kenova, West Virginia, and Catlettsburg and Ashland, Kentucky, a distance of sixteen miles. Through this populous territory is maintained a service which has a headway of fifteen minutes between cars.

The Ohio Valley Electric Railway Company operates also an electric line from Coal Grove, Ohio, through Ironton to Hanging Rock, Ohio, and connection is made with this Ohio line by ferry at Ashland, Kentucky.

Electric current is purchased by the Ohio Valley Electric Railway Company from the Consolidated Light, Heat and Power Company, which furnishes electric light and power in Cabell and Wayne counties in West Virginia. The Consolidated Light, Heat and Power Company also sells at wholesale electric current to the Boyd County Electric Company, which serves Catlettsburg and Ashland, Kentucky, and the Ironton Electric Company, which serves Ironton, Ohio. The central power station of the Consolidated Light, Heat and Power Company is in Kenova, West Virginia.

In the very rapid industrial growth in all of this territory these lighting companies have been a most potent factor, as the rates for current are very equitable to every class of service. Practically all industrial plants in this territory use electric current for power, and the availability of ample electric current at reasonable rates has been instrumental in the low cost production of manufacturing plants in this territory as compared with other sections.

HARMAN FRANK GROVES. The superintendent of schools of Grant County, Harman Frank Groves, represents one of the old and honored families of this region of West Virginia, his remote ancestor and the family founder here being his great-grandfather, Noah Groves. Noah Groves traced his genealogy back to the Saxons, where the name seems to have started with the Groffs, then was corrupted or changed to Graves, again changed to Grove, and finally to its present spelling, Groves. They have been strictly farmers and rural people through the generations to the present, and have invariably followed rural pursuits until the present generation of John Groves, some of whose children have departed from family traditions and customs and allied themselves with professional vocations.

Harman Frank Groves of this review was born in the "Ridge country," six miles northwest of Petersburg, Grant County, and there resided until nearly reaching his majority. His grandfather, Alex Groves, was born in 1814, in Grant County, West Virginia, and followed farming throughout his career in Grant County, where he was a pioneer. His industry gained him independent means, and in his daily life he so comforted himself as to gain the confidence and esteem of his associates. He died suddenly when sixty-five years of age. Politically he was a republican. He and his worthy wife were the parents of the following children: Ellen, who died of diphtheria when six years of age; Ashford, a farmer in the "Ridge" section of Grant County; George, who spent his life in the locality of his birth and died there; Joseph, who spent his life as a stockman and shipper, and died from an injury received while following his daily occupations; Abel, who was a farmer in the "Ridge" locality and there died; John, the father of Harman F. Groves, and Annie, who married C. H. Feaster and died in Grant County.

John Groves was born near the foothills of the Alleghany Mountains in Grant County, March 4, 1865, and has spent his entire life within a few miles of his birth place. He is a product of the country school, and during his active years he applied himself industriously to the cultivation of his acres, but is now in retirement and a resident of Petersburg. He has demonstrated his good citizenship in a number of ways and has acquired local influence which he exerts in behalf of those he deem worthy of support, and in politics is a staunch republican. He has made no public avowal of membership in any religious body and has no fraternal affiliations. Mr. Groves married Miss Mahala Jane Phares, who was born near Spruce Mountain in Pendleton County, West Virginia, daughter of William Phares and his wife, who had been a Miss Mallow. The Mallows were an old-time pioneer family of Pendleton County, where members of the family had resided since the days of Indian warfare. To Mr. and Mrs. Groves there were born the following children: Myrtle Alice, who is the wife of C. O. Turner, of Forman, Grant County; Harman Frank, of this review; Bertha Susan, the wife of Earl Trenton, of Keyser, West Virginia; Nellie, who married H. C. Trenton, of Cumberland, Maryland; Clarence B., who is identified with the "Ridge" community as a farmer; Gracie, who was the wife of Jesse Idleman of Scher, West Virginia; Thomas, who is engaged in agricultural operations on the old home place; Edith, wife of Olin Weese, now a resident farmer of Monticello, Indiana; and Johnnie, who died in infancy.

Harman Frank Groves was born August 4, 1888, and secured his education in the country schools and a normal school in Grant County. He was only seventeen years of age when he was given his first charge as a teacher, the Burgess School, and for five years thereafter he continued in rural school work. He then entered the Shepherdstown State Normal School, where he took one year's work, but the constant confinement and too close application to his studies caused his health to fail, and he was forced to spend two years in recuperating his strength. At this time Mr. Groves was elected county superintendent of schools, and while engaged in the duties of the office, traveling about the county and being in the open air, where he encountered new scenes and had new experiences, he recovered normal health, and still continues his supervision work over Grant County. He has not given up the idea of the completion of a college course for himself, as he is carrying on a correspondence course, is a student at St. John's Academy, and is a teacher in its normal training course. He will have attained his ambition and hold a diploma of the Shepherdstown Normal School by 1924.

Mr. Groves was elected county superintendent to complete the unexpired term of Superintendent Slusher in 1911. He was elected to the office in 1914, and again in 1918, his present term expiring in July, 1923. His administration has been characterized by an intense interest in the progress and effectiveness of the public schools, in the training of teachers for better service and creating a higher spirit of citizenship for the county than it has shown heretofore. While he was filling the unexpired term of his predecessor he carried through the latter's plans and policies, which included the building of country school libraries and the improvement of teachers' institutes. His own plans included increasing the efficiency of the teaching force through such means of professional growth as organized reading circle work, and the reading of professional magazines and books and papers on educational subjects. Also to change the character of the local teachers' institute work in order to provide for the presentation of some of the most vital local phases of the educational question, such as improving school property with regard to the character and type of buildings, better school attendance, increased efficiency on the part of teachers and a closer intimacy and more vital relationship between the public school and the home.

As proof of the practicability of his plans the results worked out show the organizations are formed and doing systematic reading circle work; that a large number of up-to-date and approved school buildings have been erected; that the character of institute work is attracting a wide interest among the teachers; that educational meetings, with special speakers, are arranged and carried out from year to year; that unified action on the part of the school boards has been brought about through county board conferences, and that many teachers have been encouraged to enroll in accredited schools and colleges.

At this time the main objective of Mr. Groves as county superintendent of schools is the establishment of a permanent teachers' training school at the county seat, one within easy reach of the teachers of Grant, Pendleton, Hardy and Hampshire counties. A temporary school of this nature is already in operation and is accomplishing gratifying results. Also, it is his ambition to equip teachers, first, professionally for their work as such; second, to enable them to meet the legal requirements of school legislation; and, last but not least, to increase the efficiency of citizenship as a means of the solution of the problems of our complex rural social life. All of this tends to prepare the county for rural social consolidation, the realization of which is in the not far distant future.

In the matter of interesting pupils of the county in farm club work Mr. Groves has not failed to give encouragement and support to the establishment of many girls' and boys' clubs, and, likewise, community clubs for parents. While this work is directed by the county agricultural agent, it could not have accomplished the results shown to date without the cooperation of the school superintendent. Grant County has already sent prize-winning pupils to the prize-winners' course at West Virginia University, Morgantown, and the interest in scientific farming and in the raising of live stock has been wonderfully stimulated thereby. Mr. Groves was the prime mover in the establishment of the farm bureau in Grant County. In company with the state organizer of this movement he drove all over the county, encouraging the farmers everywhere to subscribe to the movement.

Mr. Groves' active work as a citizen and community man has not stopped with his labors in behalf of the schools. He is identified with church and Sabbath school work, for five years has been president of the Grant County Sunday School Association, and has assisted actively in building up the work of the Sunday school here to the point where it is about to be a "front line" county, lacking only, at this time, eight organized classes in as many additional schools. In politics Mr. Groves is a republican by birth, training and conviction, but has not engaged in professional politics. He has been elected superintendent of schools three times on his personal merits, and supports every good measure and movement for the upbuilding of civic, moral and educational life.

On December 25, 1916, Mr. Groves married at Riverton, West Virginia, Miss Catherine Harman, who was born February 21, 1891, a daughter of John A. and Izurina (Dove) Harman, natives of Pendleton County. Mr. Harman is a merchant and farmer of Riverton, and represents a pioneer family of Pendleton County. His children are: Bessie, the wife of Curtis Hammer, of Cumberland, Maryland; Fred D., of Elkins, West Virginia; Catherine, who is now Mrs. Groves; Dr. Robert, who graduated from Maryland University in 1922 and is now engaged in the practice of medicine, and Curtis, who is interested in the mercantile business with his father. Mr. and Mrs. Groves are the parents of one son, John Harman, born April 13, 1918.

DR. BENJAMIN HARRISON SWINT is primarily a surgeon, a young man with unusual abilities and talents in that field, Fellow of the American College of Surgeons and is surgeon-in-chief at St. Francis Hospital.

A native of West Virginia, he was born in Randolph County in 1888, son of Peter and Caroline (Winkler) Swint. His grandfather and earlier ancestors were natives of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg. Peter Swint was an early settler in Randolph County, and is now living at Weston. A brother of Doctor Swint is C. P. Swint, a leading lawyer in Weston and a man of considerable prominence in public and political affairs. Another brother is a distinguished Catholic prelate, the Rt. Rev. J. J. Swint, of Weston, who formerly conducted missions in various section of the state and who is now Bishop of Wheeling.

Benjamin Harrison Swint had his common school education, attended Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, and acquired his medical training in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, where he graduated in 1911. He did three years' of post-graduate work in St. Joseph's Hospital, Baltimore, and in the meantime, in 1913, established himself in practice at Charleston. It can hardly be said that he has been in the general practice of medicine at all, since practically from the first his abilities have been widely recognized as a surgeon. His membership in the American College of Surgeons is a token of distinctive work in surgery, since fellowship in this organization is a very high professional distinction. His fellowship was conferred upon him at Montreal in October, 1920.

Doctor Swint was absent from Charleston for a period of service during the World war. He took training in the Medical Corps Training Camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, during 1918, and for eight months was on duty in France, going overseas with Surgical Group No. 3, and later was with the surgical staff at base hospital No. 119. He held rank of first lieutenant, and received his honorable discharge in July, 1919.

The St. Francis Hospital at Charleston, of which Doctor Swint is chief of the surgical service, was founded by the Sisters of St. Francis, but is now operated under the auspices of the Sisters of St. Joseph. It was opened January 1, 1914, with a capacity of twenty beds. In 1916 a modern addition was built at a cost of about $80,000, increasing the capacity to about sixty-five beds. A further addition soon to be completed will give the hospital a capacity of 110 beds. Ever since this hospital was opened in the old Laidley residence on Laidley Street it has been taxed to full capacity, with more applications than could be accommodated.

Doctor Swint is a member of the Phi Chi fraternity, member of the County, State and American Medical Associations, and is a prominent member of the Knights of Columbus, at the present time being head of the local assembly of the Fourth Degree. He is also district chairman for Southern West Virginia of the National Catholic Welfare Council.

He married Miss Marcellene Smith, of Charleston. Their three children are Benjamin H., Jr., Caroline Marie and Bernice.

VICTOR N. GRIFFITH. This country is entering upon one of the most wonderful periods of its existence, and during the next quarter of a century history is going to be made of a surprising character by the young men who during the titanic war that convulsed the world were developed in every way and prepared for the years of civic usefulness to come. Some of them have not yet found their right place in life since their return home, but a few have, and are already showing of what they are capable. One of these young Americans of the finest type of citizenship is Victor N. Griffith, sheriff of Boone County, and a forceful factor in the life of Madison.

Victor N. Griffith was born at Griffithville, Lincoln County, West Virginia, October 28, 1893, a son of T. A. and Martha A. (Midkitt) Griffith, both of whom were born in West Virginia. The father is a farmer, and very active in public matters, having served for some time as a justice of the peace, and otherwise rendered good service to his community. He maintains membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belongs to the Baptist Church, in the good work of which he is very active. The Griffith family is one of the old ones of the South, and Griffithville was named in its honor. Sheriff Griffith's paternal grandfather was born in Virginia, and came of English and Scotch ancestry. The maternal grandfather was killed while serving as a soldier during the war between the two sections of the country.

Growing up at Griffithville, Sheriff Griffith attended its common schools, and subsequently took a course in the Madison Normal School and one in the Broadus School at Barboursville. When he was twenty-two years old he took a position as bookkeeper in a general store, and held it until he was appointed deputy sheriff of Boone County in 1917, which office he resigned in July, 1918, to go into the army under the selective draft. After receiving his honorable discharge, following the signing of the armistice, he went with the Crane Company as bookkeeper at Van, West Virginia, leaving that concern in 1919 to become assistant cashier of the Boone County Bank at Madison. In the fall of 1920 he was elected sheriff of the county, and assumed the duties of his office January 1, 1921. He is making a splendid record as sheriff, and both as an official and personally he stands well with everybody.

In 1915 Sheriff Griffith married at Charleston, West Virginia, Miss Jeanne Workman, a daughter of John L. and Harriet (White) Workman, both natives of West Virginia. There are no children. Fraternally Sheriff Griffith is a Scottish Rite and Shriner Mason, an Odd Fellow and Knight of Pythias. He maintains membership with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Sheriff Griffith is an earnest young man who fears nothing when in the pursuit of his duty, and yet is so square that he insists on each man in his charge receiving fair treatment no matter what his crime may be. He is a young man who knows how to secure from others a whole-hearted cooperation, and he and his deputies are proving to the people of Boone County that they are perfectly capable of maintaining order, and determined to faithfully enforce the law. Such a man as Sheriff Griffith will go far, and it is safe to predict that his progress will be attended with a loyal public service.

EVERETT E. WHITE, cashier of the Madison National Bank and one of the most substantial men of Boone County, is recognized as a leading factor in the business life of Madison. He is a man whose sound good sense and excellent judgment are at the service of his fellow citizens, and who, notwithstanding the fact that his time is much occupied with business cares, is never too busy to give heed to civic matters, in which he has always been interested.

The birth of Everett E. White took place at Gordon, Boone County, West Virginia, September 28, 1881, and he is a son of Asa and Amanda (Brown) White, natives of West Virginia. For the past thirty-five years Asa White has been postmaster of Gordon, where he is conducting a mercantile business, and he has always taken an active part in local affairs, being particularly zealous in behalf of the public schools.

After completing his studies in the Gordon common schools Everett E. White attended Marshall College, Huntington, West Virginia, for twelve weeks. After attaining his majority he secured an appointment as bookkeeper for White Brothers, in which his father was interested. This concern handled lumber at Pond, West Virginia, and Mr. Everett E. White remained with it for about a year, and then became manager and part owner of Sidney White & Company, proprietors of a general store at Van, West Virginia, and discharged his duties there for five years. His ambition, however, had been to enter the banking business, and in 1907, when he was offered a position as bookkeeper in the Madison National Bank, he accepted it and moved to Madison, which has since continued to be his place of residence. Within a year he was made assistant cashier, and in 1916 was elected cashier, and is still holding that office. This is one of the sound banking institutions of the state, with a capital of $50,000 and a surplus of $75,000. During the late war Mr. White practically carried on the business, as his younger associates were all in the service, but in spite of the added burdens he was glad to be able to release the men to the country. Like his father, he is a firm friend of the public school system, and has long been a member of the School Board and served as its president for four years. Another movement which has his hearty and effective support is that looking toward the building and improvement of the roads, not only of his immediate community but all over the country, and his work in this connection received proper recognition in his appointment by the governor as a delegate to the National Good Roads Convention held at Phoenix, Arizona, in 1922.

In 1912 Mr. White married at Madison, West Virginia, Lula Burdette, a daughter of William and Virginia (Chittum) Burdette, born in Putnam County, West Virginia. For a number of years Mr. Burdette was a farmer. During the war between the North and the South he served in the Confederate Army. Mr. and Mrs. White have two children, Everett E., Junior, and Helen. Mr. White maintains membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is a Scottish Rite and Shriner Mason, and also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Both in his business affairs and personal character Mr. White measures up to the highest ideals of American citizenship, and his community has benefited greatly through his constructive ideas with reference to its public affairs.

MANDERVILLE T. MILLER. From the records of the human race handed down from the earliest days it is gathered that the clergy have given more or less of their time and attention to educating the masses. In fact, for centuries all of the learning was confined to the priesthood. In more recent times the custom has prevailed of selecting clergymen to hold chairs in institutions of learning, as well as to give individual instruction, but Boone County has shown a further appreciation of the profession by electing as its county superintendent Rev. Manderville T. Miller, a minister of the Baptist denomination and an educator of long standing in this locality.

The birth of Manderville T. Miller took place at Low Gap, Boone County, West Virginia, December 31, 1879, and he is a son of Silvanus and Susan (Pauley) Miller, both natives of Virginia and members of old families of the South. The Millers are of Holland Dutch descent and the Pauleys of French origin. Silvanus Miller was a farmer, and a man who always took a dominating part in public affairs. He served as constable and member of the school board for a number of years, and was equally prominent in the Baptist Church of Turtle Creek, West Virginia, which he long served as a deacon. His death occurred at Low Gap in April, 1906.

Manderville T. Miller is a self-made man, and one who has worked hard to secure the education he so desired. After he completed his studies in the common schools of Low Gap he attended the summer normal school at Madison, and in 1896 secured a certificate to teach. From then on he has been an educator, and has continued to be a student, taking different courses by correspondence with the Concord State Normal School at Athens, West Virginia. All of his educational work has been done in Boone County, and in 1918 he was elected to his present office for a four-year term. He has thirty graded schools and 150 teachers under his supervision, and these schools have from two to four rooms. As before stated, Mr. Miller is a minister of the Baptist Church, and has charges at Seth, Whitesville and Cholyan, West Virginia, where he is doing mission field work and accomplishing remarkable results. He is an eloquent preacher, and his earnest sincerity is very convincing whether his subject be a religious or a secular one.

In 1899 Mr. Miller married at Turtle Creek, West Virginia, Flora Roberts, a daughter of John and Martha Roberts, farming people who both live in West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have nine children, namely: Orin, Mollie, May, Norma, Opal, Ruby, Haddon, Frank and Albert Sidney. Of these children Orin married Ivy McClure of Lincoln County, West Virginia. They are living at Madison, where he is assistant station agent for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. Mr. Miller has been a life-long member of the Baptist Church. He belongs to Odell Lodge, No. 115, A. F. and A. M., of Madison. It would be difficult to speak too highly of Mr. Miller's work and the good influence he exerts on the life of his community. A born educator, he possesses the faculty of not only imparting information, but also of stimulating a desire for further knowledge, and he is also able to secure the hearty cooperation of his teachers in his efforts to further advance the standards of the Boone County schools and the rating of the pupils. As a clergyman he is equally zealous, and in these two lines of endeavor is rendering Madison and Boone County a most effective service.

JOSEPH M. HOPKINS, president of the Bank of Danville and a dealer in timber and coal lands and general real estate, is one of the leading business men of Boone County, and one who has had a constructive influence upon its times. While he has achieved a material success, his accomplishments in the way of good citizenship and the discharge of personal obligations are equally admirable.

The birth of Joseph M. Hopkins took place in Boone County, West Virginia, January 9, 1856, and he is a son of Henry H. and Julia A. (Hill) Hopkins, both of whom are natives of Virginia. During the war between the North and the South he served for a few months. For a number of years he was a farmer and merchant, and he always took an active part in public affairs, and belonged to the School Board. The Hopkins family is one of the old and honored ones of the South, and sprung from Scotch-Irish stock.

Joseph M. Hopkins attended the district schools, one year at Saint Albans, and four months at Emory and Henry College. His days of usefulness, however, began when he was only twelve years old, when he commenced work on the farm. Losing his father when only eighteen years old, the responsibilities of manhood came early to him, and he was kept busy looking after the homestead for a time. In 1879 he went into the timber business, and for seventeen years was engaged in logging. In 1896 he was elected to the office of county clerk, and held it for twelve years, or until 1908. During all of this time he was interested in the lumbering business, and began to handle coal lands in 1903. Since 1908 he has been concentrating on the handling of timber and coal lands and general real estate, but is also interested in farming, which calling he has never entirely abandoned, always owning one or more farms. In 1914 he and his son-in-law, H. R. Izard, and others, organized the Bank of Danville, of which he was made president. Under his conservative and wise management, this bank has been developed into one of the sound and reliable institutions of the county, and he still continues its chief executive.

In 1877 Mr. Hopkins married in Boone County Dora E. Tollings, a daughter of Joel E. and Martha (Kesinger) Tollings, both of whom were born in Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins became the parents of eight children, as follows: T. J., who married Alice Thompson, of Danville, as three children, Gladys, Ralph and Louise; Martha L., who married H. R. Izard, cashier of the Bank of Danville, as four children, Ralph Stead, Martha Hopkins, Joseph and Jean; Clarence C., who married Mattie Fulton, of Danville, has two children, Louise and Harold; Ella M., who married A. B. Chambers, general merchant of Danville, has no children, Julia and Dora Joe; Eva G., who married W. O. Smith, of Spencer, West Virginia; and Luther, Joseph H. and Lee S., all of whom are unmarried. Luther Hopkins volunteered for service in May, 1917, and went into the infantry. After a period of service on the Mexican border he was transferred to the First Division and sent overseas, where he had twenty-two months of active service. He was in the battle of Cantigny, where he was wounded May 30, 1918. He was at St. Mihiel in September and the Argonne offensive in October, being wounded October 9, in Argonne. He arrived in the United States April 14, 1918, and was honorably discharged at Camp Leake, Maryland, on April 25, 1919.

Mrs. Joseph M. Hopkins is a zealous member of the Baptist Church, but Mr. Hopkins is not connected with any religious organization. He is a Blue Lodge Mason, and belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins have reared a fine family and have every reason to be proud of their children, all of whom have justified their parents' faith in them.

CHARLES F. ZIMMERMAN is a young businessman of Charleston who has enjoyed a remarkable rise in finance and affairs within a comparatively few years.

He was born and reared in Benton County, Tennessee, and was educated in the public schools and in the Southern Normal College at Bowling Green, Kentucky. Before reaching his majority he was an office employe of the Simmons Hardware Company at St. Louis, and from there took charge of the Hattiesburg Ice & Coal Company at Hattiesburg, Mississippi.

Mr. Zimmerman came to Charleston in 1907. This city has been his home and the scene of his increasing activities for fifteen years. For a time he continued his profession as an auditor and accountant, and later became interested in and for eight years was manager of the Fleetwood Hotel. He then bought the Beckley Hotel at Beckley, West Virginia, which he operated from 1916 to 1921. In 1918 he also opened the Lincoln Hotel at Charleston, and is still owner of that popular place.

Perhaps his most distinctive success has been as owner and operator of a chain of cigar stores, now three in number. The first was opened at 711 State Street November 1, 1916. In connection there is a barber shop and billiard room. The second store, located in the Arcade, opposite the post office, was opened March 26, 1918, and a pool and billiard room is operated in connection with this place. The third and the culminating achievement of Mr. Zimmerman in this line is the shop and store opened in October, 1921, in the Oberlan Building at 911 Quarrier Street. Probably no cigar store in the country has finer and more elaborate furniture, equipment and fixtures than this. Adjoining is a modern billiard room. The Oberlan Building was built by Samuel Oberlan particularly for Mr. Zimmerman's business and according to the latter's designs and plans. Mr. Zimmerman is lessee of the entire building and has his business offices on the third floor. It is a three-story modern commercial structure, the two upper floors being devoted to business offices, all of which are occupied. The building was completed in October, 1921. Mr. Zimmerman is also the lessee and has full control of the new Boyd Building, a modern three story building on Summers Street, at the corner of Fifth Street, which was completed early in 1922. The first story of this building has five stores, with forty office rooms on the two upper floors. In addition to the business activities already mentioned Mr. Zimmerman has been an active dealer in city real estate, confining his operations largely to residential property within the city limits. He has given substantial evidence of his confidence in the growth of the city by numerous investments in vacant property, which he would immediately improve by erecting thereon a substantial residence. In this manner he has built nearly fifty homes in Charleston, and through his enterprise and industry has contributed in no small way towards the material upbuilding of the city. Late in 1921 Mr. Zimmerman completed a handsome new modern residence for his own home at 506 Nancy Street in the East End.

He is an influential member of the chamber of commerce and Kiwanis Club, and also belongs to the Elks. Mr. Zimmerman married Miss Bertha A. Hill, of Kanawha County, West Virginia. Their two children are Anna Marie and Frederick Judson.

WILLIAM OSCAR DAVIS has been a pharmacist for over a quarter of a century, and for the greater part of that time has been in the drug business at Philippi. His liberality as a citizen and his work in behalf of community advancement are facts as well known and appreciated as his business success.

Mr. Davis was born near Uhrichsville, Tuscarawas County, Ohio, September 6, 1872. Remotely he is of wealthy ancestry. His grandfather, Gan Davis, spent his life as a farmer in Tuscarawas County and is buried at Freed Springs Church in that county. His children were Alexander, a resident of Uhrichsville, and a veteran Union soldier;

John W.; Jane, wife of Nathan Smith and a resident of Uhrichsville; Lou, who died at Uhrichsville, wife of J. Dutton; Sophia, who died in Colorado Springs, Colorado, was the wife of Charles Long; Marshall, of Uhrichsville; James, a paint contractor at Canton, Ohio; and Margaret, widow of Charles Gintz and living at Uhrichsville.

John W. Davis, father of William Oscar Davis, was born in Tuscarawas County and married Catherine J. Dutton, a native of the same county. Her father was William Dutton, who married Miss Burriss. John W. Davis was a farmer in Tuscarawas County, in later years became a carpenter, and was a mechanic in the railroad shops at Denison, Ohio, when he was accidentally killed February 20, 1907, at the age of about sixty-three. His widow died at Canton, Ohio, in 1914. Their children were: Ed. N.; Frank E.; James O.; William Oscar; Jessie Mabel, wife of C. W. Lykes, of Canton, Ohio; Verna V., wife of Fred Hall, of Houston, Texas; and John B., of Houston.

William Oscar Davis lived on his father's farm until he was about twelve years of age. He learned his first spelling and arithmetic lessons in a country school, later attended the Uhrichsville High School, and in 1894 entered the College of Pharmacy at Scio, Ohio. This school was subsequently moved to Pittsburgh and is now the Pittsburgh College of Pharmacy. After completing his course Mr. Davis entered actively upon the practice of pharmacy. In the meantime during vacations, he had worked in drug stores, and what he calls "the hardest job he ever had" was selling subscription books and during one summer he was with a crew of young fellows making and selling views. After completing his course of pharmacy he was employed by the Graham Drug Company at Zanesville, Ohio, for one year, for two years was prescription clerk with a firm at Mannington, West Virginia, and in March, 1899, came to Philippi and succeeded to the drug business of D. F. Everett, for over twenty years he has conducted a high class drug store and pharmacy, and while that is a business demanding close personal attention he has not neglected some of the duties of citizenship.

He was for several terms a member of the City Council, and was on the council when the sewerage system was provided and some of the street paving done. He has been ready with his interest and aid in other community interests, notably when Broadus College required extra funds to carry on its work of higher education. He is a member of the Kiwanis Club, is a Scottish Rite Mason. He has done all the work in Philippi Lodge of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand, and he is a member of the Methodist Church, while Mrs. Davis is a Presbyterian.

At Uhrichsville, Ohio, December 27, 1897, Mr. Davis married Miss Jessie B. Adrian, a native of the same city and daughter of William and Agnes (Sterling) Adrian. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have three children: Adrian F., now associated with his father in business, who passed the examination before the draft board, but was not called to service before the armistice was signed; Margaret Elizabeth, member of the class of 1923 in the Philippi High School; and Curtis Virginia, in the grammar school.

HERMAN J. POLING. While he has carried more or less active business responsibilities, Herman J. Poling is a lawyer, and his hard-working abilities have won him a deservedly high place in that exacting profession in his home county of Barbour. He is a member of the Poling family that has been identified with the farming and civic interests of the county for a number of generations.

He was born in Glade District, Barbour County, April 26, 1885. His grandfather was Jonas Poling, a farmer in that locality, and his father, William J. Poling, was born on the same homestead in Glade District. As his boyhood coincided with the period of the Civil war he was denied any liberal educational advantages. His life has been spent in farming, and for the most part he has derived his living from live stock. He has served as trustee of the White Oak School District. William J. Poling married Amanda Jane Shaffer, who was born in Cove District of Barbour County, one of the three sons and five daughters of John C. Shaffer, a native of the same locality and a farmer there. The children of William Poling and wife are: Herman J.; Lora and Nora, two sisters, the former deceased; Nettie; and Dottie, wife of Camden Mouser, of Philippi district.

Herman J. Poling acquired a country school education and subsequently attended the Wesleyan College at Buchanan and the Fairmont Normal School, where he graduated in 1909. He taught his first term of school when seventeen years of age, resumed that work after graduating from the Normal School, and was principal of the Academy High School. In the spring of 1910 he entered the law department of the University of West Virginia finishing his law course in 1912. After graduating and being admitted to the bar he located at Durbin, where he taught his last term of school in the country and also did some law practice. He then removed his offices to Philippi, and has been engaged in a growing general practice. Among his interests outside the fixture lines of his profession he is a partner with H. S. Haller in the Bould Coal Company, and they bought the property and developed the mine, equipped it with electrical machinery. The mine was opened in February, 1917, and was a constant tribute through the period of the World war. Mr. Poling is director and attorney for the Peoples Bank of Philippi, is director, secretary, treasurer and attorney for the T. Gart Valley Water Company, is a stockholder in the Federal Carbonic Gas Company of Fairmont, and is owner of considerable real estate in Philippi and some farmland devoted to the grazing industry along the Belington Philippi Road in Barker District.

In politics Mr. Poling is a democrat, casting his first vote for Mr. Wilson in 1912. He has interested himself in several campaigns, is congressional committeeman for the Second Congressional District, and has represented his party in conferences and conventions. He is a member of the Kiwanis Club at Philippi, is a past noble grand of the Lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of the Encampment, is affiliated with the Maabees, the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Junior Order United American Mechanics. He was reared in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. In May, 1919, Mr. Poling married Miss Mary J. Poling, a native of the Valley District of Barbour County and daughter of Remus Poling. Her father, who married a Miss Ware, is a farmer at Boulder. Mrs. Poling is one of a large family of three sons and eight daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Poling have a son, Herman J., Jr., born May 19, 1921.

HERBERT M. CRAWFORD. One of the well known miners and operators of Barbour County is Herbert M. Crawford, a resident of Philippi and president of the Crawford Coal Company. He is a civil and mining engineer by profession, but for a dozen years or more his time has been fully taken up with the practical operations of coal production.

Mr. Crawford was born at Kittanning in Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, June 12, 1867. His family came to America from Scotland, and some four or five generations have lived in Pennsylvania. His grandfather, James Crawford, was a farmer in Armstrong County, and married Rebecca Peoples, whose father was an officer in the American Revolution. They had four sons and three daughters. The sons were, James, Samuel M., Jehu and Robert, the last three being soldiers in the Union Army in the Civil war. The daughters were: Amanda, who married William Brown; Susan, who married Silas Ride; and Adaline, who married William Morrison.

Samuel M. Crawford, father of Herbert, is a native of Armstrong County, received a common school education and early in life entered the Union Army. He was in the Army of the Potomac, was wounded at Gettysburg but subsequently rejoined his command and continued service until the end. After his military experience he became a contractor of painting and carpenter work, and followed that vocation until he retired. He is now living at Aspinwall, Pennsylvania. He married Rosanna Crum whose father, Capt. Daniel Crum, was a Union soldier.

Glenn Ray Edgar.

and was killed in the battle of the Wilderness. The children of Samuel M. Crawford and wife are: Herbert Maurice; Mrs. Pearl Beatty, of Aspinwall; and Muriel, wife of Dr. F. C. Robinson, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania.

Herbert M. Crawford grew up at Kittanning, graduated from high school at the age of eighteen, and subsequently entered Lehigh University, where he took the civil engineering course and graduated in 1895. For five years he was an engineer on the engineering staff of the Frick Coal and Coke Company. He then opened an engineering office at Uniontown, known as the Fayette Engineering Company, of which he was senior engineer. His first work in West Virginia was as mining engineer, representative of the Fayette Engineering Company of Uniontown in the construction of the Midland Coal Company's plant in Barbour County. During this work he became interested in this mineral region, investing in some coal lands in the Tygart Valley. He first came to Philippi in 1905, and in 1908 began the development of his property. His company owns the Luella Mine at Arden and the Black Jo Mine at Clements. During the World war these mines were running at capacity, with a force of from 100 to 150 men. He is also vice president of the First National Bank of Philippi and one of its directors.

During the war period he was county chairman of the Red Cross, and had charge of one of the Liberty Loan drives, putting it "over the top." He has been a member of the Philippi City Council, being on the board when the electric light plant was installed. Mr. Crawford is president of the Kiwanis Club of Philippi, is a Lodge and Chapter Mason, and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

At Indiana, Pennsylvania, June 25, 1901, Mr. Crawford married Miss Luella Smith, a native of Indiana County and daughter of William and Sarah Smith, who had four daughters and one son. Mrs. Crawford has two sisters living: Mattie, wife of George Barron, an attorney at Greensburg, Pennsylvania; and Mrs. Elizabeth Wachob, of Wilkinsburg, Pennsylvania. Three daughters and a son have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Crawford: Emily Catherine is a student in the Chevy Chase School at Washington, District of Columbia; Ruth and Josephine are students in the Philippi High School; and Herbert Maurice, Jr., is attending grammar school.

EVERETT A. HUNT. Teaching his first school at the age of twenty, his early success led Everett A. Hunt to realize that he had found that vocation in which he could do the most good in the world, and his career since then has been one of steadily increasing service in what is perhaps the greatest of all callings. He is serving his second term as county superintendent of schools of Barbour County.

Mr. Hunt was born March 17, 1878, in Barker District, between Belington and Philippi. His father, John F. Hunt, was born in Pennsylvania, and early in the Civil war period came to West Virginia and joined the Union Army at Grafton as a volunteer. He was with Company H of the Sixth West Virginia Infantry, and was in service throughout the remainder of the war. He was once or twice captured, but escaped each time and was never wounded. For a number of years he was deeply interested in the work of the Grand Army of the Republic. His life after the war was devoted to farming and teaching school. While his early advantages were not above those afforded by the common schools, he proved a very good and effective teacher. He died in 1897, at the age of seventy-five. John F. Hunt married Phebe Minear, who died in 1917. Her father, Adam Minear, was a veteran of the War of 1812, was an early settler in Iowa, and from that state came to West Virginia and spent the remainder of his life as a farmer. The five children of John F. Hunt and wife were: Charlotte, now Mrs. Francis Matillo, of Oil City, Pennsylvania; Dora B., deceased wife of Michael Guye; Everett Answorth; Clinton D., a lumberman in Tennessee; and Ella, deceased wife of Hickman Wright.

Everett A. Hunt grew up on the farm where he was born, received a primary education in the county schools, and attended several summer normals. His first school as a teacher was the Montrose School in Randolph County. For several years he alternated between teaching and attending school. In 1906 he graduated from the Fairmont State Normal School, and subsequently pursued special courses in education and kindred subjects in the University of West Virginia at Morgantown. He did his last work as a student at the State University in 1910.

Mr. Hunt was for three years principal of the Second Ward School of Fairmont, this now being known as the Miller School. On leaving that city he was chosen principal of the schools of Watson, West Virginia, where he remained three years, for one year was connected with the schools at Elkins, and then, returning to Barbour County, was principal of the grammar school at Belington for four years.

Mr. Hunt has his home at Belington, and while still principal of the school there he entered the race as candidate for the nomination of county superintendent of schools. He won the nomination in the primaries by a vote of three to one, and on the republican ticket was elected in the fall of 1914 over his democratic opponent by a good majority. He entered upon his official duty in July, 1915, as successor of C. O. Marsh. In 1918 he received the nomination without opposition in his own party and was elected at the general election by a majority of 500.

His administration of the county schools during the past eight years has struck a high mark in educational improvement. He has used his influence to secure better school architecture, modern heating and ventilating systems, the installation of sanitary chemical closets, has organized and systematized reading circles in every district, has established the school system on a sound financial basis, and has organized in different parts of the county the "Four-H" (head, hand, heart and health) clubs. As a co-ordinate factor in the improvement of school standards and the improvement of rural life in general he has organized parents-teachers associations and civic clubs.

During the World war Mr. Hunt was county food administrator. He helped organize the Federal Land Bank for the farmers of Barbour County, and is a director and one of the appraisers in the institution, which has been instrumental in distributing about $75,000 on long time loans among the farmers. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Rebekahs, the Modern Woodmen of America, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been superintendent of the Sunday school at Belington, and is teacher-training superintendent in the county Sunday school organization.

In Randolph County, December 13, 1900, Mr. Hunt married Miss Bertha L. Bennett, who was born in Barbour County in January, 1882, oldest of the two daughters and five sons of Richard M. and Catherine (Wright) Bennett. Her mother was a daughter of William Wright. Mrs. Hunt, who finished her education in the public schools, is the mother of six children: Gertrude Theresa, wife of Melville Golden, of Belington; Ophelia Belle, Mrs. Warren Phillips, of Belington; while the younger children, still in the home circle, are named Alston Everett, Venola Marguerite, Circe Eurydice and Theodore Adonis.

GLENN R. EDGAR has been a resident of West Virginia since 1905 and of Charleston since 1907. He has figured prominently in local business affairs and is founder and now gives most of his time to the Nu-Way Company, a Charleston concern with all the equipment and facilities for first class service in cleaning, dyeing, pressing and the general maintenance of clothing.

Mr. Edgar was born at Nankin, Ashland County, Ohio, in 1882, son of W. D. and Mary (Steinmetz) Edgar, who are still living in Ohio. His father is of Scotch-Irish and his mother of German ancestry. Glenn R. Edgar was reared and attended school at Nankin. As a youth he entered the service of the Cleveland Provision Company at Lorain, Ohio, and being promoted was transferred to the company's Pittsburgh district and later to Wheeling, in 1905. In 1907 he was assigned the duty of opening a branch office of the company in Charleston, and was put in charge of the Charleston District. Mr. Edgar continued with the Cleveland Provision Company until 1909, when he formed an association with E. C. Bauer and organized and incorporated the Bauer Meat & Fish Company. Mr. Edgar was active in this partnership for several years, and still has his financial interests there. His active time is now devoted to the Nu-Way Company, which he founded and the business of which is dyeing, cleaning and pressing men's and women's clothing. The business office and show room is at 706 State Street, while the main cleaning and dyeing plant is in a separate building in another part of the city. This is one of the most modern and complete establishments of its kind in West Virginia, and is thoroughly equipped with machinery and skilled assistants for all branches of the industry. Through the enterprise and business ability of Mr. Edgar this is an establishment that has achieved a notable success.

Mr. Edgar was one of the charter members and for four years secretary of the Charleston Rotary Club, being the first to hold that office. He is a member of the chamber of commerce, a director in the Y. M. C. A., a member of the Boy Scout executive committee, an Elk, a Knight of Pythias, a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, and a member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church. He was honored by being placed in charge of the Fifth Annual Roll Call of the Charleston Chapter of the American Red Cross, and under his direction the campaign was planned and carried out in Charleston in November, 1921. He is credited with being the first person in Charleston to make an investigation of the workings of the "Community Chest" as applicable to Charleston's institutions and givers of funds to maintain its institutions, thus doing away with the monotony of drives and tag days throughout the year for Charleston.

Mr. Edgar married Miss Bertha Fruth, of a prominent Charleston family. They have one daughter, Mary Emma.

HUGH S. BYRER is a member of the Philippi bar, an expert title lawyer, and has done a great deal of professional business with the coal interests of the state. His grandfather and father were both men of prominence in Barbour County, and the name is therefore one of long and honorable standing here.

His grandfather was David Frederick Byrer, who was born in Uniontown, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, and from there came to West Virginia. He was in the tanning business at Philippi, his old tanyard being located on Main Street. He built and operated it long before the Civil war, and he lived out his life in that city, where he died in 1899, at the age of seventy-four. David F. Byrer was a Union man in sentiment, and after the close of the war became interested in the success of the republican party. He was a Methodist, a pioneer in building up the organization of that church at Philippi, and was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Mary Lewis, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, who survived him for a number of years. Their children were: Frederick Samuel, Arabella, wife of John C. Mayer, of Terra Alta, West Virginia; John, who died unmarried; Emma, who died as the wife of Dr. R. B. Rhoderick; and Charles Marshall, who spent his life at Philippi, where he died in 1916.

Frederick Samuel Byrer, father of the Philippi lawyer, was born in that city May 25, 1848. His early youth was spent in the vicinity of his father's tanyard, and he supplemented his public school education with a course in a commercial school at Pittsburgh. As a young man he was a merchant at Philippi, and he continued in that business uninterrupted until his death on August 29, 1911. He was not a citizen who sought the honors of politics, was rather modest and retiring, but was active in the Methodist Church and its Sunday school. He was a republican and for many years affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was probably the first in Barbour County to engage in the business of leasing coal lands to prospective operators.

Frederick S. Byrer married Isabella Woods. Her father was the late distinguished citizen and able jurist and lawyer, Judge Samuel Woods. Isabella was born at Philippi, August 15, 1852, and survives her husband. Her oldest son, Harry Hopkins Byrer, is a lawyer at Martinsburg, West Virginia, is former assistant United States attorney of the Northern District of West Virginia, and now a member of the law firm of Walker, Kilmer and Byrer. Joseph Woods, the second son, is secretary and treasurer of the Tri-State Surety Company at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The last son is Hugh S., and the only daughter is Margaret Collins, wife of Frank F. Collins, of Beaver, Pennsylvania.

Hugh S. Byrer, who is a native of Philippi, attended the public schools there, graduated in 1903 from the West Virginia Conference Seminary at Buckhannon, and in 1906 was given his LL. B. degree by the University of West Virginia. In the same year he was admitted to the bar at Philippi, but he soon located at Huntington, where he practiced law until the early spring of 1917, when he returned to his old home. While in Huntington he was for two years in the coal fields of Northeastern Kentucky, abstracting titles to coal properties in behalf of the Beaver Creek Consolidated Coal Company. That service was a valuable schooling to him in the matter of real estate titles.

Mr. Byrer in politics differs from his father and has always voted as a democrat. He was the democratic candidate in the Thirteenth Senatorial District for the State Senate in 1920. He has been active in several campaigns. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and has done much work in the Sunday school. He is affiliated with Huntington Lodge of the Elks.

At Harrisonburg, Virginia, February 16, 1921, Mr. Byrer married Miss Elizabeth Rothwell Ott, a native of that locality, where she finished her high school education. Her parents were Frank Campbell and Mary (Boyd) Ott, also natives of that section of Virginia, farming people. Mrs. Byrer, who is the oldest of a family of two sons and two daughters, is the mother of one son, Frederick Ott Byrer, born January 16, 1922.

ARTHUR F. BENNETT, former sheriff of Barbour County and now deputy fish and game protector for the Second District, is one of the best known of the younger men of Philippi, where he has performed good and efficient service in several different capacities.

He was born near Belington in Barker District of Barbour County, April 11, 1884. His grandparents were Laban and Sarah (Keller) Bennett. Laban Bennett was also a native of Barbour County and died during the Civil war when his sons were all too young for service in the Confederate Army, where their sympathies lay. Jacob J. Bennett, father of Arthur F., was nine years of age when his father died, and he spent his life as a farmer. He died in 1913, at the age of fifty-four. He married Mary Shingleton, daughter of Jonathan and Nancy (Yeager) Shingleton. Her father was a farmer and died while a Union soldier. Mary, his only child, was born after his death, and she grew up in the home of her stepfather, John Anderson, secured a free school education and was married to Jacob J. Bennett in 1881. She became the mother of five sons and six daughters: Ida, wife of M. L. Weese, of Meridan, Barbour County; Arthur F.; William Floyd, of Barbour County; James F., of Parkersburg; Sarah Ellen, wife of Corder Weese, of Barbour County; Talbott F., of Augusta, Georgia; Susan, wife of Owen Day, of Barbour County; Viola, Mrs. William Stalnaker, of Barbour County; Porter L., of Elkins, West Virginia; Hazel and Masel, who still live with their mother on the farm.

Arthur F. Bennett was reared in Glade District of Barbour County, acquired a public school education, and with this education he began teaching and taught six terms of country school. His first term was in Hunters Forks School and his last in Mud Run in Glade District. During vacation he worked on the farm, and he has never entirely separated himself from farming interests and owns a farm today.

Mr. Bennett was strongly inclined to take up and folthe profession of law. A good opportunity to acquaint himself with the practical side of the legal profession and acquire knowledge at the same time came when he became employed in the Belington office of the well known law firm of Ware and Viquesney at Philippi. He acted in behalf of the firm, handling some of the work required by their clients in Belington, and turning over matters of more importance to the head office. He read law there, and afterward read with Mr. Ware at Philippi. While a law student he was agent for several fire insurance companies, and soon afterward accepted the invitation of his friends to make the race before the primaries for the nomination for sheriff. He was successful over three competitors, and in the following November he defeated his democratic opponent and succeeded William B. Corder in the office. At that time he was the youngest sheriff Barbour County ever had. He proved himself an able officer, and his administration during four years was all that could be expected.

After retiring from the office of sheriff Mr. Bennett engaged in the real estate and coal business at Philippi, and in September, 1921, accepted appointment under the Forest, Game and Fish Department of West Virginia as deputy protector of the Second District, comprising the counties of Barbour, Taylor, Preston, Marion, Monongalia, Harrison, Doddridge and Ritchie.

In the neighborhood where he was reared Mr. Bennett married, April 15, 1906, Miss Cleo Booth, who was born and reared in the same locality and was educated in the country schools. Her parents were Jeremiah and Rebecca Poling of Barker District. She was born March 2, 1886, and is the youngest of three children, the other two being Lloyd J., a farmer and country merchant in Glade District, and Otis, who married Stephen Fitzwater, of Belington.

Mr. and Mrs. Bennett had one child, a beautiful daughter named Opal Lillie, who was born February 11, 1907, and died December 22, 1917. Her funeral was preached by Rev. G. S. Kanleiter on the day before Christmas. Externally Mr. Bennett is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and a member of the D. O. K. K., is a member of the Pythian Sisters, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Rebekahs, the Junior Order United American Mechanics, Knights of the Macabees and Woodmen of the World. He is one of the trustees in the United Brethren Church, and in politics is a republican. During the war was a member of the local Legal Advisory Board.

ALBERT GALLATIN CHRISLIP. An ambition to be a merchant was the leading motive in the early career of Mr. Chrislip. Having no capital but what he could earn, he studied, taught school and clerked until the day of realization came when he could get into business for himself. In the first years of service he is the oldest merchant of Philippi, and is one of the very successful and substantial citizens of that community.

His family name involves an interesting story of his original German ancestor. At the close of the thirty years' war in Germany, known as the war of extinction, after which that country was left practically desolate, a lonely boy was found in an old oven and the king of the province was asked to name the child. He called it "Christus," meaning Christ love. After coming to manhood his youth came to America and settled in Pennsylvania, establishing his home near Carlisle in the Cumberland Valley. The family name has since undergone a change of form, and a number of branches of the descendants of the original settler have become scattered over the Allegheny region and further west.

The grandfather of the Philippi merchant was Abram Chrislip, who, accompanied by two brothers, Isaac and Daniel, settled in Barbour County and were successful farmers near Elk City. Abram Chrislip married Amanda Patton, and they are buried in the grave-yard near the Little Village of Elk City. Of their children Ervin was the best child; Eliza lives at Elk City; Elmore Lee lives with his older brother; Elizabeth is the wife of Albert Reeder, of Carthage, Illinois; and Julia, married Alpheus Corder and died at Carthage, Illinois.

Ervin Chrislip was born near Elk City and spent his life there on a farm. He was a Confederate soldier, going through the war without injury. He died in April, 1919, at the age of eighty-five. His wife, who died in March, 1874, when about fifty years of age, was Mary Daniels. Her father, Joseph Daniels, was a pioneer in this region of West Virginia, his home being near Elk City, and he died during the Civil war. He came here from Augusta County, Virginia. At one time he was elected a member of the Legislature in old Virginia, and attended the legislative sessions, journeyed to and from Richmond on horseback. Ervin Chrislip and wife had the following children: William L., a merchant of Philippi; Albert Gallatin; Edmund H., who died, leaving a family, at Elk City; Emma, wife of Jacob Rogers, of Philippi; Abram, a graduate of Columbia University, New York, and an educator living at Berkeley, California; and Bessie, wife of Lawrence Mcvee, of Elk City.

Albert Gallatin Chrislip was born near Elk City, one of the old villages of Barbour County, on August 20, 1859. During his youth he attended a brief term of instruction in the country school each winter, and the rest of the time he worked on the farm. At the age of twenty-two he began teaching, and taught in the country for two winters. In 1882 he came to Philippi, and after taking a course in the secret school of Professor Cornwell, taught in the public schools at Philippi for two years. For another year he was a deputy in the office of County Clerk Luther C. Elliott, one of the good old citizens of Barbour County, long since passed away. About that time came the opportunity to get experience in the line which he had determined to follow permanently, and he became a clerk in the store of Joe H. Glascock, this being then the largest general store at Philippi. Two years later he started in business for himself as an implement dealer, and he brought to Philippi the first improved farm machinery offered for sale here. About the same time he became a representative of a fertilizer manufacturing concern, and it is claimed that Mr. Chrislip sold the first stock of fertilizer in Barbour County. This business brought him in direct touch with farmers, and he was soon marketing for his customers large quantities of raw wool. But his business expanded step by step, and later he added a stock of groceries and finally merged all his departments into one large general merchandise business on Main Street now known as the Farmers Supply Store, which runs an annual aggregate of sales totaling $500,000. He erected his business house on Main Street, one of the modern structures in the town, and also owns one of the beautiful and attractive residences of the city.

In the line of public duty Mr. Chrislip responded several times to election as a member of the City Council. At that time plans were being made for some of the public improvements which have since been completed. Mr. Chrislip for many years was an active democrat, but with passing years he has cut away from partisan animosities and regarded himself as strictly independent. Since the age of fourteen he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternally he is a past noble grand of the Lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows and one of the oldest members of that fraternity at Philippi, also belongs to the Emancipation and is a member of the Kiwanis Club.

In Taylor County, October 28, 1898, he married Miss Ella Nuzum, daughter of Allen Nuzum, Boothsville, that county, where she was born and reared on a farm. Mrs. Chrislip was one of a family of two sons and four daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Chrislip have four talented children. Lillian Nuzum Chrislip, the oldest, graduated from Broadus College of Philippi, and in 1922 graduated from the Boston Conservatory of Music. John Howard, the second child, is a graduate of the Philippi High School and of Broadus College, and is now taking a course in electrical engineering. The two younger children are Allen Rockwell, a high school boy, and Charles Woodrow.

EDGAR H. WATSON. In a busy and purposeful life of more than threescore and ten, Edgar H. Watson has measured up to the responsibilities of manhood whether as a home maker, citizen or in his private industry and business. He retired from his farm several years ago and has since resided in Philippi, where he is well and popularly known.

This branch of the Watson family has been in West Virginia for at least 125 years. Several generations of them lived in Preston County, and Edgar H. Watson is a native of that county, as was also his father, Rawley Watson, who grew up in Valley District. Rawley Watson devoted all his best years to his farm between Masontown and Reedsville, and was never attracted into any form of public service. He was a Methodist and a republican. Rawley Watson, who died in 1890, survived by several years his wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Ann Whipp. Her father, Hezekiah Whipp, moved out of Frederick County, Virginia, to Ohio just before the Civil war, and spent his active life four miles from Middletown, Butler County, Ohio. Rawley Watson and wife reared the following children: Julia R., who married William F. Menear and died at Kingwood; Sanford, who was a Union soldier and later a farmer near Masontown; George, also a Union soldier, who spent his civil life in Preston County and is buried at Masontown; Daniel, who followed the trade of painter and paper hanger, was a farmer, and is now president of the Reedsville Bank at Reedsville, where he resides; Edgar H.; Maxwell, a farmer at Masontown; Orville, a farmer at Reedsville; and Masou, who was a merchant and postmaster of Reedsville when he died.

Edgar H. Watson was born November 30, 1849. He was about twelve years of age when the Civil war broke out, and consequently his education terminated about that time. He learned the trade of blacksmith under E. J. Miller at Terra Alta, and for fifteen years followed the trade at Flemington. When he abandoned his shop he bought a farm in Barbour County, on Stewarts Run, and to this place he devoted his best energies from 1888 to 1917. In the latter year he moved to his town home at Philippi, but he still oversees his farm and looks after some other business interests.

Mr. Watson is a republican, and in 1872 cast his first vote for General Grant, voted for Rutherford B. Hayes in 1876 and for Gen. James A. Garfield in 1880, and has voted for every republican presidential nominee since then. While living on his farm he was president one term of the Board of Education of Elk District.

In Taylor County, April 26, 1884, Mr. Watson married Mrs. Julia R. Fleming, widow of Goff J. Fleming and daughter of H. W. LaFollette, who came to Taylor County from Eastern Virginia a few months after the outbreak of the Civil war. He died at the home of Mrs. Watson in Barbour County. His wife was Amy McKee. Mrs. Watson was the oldest of four children, the others being Felicia A., who died at Philippi, wife of James Woodford; L. M. LaFollette, former state auditor of West Virginia and a resident of Charleston; and Eleri B., who died in Lewis County, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Watson have four children. Hazel B. is the wife of Arch McCoy, of Belington; Nellie B. lives at Philippi; Herman B. is assistant cashier of the Citizens National Bank of Philippi; and the youngest child is Miss Mattie B.

FREDERICK M. EXLINE. Through the industrious application of his own talents Frederick M. Exline has achieved a position of credit and influence in the City of Charleston. He came here practically a stranger when a boy, for a number of years was active in railroad service, is now cashier of the Security Bank & Trust Company and a leader in the progressive younger element of the city.

Mr. Exline was born in 1894 at Findlay, Ohio, where he was reared and received his public school education. He was fifteen years old when in 1909 he came to Charleston. His first work here was driving an automobile for Senator William E. Chilton. Leaving the senator's service after about two years, he was first employed in a station service at Charleston for the Kanawha & Michigan Railroad as yard clerk, and subsequently became station agent. The only break in the continuity of his service in business at Charleston was a period he spent in California, being traffic manager at Sacramento for the Union Oil Company about five months. After returning from California Mr. Exline became assistant credit man with the firm of Lewis, Hubbard & Company, wholesale grocers, and subsequently was assistant manager of the brokerage offices of Terry, Dabney and Herscher, leaving that position to become assistant chief clerk in the office of Assistant General Passenger Agent J. F. Youse.

Mr. Exline entered the Kanawha National Bank in June 1917, and, in August, 1918, became cashier of the Glenwood Bank on the West Side. On January 1, 1921, when the Glenwood Bank was succeeded by the new Security Bank & Trust Company, Mr. Exline became cashier and active manager of that prosperous institution.

The Security Bank & Trust Company in March, 1921, moved to its splendid new bank building at the corner of Bigley Avenue and Charleston Street, a modern two-story structure, the banking rooms being equipped with every feature and convenience for carrying on its rapidly expanding business. It is one of the most popular banks in the city and serves adequately and efficiently the banking need of the prosperous and rapidly growing West Side section. Its capital stock is $100,000. The president of the bank is O. P. Payne, whose career as a Charleston citizen is sketched elsewhere.

Mr. Exline is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, a Knight of Pythias and a member of the Charleston Kiwanis Club and John Bream Memorial Presbyterian Church. He married Miss Kate Adams, and they have a son, Frederic Adams Exline, and a daughter, Barbara Morland Exline.

CHARLES R. MITCHELL. In Charles R. Mitchell the people of Boone County have one of the most efficient and dependable circuit clerks to hold this office, and because of his characteristics he is recognized as one of the leading men of this region. Nature has fitted him for leadership, for he is one ready and capable of taking the initiative in everything, and he is also able to carry out to a successful conclusion whatever he undertakes.

Mr. Mitchell was born in Boone County, West Virginia, August 23, 1876, a son of Joseph S. and Roxey (Pauley) Mitchell, both natives of West Virginia and farming people. During the war between the two sections of the country the father served as a member of the home guard. His father was a Virginian, of French descent. According to the family tradition Charles R. Mitchell's great-grandfather belonged to the French contingent which came to this country during the American Revolution under the leadership of Lafayette, and who, being impressed with the country, remained here after the close of the war, settling permanently in Virginia.

Like so many of the prominent men of Boone County, Mr. Mitchell has devoted considerable time to educational work, for which he prepared himself at the normal school at Madison, after he had completed his common school training. Securing his teacher's certificate, he began teaching, and taught in the county for ten years. During that time he studied the jewelry business, and about 1906 embarked in it at Danville, where he conducted the best and most complete jewelry establishment, outside of Huntington, in this part of the state. In 1914 he was elected to the office of clerk of the Circuit Court, sold his business, assumed the duties of his office. At the expiration of his first term he succeeded himself, being re-elected in 1920. He has been a member of the Teachers' Examining Board of Boone County, and for some time has been a member of the Town Council of Danville, where he has long maintained his residence. He is one of the dominant republicans of the county, and has always run for office on the straight party ticket.

In 1917 Mr. Mitchell married in Boone County Miss Martha Tawney, a daughter of James M. and Elizabeth (Chambers) Tawney, natives of West Virginia, and also farming people. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell have three children: Theodore, Hattie and Eva Estell. The Missionary Baptist Church holds Mr. Mitchell's membership, and he is zealous in its behalf. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Mitchell's influence is felt in every line at Danville and all over the county, and it is always exerted for constructive purposes. A man of keen discernment and high ideals, he has long sought to advance his home community and county, and been willing to make personal sacrifices in order to accomplish his purpose. Such men as he are a valuable adjunct to any locality in which they labor, and Danville is proud of him and what he has been able to accomplish for his fellow citizens.

J. M. Eglar

ROBERT WRISTON, M. D. The career of Doctor Wriston as a physician and surgeon began at Beckley in 1906. He is one of the very accomplished professional men of Raleigh County, and has been very active in all that concerns his profession and the general welfare and advancement of the community.

Doctor Wriston was born August 23, 1879, at Kincaid, in Fayette County, West Virginia, son of I. G. and Alice (Stanley) Wriston, natives of this state. His grandfather, Caleb Wriston, served as a Confederate soldier in the Civil war, and his maternal grandfather lost his life in that struggle. The Wristons were of Scotch ancestry, and the family has been in Virginia for a number of generations. I. G. Wriston and wife are now living retired at Nesco. He has been a farmer and for two terms held the office of justice of the peace. He is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Robert Wriston attended common schools in Raleigh County, his parents moving here when he was a child. Later he took the academic course in the Concord State Normal at Athens, taught for five years, and then went East and entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, where he graduated M. D. in 1905. For a year he was resident physician in the City Hospital at Baltimore, and with that training he began his work at Beckley. Doctor Wriston handles a general medical and surgical practice, and every year or so he gets away from the routine of home duties to come into contact with the leading men and schools of the country. He took postgraduate work in the New York Polyclinic in 1908 and again in 1911, pursued special studies in Tulane University at New Orleans in 1917, and in 1921 and 1922 pursued courses in the Augustana Hospital and under Doctor Printy at Chicago.

In 1913 Doctor Wriston helped organize the Beckley Hospital, and he owned a half interest in that institution until January, 1922, and is still a member of the hospital staff. He belongs to the County, State and Southern Medical Associations, is a republican, is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In 1910, at Beckley, he married Miss Minnie Davis, daughter of John F. and Mary (McGinnis) Davis. Her father's career was distinguished by its long and active connection with public service. He served as sheriff two terms, as county clerk and clerk of court, and he died while still in public office. Doctor and Mrs. Wriston have four children, named Mary Alice, June, Marjorie and Mattie.

WORTHINGTON CHENOWETH. In the profession of dental surgery Worthington Chenoweth is one of the oldest active practitioners in the state. His work and study have been directed along that line for more than a half century, and for forty-eight years his home has been in Philippi, where he is held in the highest esteem for the influence and quality of his good citizenship at all times.

Chenoweth is an historic name in Randolph County of his state. His great-grandfather, John I. Chenoweth, was a native of South Wales, and he and a brother came to America before the Revolution and settled in Maryland. John I. Chenoweth served as a soldier in the war for independence. After that war he moved into Western Virginia, and spent his life here near Beverly, at the home of his son, John I., Jr., and he was laid to rest in the cemetery near Beverly.

John I. Chenoweth, Jr., was a farmer near Beverly, his farm being on Chenoweth's Creek, two miles from Elkins.

He cleared a good farm and owned a large body of land in that vicinity. He was well educated for his time, possessed a strong mind and exercised great personal influence, was in the official life at Randolph County, was a member of the Primitive Baptist Church and a whig in politics. He voted for secession, and one of his sons became a captain in the Confederate Army. John I. Chenoweth, Jr., died about twelve or fifteen years after the Civil war. He married Miss Skidmore. Their children were: Eli, Washington, Archibald, Lemuel, Thomas, Elijah, Martha and Jerusha. Only one of the sons served in the war between the states. Martha married Job Daniels and Jerusha married Allison Daniels.

Archibald Chenoweth, father of Doctor Chenoweth, was born on Chenoweth's Creek in Randolph County, had a country school education, and as a young man learned the trade of wagon-maker. To this trade he devoted all his active life, maintaining his shop in Beverly, where for a short time he had his brother Lemuel associated with him. He was a skilled worker, but was a modest and retiring citizen. He became a member of the Presbyterian Church after reaching middle life, and was a democrat. Archibald Chenoweth, who died when about seventy-five years of age, married Margaret Hyre. Her father, William Hyre, owned a farm at the head of Buckhannon River in Upshur County, and was a noted hunter in that vicinity. He was a strong Union man, and two of his sons were Federal soldiers and all of them were republicans in politics. Margaret Hyre was a daughter of her father's first marriage, to Miss VanDeavender. Archibald Chenoweth and wife reared one son and three daughters: Belle, who died at Beverly, wife of John Leonard; Rose, resident of Charleston and wife of John Conner; and Idella, who died unmarried.

Worthington Chenoweth was born October 26, 1848, and up to the age of twenty-four he lived in the historic community of Beverly. He attended some of the old subscription schools, and finished his education soon after the free school system was established. He has a vivid recollection of some of the events and conditions of the Civil war period. After one of the raids made by the Confederate general Rosser he helped bury the dead. For several years he worked with his father in the wagon shop, and he began the study of dentistry at Beverly with Dr. D. B. Campbell, a pioneer dentist in Randolph County. He remained with Doctor Campbell four years there, and both of them in 1874 moved to Philippi. Since then Doctor Chenoweth has carried on a very successful practice. He has made a specialty of plate work.

In the line of public service Doctor Chenoweth was for one term mayor of Philippi, twice served as treasurer, for twelve years was a member of the Board of Education and was on the Board when the property was acquired for the site of the new high school. While he has rendered public service he has not been in politics as an active candidate for office. Some years ago he was named jury commissioner for the District Federal Court of West Virginia by Judge Alston G. Dayton. Judge Dayton knew him intimately in civil and religious life, and while they were not of the same political faith the Judge explained his appointment by saying: "I know him to be a man I can trust and I want him." Doctor Chenoweth gave his first presidential vote to Horace Greeley, and has voted for all the nominees of the democratic party for half a century, including three votes for William J. Bryan.

Doctor Chenoweth is one of the very prominent Odd Fellows of West Virginia, having joined the lodge at Philippi the year he moved to that town. He has been financial secretary of the lodge fifteen years, financial secretary of the Encampment, and has represented both branches in the Grand Lodge. He is also financial secretary of the Knights of Pythias. When he was forty-nine years of age he was converted and joined the Presbyterian Church, and for a number of years has been an elder in the church at Philippi and superintendent of the Sunday school.

At Philippi, February 23, 1889, Doctor Chenoweth married Miss Mary H. Bosworth. Her father, Elam Bosworth, was born in the Beverly community of Randolph County, and married Miss Switzer, by whom he had four children: Harriet, Mary, Squire and Erastus. By a second marriage Elam Bosworth had two sons, James and Thomas, the former a merchant at Brownsburg, West Virginia, and the latter a teacher in the high school at Richmond, Virginia. Mrs. Chenoweth was born March 8, 1849, was liberally educated, and died January 5, 1922, at the age of seventy-three. She was associated with her husband in the work of the church, and both of them took an active interest in the war work of the community.

BERLIN E. SNYDER. After school days were over, supplemented by one term of teaching, Berlin E. Snyder threw himself with all his characteristic energy into the tasks and responsibilities of a commercial career. A steadily growing capacity derived from experience with a modest capital, likewise the reward of his own saving and self-denial, finally put him into the ranks of independent business men. He is president, treasurer and general manager of the Philippi Hardware & Furniture Company, and since 1914 has been one of the active commercial men of that city.

He was born near the Village of Lahmansville, Grant County, West Virginia. His grandfather, Noah Snyder, moved into Grant County from old Virginia, and was one of the successful farmers and good citizens of that locality, where he lived until his death at the age of seventy-eight. He married Susan Lahman, and of their eleven children only one, Seymour A., mentioned in the following paragraph, is deceased. The complete list of the children is as follows: Rebecca, wife of Scott Bergdoll and living in Grant County; John and Jacob, farmers in Mineral County; Buchanan, of Petersburg, Grant County; Seymour Allen; Martin B., of Wellsboro, Indiana; Joseph, a farmer in Grant County; Daniel W., a farmer in the State of Kansas; Elizabeth, wife of Robert Spangler, of Ridgely; Noah W., a farmer in Grant County; and Laura, wife of William Kesner, of Grant County.

Seymour A. Snyder was born in Grant County in 1860, followed the vocation to which he had been trained, that of farming, and died there in December, 1920, at the age of sixty. He was a member of the United Brethren Church and a republican. His wife, Mary Alexander Frye, born in 1860, the same year as her husband, died in 1919. Her father was William Baker Frye, a successful West Virginia farmer and a member of the Southern Methodist Church. The children of Seymour A. Snyder and wife were: Berlin E.; Beulah, wife of Albert A. Lahman, of Grant County; Herman, who was in training as a soldier during the World war and is now operating the old homestead; and Milam, of Philippi.

Berlin E. Snyder spent the first seventeen years of his life on the home farm, gained a country school education and passed the first teacher's uniform examination in the state. His work as a school teacher was done at Gorman, and when he left the school room he went to Keyser and for two months kept books for a grocery house and then became clerk in the Siever Hardware Company, wholesale and retail. After three years of training this house sent him on the road to cover the territory comprised in Grant, Hampshire, Hardy, Mineral, Pendleton, Tucker, Randolph and Greenbrier counties. He built up a large business for the firm in this territory for five years. For another six years he continued his work in practically the same territory, but for the wholesale hardware house of Greer and Laing of Wheeling.

After more than ten years on the road Mr. Snyder put his experience and capital to use at Philippi, where in 1914 he reorganized the old Philippi Hardware and Furniture Company as a stock company. His first capital was $5,000, and in 1910-1916 the capital was increased to $10,000, and in 1921 to $50,000. Mr. Snyder is the president, treasurer and general manager; A. F. Martin, of Elkins, is secretary; and H. B. Martin, of Elkins, vice president.

Mr. Snyder has accumulated other business interests in Philippi, including some real estate, and is a director in the Talbott-Crawford Coal Company and the Peoples Bank of Philippi.

In Randolph County, July 12, 1910, he married Miss Pearl Martin, daughter of E. Ross and Martha (Jones) Martin. Her parents were reared near Mannington, were farmers there for a number of years, and after retiring from the farm her father established himself at Elkins, where he has since been in the building and contracting business. The Martin children are: Gay, wife of Percy Paugh and a resident of Brownsville, Pennsylvania; Harry B., of Elkins; A. F., of Sharpless, West Virginia; Mrs. Snyder; and Miss Hallie Martin, of Elkins.

Mr. and Mrs. Snyder have one son, Berlin E., Jr., born July 19, 1915.

SAMUEL S. FARIS. In the death of Samuel S. Faris on January 3, 1922, Harrison County lost a citizen who for years had been given every proof of confidence in his integrity and ability as a banker, as a public official and a man of affairs. The late Mr. Faris represented a family that was founded in the county soon after the close of the Revolutionary war. He owned and controlled for many years the extensive Faris lands, nearly two thousand acres, adjacent to Bridgeport.

The first claimant to these lands was his great-grandfather, James Faris, who made his claim in 1785 and subsequently developed a portion of the land and was one of the active pioneer farmers in this section. The title to the land he took up has never been out of the Faris family. This James Faris was killed by the Indians on the Ohio River, near the present site of the City of Wheeling, West Virginia.

The second generation of the family in this state was represented by his son Humphrey, who was born in Pennsylvania about 1790. His activities as a land holder materially advanced the improvement of the Faris estate. A home he erected on the farm in 1816 is still preserved at Bridgeport. He was twice married, and by his two wives had seventeen children, including a son named George Thomas.

George Thomas, son of Humphrey Faris, was born September 15, 1816, at the old homestead. His life covered a span of almost a century. He died May 9, 1909. He was a volunteer at the time of the Mexican war of 1846, but never reached the front. He was past military age when the Civil war came on. The industry of his life was devoted to farming. His wife was Mary Ann Sheets, a native of near West Milford, Harrison County, who died at the age of forty-seven. She was the mother of Samuel S., Harriet, Rachel, Byrd, John and Ellen Faris.

The late Samuel S. Faris represented the fourth generation of the family in West Virginia. He was born September 5, 1855, on his father's farm a mile and a half Southeast of Bridgeport. While numerous other affairs commanded a share of his judgment and enterprise, he never neglected altogether the business that was part of his inheritance, farming and stock raising. He virtually took charge of his father's business when but seventeen years of age, and he handled with remarkable success the accumulating responsibilities represented by such a large body of agricultural land.

Some of the banking and business enterprises that enlisted his participation were the Bridgeport Bank, which was established in 1903 and of which he was president from 1906. He was also a stockholder and director in the milling and pottery companies, was vice president of the Empire Bank of Clarksburg, a stockholder in the Merchants National Bank and a stockholder in the Clarksburg Trust Company at the same place. His public service included the membership on the Board of Review of the county, and for twelve years he was on the Board of County Commissioners, eight years of that time as president. The late Mr. Faris was a republican in politics. He was a member of Late Lodge No. 63, A. F. and A. M., a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner, and a member of the Simpson Creek Baptist Church.

In 1881, at Bridgeport, he married Sallie Davidson, who as born in Taylor County, West Virginia, December 24, 1856. Her father, John Davidson, was a Bridgeport miller and died in 1892. Her mother, Cornelia (Hurry) Davidson, died in 1894. There were nine children born to S. S. Faris and wife, six of whom are living: Doctor George Thomas Faris, who became a practicing physician in Philadelphia, married Nell Steele, of Morgantown, West Virginia, and they have one child, Samuel Sheets Faris; Rachel, who married Dr. Benj. F. Shuttleworth, of Arkansas; and Florence, Nell, Mary and Robert, at home. The latter married Eleanor Mayers, of Fairmont, West Virginia. The deceased children are: Clara who died at the age of seventeen years, John, who died at the age of nineteen months and an infant who died at birth. George and Robert Faris, like their father, are Masons, both having taken the Scottish Rite, and the latter is a Shriner. Florence, Nell and Mary are members of the Eastern Star.

ALFRED N. HUMPHREYS is a mining engineer by profession, has been identified with practical mine operations in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and, briefly, in the Northwest, but the bulk of his work has been done since he became a resident of Philippi. He has done much to develop the coal measures of the Tygart Valley.

Mr. Humphreys was born in Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, February 15, 1880. His grandfather, Robert Humphreys, was of Welsh ancestry and probably a native of Wales. He married Catherine Emerich, whose grandfather, John Emerich, was a partner of John Jacob Astor in New York City, where large landed interests are said to belong to John's heirs. The children of Robert Humphreys and wife were: Alfred N., Sr., John, Frank, Mrs. Christiana and Mrs. Joseph Fogel.

Alfred N. Humphreys, Sr., was born at Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, had a college training, and as a young man entered the profession and business of coal operating and mine engineering in Eastern Pennsylvania. Eventually he became general manager of some large coal properties, and had extensive financial interests in them. He died at Pittsburgh in 1910, at the age of sixty-three. He was a publican, a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and a member of the Episcopal Church. He married Elizabeth Gillespie, who is still living at Pittsburgh. Her father, John Gillespie, was a merchant in Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, where he died in early life. Alfred N. Humphreys, Jr., was the only son of his parents, and his seven sisters were: Mary H., wife of George F. Brendlinger, of Pittsburgh; Miss Harriet R., who died in 1909; Eliza G., wife of Charles S. Sowash, who died in Bakersfield, California, in 1912; Miss Lenore G., of Pittsburgh; Miss Florence, of Pittsburgh; Miss Anna, of New York City; and Constance, wife of J. Frederick Knoblock, of Chicago.

Alfred N. Humphreys spent the first ten years of his life in the place of his birth, and then grew up at Irwin, Pennsylvania. He was educated in the public schools there, and took a coal and mine engineering course in Fordham University of New York. From university he went into the service of the Westmoreland Coal Company of Irwin as an engineer, and did general engineering work at the several mines of that company for five years. He performed work of a similar character two years for the Westworth Coal Company in Washington County, Pennsylvania. From there he came into the New River field of West Virginia, and for about a year as superintendent of the 500-foot shaft mines of the New River Coal Company. Following this came his experience in the Northwest, at Billings, Montana, where for a year he was superintendent of the Bituminous Coal Company's mines. Returning to West Virginia, Mr. Humphreys then established his home in business headquarters at Philippi.

He operated at Philippi a property under the name of the Humphreys Collieries Company, continuing for about two years and increasing the daily production to 300 tons. This property was opened in 1908, and Mr. Humphreys was president of the company and is still in that office. Since 1912 the property has been leased to the Humphreys Coal Company. He was associated with several other enterprises, and in 1919 opened property two miles below Philippi, under the name of the A. N. Humphreys Coal Company, of which he is the active head.

Mr. Humphreys is a member of the city council of Philippi, a member of the Kiwanis Club, is a republican, having cast his first vote for Colonel Roosevelt in 1904, and, while a man of unusual social qualities, he is not affiliated with any secret order.

At Philippi, in September, 1910, Mr. Humphreys married Miss Grace Heatherly, daughter of James E. and Laura E. Heatherly. Her mother is still living at Philippi. Mrs. Humphreys was born at "The Pines," the country home of the Heatherly family near Philippi. Her father was one of the extensive farmers in this region. Mrs. Humphreys is a graduate of Broadus College. Her sister is Mrs. E. A. Bowers, and her only brother is Wayne W. Heatherly. Mrs. Humphreys is active in the Missionary Baptist Church.

IRA HARRIS has had an exceptionally busy and useful career extending over a period of thirty years. The foundation of his success was laid at farming. He was responsible for the development of and still owns one of the best farms in Barbour County. Upon removing to Philippi he engaged in business as a merchant.

His people were pioneers in Barbour County. His great-grandfather was Simeon Harris, who first established a home in Glade District of Barbour County. The land he acquired remained as a farm in the hands of his sons. He built a generous chimney, marking the site of his home, and it is still standing on the farm. Simeon Harris was a Baptist preacher and did much to spread the gospel and religious work in the community. Besides preaching he married the young and buried the old. His own grave is near Meadowville.

George Harris, grandfather of the Philippi merchant, was born in Glade District and devoted his life to farming in that locality. His enterprise and vigor enabled him to accumulate a large amount of real estate, and he was one of the real men of influence in his community. He was a Baptist and democrat, and he died about forty years ago, when seventy-five years of age. He married Christina Cross, who survived him many years. Their children were: William, who died in Roane County, leaving a large family; Henry, who is still living, at the age of ninety-two, at the old home farm; Barton, who spent his life near Spencer; John; Abraham, a farmer who died near Spencer; Draper, who was a farmer in Glade District, but died in Randolph County; Ingaby, who died at Philippi, wife of Solomon Smith; Minerva, who married Frank Gainer, of Glade District; and another daughter went to Illinois, married and died in that state.

John Harris, father of Ira Harris, was born in Glade District in June, 1833, and as a boy had only the advantages of the old-fashioned subscription school. Farming became his permanent vocation after he attained manhood, and his activities were in the vicinity of Meadowville. He was physically unable for service in the Civil war, was a democrat, was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, but for some years before his death had been affiliated with the Methodist Protestant Church. John Harris, who died May 19, 1917, married Elizabeth Martini, who was born in Randolph County in 1835, daughter of Simeon Martini. She died December 24, 1910, the mother of the following children: Elias J., of Spencer; George W., of Belington; Euphrates, a farmer near Meadowville; Page B., of Elkins; Ira; Dee, of Belington; and Olive, wife of Hoy Harsh, of Elkins.

Ira Harris was born March 30, 1872, and spent his early life on the farm in Glade District, acquiring a district school education. He has been one of the prominent men in that locality, and his splendid farm at Kalamazoo is rated as one of the best equipped and most profitably managed country places in the county. His home was on this farm until he removed his family to Philippi to secure better school advantages for his children. In Tucker County he owned 300 acres of grazing land, with buildings and other improvements. For twenty years while on the farm Mr. Harris conducted a country store, and on removing to Philippi he utilized this experience by engaging in the grocery business. He is now a member of the firm Hauser and Harris, with a store devoted to ready-to-wear clothing for women and men.

In politics Mr. Harris is one of the old campaigners of Barbour County, and for many years has carried the banner of the democratic party. He first voted for Mr. Bryan in 1896, and at different times was a committeeman of Glade District, helped as a delegate in several state conventions, helped name Junior Brown for Congress and has frequently accepted a place on the party ticket for office. He was several times elected constable of Glade District and a member of the Board of Education, and at one time was president of the board. His son Grover was party candidate for county clerk in 1920. Mr. Harris is a Methodist and for sixteen years was steward of his church in Glade District. He is affiliated with Kassar Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Harris married Priscilla Holsberry, who was born in Glade District, daughter of Martin and Abigail (Stalnaker) Holsberry. Both the Holsberry and Stalnaker families are old settlers at Glade District. Mrs. Harris has a brother, Henry, and a sister, Margaret, wife of Mella Stalnaker. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Harris are: Grover C., to whom a special paragraph is devoted; Virgil, associated with the Davis Drug Store at Philippi, married Lottie Boyles and has a daughter, Evelyn Gail; Bretts, a farmer; Martin, with the firm of Hauser and Harris in Philippi.

Grover C. Harris is one of the very prominent and popular young men of Barbour County. He carries a distinguished service medal and for two years was with the army in the Telephone Engineering Department. On one particular occasion, when his comrades were being shelled heavily to destroy telephone connection, he and two others stuck to their posts and kept the wires open to the rear, and for this work he was cited for bravery and distinguished service and a Government medal conferred upon him. Since the war he has been engaged in educational work and is principal of the high school at Junior. He married Bertha Ritenour, and they have a son, Ira Odell.

WINFIELD SCOTT WILSON. To Winfield Scott Wilson of Philippi belongs the credit of a long and active business career. For many years he was a traveling salesman over West Virginia territory, was a merchant himself, and now, when past three-score and ten, he finds congenial work in looking after his interests as a farmer, a vocation to which he was reared.

It is doubtful if in all West Virginia there is a family tree with greater and more important ramifications than that of the Wilsons. As commanded in the Scriptures, they have multiplied and replenished the earth and have sent their representatives to all parts of the United States. If all the descendants of the first American ancestor could be mobilized, an army of Wilsons would entrain. They have been a family intellectually strong and physically vigorous, and have proved themselves worthy of the name "genuine Americans."

The direct line of ancestry runs back to Scotland, where David Wilson was born about 1650. His son, David, Jr., was born in the same country about 1685. The latter joined the forces opposed to the Government in the Scotch rebellion of 1715, and when his comrades were defeated and the rebellion crushed he fled to Ireland. He was living in Ireland when his son, William, the founder of this branch of the family in America, was born.

William Wilson was born in Ireland November 16, 1722. As a young man he came to the American colonies and was one of the pioneers in the Alleghany Mountain District of Western Virginia. About 1746, after coming to America, he married Elizabeth Blackburn, a daughter of Archibald Blackburn. She was born in Ulster Province of Ireland February 22, 1725. After their marriage they established their home on Trout Run, Hardy County, in what is now West Virginia. William Wilson died January 12, 1801, and his wife, on May 2, 1806. They had eleven children, and among them were some distinguished characters, particularly John and Benjamin, both of whom represented Randolph County as delegates to the Virginia Convention of 1788 at Richmond, to ratify the Constitution of the United States. John Wilson was the first county clerk of Randolph County, in 1787, its first circuit clerk in 1809, and the first justice of the peace, in 1787, and in the same year served as a major of the Virginia Militia was county assessor the next year and sheriff of the county in 1798. His brother, Col. Benjamin Wilson, was in command of the militia in this part of West Virginia during the Revolution, had charge of the defense of the frontier against the Indians and had many encounters with them. He was the first clerk of Harrison County, and that office he held almost forty years. His chief service to his country was the contribution he made to its population of good men and women. He was the father of twenty-nine children.

The representative of the second generation in whom this sketch is particularly interested was William Wilson Jr., who was born in Hardy County, February 8, 1754. He passed away after a long and useful life on January 1, 1851. For many years he was chairman of the Randolph County Court, and was the county's representative in the Virginia Legislature. He married a sister of the old Indian fighter and Revolutionary war veteran, Jonas Friend, whose home was at the mouth of Leading Creek.

Their son, William F. Wilson, representing the third generation of the American family, was born in Hampshire County, West Virginia. He was a pioneer in Barbour County and was associated with the first to lay the foundations of economic prosperity in this region. He owned the land upon which Philippi was located and much other property besides. He perpetuated the reputation of his family as a mill owner. His forebears were the pioneer mill-builders of Barbour County. The second mill erected in Randolph County was built by his uncle, Col. Benjamin Wilson, and the first mill on Bill's Creek was placed there by Moses Wilson. William F. Wilson built the second mill on that scene. His brother, John, erected a horse power mill six and a half miles southeast of Philippi. On mill near Belington was built by William F. Wilson, and he built the first mill and carding machine at Philippi about 1818. He did not stop public improvement and internal development with mill building, since he is credited with having constructed the first wagon road in Barbour County east of the river, a road some seven miles long extending from Philippi to Bill's Creek. This road was built at a cost of about 75 cents a rod.

William F. Wilson married Jane Booth, daughter of Daniel Booth, who lived on Bill's Creek. Their children were: Isaiah, Asher, Almond, Maria, Lewis, Albert, Daniel Granger, Alpheus, Sarah Jane, Rezin B. and Eugene. The daughter Sarah Jane was three times married, her husbands being William M. Simpson, Henson L. Yoke and Sabous Maine.

The representative of the fourth generation was Isaiah Wilson, who was born in what was then Randolph County, now Barbour County, in 1810. He died there in 1897. With only such educational advantages as could be acquired at home by private study he equipped himself for the profession of land surveyor, and did that work through nearly all his active years. He was a democrat in politics. Isaiah Wilson married Deborah Yoke, whose father, Job Yoke, was of German ancestry and a farmer. Deborah Yoke was born near Belington in Barbour County and died in 1885, at the age of sixty. Her children were: Exerxe who died in Butler County, Kansas, in 1873; Albert G. who was in business as a saddler at Philippi, where he died; Winfield Scott; and Reason, who became a physician and died at Hutchinson, Kansas, in 1895.

Winfield Scott Wilson was born March 12, 1849, four miles from Philippi, in the Philippi District. From the age of four years he lived in the town of Philippi, where he attended the public schools. He was associated with his father on the farm, later became a clerk, and as a cor-aerial traveler he represented the S. L. Delaplain Son and Company of Wheeling four years. After he left the road he was engaged in business on his own account as a merchant from 1873 to 1901. After twenty-eight years in erecting his own business he again resumed work on the road for Delaplain Son and Company and then with John A. Horner of Baltimore, and covered a portion of West Virginia as his territory four years. After severing his connection with the Baltimore house, Mr. Wilson retired from business and went back to the farm. At different times he has handled some contracts for grading and excavating on public works.

Mr. Wilson comes of a democratic family. He participated in his first campaign as a voter in 1872, when he gave his ballot to Horace Greeley, and for fifty years has steadily supported the democratic nominees. Mr. Wilson was twice a member of the City Council of Philippi, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is a past grand in the Lodge of Odd Fellows, and his membership in that order dates back fifty years and he is entitled to be Order's Jewel for that honor. He is the only surviving member of the Philippi Encampment of the Odd Fellows. He is a past chancellor and a member of thirty years standing in the Knights of Pythias, and has sat in the Grand Lodge of both these Orders.

In Barbour County in April, 1875, Mr. Wilson married Miss Nannie Townsend, daughter of Isaac Baker Townsend. She died in 1876, leaving two children, Zona is the wife of Judge Warren B. Kittle of Philippi, and they have three children: Virginia, who married Walter Metz, and they have a son, Harry; Nellie, who married Sherman Lindsay, cashier of the Peoples Bank at Philippi, and George W. Kittle. Ernest is a civil engineer living at Philippi. In April, 1878, Mr. Wilson married, also in Barbour County, Miss Martha Zinn, daughter of Cornelius Zinn, who married a Miss Rogers. Mrs. Wilson was born in Barbour County, one of a family of three sons and five daughters. The only child born to the second marriage was Kemper, who died in 1881, at the age of two years.

JOHN MCKENZIE is a Scotch Canadian, and the background of his early life and experience was a thrifty farm on the north shore of Lake Erie. With the characteristic enterprise of his race he fitted himself for complete exercise of all the talents he possessed. He became a teacher and then qualified himself for the ministry. He has several degrees from colleges and universities, marking stages in his training for usefulness. For the past thirteen years West Virginia has been the scene of his activities. He has found time to do regular church work as a pastor, but he gave his community at Philippi at least particularly appreciates the work he has done in building up a thoroughly modern and efficient school system for that city.

Mr. McKenzie was born at Chatham, Ontario, July 10, 1874, son of Murdoch and Ann (Wilkinson) McKenzie, both of Scotch ancestry. His grandfather, Murdoch McKenzie, was born in the Scotch Highlands, representing one of the historic clans of the country, and on coming to America settled near Chatham, Ontario, and devoted the rest of his life to the farm. His son Murdoch was also a farmer, and died in August, 1920, at the age of eighty-two. Of his eight children six are still living: John; Kenneth, a farmer at the old home; Alexander and Roland, so farmers near Chatham; Etta, wife of Robert Henderson; and Miss Mary Belle.

While a boy on the Ontario farm John McKenzie attended public school in a country district where the average term was ten and a half months. After completing his work in the Dover public school he entered the Chatham Collegiate Institute, finished the course there, and then aimed for teaching in a model school at Chatham. For several years he taught in public school work, and followed at with a year in the Hamilton Normal School at Hamilton as a student of his chosen profession. He attended Toronto University one year, and after an intermission of two years, during which he did high school work, he returned to the University and graduated A. B. in 1903, being one of the honor men of his class. In preparation for the ministry Mr. McKenzie pursued his theological studies in Knox College of Toronto for three years, graduating in 1906. In that year he was ordained minister of a church at Hornby, Ontario, and preached there two years. In the fall of 1908, continuing his higher education, he entered Yale University at New Haven, and in 1909 received his Master of Arts degree and the Bachelor of Divinity degree from the divinity school.

With this preparation Mr. McKenzie came to West Virginia to take up the substantial work of his life. In September, 1909, he began his duties as a member of the faculty of Davis and Elkins College of Elkins. For six years he held the chair of English in that school and for two years was dean. He left the college to become principal and superintendent of the public schools of Belington. During the next four years he proved his ability as an administrator and as a progressive factor in educational work by adding to the curriculum of the school's agriculture and commercial courses.

In September, 1919, Mr. McKenzie answered the call to a new field of labor at Philippi, as superintendent of the public schools. Philippi high school at that time was rated in the "second class," the high school work being done by two teachers and a three-year course. The school building was without any modern facilities, and had been constructed a number of years before at a cost of about $20,000. In the two school years since Mr. McKenzie took charge, Philippi has been given "first class rating" among the schools of the state. There are now five teachers in charge of the high school program, which is a four-year course. Additions to the course under Mr. McKenzie have been science, chemistry and commercial subjects, while plans are now under way for the establishment of a domestic science course and then manual training. On the site of the old building stands a modern school structure which cost the community $125,000. It contains a gymnasium 43 by 85 feet, an auditorium seating 700 people, and about $800 have been expended in addition to laboratory equipment and for 1922 $400 were appropriated for books and periodicals for the school library. It is the policy of the school to give the students some vocational guidance for their future work, and many of the graduates since Mr. McKenzie took charge have continued their education in higher institutions.

In the ministry Mr. McKenzie did his first work in West Virginia as a supply in Randolph County, and his first regular pastorate was at Beverly in the same county. He has served as pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Philippi, and has been pastor at Belington for seven years.

At Hesper, Ontario, in July, 1910, Mr. McKenzie married Mary Christina Gilechrist, a daughter of Peter Gilechrist, also of Scotch ancestry. Her parents were born in Scotland and were Canadian farmers. Mr. and Mrs. McKenzie have three children, Margaret, John and William.

JOE NELSON CRADDOCK. On his record as mayor of Greater Clarksburg and the growing appreciation of his abilities that has been manifested for a number of years, his friends and admirers look upon Joe Nelson Craddock—"Uncle Joe," they call him—as one of the real men of power and action in the public affairs of his district. The following given him is by no means strictly partisan. His courage, independence, faculty for getting things done to the benefit of the public, have gained him friendship from all classes and all parties.

By profession Mr. Craddock is a newspaper man. He was born at Glenville, Gilmer County, February 22, 1864, son of Hugh Nelson and Sarah P. (Brannon) Craddock. His father was born at Charlottesville, Virginia, in 1826, and died at Glenville in 1904. As a West Virginian he was a Union soldier in the Civil war. While the war was still in progress he married, in 1862, and after his army career he lived at Glenville, devoting his time to farming and also to steamboating on the Ohio River. He was a republican, but never sought any political honors. His widow is still living at Glenville, where she was born in 1846. They reared the following children: Joe N.; Clara B.; Herbert; Harvey L. (deceased); and Frankie.

Joe Nelson Craddock had his early friends and other associations in the Town of Glenville, where he supplemented his common school education by a course in the State Normal School. He was only ten years old when he was given his first lesson in the printer's trade. He served an apprenticeship lasting several years. At the age of sixteen he left home and took up the battle of life for himself. His first independent venture in journalism came at the age of eighteen, in the spring of 1882, when he established the Mountain Echo at Webster Springs. He was an editor and publisher for five years. With his brother Herbert he started the publication of the Grantsville News. At Glenville he founded and conducted two papers, the Stranger and the Imprint, and for two years he managed the paper at Sutton.

Mr. Craddock came to Clarksburg in the fall of 1914 to accept the post of city editor of the Clarksburg Exponent. He remained with that paper one year. His home in the meantime he had established at Broad Oaks, then a suburban incorporated town. In April, 1915, he was appointed mayor of Broad Oaks, and in the spring of 1916 was elected for a year to the same office. In the meantime he conducted a job printing business.

In April, 1917, Mr. Craddock was elected mayor of Greater Clarksburg for a term of three years. The opinion of the best citizens as well as his friends is that his administration was efficient, progressive and businesslike, that he always stood for those measures which mean the most good for the greatest number, and his record whether as mayor or in all the other relations of a busy life has been honest and straightforward. As mayor he could not be controlled by any clique or interest to the injury of another, and he treated rich and poor alike. One of the stories in local politics is that certain selfish interests of Clarksburg realizing their inability to defeat him for reelection as mayor, schemed to bring about legislation changing the form of city charter, so as to "legislate him out" of office. Mr. Craddock is a democrat in national politics, and has been prominently mentioned as democratic candidate for Congress.

He and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. In 1884 he married Virgie B. Wooddell, of Green Bank, Pocahontas County, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Craddock are proud of their six children, all married, and are doubly proud of their twelve grandchildren. Their only son, B. W. Craddock, is prosecuting attorney of Gilmer County.

JOSEPH HOWARD MCBRIDE. The first regular employment of Joseph Howard McBride was with an oil and gas company, and he has been successfully identified with oil and gas production in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia ever since. He is one of the well known producers, drilling contractors and business men who have their home at St. Marys, though his interests are widespread over this part of West Virginia.

Mr. McBride was born at Oakdale, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, August 21, 1878. His father, George A. McBride, was born near Oakdale in 1845, and spent all his life in Allegheny County. He was a broom maker, owning and operating a broom factory near Oakdale, and was also a skilled violinist, for a number of years being member of a Pittsburgh orchestra. He was a republican and an active worker in the Presbyterian Church. His death occurred in 1888, near Cliff Vine in Allegheny County. His widow now lives at Coraopolis in Allegheny County. Her maiden name was Emma Pierce, and she was born at Webster, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, in 1856. A brief record of her children is as follows: Clarence, an oil refinery employe living at Coraopolis; Joseph Howard; Archie, who has charge of an electric light plant at Beaver Falls, Brighton, Beaver County; Arthur, an executive official in an oil refinery at Muskogee, Oklahoma; Essie J., a teacher in the public schools of Coraopolis; Miss Clara, a stenographer and typewriter with the Crucible Steel Company at Aliquippa, Beaver County.

Joseph Howard McBride acquired his early education in the public schools of Allegheny County. His school days were ended at the age of fourteen, and then after two years of work on the farm he began his career as a oil man at the age of sixteen. For seven years he was on lease work with the Bellevue and Glenfield Gas Company, beginning in the Oakdale Oil Field, and in 1899 was sent to West Virginia by the company, with headquarters at St. Marys. For a year following he was in the water and gas department of the South Penn Oil Company at Wallace, West Virginia, and for a number of years was foreman for the Three Joes Oil Company at Hebron. In 1908 Mr. McBride bought the oil holdings of the last named corporation near Hebron, and since then has been an active producer, operating in Pleasants, Tyler and Wood counties, West Virginia, and Washington County, Ohio. His production at the present time is confined to Pleasants, Tyler and Wood counties. Since 1911 he has also been active in the business of oil well drilling.

Mr. McBride is a man of prominence in the civic affairs of St. Marys. He served one year as recorder and one year as mayor. He is a republican, is affiliated with St. Marys Lodge No. 41, A. F. and A. M., Pennsboro Chapter No. 25, R. A. M., at Pennsboro in Ritchie County; Pennsboro Commandery No. 20, K. T., West Virginia Consistor No. 1, of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg, and is also affiliated with St. Marys Lodge No. 22, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Marietta Lodge No. 477, B. P. O. E., a Marietta, Ohio.

Mr. McBride owns a fine, comfortable home at George and Third streets in St. Marys and is owner of another dwelling on George Street. He married at St. Marys October 15, 1901, Miss Myrtle Sooke, daughter of John and Ella (Rutteneutter) Sooke, the latter still living in St. Marys. Her father, now deceased, was a flour mill and lumber dealer. Mrs. McBride finished her education in the Fairmont State Normal School. Five children were born to their marriage: Geraldine, born September 28, 1902, a student in the Pennsylvania College for Women at Pittsburgh; Josephine, born May 12, 1905, a student in St. Marys High School; George, who was born December 15, 1910, and died at the age of three days; Elizabeth, born December 3, 1912; and Richard, born January 13, 1915.

N. W. BALLANTYNE. Of the citizens of known business ability who have been called to public office in Hancock County, one of the best known is N. W. Ballantyne, member of the Board of County Commissioners, and one of the proprietors of the West Virginia Fire Clay Company of New Cumberland. Connected with this line of enterprise practically since youth, he has made a success of his operations therein, in view of which fact it was thought that he would be equally successful as a county official. His record in office shows this faith to have been fully vindicated.

Mr. Ballantyne was born at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and is a son of Alexander Ballantyne, a glass manufacturer, who died when his son N. W. was but fifteen years of age. The latter then went to live with his maternal grandfather, James L. Freeman, a son of Thomas Freeman. Thomas Freeman was the original operator of a plant taking out fire clay, which was under his own farm one mile south of New Cumberland, and James Freeman was also engaged in the fire brick and sewer pipe business, his plant being on the site of the present Freeman plant one-half mile below the above plant. James Freeman died when past eighty years of age. His daughter, Irene (Freeman) Ballantyne, who was the mother of N. W. and C. A. Ballantyne, died at the age of sixty-eight years.

N. W. Ballantyne secured a good, practical education, training, and with his brother, C. A., came into the ownership of the old Freeman home place. In 1896 they started a small plant of their own in partnership, and have continued to be associated together in their business venture.

ver since. In 1903 they founded the West Virginia Fire Clay Company at New Cumberland, and in 1906 the business was incorporated by them, with a capital of $50,000. This plant manufactures fire clay, which is sold to the manufacturers of fire brick and similar products, and has a capacity of 300 tons daily, this coming from a vein of clay of from eight to twelve feet thick under the hill on the edge of the works. Something unusual and most opportune connected with this plant is that immediately above the vein of clay lies a three-foot vein of excellent steam coal, the mining of which involves but slight expense, and which supplies the fuel for the plant. Above this is the solid rock forming a natural permanent roof. The average output for one entire year was 6,000 tons per month, and the securing and preparation of the product, done by electrical machinery, necessitates the employment of from twelve to eighteen miners, and from about thirty to forty men in all. This clay goes into grinders to make it uniform, and is then shipped to the southern states, New England and Canada, from 120 to 175 cars monthly being utilized. The pay-roll approximates $2,500 monthly. The selling office of the concern is at Pittsburgh.

N. W. Ballantyne is also interested in other plants, manufacturers of fire clay products in Beaver Valley, Pennsylvania, and in Ohio, with offices at Pittsburgh. He has several civic and fraternal connections, and is actively interested in all good movements for the community welfare. In 1920 he was elected a county commissioner, having been nominated by the republicans and receiving the endorsement of the democratic party. The county is now engaged in building good roads, keeping pace with other sections, and in 1921 a new Court House was built, costing approximately $100,000, to replace the old building, destroyed by fire, which was erected in 1884 and donated to the county by the citizens in order to secure the county seat from Pughtown, four miles distant. The sheriff's residence and jail are in a separate building, but in close proximity to the Court House.

Mr. Ballantyne married Miss Lucie Brown, daughter of the late Adrian W. Brown, for many years publisher of the New Cumberland Independent and a leading and influential citizen. She was reared at New Cumberland, graduated from the West Virginia University as a member of the class of 1900, and for a time taught English at the West Liberty Normal School and later at Marshall College, Huntington, West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Ballantyne have two children: Robert and Irene Virginia.

ROBERT SHIELDS DONEHOO, M. D. In the development of a career that has been characterized by faithfulness to duty, integrity in all of life's affairs and the achievement of merited success the younger generation should like interest, for in this way lessons of incalculable value may be learned. Such a career has been that of Dr. Robert Shields Donehoo, of Pughtown, who enjoys the distinction of being the oldest physician and surgeon in Hancock County. Throughout his life he has given his best services to his profession and the people among whom he has lived and labored, and now, in the evening of life, he may be content in the knowledge of a career well spent and appreciated.

Robert Shields Donehoo was born in the Village of Cross Creek, Washington County, Pennsylvania, August 14, 1848, son of James Donehoo. His father was born in County Lmagh, Ireland, and as a child was brought to the United States, the family settling in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, in 1800. Later James Donehoo removed to Washington County, Pennsylvania, where he died at the age of twenty-four years. Robert Shields Donehoo grew to manhood in his native locality, and after attending the public schools pursued a course at Cross Creek Academy. He then taught school for three years in Pennsylvania and for a time was teacher of the Shady Glen School in Clay District, Hancock County, West Virginia. Resolving upon a career in medicine, he began reading for that profession under the preceptorship of Dr. J. N. Boggs, an early Pittsburgh physician, following which he enrolled as a student at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1874, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Among his classmates were Dr. John D. Campbell, of Wheeling; Dr. James F. Baldwin, president of a hospital at Columbus, Ohio; and Dr. John B. Roberts and Dr. Ed Montgomery, both of whom afterward became professors at Jefferson Medical College. For a short time Doctor Donehoo practiced at Beaver, Pennsylvania, in association with an uncle, and then went to Dallas, Texas, where he also remained for a short period. Returning in December, 1876, he settled at Pughtown, where he has been in continuous practice to the present, and is the oldest physician and surgeon in Hancock County. He has a large general practice, to which he continues to devote himself whole-heartedly and unselfishly, and in addition to the confidence of his patients has their unqualified esteem and affection. He belongs to the various organizations of his calling and stands high in the regard of his fellow-practitioners. A democrat in politics, he has taken an active interest in public affairs, has stood staunchly by his party and at various times has been a delegate to conventions. He is an advocate of out-of-door life and believes in baseball and other forms of athletics.

In 1882 Doctor Donehoo was united in marriage with Miss Alice M. Flanegin, of Pughtown, daughter of A. M. C. Flanegin, for years clerk of both the County and Circuit Courts of Hancock County when the county seat was located at Pughtown. He died when past seventy years of age. Doctor and Mrs. Donehoo have been the parents of four daughters and one son: Eunice, who married John Mayhew and died young; Ella, who is the wife of Dr. Fred H. Riney, of Mingo Junction, Ohio; Alice, the wife of Rex H. Jones, a mining man of Huntington, West Virginia; Elizabeth, unmarried, who formerly taught at Newell and Chester in Hancock County, and at East Liverpool, Ohio, and now teaching at Mingo Junction, Ohio; and Robert S., Jr., who served for a few months in an army camp during the late war and is now associated with his uncle, W. W. Flanegin, in an insurance agency at Pittsburgh.

WILLIAM GASTON, M. D., of Clarksburg, has practiced medicine successfully for over thirty-six years. After attending the rural schools and Fairmont Normal School, and teaching school for four years, he read medicine one year under the preceptorship of his cousin, Dr. Florent Gibson, at Freemansburg, and then completed a course in medicine at the Eclectic Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1884. He at once began the practice of medicine at Good Hope, Harrison County, and soon gained a lucrative clientele, remaining at that point until the spring of 1907, when he transferred his offices to Clarksburg. While residing at Good Hope he took a post-graduate course in medicine at the New York Polyclinic Hospital and Post-Graduate school at New York City, where he took a second course in 1909. Thus he has kept abreast of the advances in his profession. His is a general practice, and he has gained an honorable standing among the reputable medical men of Harrison County and a strong place in the confidence of the people. Doctor Gaston is a member of the Harrison County Medical Society, the West Virginia Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and belongs to the medical staff of St. Mary's Hospital, Clarksburg. He is a Knight Templar Mason and Noble of the Mystic Shrine, and in politics is a democrat. The Doctor has diversified business interests, including oil, as a producer.

Dr. William Gaston is a native of Lewis County, West Virginia, where he was born on a farm May 18, 1859. Both paternally and maternally he comes of old and highly respected families of West Virginia. His parents were George and Martha Ann (Gibson) Gaston, the former born in Harrison County and the latter in Lewis County. His paternal grandparents were William and Mary (Post) Gaston, and his paternal great-grandparents came to West Virginia from their native state of New Jersey at a very early date, settling on Duck Creek, in what is now Harrison County. The maternal grandparents of Doctor Gaston were Smith and Malinda (Hall) Gibson. The Gibsons came from old Virginia and settled in Upshur County, West Virginia. The paternal great-great-grandmother married John Gaston, and her father was a Davison, a Revolutionary soldier.

The parents of Doctor Gaston resided for many years in Freeman District, Lewis County, and both lived to be beyond seventy years of age. They were United Brethren in church faith, and were the parents of six children: Willia; Edwin; Emma; Clark, deceased; Laura, and Ivan, deceased. The boyhood of Doctor Gaston was passed on the farm, where he learned the lessons of perseverance and industry which have been characteristic of his entire life. Doctor Gaston has been twice married and is now a widower. In 1884 he married Miss Nellie Thrash, who died in 1892, without leaving children. In 1894 Doctor Gaston married Mrs. Susan Easter, nee Wolfe, who bore him two sons, Howe Russell and William Bryan, and in June, 1921, was called in death. Both of Doctor Gaston's sons rendered service to their country during the great World war. Howe Russell Gaston enlisted in the United States Regular Army in 1916, and when the United States became involved in the greatest of all wars was transferred from Troop F, Fourteenth Cavalry, to Company C, Third Division Ammunition Train, and went overseas March 2, 1918, then as corporal, but later became acting first sergeant. He rendered service overseas for eighteen months in the Ammunition Train Division of his unit, and took part in the defensive and offensive at the Marne, and in the St. Mihiel and Argonne campaigns, and later was with the Army of Occupation in Germany. His honorable discharge was dated in April, 1920, and he is now a successful traveling salesman and a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. William Bryan Gaston volunteered in the service of the United States Army the day after he was twenty-one years of age, at Pittsburgh. He was sent first to Camp Meade, later to Annapolis, still later to Washington, District of Columbia, and in February, 1918, went overseas with the Twenty-third Engineers, an entirely volunteer organization. He rendered service in the truck train for nineteen months in France, and received his honorable discharge in July, 1919. He is a member of the American Legion and Clarksburg Lodge No. 155, A. F. and A. M. He is now a medical student at the University of Maryland, Baltimore.

JOHN B. PAYNE, M. D. It is reported that the great Galen once boasted: "I have done as much for medicine as Trojan did for the Roman Empire in building bridges and roads throughout Italy," thus emphasizing with the greatest then-known marvels of accomplishment his own benefactions to humanity. Yet, in the light of modern medical science, how little Galen really did, and how radically incorrect, remarkable as they were, proved many of his theories and conclusions. To the members of the medical profession the early teachers will ever continue great, but a physician or surgeon of the present day whose professional knowledge is not vastly broader, higher and deeper, could not lay much stress upon his equipment for his calling. Dr. John B. Payne kept fully abreast of the marvelous developments in the profession, his training was long and thorough and he was engaged in practice for twenty-six years.

Doctor Payne was born at Philippi, Barbour County, West Virginia, December 31, 1871, a son of Frank E. and Virginia (Simon) Payne, the former a native of Loudoun County, Virginia, and the latter of Barbour County, West Virginia. Frank E. Payne was an agriculturist by occupation and a man of some prominence in his community, where he was held in the highest esteem. He and his worthy wife were the parents of eight children, six sons and two daughters, whom they reared on the farm and brought up to lives of industry and integrity.

John B. Payne obtained a good common school education, and taught in the rural schools two years. As a student, first in the Fairmont State Normal School and later in the West Virginia University, his literary education, preparatory to that of medicine, was completed. He finished the prescribed course in medicine at the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Maryland, and received his Doctor of Medicine degree in 1896. For the following six and one-half years he was successfully engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery at Lumberport, Harrison County, whence he removed to Clarksburg in the fall of 1902. While engaged in practice there he occupied well-appointed offices in the Union Bank Building. In 1906 Doctor Payne took a postgraduate course in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore. Soon after locating at Clarksburg, where his reputation had preceded him, he secured a desirable practice, and long held rank among the leading physicians and surgeons of the city. He became an active and valued member of the Harrison County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He belonged to the staff of St. Mary's Hospital, Clarksburg. In the fall of 1922 Doctor Payne retired and moved to Washington, D. C., to his thirty-six-acre "city farm," which will be his future home.

For eighteen years Doctor Payne has been a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and for three years of the Independent Order of Foresters. He is a state officer in the latter fraternity, being a High Court Physician and has also represented his state in the Supreme Court of Foresters at Toronto, Canada. In his political allegiance he supports staunchly the candidates and ideals of the democratic organization. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Doctor Payne has been twice married. In 1896 Miss Sallie Corpening became his wife. She died in 1911, leaving a son and a daughter: John Edward, a graduate of medicine from the University of Maryland in June, 1922; and Virginia, who graduated in the same month from Millersburg (Kentucky) Female College. In 1912 Doctor Payne was united in marriage with Miss Eulainne Struve, and to this union there have come four children: Dorothy Jean, born in 1914; Kirby B., born in 1917; Billie F. born in 1919; and Benjamin B., born in 1922. All the children were born in Clarksburg, West Virginia.

OLIVER S. MARSHALL. Descended from one of the oldest families in the Northern Panhandle, Oliver S. Marshall has always made his home in that section, and as a lawyer and legislator his reputation has become state wide. His home is at New Cumberland, and his law offices in the industrial town of Weirton.

He was born near Fairview, the old county seat of Hancock County, now called Pughtown, September 24, 1850. He is a great-grandson of the pioneer Aaron Marshall, who came from east of the mountains, from somewhere in Virginia, and is thought to have been a soldier of Braddock and Washington in the famous campaign of 1755. About 1760 he located on Charters Creek in Washington County, Pennsylvania, and about 1780 came to what is now Hancock County, West Virginia. His land was part of the Johnson survey, granted in 1775, when Patrick Henry was governor of Virginia. The grant was for 7,000 acres, but when it was surveyed it measured 8,100 acres. Of this 200 acres was assigned to Aaron Marshall at ten shillings an acre, payable in whiskey at the rate of five shillings a gallon, flour and other forms of currency of that day. Aaron Marshall had the fourth house on that tract. Some of the land is still owned by Oliver S. Marshall, and the original record of the title is at Louisville, Kentucky. The town of Newell stands on part of the original grant. In his minutes George Washington mentions the falls where this tract borders the Ohio River, but the land of Aaron Marshall is some five miles from that stream.

Aaron Marshall continued to live here until his death in advanced years in 1826. He was a Baptist and frequently preached on Kings Creek, where he was buried.

His son, John Marshall, was born in 1782 and died in 1859, spending his entire life in Hancock County. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

James G. Marshall, father of Senator Marshall, was born at old Fairview, Hancock County, November 21, 1826, and died October 6, 1902. He left the farm, did considerable surveying, became an attorney and for twenty-four years was prosecuting attorney of Hancock County. He was buried in the old Presbyterian churchyard at Fairview. His wife was Lavina Miller, daughter of John Miller and granddaughter of David Miller. David Miller settled on Tomlinson's Run, where he owned 400 acres, secured from Dorsey Pentecost, one of the two last judges who held court at Pittsburgh under the authority of the British crown. David had the first house in Gas Valley, and died in 1835, in his ninety-ninth year. His son John spent his life as a farmer at the old place, and his daughter Lavina was born there. She died when about sixty years old, and her three children are: Oliver S.; E. D. Marshall, an attorney at Santa Clara, California; and Ila, of New Cumberland, widow of Dr. J. W. Walton.

Oliver S. Marshall graduated from the West Liberty Normal School in 1874 as valedictorian, and is the last survivor of that class. He continued his education in Bethany College, where he graduated in 1878, and in 1881 began a long term of service as one of the trustees of that famous institution. One of his classmates at Bethany was the late Judge Joseph R. Lamar of Georgia, for many years a justice of the United States Supreme Court. Judge Lamar married a Miss Pendleton, daughter of a former president of Bethany College. Mr. Marshall was for a time principal of the New Cumberland schools, began the study of law while serving as county clerk, and was admitted to the bar and began his long and successful service as a lawyer in 1890.

He is a member of the Christian Church and an active republican, having been a delegate to the national convention of that party in 1892. He was first chosen to represent the First District in the West Virginia Senate in 1896, served in the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Legislatures of 1897-99, and was elected president of the Senate in 1899. He was again elected and was a member of the Senate in the Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth Legislatures, 1905-07-08, and rounded out twelve years in that body by representing the same district in 1913-15.

On September 8, 1880, Senator Marshall married Miss Elizabeth Tarr, a native of Wellsburg and daughter of Campbell and Nancy (Hammond) Tarr. Her father withdrew from the Richmond convention when Virginia passed her ordinance of secession, and subsequently became a leader in the movement for the creation of West Virginia, and became treasurer of the provisional government and the first treasurer of the new state. Senator Marshall had two children, John and Olive, the latter deceased. John graduated at Yale and West Virginia University, and has earned distinction in the law, business and public affairs at Parkersburg.

GEORGE BARTON LARUE, who represents one of the pioneer families of Preston County, has devoted more than twenty years of his life to a varied service as a miner and mining operator, railroad man, and is now mine foreman of the LaRue By-Products Company of Kingwood.

He was born at Irontown in Taylor County, West Virginia, March 9, 1879, son of Rolando S. and Mary Melissa LaRue, both of whom trace their lineage into the Revolutionary history of America. His father has for many years been a prominent coal operator in West Virginia.

George Barton LaRue spent most of his boyhood at Newburg, where he attended the public schools. When only ten years of age he was acquiring a knowledge of coal mining, though not on the pay roll, under his uncles at the mines on Scotch Hill. When fifteen he began driving a mule in a coal mine, and the following year was promoted to the responsibilities of miner. He dug coal for three years for the Merchants Coal Company at Tunnelton, and for his father's company at West End.

In the meantime Mr. LaRue spent almost a year in the army as a volunteer at the time of the Spanish-American war. He enlisted at Fairmont as a recruit, joined his regiment, the First West Virginia, Company H, at Chickamauga Park, and was in training there and at Knoxville and finally at Columbus, Georgia, where he received his honorable discharge. After leaving the army Mr. LaRue decided to abandon mining and become a railroad man. He went into the service of the Baltimore & Ohio in the Cumberland Division, and for six years was a fireman and for eight years an engineer. Thus fourteen years of his active career were spent in railroad service. He then resumed mining in the employ of the Consolidated Coal Company of Fairmont, but after a few months joined the newly organized LaRue By-Products Company. He opened a new mine on the West Virginia Northern Railway at Tunnelton for this company, and also became financially interested in its operation. The first two years he was assistant foreman under his father, and then succeeded his father as foreman of the mines. The LaRue By-Products Company Mine was operated steadily and continuously until March 23, 1921, when the general business depression caused its shutdown. Mr. LaRue is a stockholder in the Preston Power Coal Company, now the Lick Run Collieries, at Trowbridge. He is a republican in politics, and voted for President McKinley in 1900. He is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Loyal Order of Moose.

At Austen in Preston County June 7, 1899, Mr. LaRue married Hallie Paugh, who was born in Preston County in August, 1879. She is eligible to membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution. Her soldier ancestor was John Hoffman, who was born in Berks County, Pennsylvania, in 1741 and died in Bedford County, Pennsylvania, about 1790. He married Sarah Godwin, and their children were Mrs. Sarah Justine, Elizabeth, who became the wife of J. E. Howard, David and Philip. Philip Hoffman died in 1856. His son, Francis Marion, was born in Preston County, West Virginia, and married Tena Shahan, and he and his wife now lie in the Mount Zion Cemetery in that county. Francis M. Hoffman was a soldier in the Civil war and lost a leg in the service. By his first marriage there were six children, one of whom was Mrs. LaRue's mother, Charity E. Hoffman. She was married to Archibald P. Paugh, who was born near Deer Park, Maryland, at the age of twenty came to Preston County, and during his active career was employed as a worker on public works. He died September 29, 1919, while Mrs. LaRue's mother now lives at St. Clairsville, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Paugh had the following children: Wilbert H., of Grafton; Mrs. Hallie M. LaRue; Goldie M., who died as the wife of Dr. George C. Howard; Waymon W., of Warren, Ohio; Ethel, wife of John Hall, of St. Clairsville, Ohio; Dessie E., wife of William E. Freeman, of St. Clairsville; Lester H., of Youngstown, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. LaRue have two children. Esther M. is now in the junior class of Goucher College at Baltimore. The son, George William, is a student in West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon.

ROY LESTER WEAVER is one of the fortunate farmer citizens of Ritchie County, living at Harrisville, and is now practically retired from the responsibilities of agriculture, since his farm of sixty acres is devoted to the production of oil, there being ten high class wells on it.

Mr. Weaver was born in DeKalb District of Ritchie County, August 26, 1878, son of Jacob and Elzeza (Mason) Weaver, the former a native of Gilmer County and the latter of Ritchie County. His father spent his early life on a farm, had only the advantages of the common schools, but he taught for several years. After his marriage in Gilmer County he located on lands in the woods, cleared it, and in time his prosperity was represented by the ownership of two farms, one of sixty-nine acres and the other of fifty-one acres. All of this land was underlaid with oil and gas. When he left the farm he removed to Webster County, and he died at Huntington, where his widow is still living. He was an active member of the Methodist Church, was affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and is a republican in politics. Of their six children five are living: Roy Lester, Lenond, Brack, Ollie and Berdie.

Roy Lester Weaver spent the first twenty-one years of his life on his father's farm in Gilmer County, shared in its duties while attending school, and he then took up farming as his real vocation. He continued actively as a general farmer until the development of oil was begun on his land. Mr. Weaver has a large revenue from his oil wells, and he is interested as a stockholder in the National Woolen Mills and in another corporation at Charleston. He is one of the good and reliable citizens of Ritchie County, is a republican, and he and his family are members of the United Brethren Church.

On June 1, 1905, he married Miss Maude Stonaker, a native of Gilmer County. Mr. and Mrs. Weaver have eleven children: Overt B., Vergie A., Leo and Leon, twins, Mildred, Orpha, Harley, Blair, Gladys, Evadale, and Roy, Jr.

ALEXANDER G. STRICKLER is a merchant at Ellenboro, and the Strickler family have been prominent in the commercial affairs of that Ritchie County town for a long period of years.

Mr. Strickler was born at Ellenboro May 5, 1877, son of William A. and Tea (McCoy) Strickler. His parents were both natives of Highland County, Virginia, his father being born March 5, 1852, and his mother June 16, 1853. His father spent his early boyhood at Monterey in his native county, and after the Civil war came to Ellenboro, where he passed his majority and where for many years he was active as a merchant. His wife, on leaving Highland County, lived at Petroleum in Ritchie County for a time, was married in Ellenboro, and this became their permanent home. William A. Strickler was elected and served two terms as clerk of the Circuit Court of Ritchie County. He was very active in politics as a democrat, and was appointed by a republican as assistant clerk in the House of Delegates and Senate. He was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, and was a prominent Mason, being a past master of Ellenboro Lodge No. 50, F. and A. M., secretary of the lodge twenty-seven years, was secretary of Odell S. Long Chapter No. 25, R. A. M., recorder of Pennsboro Commandery No. 20, K. T., and was a member of West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg. He was a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and was a member of Grand Tribune of that order when he died. There were three children: Alexander G.; Kathleen, wife of J. B. Underwood; and William, Jr., deceased.

Alexander G. Strickler acquired a public school education at Ellenboro, and as a youth went into the store with his father and eventually became proprietor of the business. He has a large stock of general merchandise and conducts one of the best appointed stores in Ritchie County.

On October 16, 1901, Mr. Strickler married Miss Lena Pierpoint. She is a high school graduate. They have two children: Lenore, born October 6, 1902, and Holtis, born April 26, 1904, both graduates of the Pennsboro High School. The family are members of the Methodist Protestant Church, and Mr. Strickler is one of the trustees. He is a past master of Ellenboro Lodge No. 50, F. and A. M., a past high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter at Pennsboro, a member of the Knight Templar Commandery and is a past worthy patron while Mrs. Strickler is a past worthy matron of the Eastern Star Chapter. He is also a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias. In politics Mr. Strickler is a democrat. Besides his mercantile business he is a stockholder in the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Pennsboro, and is owner of considerable real estate in Clay District of Ritchie County.

HON. CHARLES GORDON COFFMAN, who is engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, is not only one of the representative members of the bar of his native county but also a scion of an old and honored family of this county. He was born on his father's farm in Harrison County, August 30, 1875, and is a son of John Marshall and Cornelia J. (Swiger) Coffman, both of whom likewise were born and reared in this county, where they passed their entire lives, secure in the high regard of all who knew them. The father died at the age of sixty-two and the mother at the age of sixty-eight years, both having been earnest members of the Baptist Church. John Marshall Coffman served as a loyal young soldier of the Union in the Civil war, and in politics he was a staunch supporter of the principles of the republican party. He long held prestige as one of the substantial and progressive agriculturists and stockgrowers of his native county and was influential in community affairs. His parents, John G. and Achsah (Boggers) Coffman, passed their entire lives in Harrison County, the former having been a son of Henry Coffman, who was born and reared at Smithfield, near Uniontown, Pennsylvania, where his father settled upon immigrating to America from his native Germany. Henry Coffman was a pioneer settler in what is now Harrison County, West Virginia, and contributed his quota to the civic and industrial development of this section of the state. Here, about the year 1805, was solemnized his marriage to Miss Elizabeth Robinson, whose father had served as a major in the Continental line in the war of the Revolution and who became one of the very early settlers in what is now Harrison County, West Virginia. Mrs. Cornelia J. (Swiger) Coffman was a daughter of Lennel Swiger, the Swiger family being one of the oldest in Harrison County, where many representatives of the name still reside.

Charles G. Coffman, one of a family of four children, early began to assist in the work of the home farm, and that he made good use of the advantages afforded in the public schools of the locality is indicated by the fact that at the age of seventeen years he became a successful teacher in the rural schools. For six years he continued alternately to teach and attend school, and in 1898 he graduated from Salem College with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He defrayed his own expenses while attending this institution, as did he thereafter while completing his course in the law department of the University of West Virginia, from which he received his degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1904. He was soon afterward admitted to the bar of his native state and initiated his professional career by opening an office at Clarksburg. Here he soon developed a remunerative practice, and here he has continued his successful activities as one of the able and representative members of the Harrison County bar.

Mr. Coffman has been active and influential in the local councils and campaign activities of the republican party, and he was its candidate for mayor of Clarksburg in the election of 1906, but was defeated. In 1908 he was elected to the State Senate, in which he served one term and made a record of loyal support of the interests of his constituent district and of wise legislation in general. From 1904 to 1906 Mr. Coffman was chairman of the republican committee of Harrison County, and from 1916 to 1918, inclusive, he was secretary of the Republican State Central Committee of West Virginia, in which office he showed marked finesse in directing the political forces at his command in the presidential campaign of that year. Mr. Coffman has served continuously since 1905 as a commissioner of chancery for Harrison County, and on the 20th of February, 1922, he was appointed assistant United States District Attorney for the Northern District of West Virginia. He is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Delta Tau Delta college fraternity and the Masonic fraternity, in which last he has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite and is also a member of the Mystic Shrine.

October 14, 1909, Mr. Coffman wedded Miss Alma Earle Haymaker, daughter of Frank B. and Florence G. (Gray) Haymaker, of Harrison County. The two children of this union are Frank Haymaker Coffman and Julia Gray Coffman. Mr. and Mrs. Coffman are members of the Methodist Church.

WILLIAM W. HUME, M. D. A physician who began his work in Raleigh County twenty years ago, Doctor Hume in recent years has withdrawn from general practice and is now a widely known and acknowledged specialist in eye, ear ose and throat diseases at Beckley, and in that field represents some of the highest abilities available in this section of the state.

Doctor Hume was born in Orange County, Virginia, September 21, 1866. He represents a long line of Virginia ancestors, the first of the name coming to this country in 1517. Another branch of the family included the famous Scotch historian and philosopher, David Hume. The parents of Doctor Hume were Dr. Charles E. and Mary E. (Thompson) Hume, natives of Virginia. His father made for himself a place of prominence in his profession. He was in the Confederate army during the Civil war, and he treated both Union and Confederate soldiers in his professional capacity. His home was in the path of both armies, and the soldiers took everything valuable from the place. After the war Dr. Charles Hume settled in Culpeper County, and he and his wife are now deceased.

William W. Hume acquired his early education in the common schools of Culpeper County, and he had to depend on himself for his higher education. For seven years he was engaged in the drug business at Hinton, West Virginia, and left there to begin the study of medicine in the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, where he graduated M. D. in 1901. For four years he did a general country practice in Raleigh County, and then moved to Beckley, and a few years later he began his preparation for his special line of work. During 1914 Doctor Hume was a student of diseases of the nose and throat in the Philadelphia Polyclinic, and took eye and ear courses in the Wills Eye Hospital at Philadelphia. After his return to Beckley he limited his practice to eye, ear, nose and throat. During the war he was a member of the Examining Board. Doctor Hume now has associated with him in practice Dr. J. H. Hoskins, a nephew of Mrs. Hume.

Doctor Hoskins was born April 22, 1892, in Essex County, Virginia, son of W. D. and Ella Hoskins, and during the World war he was commissioned first lieutenant in the Medical Corps, April 10, 1918. He was on duty three weeks at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, and then transferred to the Base Hospital at Camp Karitan, Metuchen, New Jersey, where he received his honorable discharge January 20, 1919. Doctor Hume and Doctor Hoskins are both members of the surgical staff of the Kings Daughters Hospital at Beckley.

In 1903, in Essex County, Virginia, Doctor Hume married Hazel Hundle, daughter of John T. and Sallie (Garrett) Hundle, natives of Virginia. Her father was an educator and a soldier in the Civil war. Doctor Hume and wife have no children of their own, but for a number of years have been deeply interested in the welfare and progress of her sister's children, including Doctor Hoskins. They adopted two of the daughters, Beverly Hoskins Hume and Kathilda Hoskins Hume. Doctor Hume is a member of the Christian Church, is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, votes as a democrat, and is a member of the County and State Medical associations. He and his family live in the finest home at Beckley.

ROBERT M. FRENCH has earned real distinction in the financial life of Raleigh County. Throughout his active manhood he has been in the service of the oldest bank of the county, the Bank of Raleigh, and is now cashier of that institution, which ranks among the strongest banks in his section of the state.

Mr. French was born at Logan, West Virginia, December 7, 1888, son of Millard F. and Ellen (Wilburn) French, both natives of Virginia. His ancestors were soldiers in the Revolution, and his grandfather was Henderson French, a farmer and blacksmith. Millard F. French was a physician, and practiced a number of years at Logan and later at Beckley, where he died in 1908. He was an elder in the Christian Church and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The mother is still living at Beckley.

Robert M. French as a boy attended the common schools at Logan, graduated in 1907 from the State Normal School at Athens, and also spent two years in West Virginia University at Morgantown. About the close of his university career Mr. French entered the Bank of Raleigh as bookkeeper. Two years later he was advanced to assistant cashier, a post he held six years, and since then has been cashier, and for eight years has been one of the bank directors. The Bank of Raleigh was established in 1899, and its stockholders and directors have included many of the most substantial men of Raleigh County. During the World war Mr. French was connected with all the bond drives in Raleigh County.

At Athens, West Virginia, in 1912, he married Hattie L. Vermillion, daughter of S. I. and Rhoda (Bird) Vermillion, natives of West Virginia. Her mother is now deceased. Her father is a surviving Confederate veteran who served with the Virginia Regiment of Cavalry, and among other battles was at Gettysburg. He followed farming as his active vocation. Mr. and Mrs. French have two children, Robert M., Jr., and Elizabeth Ann. The family are members of the Christian Church, and he is a Royal Arch Mason, a Knight of Pythias and a member of the Rotary Club.

WILLIAM N. MACTAGGART. Though he has been an American all these years he can remember, William N. MacTaggart was born in Scotland, and he has some of the pronounced Scotch characteristics. He is conservative, is a man of forceful character, and his associates esteem his judgment and experience as the last resort in practically every matter connected with coal operation and mining engineering. Mr. MacTaggart is the local superintendent and engineer in charge of the vast properties of the Beaver Coal Company, with headquarters at Beckley in Raleigh County.

He was born in the City of Glasgow, January 29, 1868, son of John and Mary (Neilson) MacTaggart. His parents came to the United States about 1870. His father while in Scotland was an accountant for coal mining companies, but in the United States he took up mining as a practical vocation, and was a mine foreman and superintendent, spending one year at Sharon, Pennsylvania, and then removed to the coal district around Jeansville, Pennsylvania. He was killed in a mine accident there in 1881.

William N. MacTaggart attended the common schools of Jeansville, and was only eight years of age when he did his first work at a coal mine, picking slate. This was night work, and he continued to attend school during the day. At the age of eleven he was made trapper and driver, and then successively was employed as trackman, dug coal as a practical miner, served as foreman and superintendent, and with increasing experience in all phases of coal mining he felt the need of a better education, and for two years he pursued an academic course in Grove City College in Western Pennsylvania. Following that he secured a position as rodman with an engineering company, and after mastering the fundamentals of engineering he was made chairman and then transit man. For three years he was in the service of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company as a mining engineer at Hazleton, Pennsylvania. In 1899 he came to West Virginia as mining engineer for the Fairmont Coal Company, and was in the service of this corporation four years.

During a period of almost twenty years since then, Mr. MacTaggart has had his headquarters at Beckley, where he has been superintendent for the Beaver Coal Company. He looks after the property of the company, comprising 50,000 acres of coal and timber lands, producing on the average 3,000,000 tons of coal annually, besides lumber. There are twenty coal companies operating under lease from the Beaver Company. These operating companies are the Raleigh, the Beckley, the Slab Fork, the Sullivan, the E. E. White Coal and Coke Company, the Gulf Smokeless Coal Company, the Bailey-Wood Coal Company, the Pemberton, the McAlpin, the Gulf Coal Company, the Elkhorn Piney Mining Company, Pemberton Fuel Company, Piney Creek Coal Company, Douglas Coal Company, Bowyer Smokeless Coal Company, Ragland Coal Company, Summit Coal Company, Viacova Coal Company, Beard Coal and Coke Company and Battleship Coal Company.

In 1896, at Jeansville, Pennsylvania, Mr. MacTaggart married Bertha Hamer, daughter of William and Bertha

Hamer. Her father was in the coal business in Pennsylvania. The five children of their marriage are Paul, Jean (deceased), Isabel, Margaret and Bertha.

The Beaver Company donated the site at Beckley for the new hospital known as the Kings Daughters Hospital of Beckley. Mr. MacTaggart is a Presbyterian, is a member of the Kiwanis Club and is president of the Beckley Club.

JOHN B. CLIFTON. One of the youngest coal operators in Raleigh County, John B. Clifton as a boy took up railroading, spent several years in growing responsibilities in the railroad service, and had the expert qualifications as a traffic man when he turned to the coal industry. It has been his fortune to associate with prominent men, and among them he is regarded as one of the coming leaders in the coal industry of West Virginia.

Mr. Clifton was born at Ridgeway, Montgomery County, Virginia, July 27, 1891, son of James W. and Mary K. (Kelley) Clifton, both natives of Virginia, and his father a farmer. He is of English ancestry. John B. Clifton attended the common schools of Montgomery County until he was sixteen years of age, then learned telegraphy, and his first assignment of duty was as an operator on the Norfolk & Western. He served with that road from 1907 until 1910, and then became general operator for the Virginia Railway, his duties taking him all over the line. Beginning in 1912, he acted as car distributor for the road, but resigned in 1915 to go into the coal business on the Stone Coal Branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio. At that time he became part owner of the Beckley Smokeless Coal Company. He sold his interest in that organization in 1919, and since then has helped organize and has been active as a business representative and as a member of producing and sales companies operating in the Raleigh County field. These include the Raleigh Smokeless Coal Company, Guyan Collieries Company, Wilton Smokeless Coal Company, Wood-Peck Fuel Company, Red Ash Coal Company. Mr. Clifton also has interests in South America, the Raleigh Smokeless Fuel Company maintaining an office at Rio Janeiro, Brazil.

In 1914, at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, he married Miss Nellie King, daughter of Robert and Naomi King, of Beckley. Their two children are John B., Jr., and Ruth. Mr. Clifton is a Presbyterian, a member of the Masonic Lodge, the Kiwanis Club and in politics is a democrat.

HUGH JARVIS, vice president of the Union National Bank in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, has been one of the two men primarily influential in the upbuilding of this institution, which is one of the most substantial and important in his native county. Mr. Jarvis was born on a farm near Shinnston, this county, December 16, 1870, and is one of a family of seven children born to Lemuel D. and Martha (McCann) Jarvis. The father long held prestige as one of the progressive exponents of agricultural and live-stock industry in this section of the state, was influential in public affairs in the community and served as sheriff of the county. He was seventy-seven years of age at the time of his death. His parents were Joseph and Lucy (Beall) Jarvis, and his paternal grandfather was Solomon Jarvis, who came from Maryland and settled in what is now Harrison County, West Virginia, as early as 1788, when this section was little more than a frontier wilderness. The family name has been closely and worthily linked with civic and material development and progress in the county during the long intervening years. Mrs. Martha (McCann) Jarvis still maintains her home at Clarksburg, has been a resident of Harrison County from the time of her birth and is now one of the most venerable and loved native daughters of the county, she being in her eighty-ninth year at the time of this writing, in 1921. Her parents, James and Achsah J. (Price) McCann, were sterling pioneers of the county.

Hugh Jarvis was a mere boy at the time of the family removal from the farm to Clarksburg, the county seat, where he profited fully by the advantages of the public schools. As a youth he entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, with which he continued in service several years, during the greater part of which he was cashier at the Clarksburg station. Later he received appointment to the position of deputy clerk of Harrison County, and he initiated his banking career by accepting the position of cashier of the West Union Bank at West Union, Doddridge County. In 1900 he became associated with Paul M. Robinson, of whom individual mention is made on other pages, in organizing and founding the People's Banking & Trust Company at Clarksburg, with Mr. Jarvis as cashier. Later Messrs. Jarvis and Robinson became actively concerned in the organization and incorporation of the Union National Bank of Clarksburg, in 1905, and the new institution absorbed the business of the People's Banking & Trust Company and also that of the Traders National Bank of Clarksburg. The consolidation proved a stroke of business expedience and good judgment, as is attested by the splendid success that has attended the Union National Bank, of which both Mr. Jarvis and Mr. Robinson became vice presidents at the time of incorporation. Under their direct and effective management and progressive policies the bank has become one of the largest and strongest financial institutions in Northern West Virginia. In 1912 the bank erected for its own occupancy a handsome and modern office building, known as the Union Bank Building, and the same would be a credit to a city of first metropolitan rank.

Aide from his banking interests Mr. Jarvis is the owner of valuable farm property and is one of the many extensive cattle-growers of Harrison County. He has other capitalistic investments of important order, and takes deep interest in all that concerns the welfare and progress of his home city and native county. In the York Rite of the Masonic fraternity his maximum affiliation is with the local Commandery of Knights Templar, and he has received the thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, besides being a member of the Mystic Shrine. He and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In the year 1900 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Jarvis and Miss Harriet Maxwell, a daughter of Porter and Columbia C. (Post) Maxwell, and the children of this union are three in number.

THOMAS E. BIBB spent a score of years in the lumber and coal industry, but finally turned all his energies and his capital to merchandising and has built up in the Beckley Hardware Company one of the most successful wholesale organizations in this rich and populous section of the state.

Mr. Bibb was born in Fayette County, West Virginia, in August, 1865. His grandfather Bibb was born and reared in Amherst County, Virginia, moved to West Virginia about 1830, and served in the Civil war. He married a Miss Gatewood, of English ancestry. One of their sons was Rev. Martin Bibb, widely known all over the South as a minister of the Baptist Church. Thomas E. Bibb's parents were Benjamin and Mary (Wilson) Bibb, natives of Virginia. His father, who was a farmer and school teacher, served for sixteen years as superintendent of schools of Fayette County, and is still living, at the age of eighty-four.

Thomas E. Bibb acquired all his education in Fayette County, and his father was his chief teacher. He left school at the age of twenty and went to work on the farm, then engaged in the lumber and timber business, and for seventeen years was connected with the coal industry as sales agent at Rush Run and Royal in Raleigh County. He then returned to the lumber industry for three years, and in 1910 located at Beckley and established the Beckley Hardware and Furniture Company. His business is now the largest wholesale house in this great coal district, and there is no larger house nearer than Charleston.

On April 10, 1888, in Fayette County, Mr. Bibb married Ella M. Love, daughter of S. H. and Lucy (Dickerson) Love, both of Fayette County, where her father was a farmer and school teacher. Mr. and Mrs. Bibb have reared an interesting family. There were six children, Edgar E.,

Hugh Loomis

Carlyn A., Mildred, James B. and Clarence. Harry is deceased. The two sons, Edgar and Carlyn, have become actively associated with their father in business, and both are sterling young business men and citizens of Beckley. Edgar married Ella Campbell, daughter of a former sheriff of Raleigh County. Carlyn, who is unmarried, is road salesman for the Beckley Hardware Company. In October, 1917, he entered Camp Lee for training, was sent for a time to Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and then returned to Camp Lee, and in June, 1918, went overseas. For six weeks he was in the Argonne Forest fighting.

Mr. Bibb is a Baptist, is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Mason and Shriner, and his sons Edgar and Carlyn are also Masons and Shriners. In politics he is a democrat. The family are prominent socially in Beckley.

JOHN WYSOR DAVIN is a young man who has won consecutive advancement in connection with railroad service, and is now chairman of the car-allotment commission of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, with official headquarters at the passenger station building of this railway in the City of Huntington. He still resides in the old homestead of the family at Montgomery, Fayette County, where he was born on the 10th of March, 1892.

John Davin, father of him whose name initiates this review, was born in Ireland, in 1848, and died at Montgomery, West Virginia, in 1912. His father, Michael Davin, was born in Ireland, in 1810, and died near Booneville, Missouri, in 1899, he having immigrated with his family to the United States about the year 1849, and having become a farmer near Latonia, Kentucky, whence in 1874 he removed to Missouri and settled near Booneville, where he became a specially successful farmer and where he and his wife passed the residue of their lives. John Davin was an infant at the time of the family removal from the Emerald Isle to the United States, and grew to adult age on the home farm in Kentucky. He did not go to Missouri with his father, but came to West Virginia and assisted in the construction of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. Later he engaged in the coal business at Montgomery as a pioneer operator in the coal fields of that district, and he was one of the influential citizens and business men of Montgomery at the time of his death. He was a democrat in politics. He married Miss Mary E. Montgomery, who was born in Virginia in 1859, and whose death occurred at Montgomery, West Virginia, in 1920. Of their children the firstborn was Charles Ashley, who died in 1881, in infancy; Miss Florence E. remains at the old home in Montgomery; Harlow A. resides at Logan, this state, and is an assistant superintendent in the employ of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company; Lottie is the wife of Dr. Horace H. Smalldridge, a representative dentist in the City of Charleston; Annie is the wife of Lon G. Smalldridge, a merchant in the City of Tacoma, Washington; John W., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; Thomas L. remains in the old home town of Montgomery, and represents the Bankers Life Insurance Company; and Miss Margaret remains at the old home in that place.

In the public schools of Montgomery John W. Davin acquired his early education, and there also he attended the branch school of the University of West Virginia. In 1909 he became yard clerk for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company at Handley, Kanawha County, and his ability and effective service eventually led to his promotion to be position of local car distributor in the Kanawha coal district. In 1916 he was transferred to Huntington, and later in the same year was here promoted to the position of chief car distributor. In June, 1919, he resigned this place and became traffic manager for the Amherst Fuel Company at Lundale, Logan County, but in December of the following year he resigned this post and resumed his alliance with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, for which he has since served as chairman of the car allotment commission, with executive headquarters in the City of Huntington.

Mr. Davin takes loyal interest in public affairs and is independent in politics. He is affiliated with Coal Valley Lodge No. 74, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Montgomery, where also he is a member of Fayette Lodge

No. 29, Knights of Pythias, besides which he is a member of Charleston Lodge No. 202, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in the capital city of the state.

STANLEY ERNEST BRADLEY, of Huntington, is assistant division engineer of the State Road Commission of West Virginia, and is giving in this position very effective service in the connection with the construction and maintenance of good roads in his native state. He is familiarly known by his second rather than his first personal name.

S. Ernest Bradley was born at Nelson, Boone County, West Virginia, February 4, 1888. His father, Samuel E. Bradley, who resides at Madison, that county, was born in Raleigh County in 1863, and is a son of John D. Bradley, who was born in Boone County, June 18, 1833, and died May 13, 1922. He was a retired farmer who passed the major part of his active life in Raleigh County. He was a republican in politics, was a Union veteran of the Civil war, and served in various local offices of public order. His wife, whose name was Martha Pauley, is also deceased.

Samuel E. Bradley was a young man at the time when he established his residence in Boone County, and there he was a school teacher for a number of years. He became a skilled civil engineer, and as such continued in active professional work until 1893, after which he served as county sheriff of Boone County until 1896. He then became clerk of the Circuit Court for that county, a position which he retained until 1902. Thereafter he was engaged in civil-engineering work until 1912, since which year he has been actively engaged in the coal business, as an operator whose mining interests are now of broad scope. He is president of the Madison National Bank, is a republican and has been influential in civic and political affairs in Boone County. He is affiliated with the York Rite bodies of the Masonic fraternity, and in the Scottish Rite has attained the thirty-second degree, besides which he is affiliated with the Mystic Shrine. He served one year as grand patriarch of the West Virginia Grand Encampment of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which fraternity he had the distinction of being a representative of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the World from the Grand Lodge of his home state for two years. He was a member of the first board of directors of the Odd Fellows Home at Elkins, this state. He is a certified member of the American Association of Engineers, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

In Boone County was solemnized the marriage of Samuel E. Bradley and Miss Nannie J. Hunter, who was born in that county in 1864, a daughter of the late Rev. Robert Hunter, who was a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and also a successful farmer. His death occurred in 1907. The subject of this review is the younger of the two children of his parents, and his sister, Miss Hattie May, remains at the parental home.

In the rural schools of his native county and the public schools at Madison, the county seat, S. Ernest Bradley acquired his early education, besides which he took special studies during several successive summer seasons. From 1903 to 1908 he attended Marshall College, and he then studied the technical and practical details of civil engineering under the effective preceptorship of his father. In the spring of 1917 he became a coal operator, in which connection he organized and became general manager of the Boone Block Coal Company, with headquarters at Silsah, Boone County. In October of the same year he sold his interest in this company and entered the nation's service in connection with the World war. As a sergeant of the first class in the aviation service he was stationed at Morrison, Virginia, until February, 1918, when he was transferred to Little Silver, New Jersey. Thence he was transferred to Langley Field in Virginia, and later was again in service at Morrison, that state. In July, 1918, he entered the Officers' Training School at Camp Lee, Virginia, and in this school, which was transferred to Camp Humphreys, that state, he was graduated in September, 1918, and given rank as second lieutenant of engineers in the United States Army. He was assigned to duty with troops at Camp

Humphreys, and in October of the same year was transferred to Camp Leach, Washington, D. C., where he received his honorable discharge November 29, 1918.

Thereafter he was engaged in practice as a civil engineer at Madison in his native county until March 1, 1919, when he received appointment to the position of assistant division engineer with the West Virginia State Roads Commission, and was assigned to the Charleston office. On the 1st of the following month he was transferred to Huntington, at the opening of Roads Division No. 2, with headquarters in this city, where the offices of the commission are in the Robson-Prichard Building.

Mr. Bradley is a republican, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and he holds membership in the Huntington Council of the Gideons, is secretary of the local chapter of the American Association of Engineers, and is also a member of Huntington Post No. 16, American Legion. His Masonic affiliations are as here noted: Odell Lodge No. 115, A. F. and A. M., at Madison; Tyrian Chapter No. 13, R. A. M., at Charleston; Kanawha Commandery No. 9, Knights Templars, in the same city; Feramoze Grotto at Huntington; and Benikodem Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Charleston.

November 29, 1919, recorded the marriage of Mr. Bradley and Miss Ada M. Davis, daughter of Walter and Nannie (Crump) Davis, of Huntington, where the father died in 1907 and where the widowed mother still resides. Mrs. Bradley is a graduate of Marshall College at Huntington, and prior to her marriage she had made a splendid record as a successful teacher in the public schools, her service having been in Kenova, Milton, Logan, and in the city schools of Huntington.

WILLIAM GOFF HOLSWADE is a prominent West Virginia financier and business man, and is founder and treasurer of the Security Savings Company of Huntington, and active in real estate and other lines of business in that city.

He represents one of the older families of West Virginia. His great-great-grandfather Holswade was a German soldier under Napoleon in many of the campaigns of the Napoleonic era. He died from the effects of wounds received in the battle of Ansterlitz. His son, Frederick Holswade, was of Alsatian ancestry, was born in a Rhine province of Germany in 1819, and in 1834 came to the United States. He located in Lewis County, West Virginia, and became a successful farmer and stock raiser there. He died at Spencer, West Virginia, in 1876. His wife, Martha Alkire, was born at Janelow, Lewis County, in 1819, and died at Spencer in 1904. John M. Holswade, father of the Huntington business man, was born at Spencer, August 13, 1853, and has spent all his life in that community. He acquired an excellent education under private tutors, and during his mature career has given attention to his extensive farming interests and for a number of years has been a grower of pure bred Hereford cattle. He is a democrat, a leading member of the Methodist Protestant Church, and a Royal Arch Mason. John M. Holswade married Emma Kate Goff, who was born at Spencer, May 12, 1866, and died at Huntington, January 19, 1914. William Goff is her oldest child. Harry S., who follows in his father's footsteps as a farmer and stock dealer at Spencer, was a captain in the One Hundred and Fiftieth Infantry, Thirty-eighth Division, with the American Forces in France, where he spent a year. Alice Isabelle is the wife of Thomas M. Brady, a civil engineer, living at Sistersville, West Virginia.

William Goff Holswade was born at Spencer, Roane County, West Virginia, December 2, 1882. He graduated from the Spencer High School in June, 1901, completed his junior year in West Virginia University at Morgantown, and in 1905 accepted the opportunity to learn banking as a clerk in the Bank of Spencer. His abilities and diligence were duly rewarded and he was promoted to assistant cashier. After leaving the bank in 1907 he served one year as paymaster for the West Virginia and Maryland Gas Company at Cumberland, Maryland. For a short time he was with the Philadelphia Company of Pittsburgh, and then, returning to his native state, he organized at Walton in Roane County the Poca Valley Bank. He was cashier and active executive officer of this institution for eight years, and is still a director. Mr. Holswade transferred his financial interests and home to Huntington in 1916, when he organized the Security Savings Company, of which he is treasurer. The other executive officers of this company are William R. Thomas, president, and Dan H. Holton, vice president. The company occupies the ground floor of the Holswade Building at 317 Ninth Street. Mr. Holswade is also president of the Holswade Land Company, and he and his cousin, J. Fred Holswade, own jointly the Holswade Building, a seven-story office building, one of the prominent structures of the Huntington business district. Mr. Holswade owns a large amount of other real estate in Huntington, including a modern home on Circular Drive, Spring Hill. He is unmarried, is a democrat, is affiliated with Huntington Lodge No. 313, B. P. O. E., and is a member of the Guyardotte Club and the Huntington Country Club.

W. G. WILSON is an attorney by profession, and he carried on a prosperous practice as a lawyer at Elkins during its village days. A resident of the town and city for over thirty years, he has been a prominent factor in all its growth and progress. He is best known, however, as a banker, and from the inception of the Davis Trust Company more than twenty years ago has been the managing official of that, one of the most prosperous banking and trust companies of the state.

Mr. Wilson was born December 20, 1864, at Fairmont, Marion County, son of Isaac and Harriet (Wilson) Wilson. His parents had the same family name but were not related before their marriage. They were born, reared and married in Pennsylvania, and soon afterward moved to West Virginia.

W. G. Wilson was one of eight children, and as a boy attended the public schools at Fairmont and later completed his education in the State Normal School. He pursued the study of law for a time in West Virginia University, and left there before completing his course and for three years lived in the western states of Kansas and Colorado, where he was in the real estate business. On returning to West Virginia he resumed the study of law under Judge Morrow at Fairmont. He was admitted to the bar there in 1889, and in March, 1890, located at Elkins, some ten years before it became the county seat of Randolph County. That period of ten years sufficed to give him a sterling reputation as a lawyer and also brought him association with some of the prominent interests in Elkins.

The Davis Trust Company was established in 1901. The first president was United States Senator H. G. Davis. The vice president was United States Senator Stephen B. Elkins. However both of these distinguished statesmen had little to do with the practical management, which developed upon Mr. W. G. Wilson, who became vice president, secretary and treasurer and active manager. The purpose of organizing the Trust Company was to handle the estates of T. B. Davis, Senator H. G. Davis and Senator Elkins. These were probably the largest estates ever settled in West Virginia by any trust company. The company is capitalized at $250,000, pays regular dividends, has accumulated a surplus of about a quarter of a million and has resources of approximately $2,000,000. Mr. Wilson from the first has been the real manager of the company and has been its president since about 1911.

For many years he has been a leader in the republican party of his district and state. In 1900 he was elected to the House of Delegates, and served as speaker in the session of 1901. He was closely associated with the management of the senatorial campaign of the late Senator S. B. Elkins as well as the campaign of Davis Elkins, the present United States senator. Mr. Wilson was a delegate to the republican convention at Chicago in 1920, when Mr. Harding was nominated for President.

Mr. Wilson is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner. He married in 1908 Miss Mabel Fout, daughter of the late John Fout, long a prominent merchant at Elkins.

W. H. H. H.

JOHN WESLEY LUTHER, a former member of the State senate of West Virginia, had the distinction of establishing at Welch the first undertaking business in McDowell County, and he has here continued in this line of business since 1903, besides which he was a stockholder and the resident of the Welch Furniture Company.

Mr. Luther was born on a farm on Twelve Pole Creek, Wayne County, West Virginia, July 26, 1874, and is a son of David H. and Rebecca K. (Stock) Luther, the former of whom died at the venerable age of eighty-four years, on the day that Col. Theodore Roosevelt was elected president of the United States. Mrs. Luther was born in 1835, and her death occurred January 13, 1919. Her first husband was Wesley Harman, and two children were born of this union. As the wife of David H. Luther she became the mother of seven children. Of the children of the second marriage John Wesley and George B. were twins, the latter having lost his life in an automobile accident January 16, 1921, at Huntington, in which city he was associated with the Huntington Lumber & Supply Company.

The Luther family was founded in what is now West Virginia at the time when Gen. George Washington was engaged in making surveys, and thus few families in this section of the original Old Dominion commonwealth can claim prior pioneer honors. The original representatives of the family came here from the State of New York, and the genealogical line traces back to sterling German and Irish stock. Settlement was made by the Luthers in the present Wayne County, West Virginia, and there both David H. Luther and his wife were born. Representatives of the family have been residents of the Ceredo and Twelve Pole Creek districts of Wayne County and also of the City of Huntington. David H. Luther was a gallant soldier of the Union during virtually the entire period of the Civil war, and gained the rank of sergeant. He was a republican in political adherence, and his wife was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

John W. Luther gained his early education in a log schoolhouse not far distant from the old homestead in Wayne County, and at the age of nineteen years he went to Chautauque, Kansas, and found employment in the service of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, in which connection he was finally made track foreman and placed in charge of a work train. He remained nearly three years in the Sunflower State, and upon his return to West Virginia he became an attendant in the Spencer Hospital. Two years later he was given general supervision of this institution, and in this office he served effectively for a term of five years, within which he gave special attention to the study of anatomy. In 1903 he passed a successful examination in anatomy before the state board, as a prerequisite to establishing himself in the undertaking business. Later, in the year 1910, he attended the Barnes School of Anatomy and Sanitary Science in the City of Chicago, in which institution he took a post-graduate course in 1912.

In 1903 Mr. Luther came to Welch, where he soon afterward formed a partnership with C. D. and R. G. Brewster and engaged in the furniture and undertaking business, he being the technical and executive manager of the undertaking and funeral-directing department. In 1910 the business was incorporated under the title of the Welch Furniture Company. Mr. Luther has conducted an independent undertaking enterprise since January 3, 1918, with an establishment which is of modern standard in equipment, facilities and service.

Mr. Luther has taken lively interest in political affairs, served two years as a member of the city council of Welch, and has been notable for progressiveness and public spirit. He has been influential in the local councils and campaign activities of the republican party, and in 1916 was elected to represent his district in the State Senate, in which he made a record of effective service in behalf of wise legislation, he having been a member of the Senate committees on finance, public institutions and railroads during the first legislative session, and in 1919 having been a member of the finance committee, the sanitation committee and the insurance and compensation committee, of which last he was chairman.

In the Masonic fraternity Mr. Luther is a past master of the Blue Lodge and has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge of West Virginia, and he is a member also of the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons in his home city, besides which he is a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and served fifteen years as secretary of its lodge at Welch. He is affiliated also with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Junior Order United American Mechanics, is an influential member of the Welch Chamber of Commerce, and attends and supports the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which his wife is a member.

November 6, 1901, recorded the marriage of Mr. Luther and Miss Minnie Waren, who was born in Roane County, this state, a daughter of Rev. D. B. Waren, a retired clergyman of the Methodist Protestant Church. Mr. and Mrs. Luther have no children.

RICHARD C. FERGUSON. The natural resources of West Virginia are practically limitless, for new sources of wealth are being discovered all the time by men of science and research, thus affording ample scope for the advancement of capable and energetic persons. One of the industries of more recent growth is the manufacture of wood alcohol for development plants, and one of the men who, as operating manager for the wood alcohol plant of the Huntington Gas and Development Company, of Huntington, West Virginia, has made a name for himself, is Richard C. Ferguson, of Dingess, Wayne County. He was born in Frederick County, Maryland, February 18, 1873, a son of Samuel T. and Emma (Cromwell) Ferguson.

Samuel T. Ferguson was born at Washington, D. C., a son of William P. Ferguson, who served in the Union army during the entire war between the North and the South. Emma Cromwell was born in Maryland. Richard C. Ferguson comes of Maryland and Virginian stock, and on his grandmother's side his ancestors settled in Virginia in 1732. There is Scotch-Irish and French stock in the families, the last named being of the Huguenot strain, which was established in the American Colonies when the religious persecutions drove all Protestants out of France. Samuel T. Ferguson was a clergyman of the Methodist Protestant Church, and held charges at Newmarket, Maryland, Mardella Springs, Maryland, for four years each in Franklin and Bedford counties, Pennsylvania, and Finksburg, Maryland, and for four years at Libertytown, Maryland, where he died in 1889.

Richard C. Ferguson attended public schools in Pennsylvania and Maryland through the grammar grades, the high school at Libertytown, Maryland, and West Maryland College at Westminster, Maryland. Entering upon a business career, he was for about ten years an accountant and general office worker at Baltimore, and then came to West Virginia as bookkeeper and paymaster for a lumber company at Camden on Grauley, remaining with this concern until 1909, when he went with the Cherry River Boom and Lumber Company at Holcomb, West Virginia, and was in charge of their lumber operations there for ten years. After leaving college at Westminster, Mr. Ferguson took a short course in chemistry at a night school in Baltimore. Leaving the Cherry River people, he took charge of the construction and completion of a wood alcohol and sawmill plant, and put the same into operation at Sutton, West Virginia. Sixteen months later, having completed his contract, he engaged with his present company to look after the construction of their wood alcohol plant at Dingess, and after its completion was made operating manager. The plant has six retorts, each with a capacity of ten cords of wood, which are charged six times each week, obtaining from ten to twelve gallons of wood alcohol from each cord of wood, beside the acetate of lime and charcoal, of which latter substance there is about fifty bushels from each cord of wood. The company has a supply of wood for fifty years to come.

In 1910 Mr. Ferguson married at Fairmont, West Virginia, Sue Strother, a daughter of Elihu and Letitia (Carr) Strother, farming people, both natives of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson have one daughter, Letitia. They belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Ferguson is a Chapter Mason, and plans to continue in the work of his fraternity. He also belongs to the Knights of Pythias, Junior Order United Mechanics, and is a charter member of his Council, and one of the few men now living who entered this order during the first years of its existence.

While Mr. Ferguson is thoroughly grounded in his profession, he has also a practical experience that is very valuable to him and that enables him to overcome obstacles as nothing else could. His duties are heavy, but he does not neglect his civic responsibilities, and lives up to a high conception of American citizenship and sets an excellent example in his business and private life.

BARNEY L. KIDD is one of the prominent young business men of Logan County, and at the age of thirty has attained business responsibilities that would do credit to a man much older. His experience has been almost altogether in the lumbering industry, and he is superintendent of two large plants in this typical coal field of Southern West Virginia.

He was born at St. Albans, Kanawha County, West Virginia, April 6, 1891, son of T. J. and Mary A. (Thomas) Kidd. His grandfather was a native of old Virginia and of French ancestry, while his mother's people were English. Both parents were born in West Virginia, and his father has been active in the lumber business in Fayette County, and in the various localities where he has lived has always taken a great interest in public affairs. He has served as a school trustee, is a member of the Masonic Order, and is a leader in the Baptist Church, acting for years as superintendent of the Sunday school.

Barney L. Kidd attended common schools in Kanawha County and in several other counties, and graduated in 1909 at the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg. After a few months employment in a law office he began his active experience in the lumber business with the Boone Timber Company at Clothier, West Virginia. He was chief inspector for that firm for two and one-half years, was then inspector for two years, with headquarters at Huntington, for the Peytona Lumber Company, was inspector at Aceoville about two and one-half years, and then came to his present location at Omar in Logan County, where he is superintendent of the company's operations, comprising two complete sawmills, planing mill, dry kilns and flooring plant. One complete sawmill is located at Christian in Logan County. The mills have a capacity of about 65,000 feet of finished product daily. This product is shipped from the plants to various points throughout the United States.

Mr. Kidd married in 1913, at Pomeroy, Ohio, Miss Ruth Martin, daughter of James A. and Mary Martin. Her parents were both born in West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Kidd have two children, Geraldine Martin and Dona Gene. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

LUTHER WILLIAM HELMINTOLLER, superintendent of the Buffalo Thacker Coal Company at Chattaroy, Mingo County, has run the full gamut of experience in connection with the coal-mining industry, his first work having been as a trapper boy when he was but ten years of age.

Mr. Helmintholler was born at Ronceverte, Greenbrier County, West Virginia, on the 17th of August, 1893, and is a son of William B. and Margaret (Morgan) Helmintholler, the former of whom was born in Alleghany County, Virginia, and the latter in Greenbrier County, West Virginia, where their marriage was solemnized. Mrs. Helmintholler passed to the life eternal on the 3d of March, 1919, at the age of fifty-four years. William B. Helmintholler was engaged in farm enterprise for a number of years, and for fifteen years thereafter he was identified with public work in Raleigh County, this state. He is a republican and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as was also his wife. He now, at the age of sixty-eight years (1922) is living retired in the home of his son Luther W., of this review, who was fourth in a family of twelve children, of whom eight are living.

Luther W. Helmintholler gained his early education in the public schools of Greenbrier and Raleigh counties, but early began to do practical work also in connection with coal mining, as noted in the preceding paragraph. By his mine work he earned the money to defray his course in the Dunsmore Business College, Staunton, Virginia. His first mine service was in Raleigh County, and he has since held various progressive positions in different mines, besides having had charge of general stores conducted by mining companies. His work has been in Raleigh, Logan, Boone, Kanawha, McDowell and Mingo counties, and his ambition and effective service gained to him consecutive advancement, as is shown by the fact that he became a mine superintendent when he was but twenty-three years of age. He has been a constant reader and student concerning matters pertaining to the coal industry, and has well earned the success which is his. He was with Jack Dalton in the World war period, and had charge of three mines on Coal River in Boone County. By thus spurring the production of coal he made effective contribution to the nation's war cause, the fuel production having been one of major importance. He has been associated with the Buffalo Thacker Coal Company in the capacity of superintendent at Chattaroy since August, 1920. He is a republican, is affiliated with the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic fraternity at Bramwell, and in the Scottish Rite Consistory at Wheeling he has received the thirty-second degree, besides which he is a member of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, the Lodge of Elks at Huntington, and the Lodge of Knights of Pythias at Pocahontas, Virginia.

In 1916 Mr. Helmintholler married Miss Lillian White, daughter of Charles H. White, of Maybeury, McDowell County, and they have one daughter, Mary.

DUNCAN CRUIKSHANKS KENNEDY. Through the successive steps of mine worker, mine union official, mine superintendent and mine operator Duncan Cruikshanks Kennedy in the thirty years of his residence in West Virginia has attained a distinctive power and leadership in this foremost industry of the state. Rather remarkable is the fact that his prestige is hardly less among the miners themselves than with the coal operators. Mr. Kennedy is secretary-commissioner of the Kanawha Coal Operators Association, with home and headquarters at Charleston.

He was born in Fifehire, Scotland, in 1873. He grew up in a mining district of Scotland, and while he acquired a good common school education he went to work in the coal mines of that country as a boy. He was still only eighteen when in 1891 he came to the United States. Since then his work and experience have been in West Virginia. He began as a miner at Prince, Fayette County, in the New River coal fields, under James Kay, one of the pioneer operators in that district. In time he became mine foreman for John Laing at Caperton and Brooklin, but subsequently returned to the mines as a miner. In 1901 Mr. Kennedy was made sub-district president of the United Mine Workers of America for the New River District. A year later he was elected president of District No. 17, which at that time embraced all of West Virginia.

When the Kanawha Coal Operators Association was organized in 1904 he accepted the post of first secretary, and for seventeen years he has been the responsible executive official in achieving the essential purposes of that organization. It is one of the largest and strongest operators' associations in the state, embracing the great corporations and companies whose mines are in the Kanawha Valley.

Besides his duties as secretary and commissioner of the association Mr. Kennedy is an independent coal operator. He organized the Anchor Coal Company and opened its mines at Highcoal in 1913. He has since sold his interest in this industry. He is a stockholder, director and member of the executive committee of the American Eagle Colliery Company in Raleigh County, director of the Hopkins Fork Coal Company in Boone County; vice president and director of the Imperial Smokeless Coal Company in the New River District of Greenbrier County.

Perhaps the most striking evidence of his power and prestige in the coal industry is found in the fact that from the time he became manager of the Kanawha Coal Op-miners Association in 1904 until about 1919 there was not strike or serious trouble of any kind among the miners employed by the companies embraced in the association. Mr. Kennedy came by his authority in a way to command respect and allegiance. He was a miner himself for many years, knows and appreciates the miner's standpoint, understands the personal factors and problems of the industry fully as well, if not better, than the workers themselves, and he possesses that broad sympathy and understanding that are the essence of the Golden Rule in industrial affairs. In a number of occasions, particularly in the year 1914, Mr. Kennedy represented the coal operators as a commissioner in the settlement and arbitration of disputes. Here his advice, counsel and decisions were of the greatest benefit to both sides. He is one of the very few operators whose official acts as a commissioner and arbitrator have received unstinted commendation from the miners themselves.

Mr. Kennedy was a member of the Board of Directors of Miners Hospital No. 2 at McKendree by appointment of Governor M. O. Dawes. He served as a member of the first board of examiners under John Laing, chief of the Department of Mines of West Virginia. During his earlier life in West Virginia Mr. Kennedy had his home at Gatewood in Fayette County, but for several years past has been a popular resident of Charleston. He is a member of the Board of Deacons of the First Presbyterian Church and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner.

By his marriage to Miss Eunice Martha Rodes he is the father of four children, Jean, John C., Harry G. and Duncan C., Jr. The son John is a graduate of the University of West Virginia and now a student in Jefferson Medical College, preparing for a medical career. Harry is a student of engineering in West Virginia University.

CLEVELAND M. SEIBERT, mayor of Martinsburg, is a prominent young lawyer of that city, and among other public services was three times a member of the Legislature. Mr. Seibert was born on a farm in the Arden District of Berkeley County, and his forefathers have dwelt in that region, chiefly as farmers and land owners, for generations, running back to pioneer days. The original spelling of his family name was Sybert, and another variation in spelling it is Siebert. One of the early settlers of Berkeley County was Wendell Seibert, who came from Pennsylvania. He had a stone house built prior to 1800 is still standing and occupied by some of his descendants. His son was born in the same locality, and there also was born George Wendell Seibert, grandfather of the Martinsburg lawyer. The father, Wendell Seibert, was born at the old homestead, and succeeded to its ownership and was a prosperous farmer. During the Civil war he entered the Confederate army in company B. of the First Virginia Cavalry, and from private as promoted to second corporal. He was with the command in its many hard fought battles, including the first battle of Manassas, the seven days fighting around Richmond, Fredericksburg, second Manassas, Antietam, Gettysburg, Spotsylvania Court House, and at Chancellorsville as severely wounded, a bone in his arm being fractured. His bullet was removed and is now in the possession of his son Cleveland M. Wendell Seibert died at the old homestead in 1884, a few weeks before the birth of his son Cleveland. The latter's mother was Harriet Kilmer, a native of Berkeley County and daughter of John Kilmer, who moved from Pennsylvania to Berkeley County and bought a farm, where he spent the rest of his life. Harriet Kilmer Seibert was left a widow with eight children, and carefully reared and educated them. She died in 1909.

Cleveland M. Seibert grew up on the homestead, attended district schools, a private military school at Martinsburg and later entered the law department of West Virginia University, where he graduated when in his twenty-first year. He was admitted to the bar on attaining his majority, and had a widely varied and profitable practice in both state and Federal courts.

At the age of twenty-five Mr. Seibert married Elizabeth Trammel, a native of Martinsburg and daughter of Jacob and Maude (Hollman) Trammel. To their marriage were born three children, Harriet Ann, Cleveland M., Jr., and Philip T.

Mr. Seibert is a member of the Berkeley County and West Virginia State Bar associations, is affiliated with Martinsburg Lodge No. 378, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Robert White Lodge No. 67, F. and A. M., a member of the Knight Templar Commandery, the Scottish Rite Consistory at Wheeling and also Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling. He is a member of Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, and Tuscarora Tribe No. 50, Improved Order of Red Men. Mr. Seibert cast his first presidential vote in 1908 for Mr. Bryan. The same year he was a successful candidate for the House of Delegates, and was the youngest member of the House at the following session. He was re-elected in 1910 and in 1912, and during his three terms was an active and useful member, both on the several committees to which he was assigned and on the floor of the House. In 1920 Mr. Seibert had the distinction of being unanimously chosen by the city council as mayor of Martinsburg, the majority of the council being republicans.

PAUL H. MARTIN, clerk of the County Court of Berkeley County, has been a practicing lawyer in the courts of the Eastern Panhandle for ten years, and is one of the progressive leaders in that community.

He was born at Kingwood, Preston County, son of Joseph Ami and Mary Catherine (Snyder) Martin, grandson of Joseph and Ann (Foreman) Martin and great-grandson of Philip Martin, who was a son of John Martin. Paul Martin's mother, Mary Catherine Snyder, was a daughter of Jacob and Clarissa (Carroll) Snyder and granddaughter of Jacob Snyder. Clarissa Carroll was a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Hawley) Carroll.

Joseph Ami Martin was born on a farm a mile from Kingwood, and made the best of his limited opportunities to secure an education. On leaving the farm he removed to Kingwood, where for twenty-two years he held the office of clerk of the County Court of Preston County, finally declining to serve longer. He then turned his attention to railroad building. His first experience was in changing what is now the West Virginia Railroad from a narrow to a standard gauge. He then built fifteen miles of railroad extending from Morgantown to Kingwood, and was in operating charge until the property was sold to Senator Elkins. He also built an electric line running out of Morgantown, following which he organized the company and built the first eight miles of railroad connecting Morgantown with Dunkard Valley, thus opening a large and undeveloped district. With this busy program completed he retired and lived at Morgantown until his death in 1917, at the age of sixty-eight. His widow is still living at Morgantown. They reared four children: Grace, wife of William J. Snee; Bessie, wife of Frank P. Weaver; Paul H. and Carroll F. The parents were active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the father was a Mason and Knight of Pythias.

Paul H. Martin was educated at Kingwood, attended the preparatory school at Morgantown, and graduated LL. B. from West Virginia University in 1907. Before taking up the practice of law he spent two and a half years with his father in railroad construction. Then, in 1910, he established himself at Martinsburg and devoted his talents entirely to his growing private practice until 1920, when he was elected clerk of the County Court. He and Mrs. Martin are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Mr. Martin is a member of Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M.

October 27, 1909, he married Miss Marie Buxton, a native of Martinsburg, and daughter of George W. and Ella (Shaffer) Buxton. They have one son, Paul Buxton Martin.

Mrs. Martin's father, George Washington Buxton, was a native of Bedford, Pennsylvania, son of George and Elizabeth (Trail) Buxton, of Frederick, Maryland. George W. Buxton served as a Union soldier, and while in the army he first visited Martinsburg, where after the war he located and became a contractor and builder and brick manufacturer. He was very young when his father died, grew up in the home of his grandparents, and acquired a good education. He lived at Martinsburg until his death at the age of seventy-eight. His wife, Sarah Ellen Shaffer, was born in Martinsburg, daughter of Christian and Susan (Poisal) Shaffer and granddaughter of George and Margaret (Musetter) Shaffer. George Shaffer was a son of Peter and Susan (Gussman) Shaffer. Peter Shaffer, a native of Pennsylvania, served in the Revolutionary army, and was a pioneer of Martinsburg, owning the land at the northeast corner of West King Street and South Maple Avenue. The house he occupied was built of logs, and some years later the exterior was veneered with brick, thus making a substantial brick house with its solid log frame. The house faced West King Street, while a long ell extended down South Maple Avenue. The house in which Mr. and Mrs. Martin now live is at the rear end of this lot, and faces Maple Avenue. The son of Mr. Martin is the seventh generation to live on this ground.

MORGAN MORGAN, M. D. Identified with the honorable profession of medicine and surgery in Berkeley County forty years, Doctor Morgan through his professional activities has kept up the splendid record made by the Morgan family in its various branches over West Virginia.

Doctor Morgan, who was born on a farm in Berkeley County, about three miles above Gerardstown, is in the sixth successive generation to bear the name Morgan Morgan. The original of the line was the historic character Col. Morgan Morgan, who was born in Wales, but was liberally educated in London, was an ordained minister of the Church of England, and in the time of William III or a little later settled in Delaware, where he married Catherine Garretson and somewhat later moved into the Valley of Virginia and at Winchester established a church of which he and his son Morgan Morgan, Jr., were pastors for many years. The cabin erected by Col. Morgan Morgan in 1726-27 in the vicinity of the present Bunker Hill in Berkeley County was the first home of a white man in that section of the state. Colonel Morgan had a grant of 1,000 acres of land in that vicinity, and it was on part of this grant that Doctor Morgan was born. The church Col. Morgan Morgan established with Doctor Briscoe and Yost Hite has long been known as Northborne Parish. Col. Morgan Morgan and his wife had eight children, and from these are descended many of the Morgan families still prominent in West Virginia. His son Zackwell was founder of Morgantown, while another son, David, was the ancestor of the present Governor Morgan.

The descendants through his son Morgan, a son in each generation named Morgan, have continued successively to occupy a portion of the old homestead in Berkeley County. Morgan Morgan, father of Doctor Morgan, inherited a portion of the homestead and was a farmer there throughout his life. He died in 1878. His wife was Mary Silver, who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, daughter of Zephania and Virginia (Henshaw) Silver, natives of Virginia, the former of Scotch and the latter of Scotch-Irish ancestry. The mother of Doctor Morgan died in 1886. Her five children were named Morgan, Zephania, Josephine (who died at the age of twenty-three), William E. and Charles W.

Dr. Morgan Morgan attended the common schools, the preparatory school at Newmarket and graduated in medicine from the University of Virginia in 1877. He took post-graduate preparation in Bellevue Hospital, where he graduated in 1879. For three years following he practiced at Berkeley Springs and then returned to the old homestead and conducted a large and successful country practice in that vicinity until 1921, when he removed to Martinsburg, where he lives today.

Doctor Morgan in 1906 married Mary J. Brannon, a native of Frederick County, Virginia. They have two children, Morgan and William Hilton. Doctor and Mrs. Morgan are members of the Episcopal Church.

EUGENE BUCKLEW, of Terra Alta, is one of the oldest surviving native sons of Preston County, now past the age of four-score, was a soldier in the Civil war, devoted half a century to the tasks and responsibilities of agriculture and is now comfortably retired among his children and grandchildren at Terra Alta.

While the record of his family is more completely reviewed on other pages, some of the chief facts concerning his parentage should be set down here. Mr. Bucklew was born near the old Fairfax Ford on Cheat River, now the Caddell community of Preston County, March 30, 1840, so of John Elzy and Abigail (Sipolt) Bucklew. His father was also a soldier in the Civil war, and the family was one of the first to settle in Preston County. Eugene Bucklew grew up at the old home farm, and he gained only a little knowledge from the community schools of that day. The chief text books were the spelling book and the New Testament. His knowledge of reading was largely acquired from reading the Testament. He never studied arithmetic at a school, though he learned something of the multiplication table. When he left school to enter the army he could little more than write his name. While a soldier in camp he got most of his education, learning to write and do something with figures. One of his comrades set the copy and he practiced until he was proficient enough to write letters home. This was in every sense a practical education, and he put it to good use in the varied activities and responsibilities of his subsequent life.

In 1863 Mr. Bucklew joined Company O of the Sixth West Virginia Infantry. This regiment was broken up into detachments for guard duty along the Baltimore & Ohio Railway from Parkersburg and Wheeling to the eastern border of the state. Mr. Bucklew participated in the guard, scouting and skirmish duty, and remained with his company until discharged at Wheeling, June 11, 1865, after mustered out a few days later.

Having done the part of a patriotic citizen in preserving the Union, Mr. Bucklew returned home and went to work on the farm in Portland District. From that time until December, 1918, his lot was that of a hard working progressive farmer in the rural community, and then with the burden of years he retired from the country to Terra Alta.

Mr. Bucklew began voting even before he reached his majority, and he cast a ballot at Kingwood in 1860, voting for Abraham Lincoln for president. There has not been a national election in the past fifty years in which he has not contributed his ballot for republican principles and candidates. He has been equally devoted to the religious phase of life, was reared in the Methodist Episcopal Church, but for convenience of attendance he has for many years been identified with the United Brethren. He joined the Grand Army of the Republic when its ranks were full of veterans and is a member of Terra Alta Post, perhaps one of the most active of the remaining posts.

In Preston County in 1861 he married Miss Rachel Wilson, daughter of John Wilson. The only surviving child of this union is Lydia, wife of George Shaffer, of Elkins September 11, 1873, Mr. Bucklew married Miss Mary Freeland, who was born near Terra Alta and reared there, being one of the ten children of Hiram and Nancy (Bucklew) Freeland. The other children to grow up were: George Freeland; Susan, wife of John Braham; Sarah, who married Wilber Teets; Rachel, wife of Nicholas Braham; and Philip Freeland, of Cumberland, Maryland.

Mr. and Mrs. Bucklew had five children, and their grandchildren number fourteen. Vernie is the wife of Daniel Methuen, of Taylor County, West Virginia, and their children are Ray, Hazel and Clarence. Laura married George Nine, of Preston County, and they have three children, Asa, Clara and Walter. Ella, who died as Mrs. Walter List, left six children, Mary, Densel, Isa, Ethel, Ruby and Georgia. Robert H., who lives in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, has two daughters, Dorothy and Velva Goldie. The youngest of the family is Russell Bucklew, still at his family home at Terra Alta and who married Cora Teet, daughter of Bert and Mary Virginia (Rodeheaver) Teet. Russell Bucklew is an ex-service man, having trained as a soldier at Camp Meade, Maryland, but the war ended before his command reached overseas.

R. L. Walker

ROBERT LOGAN WALKER. One of the finest establishments in the retail shopping district of Charleston is that of the Walker Dry Goods Company, a house that has kept its service well within the lines of dry goods staples. The four-story store building is one of the most popular centers of the retail trade, and the business at its present prosperous stage represents in an important degree the enterprise and commercial ability of its president, Robert Logan Walker.

While the title of Walker Dry Goods Company is comparatively new, the business itself represents a consecutive development over a long period of years. There was a firm name of Sterrett Brothers, who were in business here for thirty years. About ten years ago R. L. Walker and W. B. Geary purchased this business, and for a year continued it as the Walker-Geary Company, which was incorporated October 11, 1912. Mr. Geary then sold his interest to Mr. Walker, and since then the name has been the Walker Dry Goods Company. The capital was doubled, increasing it to $150,000. The investment represented in the stock of the old Sterrett Company was about $50,000. Mr. Walker is president and general manager of the present company, and his active associate and partner from the beginning has been C. W. McClurg, who is vice president of the company. They now employ from forty to fifty persons in their store, and while the sales the first year ran to about $130,000, the volume of business is now equivalent to $500,000. They use all the four floors of the store, 42 by 100 feet.

Mr. Walker was born on a farm at Tipton in Nicholas County, West Virginia, February 28, 1872, son of John A. and Fannie Walker. The father was a farmer, and his youth was spent in a rural environment. After a limited period of schooling he began clerking in a store near home, and for two years he taught school in Nicholas and Fayette counties. Then followed several years of experience in stores and commissaries of coal companies in Fayette County. At the age of twenty-two he became clerk in the store of the Fire Creek Coal Company, then was manager and bookkeeper of the store of the Harvey Coal and Coke Company, and as a member of the firm Mosley & Walker he was engaged on a modest scale in coal production and merchandising at Cliff Top in Fayette County. He sold his interest there and came to Charleston for the purpose of improving his school advantages. Soon afterward he bought an interest in the Diamond Shoe Store, but several months later accepted the opportunity to become associated with W. B. Geary in the purchase of the Sterrett Brothers store, and now after ten years he is head of a business that is one of the most successful in its line in the state. In 1918 Mr. Walker helped organize the Bank of Dunbar, with a capital of $25,000, and now with assets of $150,000. He is president of this institution. In 1909 he organized the Winona National Bank and soon became its president. This bank has also a capital of $25,000, but its assets are now around $500,000.

Mr. Walker was the war time mayor of Charleston, serving for about eight months. He was chosen by the council to fill the unexpired term of Dr. George MacQueen, who entered the army. Mr. Walker has served as delegate to several democratic conventions, is a member of the Elks Lodge, is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, a Rotarian, a member of the Edgewood Country Club, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In Fayette County he married Miss Stella M. Norris, who died in the fall of 1917, leaving two daughters: Helen, Mrs. Dick Sterling, of Charleston; and Lucille, Mrs. Phillip Stewart. In 1919, at Charleston, Mr. Walker married Miss Elizabeth Burns.

ANDREW M. DOUGLASS, surveyor, engineer and farmer living near Cairo, has for a number of years been a man of affairs in Ritchie County, has served both officially and in his private capacity and in every way possible has advanced the best interests and progressive improvement of his section.

Mr. Douglass was born November 17, 1855, son of John and Elizabeth (Marsh) Douglass. His father, a native of Scotland, came to the United States at the age of seven years, and after his marriage settled near the present site of Cairo. He was well educated, graduated in engineering at Athens, Ohio, and for many years was engaged in professional work in his home county, serving as county surveyor and justice of the peace. He died at the age of seventy-four. He was a member and elder of the United Presbyterian Church, was a republican, and during the Civil war served with the Home Guards. His three children were: Andrew M.; Laura, wife of Rev. S. P. Crummett, of the Methodist Church; and Emma, wife of D. G. McGregor, of Cairo.

Andrew M. Douglass spent his early life on the farm, attended the common schools, and after graduating in engineering worked with his father, remaining at home until he was twenty-one. During his active career Mr. Douglass served as county engineer four years, was then elected and served eight years as county surveyor, and since 1903 has used his professional skill and also his business ability in the oil and gas industry. He was later appointed and served two years as county engineer, resigning that post, and now divides his time between his professional engagements and his farm. For two years Mr. Douglass was a member of the County Court, then resigning. He is vice president and a director of the Bank of Cairo, and since about 1903 has been interested in merchandising at that point. His land ownership comprises about 350 acres. He is a republican in politics.

On July 3, 1879, Mr. Douglass married Jennie Marshall, a native of Ritchie County. They have four children: Ethel, a graduate of high school, wife of Roy Adams; Edwin P., a high school graduate and a graduate of the Ohio Northern University, now in the insurance business at Parkersburg; Ernest C., who after graduating from high school spent one term in the State University in the civil and mechanical engineering department, and is now located at Charleston; and Andrew, in high school at Cairo. The family are members of the Presbyterial Church.

BERT T. GIBSON, of Masontown, is the type of a busy and successful citizen, one working hard in his own affairs, equally interested in the welfare of his community and its institutions, and it would be difficult to find a man more popular throughout Preston County.

This section of Virginia was a new and untried wilderness when Thomas Gibson located north of Pisgah in Preston County, where he acquired a large body of land and opened up a farm. His example encouraged many others to settle in that locality, and he lived there to realize some of the fruits of prosperity which his efforts initiated. His son, James Gibson, was equally enterprising in developing the rural community where he lived. He married Rebecca Cramer, whose father, Peter Cramer, brought Rebecca and other members of the family from Frederick, Maryland. After his marriage James Gibson settled at Tunnelton, about 1840, and he and his wife lived there to a good old age. Fourth among their eight children was the late Milford C. Gibson, who became widely known as a financier and man of affairs. He was reared in the country, and came to manhood with a full knowledge of the work required of an ambitious farmer. Before getting settled in any regular occupation he enlisted as a soldier, in July, 1863, in Company B of the Fourth West Virginia Cavalry, and was in the fighting for the Union with his command until honorably discharged in March, 1864. After the war he determined to get a better education than had been possible in the schools which he attended as a boy. He enrolled as a student in the Millsbury Normal School, and after leaving that taught for a year. Then the call of the great West seized him, and in 1867 he followed the tide of migration as far as Henry County, Iowa. Something about the new country did not appeal to him favorably, and in 1868 he returned and resumed his citizenship at Tunnelton, where he entered the lumber business. In subsequent years he became one of the prominent lumber manufacturers of the state. For a long time he was associated with Charles A. Craig in this business. In 1875 he also established a store at Tunnelton, and continued as a merchant there until his death on November 22, 1912.

In 1869 Milford C. Gibson married Mary Anna Jackson, who was born in Ohio, and was reared and educated in Indiana. Her father, Alexander Jackson, went to Iowa during the Civil war and settled in Henry County. His former home was West Virginia. Mrs. Milford Gibson is still living in Preston County. She was the mother of four children: Bert Thomas, James C., Bessie, wife of Robert R. Hardesty, of Kingwood; and Joseph V., a Kingwood lawyer and business man.

Bert T. Gibson was born at Tunnelton February 5, 1871, and growing up as he did in the home of a successful business man he acquired much knowledge incident to his environment. He acquired his early education in the public schools, and subsequently entered the State University of Morgantown. Of his university career he recalls with especial gratitude the association he was privileged to have with Professor Jack Hare, whose life has influenced a good many hundred young men of the state. Before going to the university Mr. Gibson taught school, continued in educational work afterward, and his deep interest in schools has caused him to accept and occupy a place on the Board of Education of Masontown. For several years he was head of the board.

In practical business lines Mr. Gibson took up the lumber industry, being in partnership with John Garner at Irona until their plant was destroyed by fire two years later. He then joined his father at Tunnelton, where he remained five years, and from there removed to Reedsville and with his brother, James C., engaged in the lumber business at Kanes Creek. The Gibson brothers became extensive manufacturers of lumber, and converted large areas of timber land in Preston County to milled products. They shipped much of their output to other states. While in the business they furnished the M. & K. Railroad Company with a large amount of their construction material. Mr. Bert Gibson disposed of his interests to H. T. Lincoln in 1912, and since then his chief interest has been the farm, the old Sinder place, which he bought in 1912. The farm, situated just beyond the limits of Masontown, is generally admitted to be the best farm property in Preston County. It has become so largely under the ownership and administration of Mr. Gibson, who has improved it with one of the generous and attractive country homes of the county, has restored the soil to better than its virgin fertility, and has made it a center for the production of high grade and registered cattle, hogs and poultry. His cattle are the registered Shorthorns, his hogs, the Berkshires, and his poultry the White Plymouth Rocks. The farm methods on the Gibson farm are those approved and authorized by the Agricultural Department of the state, and the state authorities frequently point it out as an object lesson in successful agriculture.

While this farm provides important work for every day Mr. Gibson has other business connections. He is a member of the firm Gibson Brothers, coal operators in Kingwood and vicinity, is a director of the Bank of Masontown and the Tunnelton Bank. His father was president of the Tunnelton Bank when he died. Mr. Gibson was a leader in the movement for the Valley District High School. He took a great deal of pride in this splendid institution, and when fire destroyed the building he caught the spirit for its restoration and was one of the leaders engaged in securing pledges by public subscription for the building which now graces the hillside in Masontown. This high school was erected not only with the proceeds of the insurance from the first building but also with $23,000 of individual subscriptions.

Mr. Gibson was reared in the Methodist Church, is one of the trustees of the Church of Masontown and was on the Building Committee when the new church and parsonage were erected, the Gibson Brothers furnishing the lumber for the church building.

Mr. Gibson was reared in a democratic home, both his father and grandfather having been of that political faith.

He cast his first vote for Grover Cleveland and for William L. Wilson for congressman of the Second District. Mr. Gibson's high standing in the confidence of his community and his personal popularity were perhaps demonstrated in 1910, when he was elected a member of the Preston County Court, defeating a republican in a strong republican district. He was made chairman of the board, and is the only democrat who ever served as chairman. He continued in office two terms, and then retired voluntarily. Outside of routine work the principal business of the court was the improving of roads and the bridging of the Cheat River at the mouth of Big Sandy.

On September 6, 1893, in Preston County, Mr. Gibson married Miss Mabel Hartman, sister of H. Foster Hartman and L. Bert Hartman, business men of the county and mentioned elsewhere in this publication. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson have the following children: Mabel, wife of Harold Painter, of Kingwood; Ruth L., an employee in the intern revenue service in Washington, District of Columbia; Ernest B. and Howard, students in the University of West Virginia; and Susan, attending the Masontown grade school.

CHARLES HENRY THOMAS. Preston County cherishes the memory of the late Charles Henry Thomas for the work and influence he exercised during the vigor of his years and the qualities that distinguished him are continued and exemplified in his son, Vestus Thomas, a prominent citizen of Bruceton Mills.

Charles Henry Thomas was born in Garrett County, Maryland, March 6, 1850. His father, Henry Thomas, for many years lived in Monongalia County, West Virginia and died on his farm east of Morgantown about 1911. He was a first cousin of Andrew Thomas, father of Rev. Jeremiah Thomas of Bruceton. Henry Thomas by his marriage to Eliza Kelly had three sons, Alexander, Frank and Charles Henry. Charles Henry Thomas was reared in the vicinity of Friendsville, Maryland, acquired a limited education there and did farm work until he reached majority.

After his marriage he established his home in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, where for several years he was a coke drawer from the ovens of Westmoreland and Fayette counties. In 1876 he moved to Monongalia County, West Virginia, and for four years farmed just east of Morgantown. He then moved over into Preston County, and lived on a farm in Grant District until the fall of 1915, when he moved into Bruceton Mills, where his death occurred April 8, 1916. Charles Henry Thomas was a man of great vigor of body, capable of enduring the hardships of manual labor and had the industry and untiring energy that enabled him to make the best possible use of his physical powers. He was also public spirited, and while he possessed only a limited education he read widely and kept himself informed on all practical questions. He was a sincere member and deacon in the Church of the Brethren, and had an active part in the erection of the Mountain Grove Church in his rural community. He was a republican, and always voted the ticket.

In Westmoreland County in July, 1874, Charles Henry Thomas married Sallie Glover, who is still living at Bruceton Mills. Her parents were Andrew J. and Jane (Kelley) Glover. Her father was a Union soldier with a West Virginia regiment and saw some of the hard fighting of the war, though he was never wounded or captured. After the war he established his home near Hazelton in Preston County, lived on a farm there and later moved to Monongalia County, where his wife died and is buried in Zion Cemetery. His daughter Sallie maintained his home until her marriage, and thereafter he lived in different places until his death in 1909, at the age of seventy-nine. Andrew J. Glover had the following children: Mrs. Mary Rosewell, of Friendsville, Maryland; Mrs. Sallie Thomas; William, of Fayette County, Pennsylvania; Elsworth, of Cheleroi, Pennsylvania; Harriet, wife of Lowrey Warman, Grant District; and Charles, who died, leaving a family.

A. N. Lyon

Vestus Thomas, only son of the late Charles Henry Thomas, is proprietor of the Home Hotel at Bruceton Mills, and for a number of years has been a leader in business, educational and other affairs of that community. He was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, October 11, 1875, and most of his early years were spent on a farm. He had some experience in the hard work of the coke fields with his father. The public schools educated him. He started life as a farmer, was married before he was nineteen, and established his first home in Union District, on a farm adjoining that of his father. He possessed tools and stock, and hard work proved the way that opened the door to a reasonable degree of prosperity. On leaving the farm Mr. Thomas moved to Bruceton Mills and bought the Home Hotel as the successor of John J. Spiker. He and Mrs. Thomas have popularized this house for its splendid service to the traveling public. Mr. Thomas is also in business, handling harness, buggies and farm machinery, and he had a part in the organization of the Bruceton Bank as a stockholder and continuously as a member of the Board of Directors, and for a number of years has been one of the discount committee of the bank. Mr. Thomas, with several other associates, organized the Bruceton Electric Light Company, of which he is president. The plant was installed January 1, 1921, and is now furnishing the modern lighting facilities for the town.

Among causes of a public nature probably none enlisted more heartily the enthusiasm and effort of Mr. Thomas in the campaign to establish a district high school. He led the satisfaction to see the movement win by a more than 2 to 1 vote. He is a republican, cast his first presidential ballot for William McKinley in 1896, and was a delegate from the county to the Wheeling Republican State Convention. Like his father, he is a member of the church of the Brethren. While living on the farm he assisted in the erection of the Mountain Grove Church, is the principal man on the building committee, and for a number of years was a leader in the work of the Sabbath school.

Vestus Thomas and Miss Martha Murray were married February 23, 1893, being the first couple married in the new Uniontown Court House in Pennsylvania. Mrs. Thomas was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, September 11, 1870, daughter of George W. and Martha A. (Dillow) Murray. Her father was a native of Fayette County and died near Haydentown in 1904, at the age of fifty-eight. His low is still living among her children, who are: Mrs. Mary Smith, of Smithfield, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Thomas; Mrs. Mary, who was Mrs. Murray, now the wife of William H. Hiley, of Grant District, Preston County; Robert, of Fayette County; Sallie, wife of J. C. Everly, of Grant District; and George W., of Grant District.

Mrs. Thomas was educated in the schools of Fayette County. She and Mr. Thomas have lived together for nearly thirty years, and they have shared in the work and joys that have been their lot and have been the source of their prosperity. They have five surviving children and three grandchildren. Their children are May, Blanche, Charles Arthur, Howard Edward and Nellie Maud. May is the wife of Leroy Darby, of Bruceton Mills, and the mother of Eleanor Louise. Blanche is Mrs. Charles Bright, of Bruceton Mills, and her children are Kathleen Eleanor and Dale McClure.

JOHN L. COLEBANK. One of the most useful citizens of Monongalia County is John L. Colebank, whose home is a fine class farm in Union District, seven miles north of Morgantown. Mr. Colebank is a teacher as well as a farmer, is still active in the pedagogical role, and in teaching, farming and the duties of citizenship he is known throughout constructive in his thinking as well as in his acts. He appreciates among other things the value of good roads, has given his influence to secure such improvement, and he has taken a part in all the organized agricultural movements and has tried on his own farm to set a good example of progressive agriculture.

Mr. Colebank was born in Union District of Monongalia County October 19, 1871. His parents were Thomas J. and Margaret (Stewart) Colebank. His father, who was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, in April, 1844, was brought here by a boy to West Virginia. Thomas J. Colebank has been a farmer, timber dealer, and in the early days rafted great quantities of logs down the river to Pittsburgh. He grew and fed cattle and sheep on a large scale. It is said that he has served on the Grand Jury more frequently than any other man in the county, and he has always been active in the republican party and has been a constant attendant and official member of the Eden Methodist Protestant Church.

John L. Colebank attended the common schools, spent three terms in the State University at Morgantown, and has taken correspondence work and attended a number of Teachers Institutes and kept in touch with educational ideas by mingling with his fellow workers and through books and magazines. He began to teach at the age of twenty, and altogether has taught twenty-five terms, giving a part of practically every year to work in the rural schools in his home vicinity. Most of his teaching has been done in the home school district. There are many now in the professions and in business who credit him with some of the inspiration and influence that molded their early lives.

As a farmer Mr. Colebank is a breeder of Shropshire sheep, Berkshire hogs, and always has a large herd of cattle grazing over his 230 acre farm. He acted as census enumerator in 1900, has been deputy assessor, and for six years was on the County Board of Equalization. He has attended as a delegate a number of local republican conventions. Mr. Colebank and family are members of the Eden Methodist Protestant Church. He has been superintendent of the Sunday School for many years, trustee of the board for years, and teacher in the Sunday School for many years, having attended for years without missing a Sunday.

At the age of twenty-four Mr. Colebank married Miss Lizzie Shanks, of Clay District, Monongalia County. Their four children are Elmer Gay, Claude, Ocie and Thomas L.

ALBERT N. LYON, superintendent of the Kanawha & Michigan Railroad, with headquarters at Charleston, is a railroader with forty years of service to his credit. His early work in the ranks was done chiefly as a telegraph operator. He has been an operating executive with the Kanawha & Michigan for sixteen years.

He began railroading on April 1, 1883, as a messenger boy in the office of the Toledo & Ohio Central at Granville, Ohio. He learned telegraphy, was an operator and railroad agent on that road for several years, and subsequently became train dispatcher and chief dispatcher at Bucyrus, Ohio. From these duties he was called to the service of the Kanawha & Michigan Railroad on September 1, 1906, as trainmaster at Middleport, Ohio, for the entire road. A few years later he was advanced to superintendent, with office at Charleston, and in 1911 was made general superintendent. During the period of Government control, from July 1, 1917, to March, 1919, he was superintendent, and with the restoration of private control the office of general superintendent was abolished and he continued as superintendent. The Kanawha & Michigan is now operated in conjunction with the Toledo & Ohio Central as the controlling management. Since 1916 the Kanawha & West Virginia Railroad has been a part of the Kanawha & Michigan. A considerable extension of mileage has been made since Mr. Lyon became superintendent. The present Kanawha & Michigan embraces a mileage of 220 miles, 176 being strictly the Kanawha & Michigan. There is an operating force of about 1,200 men and with seventy engines. The general shops are at Hobson, Ohio. This road is one of the great feeders of coal to the main trunk lines of the country. Through its lines it affords outlet for 126 coal mines in the Kanawha coal field. The daily business in normal seasons is about 400 cars of coal.

Mr. Lyon is a member of the Railroad Superintendents'

Association of America. He was born at Granville, Ohio, and his father was a railroad man, identified with railroad constructions, particularly in the building of the Toledo & Ohio Central. Mr. Lyon is a well known and popular business man and citizen of Charleston, is a director of the Security Bank of that city and the Empire Savings and Loan Company, and is president of the Victory Cone Company, a concern for the manufacture of ice cream cones. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Knight Templar, a Noble of the Mystic Shrine and a member of the Rotary Club of Charleston.

Mr. Lyon's first wife was Minnie Fultz, of Ohio. His second wife was Jessie Gates, of Charleston. His two children are by his first marriage: William, manager of the Victory Cone Company of Charleston; and Marie, wife of R. C. McKnight, a coal operator at Middleport, Ohio.

WILLIAM HOLLAND WEST. West and Holland are both old family names in West Virginia, and they have been families of most substantial character, contributing to the current of progress during the century or more they have lived on the western slope of the Alleghenies. William Holland West has devoted the work of his mature years to farming and the cultivation of good social and civic standards in his home community in the Union District of Monongalia County. His home is seven miles north of Morgantown, on the Point Marion Road.

He was born in Clinton District of Monongalia County August 18, 1853, son of Hamilton G. and Elizabeth (Holland) West. His grandfather, William West, settled in Taylor County, West Virginia, from Maryland about 1800, and lived in Taylor County until his death, at the age of about sixty. He was a man of influence in his locality, serving as justice of the peace. Hamilton G. West was born in Taylor County in 1826, and in early life became a carpenter. While working in Monongalia County he met Elizabeth Holland, who was born in Clinton District, daughter of Reasein and Johanna (Wilson) Holland. The Holland family goes back to almost the beginning of things in this part of Monongalia County. Capell Holland, father of Reasein, was born in 1733 and died in 1823. On moving to the Clinton District of Monongalia County he settled near the site of Goshen Baptist Church. Reasein Holland was born in Maryland in 1776, and was four years of age when the family settled in West Virginia. Reasein Holland is said to have erected the first mill in Monongalia County, and he died here in 1851. The old Holland homestead is now owned by William H. West, who inherited a portion of it from his mother. Capell Holland took up this land in a virgin condition, and it is one of the few places that have not been sold out of the direct line of descent. Hamilton G. West lived there after his marriage. His wife, Elizabeth, died there in 1912, at the age of eighty-five, having been born in 1827. Hamilton G. West, who died in 1883, at the age of fifty-seven, was one of the leading democrats of the county, filled the office of justice of the peace for a number of terms, and was active in convention work. He was a major in the West Virginia Militia during the Civil war. He was a deacon of the Goshen Baptist Church. Of his nine children the seven who survived infancy are noted: William H.; Lancelot, of Fairmount, West Virginia; Johanna, who died in middle life, the wife of Calvin Roby, and moved to Preston County; Esther, Mrs. Clark Price, living on a portion of the old homestead; Sally, Mrs. W. W. Graham, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania; Hamilton, who met an accidental death at the age of twenty; and Hardwick, who was accidentally killed at the age of fifteen.

William Holland West lived at home until 1877, having acquired his education in the common schools. When he left home he took charge of the farm he now occupies, then owned by his uncle, Lancelot John. Lancelot John was then an old man and had lived on the present West farm from early life. Lancelot John was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, was reared in West Virginia, and died in 1895, at the age of eighty-two. His wife was Sarah Holland, a sister of Elizabeth Holland. She died at the age of sixty-five, and they were not survived by children. William H. West had cared for them twenty-one years and inherited the 150 acres they owned. As noted previously he also has the old farm owned by his mother, where he had lived fifteen years, looking after her in old age. The part of the estate comprises 168 acres out of the original 420 acres. Mr. West has made a practical success of general farming, growing both grain and cattle. He has served as a director and is still a stockholder in the Federal Savings & Trust Company of Morgantown. The democratic organization has been kept alive through the efforts of such men as Mr. West, and he is the county committeeman for Clinton District and has attended several conventions as a delegate. For four years he was school commissioner, served by appointment from Governor Glascock as a member of the County Board of Equalization, and has been a candidate for county commissioner.

In 1883 he married Miss Ellen Cole, then twenty-five years of age. She is a daughter of John S. and Lovin (Bonner) Cole, of Cheat Neck, Monongalia County. Mr. and Mrs. West have three children. Elizabeth is the wife of Frank Shuttlesworth, a retired farmer at Morgantown. The second child is John Hamilton West. The third, Mary, wife of Ernest Wilmer, and they live with Mr. West. John Hamilton West married Maude Clark, of Monongalia County, and for some years he has been the manager of the old Holland farm. W. H. West is a member of the Forks of Cheat Baptist Church, the oldest Baptist Church in West Virginia, organized November 5, 1775. For successive church buildings have accommodated the society and the present church was erected in 1884, succeeding the former brick church. Mr. West is a member of the Grange, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Junior Order United American Mechanics.

FRANK BLAINE ST. CLAIR is one of the younger men progress identified with the substantial development of Monongalia County. He is a farmer and Hereford cat breeder, living in Union District, seven miles north of Morgantown, on the Point Marion Road.

This farm where he lives today is his birthplace, and both he and his mother were born in the same house, which stood almost on the site of his present home. He was born January 12, 1880, son of Edgar W. and Elizabeth (John) St. Clair. His father was born in the same district in 1839, and died in 1901, at the age of sixty-two. The pioneer of the family was Jordan St. Clair and his wife Malinda, who lived out their lives on a farm on West River. Jordan St. Clair is survived by two sons, Millard and Leroy, and a daughter, Carrie, widow of Edgar Donk. Edgar W. St. Clair was married at the John homestead. Elizabeth John was a daughter of William John, and inherited a third of his estate and has lived practically her life on the farm. For a number of years Edgar St. Clair operated a store at Easton and later at Stewartstown, and then took the management of the John homestead. He did general farming here and he also had an extensive business as a timber buyer. He bought a number of tracts of standing timber, gave employment to a large force of men in the logging season, operated a saw mill and a rafted great quantities of lumber and timber down the Cheat and Monongahela rivers to Pittsburgh. He owns the old St. Clair place of 100 acres four miles from his own home. He was a director of the Second National Bank of Morgantown. Edgar St. Clair was not only an efficient business man but had unusual abilities in a public way, being able to make effective public speeches and was a party worker in the Republican ranks. He served four terms in the State Legislature during the '90s, and his wife were members of the Forks of Cheat Baptist Church, the oldest church of that denomination in the state. He was survived nine years by his widow, who passed away in 1910, at the age of sixty-eight. The two children are Myrtle and Frank Blaine. The former, Mrs. Charles Hunter, and she owns a part of the old St. Clair homestead.

Frank Blaine St. Clair finished his education with the ars in West Virginia University, and then took charge the homestead. On October 24, 1898, he married Mabel Echart, daughter of William and Belle (Moore) Echart. Her father was born in Monongalia County, but as a young man removed to Kansas, where he married and where for many years he followed the trade of stone mason at Topeka. He then returned to West Virginia, and is still active in the trade at Morgantown. Mabel Echart was born in Kansas and was nine years of age when brought to West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. St. Clair have three children: Dale Mortimer, Edgar William, a senior in the Morgantown High School, and Helen Elizabeth, all at home. Mr. and Mrs. St. Clair are members of the Eden Methodist Protestant Church. They live in a very attractive country home, having built their residence four years ago. Mr. St. Clair is continued in a measure in the lumber business in which his father was engaged, and operates a portable saw mill. For several years he has been a successful breeder of improved cattle.

DAVID SCOTT ZEARLEY. Some of the best examples of advanced agricultural methods in the State of West Virginia are found in the districts of the Monongahela River north of Morgantown. This is a district in which specialized farming has been highly developed, and several of the farms there have furnished some interesting demonstrations of crop yields that have set remarkably high standards in the state. One of this progressive group of farmers in the Union District is David Scott Zearley, probably the pioneer and the most successful alfalfa farmer in that section.

Mr. Zearley, whose home is eight miles north of Morgantown, with postoffice at Point Marion, Pennsylvania, was born a mile south of the latter village, in Fayette County, but close to the West Virginia line, September 16, 1857, son of Isaac and Elizabeth (Bowman) Zearley. The Zearley family originated in England and first settled in New Jersey. Joshua Zearley, the immigrant, moved west to Venango County in Western Pennsylvania. His son, John Zearley, was born at French Creek in Venango County. Joshua, the pioneer, later built the first fulling mill in Fayette County, on Georges Creek. This was about 1800, and the site of the old mill can still be identified on a pier of the Baltimore & Ohio bridge. The old Zearley home is also still standing, and in this home Joshua Zearley spent his last days. John Zearley as a young man moved on Baker's Ridge in Monongalia County, but returned to Fayette County and operated a fulling mill on Dunkard Creek in Greene County, Pennsylvania, where he was living at the time of his death, at the age of fifty-seven. John Zearley was the father of Isaac Zearley, who was born in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, at Smithfield, on the site of the old fulling mill. He learned the carpenter's trade. Isaac Zearley was one of seven sons. His brothers John and David removed to Iowa. His brother Jacob operated a woolen mill at Blacksburg, West Virginia, and died in this state. A half brother, Samuel J., was a captain in the Union Army and died at Scottsdale, Pennsylvania. There were two half sisters, Susan and Miss Mary. Susan became the wife of Thomas Conwell and died on Baker's Ridge, where she and her husband died. She is survived by daughters, Mrs. Alice Hoard, wife of M. Hoard, Mrs. Lizzie Ross, now of Parkersburg, and Mrs. Ida Thomas of Monongalia County.

Isaac Zearley followed the trade of carpenter most of his active life and died in Fayette County at the age of eighty-five. His wife, Elizabeth Bowman, died at the same place. His first wife was Mary Colebank, of Monongalia County, who left one daughter, Anna, who became the wife of D. K. Stewart, and both are now deceased. The children of Isaac and Elizabeth Zearley were: Addis, of Morgantown; David Scott; Isaac Judson, a carpenter; Lee, a civil and mining engineer at Uniontown, Pennsylvania; and Effie Louise, who died in childhood. Addis Zearley spent three years in West Virginia University, as a young man began teaching, and spent forty years in a schoolroom, chiefly in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, though for four years he taught in West Virginia. He is now living retired at Morgantown. He married a cousin, Lizzie Zearley, and their two children are Joy, a teacher in the high school at Alderson, West Virginia, and Gay, a student in West Virginia University.

David Scott Zearley acquired a good education and learned the carpenter's trade under his father. In 1883 he married Mary A. Morris, daughter of Uriah S. and Elizabeth (Board) Morris, whose old home is near Point Marion. Her parents died each at the age of eighty-six. Uriah Morris was a farmer, and lived all his active career on one farm. There were seven Morris children: John G., who lived on the old Morris farm and is now retired at Point Marion; Melissa, wife of William Sawyer, who lives at the former Zearley homestead at Point Marion; Nickson, who left home when a young man and is a carpenter at Holdrege, Nebraska; Mary A., Mrs. Zearley; Sanford C., a blacksmith by trade, now on the police force at Fairmont; Isaac, a coal operator at Easton; and Matilda, wife of Marshall Sawyer, living near Point Marion.

David Scott Zearley has done a great deal of work as a carpenter, and for thirty years lived and worked at Uniontown, Pennsylvania. Twenty-five years ago he moved to his present farm, though much of his time has been taken up with work at his trade. Mr. Zearley in his farming has solved some of the problems of soil preservation and building up in this hill region. Thirty-six years ago his father secured a few pounds of alfalfa seed, and the Zearleys have been a staunch friend of alfalfa as a money crop and soil builder ever since. Mr. Zearley makes alfalfa his leading crop, but has experimented with other legumes, including soy beans and cow peas. He has limed his soil preparatory for alfalfa, and has demonstrated the value of this deep rooted crop as a means of holding the soil on hillsides. Some of his exhibits of the legume crops have served a useful purpose as examples and object lessons at the State University Agricultural School. Mr. Zearley was one of the leaders of the Farm Bureau movement in his vicinity. His farm comprises fifty-six acres, most of it tillable. He is active in the Grange, is an independent voter, and does his work in connection with community affairs, seldom lending his name to the support of any partisan political movement.

A great inspiration was removed not only from him and his family but from the entire community when Mrs. Zearley died suddenly September 9, 1921. She was apparently in the midst of vigorous health, and the previous day had attended a session of the Farm Bureau. She was an active worker in church, grange, farm bureau and other community affairs. Mr. Zearley has four daughters: Grace, wife of Dell Robinson, of Stewartstown; Martha, a professional nurse at Fairmont; Nellie, Mrs. Elmer Blosser, of Morgantown; and Hazel, wife of Wayne Blosser, a merchant at Stewartstown.

JEREMIAH THOMAS, banker, business man, minister, and for many years a successful teacher, is a resident of Bruceton Mills and represents a family that has given substantial aid to every worthy interest in that section of Preston County for considerably more than a century.

Members of this family came to West Virginia from Pennsylvania. Michael Thomas was born in Pennsylvania, a descendant of one of three brothers, Alexander, William and Lewis, who came from Wales in Colonial days. The probable ancestor of the West Virginia branch of the family was Alexander, of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. Michael Thomas was the father of seven sons and an initial "M" was used in each of these sons' names in honor of the father. These seven sons were Jacob M., Michael M., George M., John M., Samuel M., Daniel M. and Christian M. The sisters of these brothers were Magdalena, Barbara and Anna, the latter becoming the wife of Andrew Umbel and spending her life in Fayette County, Pennsylvania. The sons Michael and George remained in Fayette County. Samuel and Daniel went West, one to Iowa and the other probably to Ohio. John and Jacob became permanent residents of West Virginia.

Jacob M. Thomas, grandfather of Jeremiah, was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, and came to West Virginia from Fayette County about 1816, shortly after the close of the second war with Great Britain. He built the pioneer home on his farm four miles east of Brandonville, and lived the rest of his life in that house, where he died November 21, 1881. While an industrious farmer, his life was of considerably more importance than that of an individual business man. He was a minister and elder of the Church of the Brethren, and performed missionary labors over six or eight counties of West Virginia, frequently preaching in court houses at the invitation of judges. While his educational advantages were not above those now afforded by the common schools, he was a real student, and acquired a wide range of knowledge. After reaching his majority he gave his entire attention to farming until about the age of thirty-five, when he was converted and about five years later began preaching. He was thoroughly well informed on the Scriptures, and was conversant with both the German and English, though all his sermons were delivered in English. He had a gift as an expounder of religious doctrines, and as a missionary, accompanied by a few friends, built up church communities and caused the erection of a number of places of worship.

His knowledge and interest extended beyond church and religion to the events of his day. He was one of the early readers of the old Wheeling Intelligencer, and was one of the pioneer voters of the republican faith in his section of West Virginia. His mother was a Miss Maust, of German ancestry, and the Thomas family lived in a German community of Pennsylvania, which accounts for the knowledge Reverend Jacob had of the German tongue. Rev. Jacob M. Thomas married Mary Fike. Their four sons were John J., Levi, Jacob and Andrew, the last two serving as Union soldiers. The daughters were Magdalena, who died unmarried; Sallie, who became the wife of Adam Rosenberger; Anna, who married William Conn; Mary, who became Mrs. Jesse Knox; Barbara, who was the wife of Joseph Zimmerman; and Catherine, who married Samuel Rishel. After the death of the mother of these children Rev. Jacob Thomas married Hepsy Davis, but there were no children from this union.

Andrew Thomas, father of the Bruceton Mills banker, was born in Preston County, May 4, 1836. He acquired a country school education, and spent his life on the old homestead farm. During the last years of the Civil war he was a member of Company K, Seventeenth West Virginia Infantry, going in as a private, and he escaped wounds and capture. He was a staunch republican, always voting at elections but declining political honors. He did his religious work as a layman. Andrew Thomas married Barbara Boger, daughter of Samuel Boger. She was born in Preston County, May 3, 1840, and died February 22, 1879, being survived over twenty years by her husband, Andrew. Their children consisted of a daughter and three sons: Mary Elizabeth, who became the wife of Irvin Wilson and died in Preston County, June 30, 1889; Jeremiah; Noah, who occupies the homestead farm in succession to his father and grandfather; and Ira, a farmer and stock raiser at Bruceton Mills.

Jeremiah Thomas was born June 20, 1862, and was reared at the old Thomas homestead. He was educated in the common schools, and for a term or two in West Virginia University at Morgantown. Mr. Thomas began teaching at the age of nineteen. His work was in the same school where he had learned his first lessons, and he taught that school altogether for fifteen years. Subsequently his ability as a teacher benefited other schools, and his career as an educator only came to a close after he had taught for twenty-seven years. In the intervals of teaching he carried on a farm, was also land surveyor, and he had a teacher's certificate good for five years when he was induced to leave the school room and became cashier of the Bruceton Bank in 1907.

He succeeded R. W. Machesney as cashier of the Bruceton Bank. At that time L. E. Friend was president of the institution. The Bruceton Bank was opened in December, 1903, its promoters being farmers in the Bruceton locality. Its capital has been $25,000 from the beginning and it has surplus and undivided profits of $32,000. Its directors are the Thomas brothers, Jeremiah, Noah and Ira, all Vestus Thomas, Walter Collins, Floyd Cale, H. A. Kuc J. E. Jenkins and W. S. Ridenour. Mr. Thomas seven years ago was elected president of the bank, his son succeeding him as cashier.

Mr. Thomas was president of the company which bought the Beeghly property at Bruceton, moved the old place away and built a new mill on the site and operated a greatly improved property for about a dozen years, until the company sold to the Hydro Electric Company of West Virginia. The Hydro Electric Company sold the plant, W. D. Smith, who sold in 1922 to H. P. and S. F. Moyer. Mr. Thomas is and has been for fifteen or twenty years secretary of the Farmers Union Association and Fire Insurance Company. In his work as a land surveyor he runs the lines around more than fifty farms in Preston County and did similar work in Maryland and Pennsylvania.

These interests thus briefly sketched would seem to make up a busy program for a very energetic man. However, Mr. Thomas has other work to his credit. He was converted as a youth of fourteen and joined the Church of the Brethren, his grandfather's old faith. At the age of nineteen he was elected to the ministry, and a year later began preaching as a helper to Elder Solomon Buckle. At the age of twenty-six he was ordained to the eldership to take charge of the congregation. He preached his first sermon at the Valley schoolhouse near Wump's Gap from the text "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation." He has had charge of that congregation ever since, with helpers under him, and the congregation has four church buildings and an interest in two others, all in all of these and in three schoolhouses regular service is held. The congregation in 1922 had a membership of 550. Mr. Thomas is also chairman of the Mission Board of the First District of West Virginia and a member of the Ministerial Board of the same district.

Mr. Thomas led the movement for the establishment of a high school in Grant District, a school that has been running three years. While teaching he was urged to permit his name to be used in connection with the nomination for county superintendent of schools, but he declined to honor. His competence as a surveyor also led friends to induce him to become candidate for county surveyor, but this too he declined, having no ambition for political honor. He is a republican voter.

On May 25, 1882, in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, Mr. Thomas married Miss Susanna Seese. She was born December 19, 1861, daughter of John and Mary Ann (Ubel) Seese, a family of substantial farmers in Fayette County. Mrs. Thomas is one of nine surviving children and others living in West Virginia are Andrew, George, and Mrs. Zelma Livingood. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have three children and five grandchildren. Walter Herbe who is a graduate of the business department of Elizabethtown College in Pennsylvania, succeeded his father as cashier of the Bruceton Bank for several years, but signed and is now holding a position in the office of the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company at Roanoke, Virginia. He married Mary Collier, and his three children are Lena, Beulah and Dwight. Chester Arthur, the second son, has given a number of years to work as a teacher and is a farmer near Brandonville. He married Grace Wolfe, and their two children are Pauline and Alma. The youngest of Mr. Thomas' children and only daughter, Ethel May, now in the junior class at Bridgewater College in Virginia.

RICHARD OWEN O'DELL, M. D. Through his profession as a physician and surgeon Doctor O'Dell has become a man of prominence in his community at South Charleston, a recently was selected by popular vote to serve as mayor of that municipality.

Doctor O'Dell was born at Mount Nebo in Nicholas County, West Virginia, February 25, 1884, a son of All

Richard O. O'Dell M.D.

J. O'Dell and grandson of John F. O'Dell. John F. O'Dell came from Virginia, was an early settler in Nicholas County, and served as county surveyor. His old transit is still in the possession of his family. In 1912 his grandson, R. O. 'Dell, was elected county surveyor, being at that time a student at Valparaiso, Indiana. Allen M. O'Dell died in Nicholas County about 1909, at the age of sixty-three. He was a farmer, and for many years held the office of justice of the peace. His wife was Margaret Dorsey, who died at the age of seventy-four.

R. O. O'Dell grew up on a farm, and after attending summer schools was a pupil in summer normals under Professor J. C. Ramsey, the oldest teacher in Nicholas County. He graduated from Valparaiso University, and spent two years in the Chicago College of Medicine and Surgery, where he graduated with the class of 1917. He has for five years done a great deal of his work as a surgeon in the Dunn Hospital at South Charleston in addition to his general practice. Doctor O'Dell came to South Charleston to join his cousin, Dr. S. G. Backus, now deceased. The sister of Doctor Backus is Mrs. Lola Bowles, widow of Dr. Lock Bowles, who died in 1916. Mrs. Bowles is the present city clerk of South Charleston, the first woman ever elected to office in that community.

Doctor O'Dell has always taken a keen interest in the welfare of his home city, served as a member of the city council, and in 1920 was defeated as a candidate for mayor. He served as health officer, and in the spring of 1922 was elected mayor, receiving a handsome majority.

He married in Nicholas County Iva Marie McCutcheon, of Romney Falls. She died in November, 1917, three years after their marriage. She left a daughter, Iva Marie. Doctor O'Dell has since married Edna M. Spathe, of Pennsylvania. He is a director of and stockholder in the First National Bank of South Charleston. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, an Odd Fellow, a member of the Eastern Star, the Modern Woodmen and the order of Ben-Hur.

GEORGE MEADE BOWERS, of Martinsburg, congressman from the Second West Virginia District, has been active in the public life of the state and the nation for nearly thirty years, and at the same time has carried many heavy responsibilities in business and affairs.

He was born at Gerrardstown, Berkeley County, September 13, 1863, son of John S. and Mary E. (Stump) Bowers. His great-grandfather was a native of Connecticut and a pioneer of Berkeley County. He died at the age of ninety-two and his wife at ninety-one. The grandfather of Congressman Bowers was George M. Bowers, a native of Berkeley County and a life-long resident there. He married Eleanor Lamon, who was born at Dunker Hill in Berkeley county, daughter of George and Eleanor (Ward) Lamon, natives of Scotland and pioneers of Berkeley County. John Bowers was the only son born to his parents, and as a youth he became self-supporting, exercising his genius as a reader and eventually developing an extensive business in stock and real estate, from which he amassed a fortune. He died at the age of sixty-two. His wife, Mary E. Stump, was born in Darkesville, Berkeley County, daughter of Asper Stump, a native of the same county and a granddaughter of Caspar Stump, a native of Germany, who brought his family to America and settled in Berkeley County on a farm. Caspar Stump, Sr., was a saddle and harness manufacturer, and conducted a business for many years at Gerrardstown, where he continued to live out his life. He married Cathine Maddox, who was born at Williamsport, Maryland, in 1817, daughter of James and Hannah (McComas) Maddox, of Harford County, Maryland. Six of her brothers served in the Confederate army during the war between the States. James Maddox lived near Darkesville in Berkeley county for several years, and his last years were spent with son in Jefferson County.

John S. Bowers was born at Gerrardstown in 1823 and is twice married. His first wife was Mary E. Stump, who died of typhoid fever at the age of thirty-six. Her sister, Virginia Stump, became the second wife of John S. Bowers, and is now living at Gerrardstown.

George Meade Bowers was one of seven children, and as a boy attended private school and the public school at Gerrardstown, spent two years in the Martinsburg High School and studied under a private tutor two years. At the age of seventeen he came to Martinsburg to begin his real business career, and subsequently operated a flour mill and dealt in wool. When he was twenty-one years of age his father died, leaving a large estate, which Mr. Bowers capably administered. At the age of twenty-one he was elected a member of the board of directors of the old National Bank, served in that position several years, then became a director in the People's Trust Company, and for a number of years past has been president of that institution. His business interests cover a wide scope. He is the largest individual owner of bearing apple orchards in Berkeley County.

Mr. Bowers on reaching manhood cast his allegiance with the republican party and early achieved prominence both in state and national affairs. In 1884 he was chosen chairman of the Berkeley delegates to the state convention at Parkersburg, that being a month before he reached his majority. In the fall of that year he cast his first presidential vote, for James G. Blaine. In 1887, at the age of twenty-three, he was elected a member of the House of Delegates to represent Berkeley County, and at the age of twenty-five was republican nominee for state auditor, being defeated by only 300 votes. In 1890 President Harrison appointed him supervisor of the United States census for the Northern District of West Virginia. He was a delegate to the national convention at Minneapolis in 1892, when Benjamin Harrison was renominated. He was a leader in his party in West Virginia in advocating the nomination of William McKinley in 1896. In 1898 President McKinley appointed him United States commissioner of fish and fisheries, a post of duty which by reappointment from Roosevelt and Taft he filled until 1913, a period of fifteen years. In 1893 he was member and treasurer of the Board of World's Fair Commissioners for West Virginia, and in 1902-03 was president of the American Fisheries Society.

While these and other official responsibilities kept Mr. Bowers away from home, Martinsburg has always been his legal residence. In 1914 he was the nominee of his party for Congress, being defeated on account of the split in the republican ranks that year. On May 9, 1916, he was elected to the Sixty-fourth Congress for the unexpired term of William G. Brown, deceased, being chosen by a majority of 461. In the fall of 1916 he was elected to the Sixty-fifth Congress by a majority of 860, and in 1918 his re-election was accomplished by a majority of 2,360, while in the great republican landslide of 1920 his majority in the Second District totaled 10,342. Mr. Bowers each successive term has increasing responsibility as a member of Congress, and is now on the most important committee, that of ways and means.

On November 18, 1884, Mr. Bowers married Miss Bessie C. Gray, at Hagerstown, Maryland. However, she was born in the Gerrardstown District of Berkeley County, West Virginia, daughter of James W. and Martha (Gilbert) Gray, of a prominent family elsewhere represented in this publication. Mr. and Mrs. Bowers have four children: Eleanor L., George M., Jr., Stephen E. and Jean Gray. Eleanor is the wife of Philip Grove, and her two children are George B. and Philip R., Jr. George M. Bowers, Jr., married and has a daughter Elizabeth. Jean Gray is the wife of Capt. Draper M. Daugherty, son of the United States attorney general, Harry M. Daugherty. Mr. Daugherty was in service during the World war as a lieutenant overseas and was promoted to captain. Both of Mr. Bowers' sons were volunteers in the war, Stephen E., in the aviation service, while George, Jr., went overseas as a lieutenant in the army.

JOHN WILLIAM KASTLE, JR., postmaster at Martinsburg, having been appointed and confirmed by the Senate March 27, 1922, is one of that city's successful young business men and is a member of a family that has been identified with this section of West Virginia for a great many years.

Mr. Kastle is a native of Martinsburg. His father, John William Kastle, Sr., was also born in that city, October 23, 1858. Grandfather George J. Kastle was born in Wuertemberg, Germany, and was the only member of his father's family to come to America. As a youth he attended school in Germany, later in Paris, and served an apprenticeship at the stone cutter's trade. On coming to America he located at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, where he married Christiana Stocker. She was also a native of Wuertemberg, and with a sister came to America a short time before her marriage. This sister married a man named Kestler and remained at Lancaster. Her four brothers, named John, Jacob, Andrew and Mathias Stocker, all settled in Montgomery County, Ohio, where some of their descendants still live. George J. Kastle after his marriage moved to Martinsburg, where he followed his trade and then entered the mercantile business and conducted a general store for many years. He died at Martinsburg, August 14, 1885, at the age of fifty-seven, his widow surviving him until September 7, 1912, when she died at the age of eighty-two. Their six children were named Anna, John William, George, Gailey, Elizabeth and Henry.

John W. Kastle, Sr., acquired a public school education and served an apprenticeship at the blacksmithing trade. Soon after its completion he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company as a tool dresser, and has been with that railroad for forty years and is now a foreman in the maintenance of way department. He married Margaret Elizabeth Price, a native of Rockingham County, Virginia. Her grandfather Price was born in Scotland and on coming to America settled in Pennsylvania. Her father, William C. Price, was born at Smithburg, Pennsylvania, and from there removed to Rockingham County, Virginia, where he was in business as a contractor and builder before the Civil war and after the war served forty years as a magistrate and for a similar length of time was an elder in the Presbyterian Church. Judge Price married Martha Westbrook, a native of Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, and of English ancestry. The nine children of John W. Kastle, Sr., and wife were: Eva, Pearl, Viola, John William, Jr., Harry, Mamie, Edna, Elsie and Clarence.

John W. Kastle, Jr., acquired a public school education and served a five years' apprenticeship to the tailor's trade. This was followed by more specialized training in New York City, where he attended a cutting and designing school, from which he received a diploma in 1911. He then returned to Martinsburg and gave his personal attention to a growing business as a merchant tailor until he was appointed postmaster.

Mr. Kastle married Miss Mida Brannon Rigby, a native of Martinsburg and daughter of Oliver and Margaret E. Rigby. They have two children, John William III, and Oliver Rigby. Mr. and Mrs. Kastle are members of the Presbyterian Church. He is affiliated with Equality Lodge of Masons, Lebanon Chapter, R. A. M., Palestine Commandery, K. T., Martinsburg Lodge of Perfection in the Scottish Rite, and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling.

JACOB W. FEATHER, of Bruceton Mills, has spent the greater part of his active life as a farmer. He was a youth when he joined and served for a brief period in the Union Army in the closing months of the Civil war. He has also been a merchant, and as a citizen is one of the well and favorably known men of Preston County.

Jacob Feather was a native of Germany and reached the American colonies in time to take part as a soldier in the Revolution. It is believed that he was an orderly on General Washington's staff. At the close of the war he settled in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, and from there moved to Western Virginia, locating in that portion of Monongalia County now Preston County. He lived out his life there and is buried in the Lutheran Cemetery at Crab Orchard. Jacob Feather and his wife Mary, had the following sons: John, who was buried at Crab Orchard; Adam, who spent his life in that locality and died there and was the father of Rev. Joseph Feather; Jacob, who lived out his life in the neighborhood of Masontown and Reedsville; James, who died at Crab Orchard; Ezekiel, who lived at Lenox and is buried at Crab Orchard; Christian, who was a farmer in the Crab Orchard community; Joseph, who died at Bruceton in the house owned by Doctor Wilkinson; and there were also several daughters, one of them being the mother of Gus J. Shaffer of Kingwood.

Joseph Feather, representing the second generation of this family, was born at Crab Orchard in 1816, and died June 30, 1896. He was buried at Bruceton. He was a farmer at Crab Orchard and Valley Point, and his last years were spent in Bruceton. He had only nominal educational advantages during his youth, but his industry enabled him to provide a good living. He was quiet and reserved, voted as a whig and a republican, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Lydia Hartman, who was born in the same locality as he was, and was several years his junior. She died in February, 1898. Her father, Michael Hartman, was a farmer and of German ancestry. The children of Joseph Feather and wife were: Mary Jane, who became the wife of Ethel Falkenstine and spent her life in Preston County; Sarah E., who was the wife of Henry Cale and lived in Preston County; John H., who was a member of the Seventeenth West Virginia Infantry in the Civil war and otherwise a farmer in Preston County; Margaret, who became the wife of Joseph Michael and spent her life at Bruceton; Jacob Wesley; and Michael, a farmer who died near Cranesville.

Jacob Wesley Feather was born at Crab Orchard in Pleasant District of Preston County, August 9, 1845. He had a common school education, and was about twenty years of age when he enlisted in 1865 at Grafton in Company K of the Seventeenth West Virginia Infantry, under Lieutenant Farnham and Capt. Scott A. Harter. He was sent to Wheeling as a recruit, was drilled there for almost two months, and was then with his company in camp at Weston until the end of the war. He received his discharge at Wheeling the last of June, 1865. Following this brief military service Mr. Feather took up the calling of his ancestry, farming, in the Crab Orchard community, and after his marriage farmed near Cranesville and a few years at Mountain Lake Park. He then returned to Preston County and established his home at Bruceton. For a few years at Cranesville he was a merchant and was also postmaster there. He began voting as a republican for General Grant in 1868.

In Preston County, June 2, 1867, Mr. Feather married Sarah A. Michael, daughter of Philip and Sophia (Fulk) Michael. Her father was born in Preston County, son of William Michael, of German ancestry. Philip Michael was born in 1804 and Sophia Fulk, in 1806. He died in 1892 survived by his wife three years. The Michael children were: Eugenius, a farmer who died in Preston County; William, who lived all his life in Preston County; Malinda, who became the wife of George Walls and lived in Preston County; Philip, who was a blacksmith at Frostburg, Maryland, where he died; Edgar, a farmer who lived at Athens, Ohio, where he is buried; John, who was a teacher and farmer in Preston County; James, who finally removed to Ohio and is buried at Gizeville, that state; Sophia, wife of Andrew McNair, living near Hopewell in Preston County; Naomi, who became the wife of Alpheus Posten and died in Iowa; Rachel, wife of Ephraim Fazenbaker and died at Westport, Maryland; Mary, who was the wife of Jefferson Fazenbaker and died in Preston County, being buried at Brandonville; George, who lived for a number of years in Ohio, North and South Dakota, and finally settled in Minnesota, where he is buried; Joseph and Benjamin, twins, the former spending his life in Preston County while Benjamin was killed at Westport by a train while walking on a trestle over a stream at night; and Sara Ann, Mrs. Feather, who was born April 20, 1850. Her brother Joseph Michael was in the same company an regiment as Jacob W. Feather during the war.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Feather are: Calphe Lloyd, who died in infancy; Delphos C., of Piteairn, Pennsylvania; Ora, who was killed when about thirty years of age; Troy O., a carpenter at Seattle, Washington; Cora E., living at Bruceton with her parents, widow of Earnest E. Whitesell and mother of Sarah Lillian Dorene and Juli Elizabeth.

DM Hillis

Mr. and Mrs. Feather are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He has been superintendent of the Sunday School and has represented the church at quarterly conference. Mrs. Feather has been a Sabbath School teacher in the several communities of her residence, Cranestown, Mountain Lake Park and Bruceton, and was president of the Epworth League and a member of the Quarterly Conference held at Bruceton. She was a Red Cross member, but paralysis in her right arm prevented her from serving more actively than as a counselor and adviser. Both Mr. and Mrs. Feather have been active in the temperance work as members of the Anti Saloon League and have readily supported all causes for the religious and moral advancement of their community.

JAMES W. WOLFE, cashier of the Bruceton Bank, has been one of the exceptionally busy and useful men of that community for a great many years. He has taught school, has experienced the practical side of farming, has been related to business in several spheres, and is also an elder and minister of the Church of the Brethren.

His father was the late John E. Wolfe, who was born in Portland District, Preston County, in 1846, and grew up in the home of his uncle, Levi Wolfe. He reached manhood with little schooling, but learned farming and devoted his time and energies to that vocation throughout the years of his vigor. His final home was a mile east of Clifton Mills. He brought up a large family, and the provisions he made for them kept him a poor man. He lived well, owned a modest home, and could look back over his life with a high degree of satisfaction for what he had done for his children educationally.

John E. Wolfe married Lydia A. Rosenberger, whose father, Adam Rosenberger, was a native of Germany and founded his family in Preston County. He was a man of education, a good scholar, and was thoroughly well versed in the Bible. He lived quietly but was always enthusiastic in his work as a member of the Church of the Brethren. He spent his last years in Grant District, and he was buried in the Thomas Cemetery there. Adam Rosenberger married Sallie Thomas, a sister of Andrew Thomas and a daughter of Rev. Jacob Thomas, whose earnest and useful career in Preston County has been reviewed elsewhere. The children of Adam Rosenberger and wife were: Mary, who became the wife of Jacob Riger and died in Pennsylvania; Jacob, who married Susanna Spindler and died in Fayette County, Pennsylvania; Lydia, who was Mrs. John E. Wolfe; Maggie, wife of Andrew Maust, of Grant District; Susanna, who became the wife of Isaiah Fike, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania; Sarah, wife of Allen Thomas, of Grant District; Philip, who married Sophrona Seese; Reuben, who married Emma Maust; and Barbara, who was the wife of Ezra Glover and died in Grant District.

The oldest of the children of John E. Wolfe and wife was James Webster, the Bruceton banker. The next in age, Minnie, is the wife of Shriver Maust, of Fayette County, Pennsylvania; George E., of Grant District married Mary Thomas; Hosea M. married Mary Livengood and is a farmer in Grant District; Trussie B. is the wife of George A. Caton, of the same district; Calvin R. is pastor of the Church of the Brethren at Markleysburg, Pennsylvania, and married Cora Wilson; William C., who operates the Wolfe homestead, married Etta Dennis; Period Grace is the wife of Chester A. Thomas, a minister of the Brethren Church and a farmer near Salem Church in Preston County; and Mary Pearl is the wife of H. A. Knox, of Fayette County, Pennsylvania.

James W. Wolfe was born in Preston County, January 30, 1873, and up to the age of thirty his home was with his parents and he shared in the work of the home farm. He acquired a common school education, and before he was seventeen had qualified and had begun teaching in the common schools. Altogether he taught seventeen terms of country school, beginning in the Jonas Maust school and finishing at the Oak Grove school near Bruceton. While teaching he took a commercial course at Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, also worked on the farm, and carried on some other individual enterprises. He removed to Bruceton Mills in 1906, for one year was a merchant, and then took the management of the Bruceton Mills, operating it under the ownership of a new company for seven years, and continuing as manager for two years under the ownership of the Hydro-Electro Company. When he left the mills he bought the L. H. Frankhouser farm a mile east of Brandonville, and was a producer of food supplies during the greater part of the World war. In October, 1918, he became cashier of the Bruceton Bank. He is also secretary and treasurer of the Farmers Union Association and Fire Insurance Company of Preston County.

Mr. Wolfe has been president of the Board of Education of Grant District and is still one of the school commissioners. He was probably the most effective advocate of and leader in the movement for the establishment of a high school at Bruceton, and had the satisfaction of seeing the project carried at the second election held for that purpose. Mr. Wolfe has always voted as a republican, and since boyhood has been a faithful worker in the Church of the Brethren. He was elected and commissioned by the congregation to preach in 1913, preaching his first sermon at the Mountain Grove Church. He was promoted to be an elder in 1915, and is one of the four pastors, with monthly appointments to the Sandy Creek congregation. He has been a class teacher in the Sunday School, a delegate of the church to ministerial meetings and other conventions in the state.

In September, 1905, in Preston County, Mr. Wolfe married Mary Estella Wilson, who was born in the county in 1883, daughter of Irvin and Elizabeth (Thomas) Wilson. Her mother is a sister of Rev. Jeremiah Thomas, of Bruceton. The Wilson children were: Mrs. Delilah Hinebaugh, Mrs. Wolfe, Cora, wife of Calvin R. Wolfe, and Victor Wilson. Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe had two children: Paul Wilson, who died at the age of ten years, and John Irvin.

HON. DENNIS M. WILLIS. It is not the fortune of every individual to be successful alike in business, finance and public affairs. Every line of endeavor demands the possession of certain specific qualities and characteristics, and few there are who have so many differentiating ones, or are able to apply those which they possess so as to make them adaptable for the securing of prestige. Modern life is exacting; much is demanded of men before they are crowned with success. Public matters are of such a character that a man who rises to high place must have a close and practical knowledge of local as well as state affairs and those of the nation. Modern business and financial conditions are also such that to gain prestige necessitates the possession of abilities beyond the ordinary. However unusual it is for men to gain a full measure of success in more than one line, there are some who have accomplished this feat, and in this connection mention is made of Hon. Dennis M. Willis, of Morgantown, member of the West Virginia State Legislature, president of the Union Bank and Trust Company, and a prominent figure in business circles and educational fields of Monongalia County.

Mr. Willis was born near Bridgeport, Harrison County, West Virginia, January 15, 1871, and is of the fourth generation of his family in this state. His paternal grandfather, William Willis, was the pioneer school teacher of Harrison County, and in 1790 taught the first institution of learning in that county. Henry H. Willis, the father of Dennis M. Willis, was a native of Harrison County, where he married Prudence Jane Martin, also a native of Harrison County, whose paternal grandfather came over from England in 1756, and in that year settled in that county.

Dennis M. Willis attended the district schools of his native county, and when still but a boy in years taught in the same schools in which he had received his primary instruction. In 1891-92 he taught in the Methodist Seminary (now the West Virginia Wesleyan University) at Buckhannon, and following that was an instructor in various commercial schools until 1895, in which year he became head of the commercial department of the University of West Virginia, at a time when that university was the only one maintaining a commercial department, although the custom is now almost universal. He remained in that capacity until 1917, at which time he resigned, with the intention of retiring altogether from teaching, but a short time following his resignation was offered and accepted the position of financial secretary of the university, a position he still retains.

Professor Willis served as secretary of the West Virginia Alumni Association from 1889 to 1912, inclusive, when he resigned. He holds three degrees from the university. He was graduated a Bachelor of Arts in 1903, received his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1899, and was made a Master of Laws in 1905.

One week following the entrance of the United States into the World war Professor Willis sent a letter to the War Department at Washington, D. C., offering his services, and in the following August was appointed a member of the Draft Board of Monongalia County, of which he was chosen chairman by the members upon the organization of the body, and served in that capacity without remuneration for two years, lacking one month, during which time 7,200 registrants came under the jurisdiction of the board, only eighteen of whom were unaccounted for in the final report of the body. Upon application, he gave letters of recommendation to different officers' training camps to twenty-five men in one of his classes, and of that number twenty-three were given commissions.

In 1901 Professor Willis was elected a member from Harrison County of the West Virginia House of Delegates, and in that body was active in all legislation, especially along the line of educational interests, and became the author of a bill which largely increased the salaries of county superintendents of schools. While serving as above he was appointed a member of the special joint committee chosen to call upon the Secretary of the Navy in regard to the proper donation which West Virginia should make to the U. S. Battleship "West Virginia" to show the appreciation of the state for the courtesies conferred upon it by the Government in so naming a great fighting vessel in its honor. This donation took the form of a coat-of-arms of the State of West Virginia, wrought in solid silver, which was placed at the masthead of the vessel. In 1920 Professor Willis was again elected a member of the State Legislature, this time from Monongalia County.

Professor Willis was admitted to the bar of West Virginia in 1901, and is a member of both the Monongalia County and West Virginia Bar Associations, but has never entered practice. He is very active along financial lines and has done much in the way of encouraging development of Morgantown and the vicinity. In 1912 he was one of the organizers of the Labor Building and Loan Association, of which he is now the president. In 1914 he was one of the organizers of the Crude Oil Company, a successful royalty corporation, and is the general manager of this concern at present. In 1920 he was one of the organizers of the Union Bank and Trust Company, of which he was chosen the first president, a capacity in which he is now acting.

Professor Willis is a member of the National Educational Association, before the meetings of which he has frequently read papers; of the Phi Sigma Kappa; the Mountain and the Caravan, a students' Masonic organization; Monongalia Lodge No. 4, F. and A. M.; Morgantown Kiwanis Club; Morgantown Country Club; and the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On March 25, 1903, Professor Willis was united in marriage with Miss Gilla Camp, daughter of Ulysses Camp, who resided three miles southwest of Morgantown, on a farm which was conveyed by original patent to the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Willis by Governor Dinwiddie. That farm, together with 77 acres additional, Professor Willis now operates, and on it they make their home, during the summer season.

C. E. WILKINSON, M. D. His professional labors as a physician and surgeon have been the chief element in the esteem Doctor Wilkinson enjoys in the Bruceton Mills community of Preston County. He has practiced in that district for seventeen years, and in that time has also acquired considerable business interests and has been a useful factor in furthering movements associated with the common welfare.

Doctor Wilkinson was born at Wayne, Wayne County, West Virginia, July 1, 1877, son of Samuel Wellman Wilkinson and grandson of William E. Wilkinson, who came from the vicinity of Richmond, Virginia, and spent his active life as a farmer in Wayne County. William E. Wilkinson married Miss Mary Smith, and one of their seven children was Samuel Wellman Wilkinson, who was born at Wayne. His first wife was Elizabeth Ferguson, who became the mother of two children, Doctor Wilkinson, of Bruceton Mills, and LeRoy, of Columbus, Ohio. The parents separated, and Doctor Wilkinson grew up with his mother, who in the meantime became Mrs. A. W. Preston, of Dickson, West Virginia.

Doctor Wilkinson spent the first fifteen years of his life on a farm in the vicinity of Wayne, and he knows the meaning of toil in the fields. After that he worked for the most part in his stepfather's store until he was about twenty-four. In the meantime he had finished his literary education in the Oak View Academy, and in 1900 attended the University of Louisville Medical School, where he graduated M. D. in 1904. After graduating he returned to West Virginia, took the examination of the State Board of Examiners, and began practice at Brandouville, and in 1908 removed to Bruceton Mills, but all his work as a physician has been in Grant District. He has done post-graduate work in Chicago and is a member in good standing of the County, State and American Medical Associations. During his work as a physician Doctor Wilkinson has been called upon for special effort in combating two epidemics in this community, one of smallpox in 1915 and the other the influenza scourge in 1918-19. About a hundred cases of smallpox came under the observation and treatment of Doctor Wilkinson, with only two fatalities. During the influenza epidemic practically all of his clientele were afflicted more or less both years, but the fatalities were few as compared with those of urban localities. Of the 500 cases under Doctor Wilkinson's care less than half a dozen deaths occurred.

Outside his profession Doctor Wilkinson for some years has owned a large farm in the community and has been more or less of a stock dealer. He has also handled transactions in real estate and coal lands, and owns some undeveloped coal properties. He has been active in advancing the educational standards of his locality, has served as a village councilman at Bruceton Mills and was a member of the district committee of the democratic party for a time. He is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Moose and Eagles and is a Methodist.

At Chillicothe, Ohio, in February, 1906, Doctor Wilkinson married Miss Lula McGinnis, who was born at Huntington, West Virginia, but was reared and educated in Ohio as well as in Huntington. Doctor and Mrs. Wilkinson have a son, Renick Eugene, born May 12, 1907. Doctor Wilkinson and wife are fond of travel, both as a source of recreation and knowledge, and they usually spend a few weeks of the year at near or distant resorts and in new scenes.

CALVIN F. SPIKER, merchant, man of affairs at Bruceton Mills, has played a varied and useful part in the activities of this community since early youth.

He was born in Pleasant District, four miles southeast of Bruceton, January 30, 1872. His father is John J. Spiker, now living retired at Bruceton Mills. He was born in Preston County in 1846. In spite of his youth he saw two years and nine months of service in the West Virginia Cavalry at the time of the Civil war. He was once captured by the Confederates, who started him towards prison at Richmond, but he escaped by jumping off a bridge, landing some twenty feet below on logs and breaking a few ribs. He finally reached his friends after going three days without food. Before the war closed he was transferred to the western armies in Missouri, and he left the army there. After the war he joined the Grand Army Post, has participated with his comrades in the reunions, and is one of the few charter members of the Bruceton Post left. John J. Spiker has given diligent attention to farming as an active business pursuit, but in 1902 he engaged in the hotel business at Bruceton and is now retired. The circumstances of his early youth prevented him from attending school for any length of time, but he is well informed, is a republican voter, and a member of the Methodist Church. John J. Spiker married Lucinda Spindler, a first cousin of Charles Spindler and a daughter of Jonathan Spindler. Mrs. Spiker died November 4, 1904. Her children were: Brenard, a farmer and coal miner near Bruceton; Calvin F.; William H., a merchant at Bruceton Mills; Dorsey J., in the garage business at Bruceton; and Mary J., wife of Charley Teets, a merchant at Cranestown.

Calvin F. Spiker spent his boyhood, youth and early manhood on the home farm. His education was derived from country schools, but he made such good use of his opportunities that for several years he was able to teach in winter terms. He was also at Morgantown a year or so, being employed there by the Union Improvement Company during the construction of the gas and water lines. After these varied activities and after his last term as a teacher Mr. Spiker removed to Bruceton Mills and set up as a merchant as the successor of B. F. Huggins. He began selling goods in June, 1901, and six years later bought the store of O. P. Scott, in the building where he is located today. Mr. Spiker is not only one of the leading merchants but a stockholder in the Bruceton Bank, and is the owner of twenty acres in the Miller property at the bridge across the Big Sandy.

He was reared under religious influences at home and was served as a steward of the Bruceton Methodist Church and is one of its trustees. He began voting the republican ticket in 1896, supporting Major McKinley. For a dozen years he was a councilman at a time when street improvements were the chief matters before the body for consideration and action.

In Preston County, January 17, 1903, Mr. Spiker married Miss Pearl Frankhouser, daughter of Allen and Rhoda (Wolfe) Frankhouser. The Frankhousers are an old family of Preston County, and her mother was a daughter of Jacob Wolfe. Allen Frankhouser is still farming in the Locust Grove community, and is a staunch democrat, as are all the people of his name. Besides Mrs. Spiker, who was born in October, 1883, his children are: Bliss, wife of Charles Wolfe, of Pleasant District; Miss Goldie, who lives with Mr. and Mrs. Spiker at Bruceton Mills; Miss Fay and Miss Glenna, both at home. Mr. and Mrs. Spiker have a daughter, Avis Lorene, born March 29, 1912.

FRED COPEMAN. By his industry and integrity Fred Copeman has long since earned a place of special respect and esteem in Preston County. His career is interesting for its varied experiences, particularly those that led him to this section of West Virginia and to America as well.

He was born in the town of Ratten, Hanover, Germany, April 19, 1849. He was six weeks old when his father, Augustus Koopmann, as the name was spelled in German, died. Augustus Koopmann was a butcher by trade. He married Sophia Koopmann. Fred Copeman was the only son of his father. He had four half-brothers by his mother's second marriage, William, Carl, Dietrich and August Parson, all of whom remained in Germany. Sophia Koopmann lived to old age and kept in communication with her absent son as long as she was able to write.

Being the chief reliance for his widowed mother, Fred Copeman was exempted from the regular school duties of a German boy, but he attended night school and mastered the common branches. For a time he worked at the blacksmith's trade, but disliked that, and his chief experience was on a farm. While in Germany he had two employers.

He was approaching the age when he must respond to the enforced military duty of the German Empire, and he became restless and determined to avoid the military training if possible. He was scheduled to report in Berlin on the 17th of April, 1869, to join the colors. On the 3rd of that month he began the trip which led him to the United States. He had been advised by companions who had come to America before how to get out of the country. Following these instructions he reported to a certain tailor of Bremerhaven, who placed him in a hotel, where he tended bar and there poured his first liquor for human profit. He was told that the government was less watchful on Sunday than during the work days of the week. He provided himself with bedding and the utensils for use on his passage over the ocean. When the moment came for his departure the tailor sent a boy to carry his baggage, while Fred sauntered along behind smoking his cigar. He walked right through a bunch of officers who had made prisoners of seventeen men who were attempting to leave the country that morning. At the docks he got into a small boat, and it took him out to a big ship in the harbor where a rope ladder was thrown out and he reached the deck, somewhat relieved. It was the ship Baltimore, and when it sailed out of the harbor and the land of Europe faded from sight the captain lined up his passengers and called for their passports. Fred Copeman was in the line, and he was in great trepidation as to what might be done to him without a passport. Suddenly he remembered that the tailor had slipped a paper into his pocket when they separated, and this he took out and handed the officer, with the result that the official merely put his hand on his shoulder and shoved him on, thus relieving the refugee of any further anxiety. No important incident occurred on the voyage to Baltimore, Maryland.

Mr. Copeman did not remain in Baltimore, but at once took passage over the Baltimore & Ohio for Kingwood. However, he was taken on to Wheeling, passing through Tunnelton in the night, and was brought back and put off the train the next day. The only English he knew was Kingwood, and with this word he was directed by some children to the road to that town. He walked the distance from Tunnelton to Kingwood, and on the 24th of April knocked at the door of his uncle, Henry Copeman, who had become a citizen of Preston County some time before. This Henry Copeman was a brother of Sophia Koopmann, mother of Fred Copeman.

With his knowledge of farming Fred went to work as a farm hand for his uncle. He spent almost two years at that, and in the meantime made diligent practice of the English tongue and with this acquisition he courted a young lady who became his wife. His first home was established in Pleasant District, on a farm belonging to Amos Cale, his father-in-law. He began farming without a team, and after about three years he bought or contracted to buy on payments a piece of land in that district. From his wage earnings and from his crops he paid out on the land. He remained in that district with increasing prosperity for a dozen years, and then moved to the vicinity of Masontown, where he bought another tract of land. He lived there only a year, when his wife died, and he sold out and returned to the old locality. For three years he worked for Levi Cale on a farm, and then acquired by court sale another tract, the farm where he lives today. About that time he married his second wife, and in 1888 took possession of his farm, to which he has contributed nearly all the improvements. He paid $530 for 115 acres. This land had been greatly neglected by its former bachelor occupant, and Mr. Copeman was busy for a time cleaning up and getting ready for real farming. He has since added seventy-eight acres more, and for many years has been a prosperous grain and stock farmer, and now in the evening of life is abundantly blessed with the substantial things of the world.

Fred Copeman was ready for American citizenship as soon as he landed, having determined to shut out Europe, and especially Germany, from his life for all time. He took out his first papers for citizenship, completed naturalization and cast his first presidential ballot for Samuel J. Tilden in 1876. Since then he has steadily voted the democratic ticket and has been satisfied to perform his duties of citizenship as a voter. He is a director of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and has been identified with that since its organization. He was reared in the Lutheran Church. Mr. Copeman is a charter member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His father and his step-father were both members of that order in Germany. When he left home his mother told him that she would feel easy as to his future if he became affiliated with this great fraternity.

Elizabeth Cale, the first wife of Mr. Copeman, left three children at her death: Isa, wife of R. B. Spiker, of Preston County; Henry F., a farmer near his father; and Rheua, wife of Gay E. Wilson, of Kingwood. His second wife was Sabina Cale, a cousin of his first wife and daughter of John Cale. She was the mother of two children: Martha, wife of Harry Orcutt, of Akron, Ohio; and Lloyd, who died in infancy. For his present wife Mr. Copeman married Mrs. Virginia J. Miller, daughter of William Wolfe. She is a native of Preston County and member of the old and prominent Wolfe family here. By her first husband, John Miller, she has two children: Bessie, wife of Bruce Ringer, and Oliver S. Miller. Mr. and Mrs. Copeman have a son, Frederick Paul, born February 2, 1896. He grew up on the farm near Bruceton, was educated in the Oak Grove School, and on February 14, 1918, enlisted at Kingwood for the Aviation Sectional Signal Corps. Instead he was placed in the Spruce Division, getting out airplane material, being sent to Vancouver Barracks, Washington, but in his real work was in a camp sixty miles from Seattle and the same distance from Mount Rainier. He and his companions cut the logs and hauled them thirty miles on trucks to the railroad, whence they were transported to the mill at Enumclaw and there cut up and made ready for further working in the plant at Vancouver, which had a capacity of 1,500,000 feet a day. After the signing of the armistice Paul Copeman left the Pacific Coast, January 31, 1919, and received his honorable discharge at Camp Sherman, Ohio, February 13th, after one year in the service. He has since lived at home and is in active charge of his father's farm.

ABISHA GORDON DE FOE, M. D. A capable physician and surgeon, Doctor De Foe has done most of his work at Bruceton Mills, and since graduating in medicine has been a member of the medical fraternity of Preston County.

He is a native of West Virginia, born in Wayne County January 10, 1873. His father, William A. De Foe, was born in the same county in 1843, son of a farmer there. At the beginning of the Civil war he entered the Union Army in Captain Damron's Independent Rifles. Most of his duty as a soldier was done in the southern part of his own state, and he participated in a number of skirmishes. He was in service as a private, and received his discharge at Catlettsburg, Kentucky. Soon after the war he was elected and served four years as assessor of Wayne County. Following this his time and energies were devoted to his farm in the Shoals region of the county, and he died in 1902. He was a staunch republican, and a Methodist. His wife, Sarah Maynard, was born in Wayne County, several years her husband's junior, daughter of Lewis and Catherine (Fluty) Maynard. Lewis Maynard was born in Wayne County, was a Civil war veteran, and a farmer. His five sons and five daughters were named Charles, Mrs. De Foe, Frank, Henderson, Larkin, James, Mrs. Millie Workman, Mrs. Bettie Workman, Delphia Hagar and Mrs. Polly Perry. William A. De Foe by his marriage to Sarah Maynard had the following children: Lewis, of Texas; William A., Jr., who died leaving a family; Lucretia, wife of John Nixon, of Wayne County; Belle, wife of Charles Irby, of Wayne County; Dr. A. G.; Samuel F., a farmer in Wayne County, who married Sallie Irby; Frank, of Portsmouth, Ohio; and John P., who married Agnes Irby and left two children at his death in Wayne County. The second wife of William A. De Foe was Sallie Sullivan, and a daughter by that marriage is Effie, Mrs. Doliver Bailey of Wayne County. The third wife of William A. De Foe was Mrs. Jane Maynard. William A. De Foe was one of a family of three children, his two sisters being Mrs. Mary Adkins and Mrs. Sallie Maynard.

Abisha Gordon De Foe had a farm environment during his boyhood and early manhood, and after finishing a course in Marshall College, the State Normal School at Huntington, he determined to study medicine. While securing his education he taught school, and that proved an important aid financially and otherwise in preparing himself for his professional career. He taught twelve terms altogether. His last teaching was done at Matewan, Mingo County, recently famous as the seat of war in the mining districts. Doctor De Foe graduated from the Louisville Hospital Medical College July 1, 1908. The first year he practiced at Shoals, and then moved east to Brandonville, where he spent another year, and has since had his home and offices at Bruceton Mills. In addition to the heavy burdens of a large private practice he has served as health officer of the town, is one of the councilmen and has been secretary of the Board of Education. He was one of the promoters and is a director of the Bruceton Lighting Company.

Dr. De Foe is district committeeman of the republican party, and began supporting the republican ticket in national affairs when he voted for Major McKinley in 1896. He became a progressive supporter of Colonel Roosevelt in 1912, but voted for Mr. Harding in 1920. Doctor De Foe is affiliated with the Masonic Lodge, has taken the Subordinate and Encampment degrees of Odd Fellowship, is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and has represented the latter two orders in the Grand Lodge. He was reared a Methodist.

At Brandonville June 1, 1911, Doctor De Foe married Miss Callie Forquer, daughter of Dayton M. and Sadie (Smith) Forquer, natives of Preston County, where they have long been known as substantial farming people. The children in the Forquer family were: Max Welton; Mrs. De Foe, who was born in 1883; Ray, of Addison, Pennsylvania; Fred, of Morgantown, West Virginia; and Miss Lucille, a teacher, now principal of the grade school at Bruceton.

Doctor De Foe was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps just two days before the signing of the armistice. Prior to that he had helped the recruited men prepare their questionnaires and was active in the Red Cross, Mrs. De Foe being secretary of the local branch.

Doctor De Foe was a prominent participant in the famous local tragedy that attracted wide attention in the press of the county. July 20, 1921, Bruceton Mills was the scene of an attempted bank robbery. The attempt was frustrated, and while the trial has not been held at the date of this writing, the evidence points strongly to the fact that bank robbery was planned, since one of the party had a supply of nitroglycerin, fuse and caps. There were four men, and they entered a home just before coming to Bruceton, helping themselves to food and stealing a pistol. They then separated, two of them remaining behind while the other two sauntered into the village. The telephone had given warning of their approach and citizens had collected to meet them. Doctor De Foe awaited them at the post office. When two of the men approached within twenty feet he stepped out with his Winchester repeating shot gun and quietly told them he would have to detain them for a few minutes until they could be searched. One of the men, John Moore, shoved his hand under the bib of his overalls and drew out a Colts pistol and, dodging behind his companion, Madden, began firing. Doctor De Foe had hesitated, with natural desire not to be the aggressor, but the opening fire caused him in self-defense to use his gun, and the first shot hit the bandit fairly in the left eye and dropped him to the ground. He fired again at the same man, but Madden received the load of No. 4 shot across the small of the back, the charge cutting a gash through the muscles on both sides of the spine. The first man kept trying to raise himself to a sitting posi-ion for the purpose of resuming hostilities, but finally rolled over and died two hours later. Madden and the other bandits were taken to jail at Kingwood, whence they all escaped soon afterward, but Madden and Shaffer were captured and are now awaiting trial.

NORMAN FESTUS KENDALL, one of the organizers and cashier of the Taylor County Bank of Grafton, has been a resident of Taylor County since 1891, and had put some instinctive work to his credit as an educator before he became a banker.

Mr. Kendall was born on a farm near Mannington in Marion County, January 27, 1870. The family has been in Marion County since pioneer times. His grandfather, Elias Kendall, lived on a farm there to the venerable age of ninety-eight. His vigor remained with him to the end, and to the last day of his life he assisted in stacking hay. He acquired a large body of land in the county, and was a man of peace and industry and of considerable influence, though never active in politics beyond voting as a democrat. He married Isabelle Snodgrass, and their children were Alva, John, Ramer, William B. C., Vine and Mrs. P. H. Davis, wife of Rev. D. H. Davis of Pullman, West Virginia.

William B. C. Kendall, father of the Grafton banker, is still living on his farm at Mannington, though he has reached that age where he is practically retired from its responsibilities. He was born near his present home, and, his services being needed by his parents, he employed two substitutes during the Civil war. He graduated from Buff's Business College at Pittsburgh, and since then his time and energies have been devoted to the farm. He has served as a justice of the peace. In Marion County he married Miss Rachel Cunningham, who was born there twenty years ago, daughter of Nimrod Cunningham, a farmer in that section. The children of this union were eight in number, six sons and two daughters, Norman F.; Porter, a schoolman, who died in 1888; Ross, Mrs. Fannie Murray, Ward, Howard and Miss Bertha, all of Marion county, and Everett, of Robinson, Illinois.

Norman F. Kendall spent the first eighteen years of his life at the home farm, and in the meantime was educated in the common schools and the Fairmont State Normal. He did his first work as a teacher in the county schools of Wetzel and Marion counties, later was assistant superintendent and principal of the State Reform School for boys at Pruntytown, near Grafton, over six years, and then became principal of the Fetterman School in Taylor county. He served as mayor of Fetterman two years, following that he was chosen and selected as editor and manager of the Harrison County Herald and the Salem Express, and did newspaper work on them for three years. There was a period of some strenuous political battles in the county, involving some of the leading old-guard politicians of the republican party. The struggle to dislodge these men on control almost resulted in the county changing its official complexion. Mr. Kendall in purchasing the Salem Express turned all its power toward cleaning up the town, and in that he had to combat all the active liquor interests, and the Express office was fired by its enemies, who most destroyed the town, and the owner of the office narrowly escaped physical catastrophe at the hands of the liquor men. Nevertheless the Express went on with its publication and helped rout the "speakeasies" and made the town the cleanest in the state. When these issues were settled Mr. Kendall resigned from the papers and resumed his educational work as principal of the West Grafton schools. Later he was selected as a member of the Grafton School Board. He was on this board six years, and during that time the high school and the South ward schools were erected and the West Side school completed. During the same period the Grafton High School was given rank among the first grade high schools in the state.

In June, 1905, Mr. Kendall and associates completed the organization of the Taylor County Bank, his chief associates being J. C. Lewellen, Martin L. Shields, John L. Agill, V. T. Hanley, W. W. Tapp and George W. Low-ther. The bank opened for business the 5th of June with a capital stock of $50,000. The officers are J. C. Lewellen of Grafton, Martin L. Shields of Rosemont, and Iliam Linn, vice presidents, and Mr. Kendall, cashier. The present board of directors are, F. M. Poe, W. S. Phillips, George Neel, W. C. Frum and Dr. F. S. Suddarth. This bank now has total resources of $700,000. In the meantime Mr. Kendall has also assisted in the organization and is a director of the Bank of Flemington, and has some other interests in the coal mining industry at Astor.

Mr. Kendall was reared a democrat, but has not been a strict partisan. His first presidential vote went to Mr. Cleveland. He voted for Major McKinley in both campaigns, having a personal acquaintance and a high admiration for the Ohio republican. He also supported Colonel Roosevelt in all his aspirations for office. He helped elect Mr. Wilson both times. Mr. Kendall is a Mason and Odd Fellow, is a past noble grand of the latter order and has sat in the Grand Lodge. His father was a Baptist and his mother a Southern Methodist, and he has long been identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving on the official board and in 1904 was a lay delegate from West Virginia to the General Conference at Los Angeles. At the age of seventeen he began active work in Sunday school, and has been a Sunday school superintendent thirty-two years. For eleven years he had charge of the state work of the Epworth League, and during that time the largest Young People's State conventions were held.

In Taylor County, June 17, 1896, Mr. Kendall married Miss Vesta R. Jones, daughter of Nathan H. Jones, a son of the famous pioneer "Jones Family" of Taylor County, and Jemimah R. (Robinson) Jones. She was the third among their four daughters, the others being Mrs. Mary Kelley, of Grafton, Mrs. A. J. Reynolds, of Fairmont, and Mrs. Claud E. Vincent, of Fairmont.

HON. SANFORD L. COBURN. In Preston County few families have advanced a better claim to being pioneers in this region, forceful factors in its development, and workers at every point of its advancement than the Coburns.

It was in 1770, five years before the beginning of the Revolution, that James Coburn, a son of Jonathan, made settlement at Dorsey's Knob and built his cabin a little south of Masontown. Only three years earlier Zackwell Morgan had established himself in Monongalia County, thus gaining the historical fame of being the first settler of Morgantown. Monongalia County at that time included all of the present Preston County. In 1790 James Coburn patented a thousand acres of land where he settled, and on this estate his descendants have been numerously represented for 130 years. James Coburn was born in Old Virginia, December 17, 1746, and died September 17, 1822. He was a slave holding farmer, a man of means, of integrity and probity of character. His wife was Sarah Troder, and she accompanied her parents to Western Virginia and was a member of the same party as James Coburn. The Indians called her "the pretty squaw." She was born September 10, 1756, and died October 1, 1843. Their children were Catherine, Susanna, James, Arthur, Isaac, John, Jacob and Sabra. The present line of the Coburns runs through Isaac Coburn, who was born October 30, 1786, and died June 24, 1867. He spent his life as a farmer and on the lands acquired by the pioneer. He married Prudence Davis, who died January 19, 1873. Among their numerous children one was Benjamin F. Coburn, who was born in September, 1831, and lived all his life in the Masontown locality. He was a farmer and merchant, and at his death was president of the Board of Education. He was a staunch republican and a member of the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church many years. Benjamin F. Coburn married Jane Hartley, who was born near Masontown, and was seven years the junior of her husband and outlived him a few years. Her father was Edward Hartley, and this family was likewise connected with the early history of Preston County. Benjamin F. Coburn and wife had the following children: Albert, who was associated with his father as a merchant and died in Preston County; Harriet, who became the wife of Samuel Fields, lived for many years in Illinois, but is now a resident of Masontown; Homer, a farmer near Reedsville; Sanford Lee; Elmer, a farmer near Masontown; Louie, wife of A. J. Stuck, of Masontown; W. G., a merchant of Reedsville; Florence, wife of Edward Wasson, of Fairview, Illinois; Myra, who married Sherman Snyder, of Keyser, West Virginia; and Allie, who died young.

Sanford Lee Coburn was born within a mile of Masontown September 11, 1860, and his childhood and youth were spent there until he was twenty years of age. After the select and free schools he had an experience for two or three years as clerk in the store with his father and older brother, and then took over the general mercantile business on his own responsibility, and for about thirty-five years was proprietor of the firm of S. L. Coburn. While a merchant he erected a large brick business house, now owned by the Penn-Mary Company. After selling this property and business he erected the large hotel building across the street, and has employed his capital in other development in Masontown. He is now retired from the heavier responsibilities of business, but as an occupation he conducts a modest real estate office.

Mr. Coburn was one of the organizers in 1907 of the Bank of Masontown, capitalized at $25,000, and in 1908 he succeeded Mr. E. M. Bartley as president. The Board of Directors comprised fifteen members, the active officers of the bank being Earl Dixon and Mr. Coburn, while the vice presidents are Doctor Post and H. A. Hartley. Other directors are Prentis R. Watson, E. E. Coburn, J. F. Watson, S. C. McKinney, J. E. Hartley, I. N. Roby, Frank L. Street, S. D. Snyder, Earnest Watson, M. H. Orr and B. T. Gibson. The bank early in 1922 occupied its new home, a modern two-story brick building.

Mr. Coburn has an interesting record of public service. He was frequently chosen to the Town Council and served one year as village mayor. In 1911 he was elected to the House of Delegates and was re-elected in 1913. During his first term the speaker of the House was Mr. Whetsell, and he was assigned as chairman of the committee on banks and banking and member of several other committees. During his second term he served under Speaker George and was again chairman of the banks and banking committee. In 1916 Mr. Coburn was elected to the State Senate for the Fourteenth District, comprising Preston, Tucker, Mineral, Grant and Hardy counties, and succeeded Bliss McCrum in the Senate. He served under Presidents Goodykuntz and Sinsel, and in both sessions was a member of the finance committee and chairman of the committee on agriculture. He introduced and secured the passage of Senate Bill No. 76, empowering the preparatory school at Keyser to receive Government aid, and also Senate Bill No. 95, permitting a minimum charge of $1.00 for making a loan and interest charge for the use of the money. Another measure he introduced which became a law was that regulating commercial food products, and another was one granting a soldier from West Virginia the right to vote by mail while on active duty. Another bill which passed provided for the entry or filing of historical documents or writings with the Archives and History Department of the State at Charleston and the issuing of a copy of the manuscript to anyone making application for it. He was also a supporter of some of the measures claiming special precedence in the special sessions. He supported the ratification of the national prohibition amendment and the woman's suffrage amendment. While he was in the House of Delegates he took part in the last election of a United States senator, voting for Nathan Goff, the compromise candidate of the party, though his personal choice was David Elkins.

Mr. Coburn grew up in a republican household and cast his first presidential vote for James G. Blaine in 1884 and has supported every party nominee at a national election since then. He has been a member of a number of local and congressional conventions.

At Reedsville in 1885 Senator Coburn married Miss Mattie Loar, who died twelve years later. Her only child was Lucile Coburn, who died within two weeks of graduating from Buckhannon College. In 1903 Mr. Coburn married Rosa Roby, daughter of Albert Roby. She was born in Monongalia County.

WILLIAM MARSHALL WOLF is now living retired at Bruce-ton Mills, past the age of fourscore, having accumulated a record of good honest work as a carpenter and millwright and later as a successful farmer. He has been attentive to the duties of good citizenship, and his life is one of those that give honor to the name Wolf in Preston County.

He was born in Bruce-ton Village, on the site of the Home Hotel, October 23, 1840, son of Augustine and Sarah (Mosser) Wolf, his mother being a sister of the venerable Daniel Mosser of Clifton Mills. His grandfather, Samuel Wolf, came from Germany and spent his last years in West Virginia. His sons were Michael, John, Peter and Augustine, and he also had a daughter, Mrs. Nancy Workman. Augustine Wolf was born in 1811, and in 1844 moved his family to a farm near Rockville. He lived past the age of eighty-six, and his wife, who was nine years his junior, reached the age of nearly eighty-five. They reared the following children: William Marshall; Laodicea who married R. F. Jenkins; John Allison, a farmer near Rockville; Phoebe, whose first husband was Levi Cale and she is now Mrs. Harvey Walls, living at Albright, West Virginia; and Lehmer, who died in Fayette County, Pennsylvania, leaving a family.

William Marshall Wolf grew up in the vicinity of Rockville, and he attended one of the pioneer schoolhouses at that time and section. He sat on a slab bench supported by pegs, wrote on a writing table which was a board leaning against the wall, while the room was heated by a fire place. The schoolhouse itself was of logs and stood on the site or near the Harmony Grove Church. This building has long since decayed. On reaching his majority Mr. Wolf became a journeyman carpenter and cabinet maker and his honest workmanship could be testified to by numerous examples in Grant and Pleasant districts. He built several of the early homes there, among them the Lockard Bircher residence, the home on the Jesse Forman farm now the property of Bert Forman, the Pleasant Valley schoolhouse, and he worked on the Centenary, Harmon Grove and Nebo churches. It was his custom to follow his trade throughout the winter and other seasons of the year until his time and energies were demanded in the harvest fields. He also did much work as a millwright, and put in the roller processes at Rockville, Bruce-ton and the Dells low mills, and a waterwheel on the Muddy Creek Mill.

An early injury physically disabled him for the duties of a soldier, so that he did not enlist at the time of the Civil war. However, for a short time he was a teamster with General Meade's army in the Shenandoah Valley, going as far as Winchester and Halls-town. After leaving his trade Mr. Wolf applied himself to the practical side of farming, though he still kept his set of tools and worked occasionally both on his own farm and for others. His farm was near Hopewell in Grant District, and he kept up his work there until 1918, when he retired and removed to Bruce-ton Mills. He was one of the promoters and is stockholder in the electric light plant of the village. He was a farm friend and financial supporter of the movement to secure a new high school for the village.

Mr. Wolf has been rather independent in politics, though in the main he has voted the democratic ticket. His first vote was cast against secession, even before he reached his majority, and he was in favor of William G. Brown, Sr. for Congress. He favored the election of Douglas for president in 1860, but did not vote that year. His father supported Breckenridge for president. Mr. Wolf gave his ballot to General McClelland in 1864 and to Governor Seymour of New York four years later, and has seldom missed voting the democratic national ticket, though occasionally he has supported another party man for Congress. Mr. Wolf joined the Baptist Church in 1861, and for more than thirty years was church clerk.

In December, 1868, he married Miss Hester A. Jenkins, daughter of Graham and Louisa (King) Jenkins. She died in 1880, the mother of three children: Dora Ann, wife of J. Y. Shaw, of Bruceton; Oliver, who died unmarried in 1918; and Lucian Marshall, of Morgantown, who married Hazel Morris and has a son, Woodrow Wilson. In 1884 Mr. Wolf married Florence Collins, sister of Walter Collins of Bruceton. There were no children by this marriage. On December 1, 1920, he married Miss Ola Martin, member of a prominent family of Preston County, where she was born, daughter of Milton F. and Lydia (Forman) Martin, farmers in the county. Mrs. Wolf is one of five children and was born October 14, 1875. Her two surviving brothers are Ashbel, of Des Moines, Iowa, and Dr. J. T. Martin, of Seattle, Washington.

THOMAS WINFIELD KING. King is one of the first family names encountered in the annals of Preston County. The substantial qualities of the family have always been apparent in each generation, and the career of Thomas Winfield King, of Bruceton Mills, has been fully in keeping with the high standards of the entire family. Mr. King was a merchant at Bruceton Mills, and for many years followed his trade as a carpenter and builder.

His great-grandfather, James King, came to Preston County from Oldtown, Virginia. Several of his brothers accompanied him, among them John, Valentine and William. They all settled on Laurel Run in the vicinity of Laurel Church and Schoolhouse, and on the hill overlooking the little valley below James spent his final years. He and his brothers were farmers, although Squire John King owned a mill on the Run, some traces of which pioneer industry are still evident. James King reached Preston County by the beginning of the nineteenth century. His son, Thomas, was born on the Run in 1805. James King married Emma Short. Their children were: Thomas, just mentioned; Alpheus, the other son, who spent his life at the old homestead; Annie, who became the wife of Bayles Haw and died near Mannington; Bettie, who was the wife of William Herrington and spent her life near Newburg; Eliza, who was the wife of Graham Jenkins and lived on Big Sandy, near Harmony Grove Church; Margaret, who died near Cuzzart, wife of Henry Chidester; and Sophia, who married William Douglass, and both died in Jackson County, Iowa. Thomas King came to manhood through a period in which there were few schools and little opportunity to gain more than the merest fundamentals of knowledge. Nevertheless he became a successful man, and at his marriage established his home on Big Sandy, where he was busy with his farming activities, extended the scope of his land holdings, and at his death left a good estate. He was never a church member, was a republican in politics, and among other accomplishments he was skilled in shoemaking and did much of the community repair work and also made new shoes and boots for his neighbors.

Thomas King married Jane Brandon, who was born and reared at Brandonville, daughter of William Brandon, the village taking its name from the family. Jane Brandon was several years younger than her husband and outlived him about as long. Their children were: Albert and William, who were taken captives and starved to death in the Confederate prison at Andersonville; George, who was a soldier in the First West Virginia Cavalry and spent his civilian life in the Laurel Run community and about Bruceton; Eugene B., of Bruceton Mills; Thomas, a farmer at Fayette County, Pennsylvania; Serenia, who became the wife of Ami Jenkins and died in Preston County; Persis, who was married to Isaac Jenkins and lived in Preston County; and Mary, who was the wife of Irvin Christopher and died near Pisgah.

Albert King, father of Thomas Winfield, was born at Laurel Run, and his early life was devoted to his farm. Early in the War of the Rebellion he enlisted in the Third Maryland Infantry, and served more than three years before he was captured. He and his brother, William, were both taken prisoners while on the march, and they were sent to Andersonville, where both perished as a result of the sufferings entailed by exposure and lack of food. Albert King married Hester Ann Jenkins, daughter of Evan Jenkins. With the help of her older children she carried on the work of the farm during the absence of her soldier husband and after his death. She remained there until late in life, when she left the vicinity in which so many useful and hard working years had been spent, and thereafter lived in comfort at the home of her son in Bruceton, where she died in April, 1920, at the venerable age of ninety-seven. Her children were: Alcinius and Mary Armena, twins, the former a resident of Preston County, while the latter died as the wife of Silas Metheny; Thomas Winfield; Jehu, of Bruceton Mills; Hannah, wife of Ben Huggins, of Terra Alta; Evan, who conducts a farm at Laurel Run, in the same vicinity where his pioneer ancestors lived; and Sarah, who became the wife of Marshall Harnet and died in Preston County.

Thomas Winfield King was born on the old farm at Laurel Run, November 3, 1849, and he had the companionship and guidance of his father until he was twelve years of age. He assisted his mother on the farm, attended country schools, and early took up the trade of carpenter. For some time he did journeyman work at Connellsville, Pennsylvania, and then resumed his residence in Preston County. His home has been at Bruceton Mills for thirty-five years, and he has done carpenter work all over this vicinity. About twelve years ago he opened a general merchandise store, and enjoys a large and prosperous trade.

In Preston County, April 10, 1871, he married Mary F. Haines, a daughter of Henry Haines, a farmer in the Hazel Run settlement, though he and his wife spent their last years near Connellsville, Pennsylvania. The children of Mr. Haines were: Mrs. Lavina Gribble, of Bruceton Mills; Catherine, wife of Thomas King, of Connellsville; Mrs. Winfield King, who was born at Hazel Run, November 9, 1853; John, who died near Connellsville; Edward and Hudson, near Connellsville; Bina and Hattie, both of whom died unmarried.

Mr. and Mrs. King had two children. The daughter Cora is the wife of Charles Feather, of Fairmont, and they have four children, May, Freda, Mabel and Hazel. The only son, William, joined the Regular Army, and while stationed in foreign lands died of cholera some seventeen years ago, his body being brought back to San Francisco and buried.

Mr. King has satisfied his interest in politics and public affairs by casting his vote as a republican, beginning in 1872, when he supported General Grant. He has been one of the substantial upbuilders and upholders of Bruceton's prosperity, and owns considerable residence property in the village. He is an active member of the Baptist Church, though Mrs. King is a Lutheran.

FRED L. FEASTER. An interesting example of true educational leadership is found in the person of the superintendent of schools of Grant District in Preston County, Fred L. Feaster. A brief description of what he has done there and elsewhere is in an important sense a valuable contribution to the educational system of the state.

Mr. Feaster is a school administrator in his native state, his birth occurring at Maysville in Grant County, August 25, 1885. The Feaster family was established in Grant County by his great-grandfather, who came about 1810 from Rockingham County, Virginia, and acquired considerable land in Grant County. Though he lived before the Civil war he always employed free labor in his fields. He died about the time of the war. Among his sons were William Henry, John, Cornelius, Mrs. Mary Raeler, and Margaret, who married Henry Keplinger.

William Henry Feaster, grandfather of Superintendent Feaster, spent his active life as a farmer, held the office of squire in the early days, was a Union man at the time of the war and a republican and a member of the Disciples Church. He died at the age of seventy-eight. By his marriage to Mary McDonald he had four sons and a daughter, and by his second wife was the father of four other children.

William C. Feaster, whose mother was Mary McDonald, was born near Maysville, April 30, 1855, and secured his education in the old type of subscription school. He became a farmer, and continued actively in that vocation until he retired and is now living at his home near Maysville. He married Rebecca Painter, daughter of Elias Painter, an old settler of Grant County, who came as a boy to Rockingham County, Virginia. In later life he acquired extensive holdings of land in the county. Elias Painter married Eliza Dauna, and they had six children. William C. Feaster and wife had the following children: Albert, a teacher and farmer at Maysville, Grant County; Mrs. Sophia Simpson, whose husband is a farmer near Maysville; Samuel O., a representative of the Metropolitan Insurance Company at Fairmont, West Virginia; Fred Lewis; Lulu, wife of Milton Simpson, of Maysville; Harry U., a roller in a tinplate mill at Marietta, Ohio; Lottie, wife of Ed Haslacker, of Maysville; Orrie, wife of Edward Puffinberger, a farmer near Maysville; and Elvin, who is also a farmer near Maysville.

Fred L. Feaster grew up on the home farm, and the knowledge he gained of farming and country life has been an important asset to him as a leader in rural education. He attended the public schools, Broadus Institute, then located at Clarksburg, now at Philippi, and later the State University at Morgantown. When he was a boy there was not a high school in his home county, and to secure advantages beyond the common schools necessitated paying tuition and living expenses, all of which he earned. He began teaching at the age of eighteen, and alternately was teacher and pupil until he had completed his education and secured a high rating as a teacher. His first term of school was taught in his home county. In order to board at home he walked three and a half miles back and forth, and received $25 a month as wages. After teaching four terms he left the state and went to the far Northwest, stopping in Hubbard and Baker counties, Minnesota, and during the two years he was there he taught a term of nine months' school in each county. On returning to West Virginia Mr. Feaster resumed teaching in Grant County for three years. He was then called into Monongalia County as teacher of the village school of Blacksburg. While there he had much to do with arousing public opinion and bringing about the establishment of a district high school, which gave a great impulse to education, increasing school attendance and developing the school from a two-room grade to a first class high school, wherein half the teachers of the district have taken college work.

In 1918 Mr. Feaster came from Blacksburg to Bruceton Mills to take up his work as superintendent of Grant District. In this field he has been practically the pioneer in the matter of advanced education. He has had to achieve the establishment of a high school, which was started three weeks after he began his term. Its first enrollment was nineteen students, and in its third year the enrollment was forty. At Hazelton the first centralized rural school in Preston County has been created, and its work has justly aroused much enthusiasm. It is the result of a consolidation of five older districts, and the school is now graded, with three teachers in charge. Its children are transported by the district to and from school, and some of the pupils had not previously attended school for several years. The facilities of this school comprise full eight grades.

The schools of Grant District have been graded to harmonize with the state course of study, and as a means of providing school supplies supplementing the funds provided by the state the schools have raised more than $1,800 by holding socials and other entertainments for that purpose. The records in the office of the county superintendent of schools show that Grant District has the best school attendance in the county. Club work among the boys and girls has been encouraged. Many have carried out some projects in harmony with instructions issued by the extension department of the State University, and Mr. Feaster has busied himself with keeping the project and the people in touch with the University Extension System.

Pig Clubs, Poultry Clubs, Potato Clubs and Corn Clubs have been formed by the boys, and the girls also have clubs in sewing, poultry, potatoes and sheep. The district has an annual camp, where members of these clubs meet to consider and develop the "Four-eight" idea. "Four-eight" stands for hand, head, heart and health development. This camp is continued for a week. The prize winners in the different projects are sent to the state camp, usually held at the university, and there compete for the degree or honor of being an all star in the project idea.

Mr. Feaster has spent eighteen years in different districts and in different types of school work. He undoubtedly has the fundamental qualities of a real educator, being an inspiring leader rather than a routine instructor. He is broadminded, keeps his mind open to new ideas and is ready to support anything that will make the schools more efficient in the training of men and women. A district "round table" provides the teachers with an opportunity to exchange views, and the twenty-three teachers of Grant District are regularly associated to their benefit in these table meetings.

Mr. Feaster was married while teaching in Minnesota, at Park Rapids, July 30, 1909. His wife was Bessie E. Meludoe. Mrs. Feaster was born in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Lauer) Meludoe. Her father was born in Pennsylvania and was a Baptist minister. Mrs. Feaster was one of a family of four daughters and two sons, and during her girlhood she lived in Pennsylvania, Maryland and West Virginia, her father having pastorates in all these states. She finished her education in the Shepherd College State Normal and Broadus Institute at Clarksburg, and for several years before her marriage was a grade teacher. Mr. and Mrs. Feaster have four children: Irene, Nellie, Marguerite and Lois. The family are Baptists and Mr. Feaster has been active in church and Sunday school work, serving as superintendent or class teacher in the Sunday school.

WILLIAM A. BEAVERS, president of the First National Bank of Grafton, is one of the most versatile business men in the state. He is a man who has thriven on hard work, and has remained unspoiled by prosperity. Since coming to Grafton his supporting energy has been a factor in the success of practically every organized movement for more business and more of the substantial facilities for a growing city.

Mr. Beavers was born near Rowlesburg in Preston County, May 4, 1870. His grandfather, Thomas Beavers was born and reared and married in the vicinity of Rowlesburg, and finally moved to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and died, when upwards of eighty years of age, at the home of his son David in Kingwood, West Virginia. His sons George W., David and Moses C., all remain in Preston County, while Coleman and Jacob are residents of Pittsburg, and Franklin is in Tucker County, West Virginia. The five daughters, Susan, Nancy, Hannah, Lizzie and Sarah, all live in Pittsburgh.

George W. Beavers, father of the Grafton banker, was born on Buffalo Creek in Preston County in 1847. He had only the advantages of the common schools in that neighborhood, and he saw some service as an enlisted man in the Union army before the close of the Civil war, in Company K, Sixth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. After moving to Tunnelton he became identified with the mercantile firm of Shaffer & Bonafide, and when they retired he entered merchandising for himself, and continued to sell goods until he gave up active business recently. He married Jennie Jones. Her father, Fielden R. Jones, was a native of Frederick County, Virginia, and spent his active career as a miller on Buffalo Creek, near Rowlesburg. The children of George W. Beavers and wife are: Charles, of Pittsburgh; William A.; Arthur, of Pittsburgh; Phil, of Tunnelton; and Clyde, of Pittsburgh.

William A. Beavers was an infant when his parents removed to Tunnelton, and after a period of study in the common schools he entered the school of experience, from which he has not yet graduated. When he was nine years of age he began helping in the Tunnelton store of Shaffer & Bonafield. At that time he could scarcely reach the top of the counter. Eight years later Mr. Bonafield sent him to Kingwood to become clerk for the firm of Shaffer, Brown & Company, with whom he remained two years. He and William Faucett then became retail dealers in general merchandise under the firm name of Beavers and Faucett, purchasing the business of Bishop and Flynn. After two years they sold out, and Mr. Beavers then set up in general merchandising at Albright for a year, and after selling, established his home at Terra Alta. During the next five years he was on the road as salesman over the territory east of Grafton for Ruhl & Company, wholesale grocers. The next stage of his experience was his association with J. A. Pugh in the firm of Pugh & Beavers, each of the partners putting in a modest capital and working hard to develop a trade as wholesale grocers. Their enterprise prospered, and after a few years they bought the Morgantown Grocery Company, but soon sold it to the General Distributing Company, which was then operating a chain of wholesale grocery houses in this region. Mr. Beavers and Mr. Pugh remained with the firm, but soon became dissatisfied, and they bought back the Terra Alta house and the Grafton Grocery Company, reorganizing their business as the Pugh & Beavers Grocery Company. This company soon bought the Randolph Company at Elkins from the same people, incorporating it also in the Pugh & Beavers Grocery Company. These several wholesale and jobbing plants they continued until recently, the Terra Alta house being sold in 1918 and the Elkins house a year later.

Mr. Beavers has been a business man and resident of Grafton since 1905, in which year he removed from Terra Alta. In addition to his wholesale business his interests have rapidly extended to banking and to financial and official connections with a large number of successful business concerns. He became a stockholder in the Terra Alta Bank, and when the First National Bank of that place was organized he soon took stock and became a director. He is still one of the stockholders. He is a stockholder in the Tunnelton Bank, the Taylor County Bank at Grafton, the Flemington Bank, Clarksburg Trust Company, Merchants National Bank of Clarksburg, the Fairmont State Bank and is financially interested in a number of other business concerns. He is a stockholder and director of the Piedmont Grocery Company and a director of the Tygarts Fraction Company. Mr. Beavers was elected a director of the First National Bank of Grafton upon the death of Mr. Malonee, and on the death of Mr. Reynolds, who succeeded Mr. Malonee as president. Mr. Beavers was elected president of the bank about five years ago. This bank is one of the largest and most substantial financial institutions in the state, has capital of $100,000, surplus and undivided profits of $330,000, and its deposits have increased during the presidency of Mr. Beavers from $1,200,000 to $2,500,000. The bank has paid steady dividends from the start, and for several years has paid twenty per cent annually.

It has been noted as a paradox that the busiest men frequently have the most time for matters outside business. Throughout his residence at Grafton Mr. Beavers has been a worker in the city's destiny. He early became a director of the Chamber of Commerce, is a director of the West Virginia Wholesale Grocers Association, is president of the Boy Scout Council, one of the board of trustees of Andrews Methodist Episcopal Church and superintendent of the Sunday school, and was for four years a member and four and a half years president of the Grafton Board of Education, retiring from that office in July, 1921. While he was a member the city high school was constructed, equipped and furnished at a cost of $115,000, a figure that was a gratifying evidence to the taxpayers that an important work of this kind could be completed as efficiently and economically as a similar work for private individuals. Other improvements in school systems during the same period included the installation of new toilets in all the seven schools, and the general elevation of the standard of school work.

During the World war Mr. Beavers was chairman of the County Council of Defense, chairman of the Four-Minute Men, and the fact that the county went far "over the top" in every drive showed how thoroughly Taylor had been organized among the counties of the state. Mrs. Beavers was a leader in the advisory and other work of the Red Cross, being a committee chairman. Mr. Beavers is a past vice president of the Rotary Club. He was reared in a republican home, cast his first vote for president for Benjamin Harrison, but outside of local and municipal affairs he has never entered politics as a candidate. Soon after moving to Grafton Mr. Beavers entered upon his Masonic career, is a member of Mystic Lodge No. 75, A. F. and A. M., Copestone Chapter No. 12, R. A. M., De Molay Commandery No. 11, is a past eminent commander of Grafton Commandery, a member of West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling, and has been assistant director for many years in the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling and recently has been appointed director of the class.

In Preston County, September 10, 1891, Mr. Beavers married Miss Ethel Gertrude Field, who was born in Pennsylvania in May, 1871. Her father, A. E. Field, was a lumberman who moved from Pennsylvania to Preston County. Mrs. Beavers finished her education in West Virginia Normal School and taught two years in Preston County. With her husband she has been associated with the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Foreign Missionary Society, of which she is president, is the third largest organization of the kind in the Morgantown district. She is a past worthy matron of the Eastern Star, and during her time of office organized the Eastern Star Club.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Beavers: Jessie, who is now the wife of Dr. Howard T. Phillips, of Wheeling, West Virginia, and they have a son, Howard T., Jr. The daughter, Bernice, died at the age of sixteen. William A. Beavers, Jr., is a student in the Grafton High School. The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Beavers is a generous home, substantial in its comforts, but without any effort at ornateness or display. It is a family home where deep human sympathy abounds and where genuine friendships are exchanged. In an important sense this home is the culmination of the career of a man who started life as a boy with complete poverty of all those resources outside of human character and striving ambition.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SHUTTLEWORTH, M. D. Few men of medicine are better known in Harrison County than Dr. Benjamin Franklin Shuttleworth, who has been engaged in the practice of his calling at Clarksburg for seventeen years, and whose splendid professional application to the duties and responsibilities of his vocation have gained him a position high in its ranks and equally high in the confidence of his fellow-townsmen. While a general practitioner, he has given special attention to internal medicine, and is at present acting as medical inspector of the Clarksburg public schools.

Doctor Shuttleworth was born at Clarksburg, July 17, 1877, one of the eleven children born to Benjamin Franklin and Mary Rebecca (Blair) Shuttleworth, the former a native of Harrison County, West Virginia, and the latter of Augusta County, Virginia. Notley Shuttleworth, the paternal grandfather of the doctor, was in his day a prominent and successful business man of Clarksburg and a man of influence in civic affairs, in which he took a helpful and constructive interest.

Benjamin Franklin Shuttleworth, of this review, was reared at Clarksburg, where he attended the public schools, after leaving which he took a preparatory literary course at the West Virginia State University, where he obtained his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1901. He then entered Jefferson Medical College, and obtained his Doctor of Medicine degree in 1905. He has twice returned to this institution for post-graduate work. Doctor Shuttleworth began his professional career at Clarksburg, where he has gained a very desirable and representative practice, and has long ranked with the leaders of his profession. He occupies offices at 126 West Main Street. If any branch of his profession may be said to receive more of his attention than another it is that of internal medicine, in which he has won more than a local reputation and is frequently called into consultation in cases of this kind.

Doctor Shuttleworth is a member of the medical staff of St. Mary's Hospital, where he has the full and unquestioned confidence of his professional associates. For several years he has had the responsibility of caring for the hygiene and health conditions of the children of the city in the capacity of medical inspector of the Clarksburg public schools. He is likewise a member of the West Virginia State Public Health Council, local surgeon for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, physician and surgeon for the Consolidation Coal Company and medical consultant for the Hope Gas Company. He belongs to the Harrison County Medical Society, of which he was president in 1919; the West Virginia State Medical Society, of which he was first vice president in 1919; the American Medical Association and the American Congress on Internal Medicine. Doctor Shuttleworth is a Mason and an Elk. In the Scottish Rite branch of Masonry he has attained the thirty-second degree, and in the York Rite, the Chapter degree, and is also a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. In politics he is a republican, but politics has played only a small part in his career, although as a public-spirited citizen he has interested himself in civic matters in an endeavor to secure the election of able officials and the passage of worthy legislation. His religious faith is that of the Presbyterian Church, and he has always supported worthy religious and charitable movements.

In 1907 Doctor Shuttleworth was united in marriage with Miss Rachael Faris, of Clarksburg. She is a daughter of Samuel S. and Sallie (Davison) Faris, and was born at Bridgeport, West Virginia. Doctor and Mrs. Shuttleworth occupy a pleasant residence at Clarksburg.

MAJ. H. W. HUNTER. The career of the late Major Hunter of Moundsville was intimately associated with the big things in the commercial expansion of that locality for practically half a century. He was one of the first city officials, and for over thirty years was prominently identified with banking.

He became the first cashier of the Marshall County Bank when it was organized in 1881, this being the first bank in Marshall County. He was an active official of the bank for nearly a quarter of a century, and in 1905, with other local men, he established the Mound City Bank and was its cashier until his death on April 11, 1914, when he was succeeded by his son, Carl H. Hunter. The president of the Mound City Bank from the beginning has been J. C. Bardel. The first vice president was C. E. Haddocks, who was succeeded by John A. Bloyd. The Mound City Bank is an institution with resources of nearly $750,000. Its capital is $50,000, surplus and profits, $40,000, and it has over $600,000 on deposit.

Major Hunter was born on Wheeling Island, March 7, 1837, son of Robert Bruce and Artemisia (Shepherd) Hunter. He was of Scotch-Irish ancestry and in direct lineage from Robert Bruce. Major Hunter had a common school education, supplemented by a commercial course. At the age of sixteen he went to Moundsville, and up to the time of the Civil war was a clerk and connected with the river traffic. In June, 1861, he assisted in recruiting a company, and became first lieutenant of Company I of the Third West Virginia Infantry, was promoted to captain, and when the regiment was changed to the Sixth West Virginia he became its major and served until his discharge in August, 1864. Major Hunter for three years following the war was in mercantile business at Moundsville. Moundsville was incorporated in 1866, and at the first election he was chosen clerk and treasurer of the corporation. From 1867 to 1871 he was deputy sheriff, and for one year was assistant internal revenue collector for the district embracing Marshall, Wetzel and Tyler counties. Then for four years he was county assessor, and in 1876 was elected sheriff. Soon after he retired from the office of sheriff he entered upon his duties as cashier of the Marshall County Bank.

Probably no man in Marshall County had more friends than Major Hunter. He was a true gentleman, modest in manner, frank and courteous, always speaking kindly and spoken of kindly. He enjoyed success in his business affairs, and his integrity of character won him the highest esteem of all who knew him. For more than half a century he was ever responsive to the broader commercial and industrial advantages of his city. He was not only a banker but interested in coal operations and industrial organizations. He was connected with the Fostoria Glass Company, the United States Stamping Company, the National Bed Company, the Moundsville Land Company, and was a half owner in the Paris Run Coal Company, these including some of the organized institutions that have given character to Moundsville as a commercial center. At the time of his death he was the oldest bank cashier on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio between Wheeling and Grafton and on the Ohio between Wheeling and Parkersburg.

On February 22, 1865, Major Hunter married Jane E. Edwards. They became the parents of three children: Daisy, Mrs. Lottie B. McDonald and Carl H.

Carl H. Hunter, who succeeded his father as cashier of the Mound City Bank, is the present state senator for the district comprising Marshall, Tyler and Wetzel counties, and he represented Marshall County in the Lower House of the Legislature in 1916. The important law giving state aid to fair associations may be credited to him, and its value has been demonstrated in larger and better fairs and has greatly stimulated the agricultural and livestock development of the state. Senator Hunter is a member of the Board of Directors of the State Fair Association at Wheeling. He was prominent in all local war work, and the Mound City Bank over subscribed its quota at every occasion.

WILLIAM A. WILLIAMS. The place of his birth and youthful environment provided a strong influence sufficient to direct William A. Williams into the oil industry, and that has been his work all his mature years. For over twenty years he has been an operator in West Virginia, both in the oil and gas fields, and is one of the prominent representatives of this industry living at Weston.

Mr. Williams was born in Crawford County, Pennsylvania, at Titusville, July 15, 1878, son of Augustus H. and Addie L. (Chevalier) Williams. His father was born at Port Byron, New York, March 12, 1842, son of Silas and Catherine (May) Williams. Silas Williams was born in September, 1810, at Port Byron, and his wife was born at Fiskill, New York, in 1812. Augustus Williams was reared near Port Byron, had somewhat limited advantages in school, and at the age of thirteen went to work in a mill under his father. He was employed in a flouring mill and on a farm, and in 1863 removed to Pennsylvania and for a number of years had an active interest in the oil country in the western part of that state. For a quarter of a century he was in the furniture and undertaking business, but has lived retired since 1906. He has two sons, Harry J., an attorney at Tulsa, Oklahoma, and William A.

William A. Williams lived at Titusville, Pennsylvania, until he was twenty years of age. While there he attended the common and high schools, and from earliest youth he has been familiar with the technical language of the oil industry, and almost naturally sought his first employment in the oil fields. With considerable knowledge and experience attained there he came to West Virginia in 1898, where he was with the Standard Oil Company for fifteen years, and has since been an operator who has experienced the various ups and downs of the oil and gas business in West Virginia, but on the whole his record has been an unusually successful one.

Mr. Williams married Miss Helen Howard, of Point Pleasant, West Virginia, and a graduate of Marshall College. Two children were born to their marriage: Gertrude E., born November 24, 1908, died August 30, 1921; and W. Howard was born August 26, 1911. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are members of the Episcopal Church, and he

s a vestryman of St. Paul's Church, Weston. He is affiliated with Salem Lodge No. 84, A. F. and A. M.; Odell S. Long Chapter No. 25, R. A. M.; Calvary Commandery No. 3, K. T.; Wheeling Scottish Rite Consistory; and Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg.

GEORGE W. WILSON, of Weston has had a long and active experience in connection with the oil and gas industry, and has many valuable interests in the production of these two great natural resources, not only in West Virginia but elsewhere.

Mr. Wilson, one of the men of special prominence at Weston, was born in Hancock County, West Virginia, February 22, 1870, son of S. W. and Mary J. (Dickey) Wilson. His father was also a native of Hancock County, while his mother was born in New Jersey. She met and married her husband in Ohio, and they then returned to his former home in Hancock County, West Virginia. S. W. Wilson was a successful man in his business life, and for eight years served as sheriff of Hancock County, holding that office during the Civil war. He was a deacon in the Presbyterian Church and a staunch republican in politics. Of his seven children six grew to maturity and three are now living: May, a graduate of Edinburg College in Pennsylvania and wife of John C. Donehoo of Pittsburgh; Nora, wife of Dr. J. E. Miller, of Steubenville, Ohio.

George W. Wilson spent most of his early life at Pughstown in Hancock County, where he acquired his public school education. At the age of sixteen he began learning the trade of harness maker. That was his trade and occupation for twelve years, and for ten years he conducted a harness shop at McDonald, Pennsylvania, and also became interested in the oil industry while there. He returned to West Virginia in 1900 and has since made his home at Weston, though his interests as an oil and gas producer require his supervision over an extensive territory. He is interested in the Oklahoma Producing Refining Company of New York City, owns a half interest in sixteen producing gas wells in Lewis County, and has been identified with several other proven fields. He is one of the directors and vice president of the Bank of Weston, and owns an interest in a fine farm of over 400 acres on Murphy's Creek.

On April 8, 1912, Mr. Wilson married Margaret Mullady. His first wife was Lida Ferraday, who with her only child deceased. Margaret Mullady was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, in 1885. To their marriage were born three children: George C., born February 6, 1914; Mary, born January 19, 1917; and Virginia Lee, born May 9, 1921. Mrs. Wilson is a Catholic. Mr. Wilson is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and is a member of the various York and Scottish Rite bodies of Masonry and a past master, past high priest and past eminent commander. He also belongs to Osirus Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling.

PERCY BYRD, who is prominent among Clarksburg's representatives of the natural gas and coal industries, besides which he has long been influential in political affairs and has served as sheriff of Harrison County, is distinctly designated as one of the loyal, appreciative and progressive citizens of his native state.

Mr. Byrd was born at Clarksburg, judicial center of Harrison County, on the 20th of February, 1882, and is a son of William Taylor Byrd and Mary Ann (Burns) Byrd, a former of whom still resides at Clarksburg, where he is a retired merchant, his wife having died when about fifty-five years of age. Of the three children the eldest, William Byrd, served as deputy county clerk of Harrison County and was a young man at the time of his death; Percy, of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; and Essie G. is the wife of Joseph W. Newcomer, of Cincinnati, Ohio. William Taylor Byrd was born in Harrison County and is a son of Abraham and Catherine (Hull) Byrd, who were born and reared in Virginia, where their marriage was solemnized and whence they came to what is now Harrison County, West Virginia, where they passed the remainder of their lives on their home farm. Mrs.

Mary A. (Burns) Byrd was born in England, of Irish parents, William and Mary (Rogan) Burns, who came to the United States and settled in Harrison County, West Virginia, when the daughter was a child. Mr. Burns here became identified with farming and coal mining, besides having been a gallant soldier of the Union in the Civil war. His death occurred when he was about fifty-five years of age.

After having profited by the advantages of the parochial schools of St. Joseph's Catholic Church at Clarksburg, Percy Byrd entered Rock Hill College, Maryland, and in 1906 was graduated in this institution, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Later he served three years as deputy sheriff of Harrison County, and upon the death of the sheriff, Michael J. Francis, he was appointed the latter's successor, in January, 1912. At the regular election in the following November he was elected to the office of which he was incumbent at the time, to fill out the unexpired term, there having been no opposing candidate. He thus held the position of sheriff eighteen months, and was ex-officio county treasurer, the two offices being combined. Upon his retirement from office in 1913 Mr. Byrd became interested in the production of natural gas, and later that of coal. He is now secretary and treasurer of the Norwood Gas Company and is a principal in other corporations, including the following named: The Fort Pitt Coal Company; the Macfarlane Coal Company, of which he is president; the Liberty Carbon Company, of which he is treasurer; and the Louisiana Carbon Company, of which likewise he is treasurer.

Upon the death of Sheriff Francis Mr. Byrd became executor of his estate, in consonance with a request made in the will of the deceased, who further instructed that the executor hold the properties of Mr. Francis in trust for a period of ten years. These properties included real estate, oil, gas and coal holdings, and in his functions as executor Mr. Byrd has given much of his time to the management and development of these properties.

Mr. Byrd early began to take active part in local politics as a stalwart advocate of the principles of the democratic party, and he has been prominent and influential in the councils and campaign activities of the party in West Virginia. He represented the Third Congressional District as delegate to the Democratic National Convention of 1916 at St. Louis. He is a valued member and director of the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club and the Clarksburg Country Club. He is a past exalted ruler of Clarksburg Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a Grand Knight of the Knights of Columbus, both he and his wife being communicants of the Catholic Church.

On the 21st of January, 1914, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Byrd and Miss Anna A. Hayden, daughter of Patrick and Sarah Jane Hayden, of Grafton, Taylor County, and the two children of this union are William Hayden Byrd and James Percy Byrd.

GARNETT PIERCE MORISON, M. D. A specialist in eye, ear, nose and throat diseases at Martinsburg, Doctor Morison for a number of years enjoyed a successful practice in Southern Michigan, went from that state to active duty in the Medical Corps in the great war, and after his return located in Berkeley County, where he was born and reared and where his family has been prominent for several generations.

Doctor Morison was born at Bunker Hill in Berkeley County. His father, George Porterfield Morison, was born in the same county. His grandfather was Daniel Buckles Morison, who was born on the Morison homestead at the mouth of Opequan Creek in Jefferson County. The great-grandfather of Doctor Morison was a farmer and planter, and for a number of years lived at Martinsburg. Daniel Buckles Morison owned and operated a farm near Bedington. George Porterfield Morison was born on a farm on Dry Spring Road, five miles from Martinsburg, August 10, 1854. He acquired his classical education at Shepherd College at Shepherdstown, and graduated in medicine from the University of New York. He began practice at Darke-vile, remained there three years, spent one year at Eldorado, Kansas, and for the remainder of his life was a busy professional man in Martinsburg, where he died July 21, 1913. George Porterfield Morison married Anabel Lee locality April 14, 1834, a son of Paul Pierce. It is a family Pierce, who was born in Clark County, Virginia. Her father, Capt. Alfred Newton Pierce, was born in the same tradition that the parents of Paul Pierce were murdered by Indians and their three sons grew up among strangers. Paul Pierce therefore had no inheritance of capital, and as a young man he was an overseer on a plantation, and from his earnings bought land of his own and in time became an extensive plantation owner and had many slaves. His plantation was located near Berryville in Clark County. He lived to the age of 100 years. His first wife was a Clevenger, and her only child was Alfred Newton Pierce, who was educated under private tutors and at the age of twenty-one began farming with land, equipment and slaves supplied by his father. He was very successful, acquired much property of his own, but during the war between the states his plantation was devastated, the fences and out-buildings being destroyed and all stock taken away except one mare and colt. He served as a captain in the Virginia State Militia, and at one time was arrested as a spy and sentenced to death, but on the morning set for the execution he was reprieved and later pardoned. At the close of the war he set to work, and in time recovered some of the heavy losses sustained, and he continued to live on his estate known as Fountain Head until his death at the age of sixty-four.

Alfred Newton Pierce married Elizabeth Bell, who was born near Middleburg, Jefferson County, August 29, 1839, daughter of Joseph E. and Catherine (Shaull) Bell. Joseph Bell was a native of Jefferson County, where his parents were pioneers. Joseph Bell was a millwright by trade. Elizabeth Bell Pierce died at the age of sixty-three, and her children were named: Anabel Lee, Gertrude N., Kate Ashby, Frank Hugh, Lula Best, Josephine, Lillie Margaret, Dudley Paul, Vance Bell, Mabel Clark and Buford E. Dr. G. Porterfield Morison and wife reared two children: Garnett Pierce and Elizabeth Talb. Elizabeth is the wife of Lee A. Livers, and their two children are Katherine Lee and George Morison.

Dr. Garnett P. Morison acquired a public school education at Martinsburg, attended Tinsley's Military Institute, and began the study of medicine in the University of Maryland. He left there before graduation and finished his course in Chicago in the College of Medicine and Surgery, where he graduated in 1914. Doctor Morison after receiving his medical degree located at Sturgis, Michigan, and practiced there until he entered war service. During the war he was prominent in Red Cross organization over St. Joseph County, Michigan, organizing a chapter in every township. He was also secretary and treasurer of several of the loan drives. On August 11, 1917, he was commissioned first lieutenant in the Army Reserve Corps, and soon afterward was sent to Camp Greenleaf, Georgia, where he was on duty until February 17, 1918, and then went overseas with the Twentieth Engineers. Later he was transferred to a base hospital in treating eye, ear, throat and nose cases. April 20, 1919, he returned to this country, and received his honorable discharge April 29th, and soon afterward located at Martinsburg. Doctor Morison has taken a number of post-graduate courses in New York, Chicago and Philadelphia, giving special attention to eye, ear, nose and throat, and is widely known as a successful specialist in that field. He is special examiner for the Pension Bureau, is special surgeon for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company and is official physician handling eye, ear, nose and throat cases for the Pittsburgh Stone and Lime Company. In October, 1921, he was appointed a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Training.

Doctor Morison is a member of Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, belongs to the Eastern Pan Handle Medical Association and the American Legion. He is a republican, having cast his first vote for William H. Taft. In 1910 Doctor Morison married Melinda J. Peters, who was born at Latrobe, Pennsylvania, daughter of James P. and Susana Peters. They have two children, James Peters and Garnett P. Morison, Jr.

Doctor Morison has always been much interested in athletic sports. He is a member of the Martinsburg Baseball Association. He is commander of Martinsburg Post No. 14, of the American Legion.

The ancestry of Doctor Morison runs back to William Morison, who was a native of Scotland and came to America with two brothers, one settling in North Carolina and another near the line of Maryland and Pennsylvania. William Morison was a pioneer settler in Jefferson County in what is now West Virginia. He married a widow named Mrs. Buckles, whose maiden name was Chipley. Their son Daniel married Jane Porterfield. They were the grandparents of Doctor Morison of Martinsburg.

ROBERT CHRISTOPHER BURKHART is spending his retired years at the residence which he occupied while active as a horticulturist and farmer, situated on the Winchester Pike, three miles from Martinsburg. Mr. Burkhardt is a veteran of the Confederate army, is a veteran man of affairs in Berkeley County, and few men still living can claim a broader association with the events of his long lifetime and with prominent personages both military and political.

He was born at Darkesville in Berkeley County, October 8, 1839. His grandfather, Christopher Burkhardt, was a miller by trade and, so far as known, spent all his life in Maryland. He was the father of three sons and three daughters, one daughter marrying a Mr. Flagg and another, a Mr. Rummel. Dr. Francis M. Burkhardt, father of Robert C., was born about eight miles north of Hagerstown, Washington County, Maryland, acquired a liberal education, practiced medicine for three years in the City of Washington, with Doctor Dunbar, and then located at Darkesville, West Virginia, where his labors as an active physician continued for upwards of forty years. He lived to the age of eighty-four. Doctor Burkhardt first married Miss Rosenberger, and their two children were James H. and Caroline, the latter the wife of John R. Stewart. The second wife of Doctor Burkhardt was Elizabeth Stewart, who was born in Berkeley County, near Darkesville, daughter of Robert Stewart, a farmer. By the second marriage there were three children: Mary, wife of Philip Berlin; Ella B., wife of Elias Emert; and Robert C.

Robert C. Burkhardt acquired a private and public school education. He was a young man of twenty-two when the war came on, and he soon enlisted in Company B of the First Virginia Cavalry. His main service during the war was as a scout. He possessed exceptional qualifications for this hazardous duty, being vigilant, alert, resourceful and fearless. Eventually he was put in command of a detachment of fifteen scouts and assigned to duty with Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's command. He kept in close touch with this command, though his duties frequently took him within the Union lines. He had many exciting experiences. It was his duty to learn all he could of the whereabouts of the enemy. He frequently conferred with Confederate leaders high in command, and knew nearly all the prominent generals in the armies of Northern Virginia. It was Mr. Burkhardt who informed General Early that General Sheridan was absent from his army in Washington. This information caused General Early to make his attack upon the Union troops at Cedar Creek, and Mr. Burkhardt was at Darkesville and saw General Sheridan galloping down the Winchester Pike on the way to send back his retreating forces and retrieve a victory. Mr. Burkhardt was in the battle of Gettysburg, was at Richmond the day before the surrender, and at Appomattox on the day of the surrender.

In 1866, following the war, he engaged in the drug business at Shepherdstown, but four years later bought a farm near Shenandoah Junction. After being there several years he bought a fine place bordering the Winchester Pike, three miles from Martinsburg, and on that estate he has lived now for nearly half a century. He has developed it as a horticultural proposition, raising both apples and pears and he became known as one of the most successful orchardist in the Eastern Panhandle. He continued in the business for about forty years, finally selling his fruit interest a son-in-law. He is still a member of the West Virginia Horticultural Society, and was the second president that body, serving six years.

In 1866 Mr. Burkhart married Susan W. Moore, a native Jefferson County and daughter of Samuel Moore. Her other, Maj. Blue Moore, was a Confederate officer, a major in the staff of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston. Mrs. Burkhart died May 14, 1914, after they had been married forty-eight years. They reared a family of eleven children: Bessie M., Maggie Virginia, Joseph Flagg, Mary Porter, Frances Antz, Myrtle M., Robert Stewart (who died at the age of twenty-three), Carrie, Daisy, Blue Moore and Ernest nmurt.

Mr. Burkhart has always been a staunch democrat. For eighteen years he was magistrate of Arden District, and in 1899 was elected to the State Senate, receiving the largest majority ever given a candidate in his district. He voted for John T. Magraw for the United States Senate. He was member of several important committees, including privileges and elections and finance. Mr. Burkhart is affiliated with the Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., Lebanon chapter No. 2, R. A. M., and Palestine Commandery No. K. T.

RICHARD FAIRFAX WHITING. The Village of Inwood, Berkeley County, derives its commercial importance and activities largely from the enterprise of Richard Fairfax Whiting, who handles the merchandise and produce going out, is postmaster and concerned in other functions of the community. Mr. Whiting is member of an old and prominent family of Virginia and West Virginia.

His great-grandfather was George Braxton Whiting, who is born at Rock Hall in what is now Jefferson County, east Virginia, but moved to Loudoun County, Virginia, where he was a planter and slave owner. He married Elizabeth Horner, a native of Fauquier County. Their son, James Henry Whiting, who was born in Loudoun County, became a farmer and owned and occupied the estate known as Ingleside in Clark County. He was a slave owner, but the beginning of the war freed his slaves. He lived at his farm, Ingleside, until his death. He married Rebecca Wyatt, a native of Clark County.

George Carlyle Whiting, father of the Inwood business man, was born at Long Branch in Clark County March 23, 1843, and finished his education in the Berryville Academy. At the age of eighteen he accompanied his uncle, Fenton Whiting, to California, and was employed by his uncle the transportation and freighting business. They operated a freighting line between Quincy and Marysville, using mules and mules, and George C. Whiting also prospected the mineral district of Austin, Nevada. After an absence of six years he returned home and engaged in farming at Ingleside in Clark County, but three years later settled at Inwood Meadow in Jefferson County, West Virginia, on a portion of his wife's family estate. Here he erected a commodious home, barn and out buildings, and continued general farming until his death in April, 1918.

His wife was Belinda Albina Throckmorton, who was born on the Long Meadow farm, daughter of Warner Washington and Susan Ann (Llewellyn) Throckmorton. Her father was born in 1792, son of Albion and Mildred (Washington) Throckmorton, and a grandson of John and Elizabeth (Locke) Throckmorton. Mildred Washington was a daughter of Warner and Hannah (Fairfax) Washington, of Fairfax County, Virginia. It was Warner Washington Throckmorton who purchased the estate known as Long Meadow in the 11th Town District of Jefferson County, and he developed it into the complete plantation institutions so familiar in the ante-bellum days, one of his slaves being a blacksmith and capable of making all the horse shoes and nails, while another was a shoemaker and still others were trained to other trades. Warner Washington Throckmorton became a soldier in the Mexican war, and for his service received from the Government a tract of 160 acres of land in Iowa. He died April 11, 1855. His wife, Susan Ann Llewellyn, was born April 28, 1828, in Jefferson County, daughter of John Llewellyn, and she died June 23, 1870.

Mrs. George C. Whiting died April 2, 1898. Her seven children were: Warner F., Richard Fairfax, Lawrence Washington, George B. (who died at the age of twenty-three years), Lucy Elizabeth, Susan L. and Henry Wilmer. The son Henry Wilmer became manager of the homestead farm, but enlisted in August, 1918, and was stationed at Camp Greeneleaf, Georgia, then transferred to Fort Ontario Base Hospital No. 138 in New York and assigned to the Medical Department, and subsequently was on duty at Hospital No. 5, until his honorable discharge July 17, 1919. He was a sergeant. After the war he returned home, and his sister presides over the household. All the family were reared in the faith of the Episcopal Church.

Richard Fairfax Whiting, of Inwood, was born at Long Meadow in Jefferson County, and acquired his early education in the public schools at Summit Point. Practically his entire experience has been along commercial lines. After leaving school he clerked in a store at Riverton, Virginia, then in stores at Front Royal, Milldale, Charles Town, Mount Jackson, and in 1902 came to Inwood and for five years was a clerk for the firm of Kellering Sons & Company. He then engaged in business for himself, and his interests have taken on a wide scope. Besides operating a general store he buys and ships grain, produce, fruit and poultry, is agent for the C. V. Telephone Company, and has held the office of postmaster since February, 1914.

In February, 1901, Mr. Whiting married Mary Catherine Shewbridge, who was born at Summit Point in Jefferson County, daughter of John H. and Margaret Shewbridge. Mr. Whiting is a member of the Order of Patriotic Sons of America and Junior Order United American Mechanics. He cast his first presidential vote for W. J. Bryan.

AQUILA JANNEY, who died March 25, 1922, was a Confederate cavalryman during the Civil war, and spent the half century or more since the war chiefly as a farmer in Berkeley County. In the years of his retirement he enjoyed the comforts of an attractive rural home on Dry Run Pike, a mile from the Martinsburg courthouse.

Mr. Janney was born on a farm a mile and a half from the courthouse on December 1, 1836. His grandfather, also named Aquila Janney, was a native of Virginia, whose ancestors had come to America with William Penn and after living for some years in Pennsylvania, moved to Virginia. Aquila Janney was a miller by trade, and in 1800 was struck by lightning and killed while on a boat loaded with wheat which he had bought in Maryland and was transporting to his mill. During the Revolutionary war he was pressed into the service of the Colonial forces. Being a Quaker, he refused to carry a gun. One day while on parade General Washington noticed him without a gun, and riding up to question him recognized Mr. Janney as an old acquaintance. Knowing his scruples as a Quaker he immediately wrote out a discharge and told him to go home and remain there until he was needed. General Washington had been entertained at the Aquila Janney home, and the beautiful solid mahogany table used at that time and customarily in the dining room is still preserved in the home of Aquila Janney in Berkeley County. The grandfather married a Miss McPherson, of Scotch ancestry, and she was later married to Mr. Mendenhall, and with him removed to Berkeley County and settled on Tuscarora Creek.

Israel Janney, father of Aquila and son of the pioneer miller, was born on a farm located on the banks of the Potomac River, nine miles below Alexandria, March 1, 1800, the same year his father was killed. When he was about eight years of age he accompanied his mother to Berkeley County. He made the best of his opportunities to acquire an education, and as a young man served an apprenticeship in a drug store in Alexandria. He then went to New York and clerked for a while, but the climate not agreeing with him he went on West to Cleveland, Ohio, but soon returned to Virginia, and in 1831 married Mary Tabb. She was born on a farm near Martinsburg, daughter of John Tabb, who was born on a farm three miles northwest of Martinsburg, and granddaughter of George Tabb, of English ancestry, who with his brothers John and Edward came from Gloucester, Virginia, to Berkeley County, and was a pioneer. George Tabb was a Baptist minister, and did much to extend the power of that church in Western Virginia. By each of two wives he had two sons, named John, George, Elliott and Bailey. John Tabb, maternal grandfather of Aquila Janney, was a successful farmer, owning and occupying the farm known as Rural Hill. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church and died in 1847. He married a Miss Turner, a life-long resident of Berkeley County, who died in 1863. Israel Janney after his marriage engaged in the drug business for a time, and then turned his attention to a farm which he acquired a mile and a half from Martinsburg, and remained a resident there until his death in 1884. His wife passed away in 1864. They had five children: John, Arabella, Aquila, William Henry and Mary.

Aquila Janney grew up in a time when there were no free schools, and his education was the result of attending subscription schools. As a youth he began assisting on his father's farm, and at the age of seventeen was performing the responsibilities of a regular hand. At the age of twenty-one he rented his father's farm, and worked it until the outbreak of the war.

Mr. Janney enlisted in Company B, First Virginia Cavalry, and was under the command of General Stuart, and part of the time was attached to Stonewall Jackson's Division. He was in many battles and campaigns, and during the latter two years of the war was in the Quartermaster's Department. He was at the headquarters at Petersburg when the final surrender took place, and received his parole at Winchester. He reached home May 22d. After recuperating for a time he resumed farming. The old homestead had been overrun by both armies, fences and all other improvements except the dwelling house and smoke house destroyed, and for several years he was busily engaged in the labor of reconstruction and rehabilitation. He continued renting until 1874, when he bought a farm five miles north of Martinsburg. He remained in that locality growing general crops and livestock for twenty-nine years. At the end of this period he came to the place where he spent his last days, near Martinsburg, on Dry Run Pike. The house here is an old landmark, having been constructed in 1808 of log timbers. The framework was at one time plastered and later was weatherboarded by Duncan Hamilton, who bought the property in 1872. It is a pleasantly located home on high ground, commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country.

It was in this home that Mr. Janney married in 1874 Miss Mary Johnson Hamilton. She was born in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, and both her grandfathers were Pennsylvanians who volunteered for service in the War of 1812 and did guard duty along the shores of Lake Erie at the time of the great naval battle in which Commodore Perry won his victory over the British fleet. Her father was Duncan Hamilton, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1801. Her paternal grandfather, John Hamilton, was a Scotchman living in Eastern Pennsylvania, and he married a Miss Torrence. Duncan Hamilton was an early settler in Allegheny County, and in 1872 removed to Berkeley County, West Virginia, and bought the farm on Dry Run Pike, where he spent his last days. He married Agnes McKeever, of Irish ancestry. Mrs. Janney is the only survivor of three children. She inherited a part of the homestead, and Mr. Janney subsequently bought the interests of the other two heirs.

WILLIAM GRIFFIN HAMMOND has devoted nearly all his active career to the glass industry of West Virginia. He was an official of a glass plant at West Union for a number of years, and since 1914 has been manager of the Royal Window Glass Company of Grafton.

Mr. Hammond was born near West Union in Doddridge County, February 7, 1879, and is member of one of the old families of the state. His parents were John W. and Eliza D. (LaRue) Hammond, both natives of St. Mary's. John W. Hammond was reared in Pleasants County, devoted his active years to the timber business, and is now living retired at West Union at the age of seventy-six. He is a democrat in politics.

William G. Hammond was one of the youngest in a family of five daughters and five sons. As a boy he attended public schools in Doddridge County, lived on a farm until he was about seventeen, and for several years following that was manager of a store at West Union. In 1905 he became one of the promoters of the Ideal Window Glass Company of West Union, had built the plant, and was secretary of the business for about nine years. In 1914 he removed to Grafton to take up his duties as manager of the Royal Window Glass Company. This is one of the important industries of its kind in the Grafton District, and the owners of the business are all West Virginians. Joseph A. Pugh is president of the company, Mr. Hammond, secretary and treasurer, and the official board of directors are Joseph A. Pugh, William Archdeacon, W. P. Hendrickson and Mr. Hammond.

Outside of his business Mr. Hammond is interested in local organizations for the welfare of Grafton, including the Chamber of Commerce and the Grafton Rotary Club. He was reared in a democratic home, but has been a republican since casting his first vote for William McKinley in 1900. Fraternally he is active in Masonry, being affiliated with Friendship Lodge No. 56, A. F. and A. M., at West Union, Odell S. Long Chapter, R. A. M., at Pennsboro, and is a member of West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Wheeling.

At West Union, July 20, 1911, Mr. Hammond married Miss Ethel Strickling, daughter of Albert E. and Emily J. (Ripley) Strickling. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hammond are: William G., Jr., Joseph Valentine and Helen Lee.

CARLTON L. TABLER, a successful young business man and merchant of Martinsburg, is an ex-serve man who was on front line duty in France until the close of the war.

He was born at Martinsburg, son of Mayberry G. Tabler whose birth occurred on a farm near the present site of Tabler Station in Berkeley County, and a grandson of James Walling Tabler, who was born in the same locality where the family was established in pioneer times. James Walling Tabler after reaching mature years acquired a place known as Federal Hill Farm, located in the Arden District, and remained there prosperously engaged in his chosen location until his death at the age of seventy-six. For several years he was a member of the County Court and also magistrate for Arden District. He married Amelia Schindell, who was born near Hagerstown, Maryland. They reared three sons, Mayberry G., John N. and Howard. Mayberry Tabler spent his early life on the homestead, and as a young man left the farm to engage in mercantile pursuits at Martinsburg. In 1886 he and Mr. Thompson established the men's furnishing goods business now conducted by Carlton Tabler. After a few years Mayberry Tabler became sole proprietor, and in 1914 took in his son as partner and continued active in the store until his death. He married Mary Elizabeth Hawk, who was born on a farm near Darkesville in Berkeley County, daughter of Martin and Mary (LeFevre) Hawk. Carlton L. Tabler is one of two children, his sister being Mary A. Tabler. He acquired a public school education at Martinsburg, and also attended Conway Hall at Carlisle, Pennsylvania. He is a member of a college fraternity. After returning home he went to work in his father's store, became a partner in 1914, and now has a business with a trade area over the territory of which Martinsburg is the logical center.

On September 7, 1917, Mr. Tabler joined the colors as a member of the Three Hundred and Thirteenth Field Artillery, Eightieth Division. He sailed for France in May, 1918, landing on June 9th, and took his position on the firing line September 9th. He was at the battle front until Armistice day, November 11th, when he was stationed on the River Meuse. He remained overseas with his division until May 30, 1919, when he sailed for home and received his honorable discharge in June.

Mr. Tabler is affiliated with Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, Lodge No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a member of the American Legion. At the age of twenty-six he married Miss Louise Milbourn.

William G. Hammond

reman, a native of Norfolk, Virginia, and daughter of John and Harriet (Zimmerman) Foreman. Mr. and Mrs. Foreman have one child, Harriet Elizabeth.

JOHN A. WILEN until recently was connected with an undertaking business which was established at Martinsburg more than three quarters of a century ago, and it remained continuously under the management and direction of the Wilen family up to January 1, 1922.

Mr. Wilen was born on the spot where the business establishment is now located. His grandfather, Nicholas Wilen, lived in Philadelphia, from that city removed to Boonesboro, Maryland, where he was in the hotel business, and in 1836 came to Martinsburg, West Virginia, where he died a few years later. He married Margaret Dubal, who was born near Boonesboro, Maryland, and she likewise died in middle life.

Their son, William Wilen, was born at Boonesboro, Maryland, in 1818, and as a youth he began an apprenticeship in the cabinet making trade at Hagerstown, Maryland, and several years later removed to Baltimore, where he finished preparing for the trade. In 1845 he returned to Martinsburg and established himself in business. At that time coffins and practically all furniture were made by hand, and the cabinet maker occupied a correspondingly important position in the business affairs of the community. William Wilen was an expert in his line and a very thorough business man. His establishment was located at the corner of Queen Street, one door north of East Martin Street, and continued in business there the rest of his life. During the Civil war he was a Union sympathizer, and he was elected and served as representative from Berkeley County to the Third State Legislature that met, in 1865. In Martinsburg, at the age of twenty-one, William Wilen married Mary Schoppert. Her father, Adam Schoppert, was born near Shepherdstown in Jefferson County, West Virginia, and moved to Martinsburg when it was a mere village. He bought vacant land at the corner of North Queen and Market streets, and there established his business as a locksmith, and continued a resident of that city until his death at the age of seventy-five. His wife was Mary Craft, who was born near Leetown in Jefferson County, and she also lived to a good old age. William Wilen and wife had five children: Margaret, who married Capt. William Kantner, a Union soldier; Melinda, who died young; Virginia, who became the wife of George Smith; William H.; and John A.

John A. Wilen during his youth attended the city schools, and was a mere boy when he began assisting his father. In 1870 he was made a partner in the business, and in 1880 removed to Baltimore, where for ten years he had a part in the business affairs of that city. On returning to Martinsburg he and his brother William H. succeeded to the business of their father, and this partnership was continued until the death of William H. Wilen. Afterward Mr. Wilen continued the undertaking business which was established by his father in 1845, having as his active associate Albert G. Coffman, until he sold January 1, 1922.

In Baltimore, in 1881, Mr. Wilen married Almira McLean, of Frederick County, Maryland. They have a daughter, Mabel, wife of W. H. Wolfies, of Martinsburg. Mr. Wilen is an active member of the Lutheran Church, is a master of Robert White Lodge No. 67, A. F. and A. M., is a past exalted ruler of Martinsburg Lodge No. 778, of the Independent Order of Elks, and also a member of the State Elks Committee.

WILLIAM DEAN, present sheriff of Berkeley County, has been a popular resident and business man of Martinsburg for a number of years and is a member of an old and well-known family of the county.

Sheriff Dean was born at Martinsburg. The family resides for several generations was in Rockingham County, Virginia, where his great-grandfather, William Dean, began his active career as a farmer and planter. His son, George Dean, was born in Rockingham County, reared on a farm, and gave his entire life to agriculture there. He died at a comparatively young man. His wife, Nancy Minick, at his death married Ben Sullivan, and they came to Martinsburg, sojourned at Williamsport, Maryland, during the war and then returned to Martinsburg and lived here the rest of their days. James William Dean, father of Sheriff Dean, was born on a farm near Newmarket in Rockingham County in 1848, and was a boy when he accompanied his mother to Martinsburg. Here he served an apprenticeship at the trade of boilermaker, and after his marriage bought a home on South Raleigh Street, between West King and John streets. This location at that time was at the very edge of the city, and the corner lot was enclosed with a rail fence. After completing his apprenticeship he entered the service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company, and was in the shops of that railroad company until his last illness. He died at the age of forty-one. James W. Dean married Emily Virginia Snodel, who was born on West John Street in Martinsburg, was twenty years of age when she married, and she now occupies the old Dean home on South Raleigh Street. She is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as was her husband. Emily Virginia Snodel's father was John Snodel, who was born on a farm near Martinsburg. His father, George Snodel, was a native of Germany, came to America in Colonial times, and was a pioneer of Berkeley County. He owned a farm in the western part of the county, and on leaving the farm located at Martinsburg, where his enterprise brought him extensive business connections. He operated a carriage and blacksmith shop, was in the livery and grocery business, and continued active in affairs until the close of his life. He married Polly Malone, of Irish ancestry, and who lived to the age of ninety years. Their son, John Snodel, learned the blacksmith and carriage making trade in his father's shop. During the Civil war he was a Union sympathizer, and after the retreat of General Banks' army he fled to Williamsport, Maryland. He and his three children started out on foot to make this pilgrimage, and on the way a Government wagon took them up and conveyed them the greater part of the distance. In 1865 he returned to Martinsburg, and he conducted a carriage and blacksmith shop on Winchester Avenue until his death at the age of sixty-four. He married Caroline Rhul, who was of English parentage. Her father was a well educated man and taught a private school for several years in Martinsburg.

James W. Dean was a member of Jefferson Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, and was also an Odd Fellow.

William Dean acquired his education in the city schools of Martinsburg. While still in school he went to work in the woolen mills, and continued with that industry until March, 1911. With his brother John he then entered the men's furnishing goods business and they have one of the best stores of that character in Berkeley County.

Mr. Dean was elected sheriff of Berkeley County in 1920, receiving a handsome majority of 1,500. He cast his first presidential vote for William H. Taft. Mr. Dean is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., Lebanon Chapter No. 2, R. A. M., Palestine Commandery No. 2, K. T., and is also a member of the Junior Order United American Mechanics and the Modern Woodmen of America.

CHARLES ROUSH, who owns and occupies one of the attractive homes of his native City of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, and who is the owner of valuable farm property in this county, has the distinction of having been a gallant young soldier of the Confederacy in the war between the states. He was born at Martinsburg on the 8th of December, 1838, and on the same farm, now partly included in Martinsburg, his father, George Roush, was born, the latter's father, Conrad Roush, having been born on the same old homestead in 1789. Nicholas Roush, father of Conrad, was born in Germany, where the family name was spelled Rausch, and, so far as known, he was the only representative of the family to come to America. He became one of the pioneers of what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia, where he was one of the thirty persons to purchase the first lots in the townsite of Martinsburg. This lot, which he thus acquired from General Stephen, was on the east side of Raleigh Street, at the corner of West King Street. He purchased also a large tract of land on the west side of Raleigh Street and on both sides of King Street. He erected his house on the corner lot mentioned, and there he resided until his death. The maiden name of his wife was Dorothy Reinfeld. Conrad Roush learned the hatter's trade, and thereafter became a successful hat manufacturer at Martinsburg, where he continued to be thus engaged until his death. He married Sarah Randall, who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, a daughter of John and Rebecca (Mercer) Randall. John Randall was born in Frederick County, Virginia, and thence went forth as a patriot soldier in the Revolution. His wife was a daughter of Edward Mercer, whose will was one of the first recorded in what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia.

George Roush was reared on the ancestral farm which was the place of his birth, and was one of the prosperous young farmers of the county at the time of his death, when but twenty-four years of age. He married Margaret Walters, who was born in Berkeley County, in 1816, a daughter of John and Catherine (Painter) Walters, her father having had a large farm on Dry Run, as did also the father of Mrs. Catherine Walters. Mrs. Roush survived her husband many years and was seventy-four years of age at death. Her two children were Charles and George.

The early educational advantages of Charles Roush included those of a well conducted academy at Martinsburg, and he was actively identified with farm enterprise when the war began. He promptly manifested his loyalty to the Confederate cause by enlisting in Company B, First Virginia Cavalry, and with this gallant command he took part in many engagements, including the battle of Bull Run. At the battle of Winchester he was wounded, September 28, 1864, but he was not long incapacitated and was with his regiment at Appomattox at the time of the final surrender. He was also wounded at Cannons Landing. His interest in his old comrades has been vitalized by his affiliation with the United Confederate Veterans. After the war he resumed his activities on the old home farm, which he and his only brother inherited and which they eventually sold to a syndicate that improved the property as an addition to Martinsburg, many houses and business buildings being now on the tract. Later Mr. Roush repurchased a part of the land, and erected his present commodious and attractive brick house, which is on an elevation on West King Street, and which commands an excellent view of Martinsburg and the neighboring mountains. Mr. Roush still manages his farm property in the county.

March 17, 1874, recorded the marriage of Mr. Roush and Margaret Virginia Seibert, who was born on a farm on Tuscarora Creek, four miles west of Martinsburg, in the year 1852. Her father, William T. Seibert, was born in 1815 near Lebanon, Pennsylvania, as was also his father, Michael, who came with his family to what is now Berkeley County, West Virginia, in the pioneer days, much of the distance having been covered on horseback through a virtually trackless wilderness. Michael Seibert obtained a rather large tract of wild land on Tuscarora Creek, and with slave labor he improved one of the excellent farms of the county. Here he died at the age of eighty years, and his widow, whose maiden name was Mary Tice, died at the age of eighty-seven. They reared three children, William, Henry and Mary, the last mentioned having become the wife of Henry Small. William T. Seibert as a young man was given land by his father, who built for him a substantial stone house. He continued his successful activities as a farmer and slaveholder until his death in 1852, aged thirty-seven years. He married Margaret Fryett, who was born in Frederick County, Virginia, a daughter of James and Margaret Fryette, her father having been a farmer near Winchester. The young widow of William T. Seibert eventually became the wife of W. T. Hout, and they passed the remainder of their lives at Martinsburg. Of the second marriage were born two children, Rosa Amelia and William S. Mrs. Roush was the only child of the first marriage, and she inherited and still retains the old homestead farm of her paternal grandparents. Brief record is here given concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Roush: Howard Seibert met an accidental death when thirty years of age. George Conrad first married Annie W. Magalis, who is survived by two sons, Clement and Howard. For his second wife George C. Roush married Jane Jenkins. Edgar V. continues his residence in Berkeley County. Miss Margaret remains at the parental home. George Andrew married Ruth DeHaven, and they have one son, Vernon Lee.

Mr. Roush is a director of the Merchants & Farmers Bank at Martinsburg. His wife is a charter member of the local Young Women's Christian Association, besides being a member of the Epworth League and the Ladies A. Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which all of the family are members, and she is a director of King's Daughters Hospital and is vice president of the local chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

CHARLES W. FREEMAN, of Bramwell, a retired coal operator, whose former extensive interests are represented in the Pocahontas Fuel Company, of which he is a director, has been associated with every phase of the coal industry in Southern West Virginia, both on the business and technical side.

Mr. Freeman was born at Trevorton, Pennsylvania, June 9, 1873, son of John and Isabel (Rutter) Freeman. His parents were born in England and were brought when young to Pennsylvania, where their people became coal miners. John Freeman was born at Clay Cross, England, as a young man worked in the mines near Trevorton, Pennsylvania, and on moving to West Virginia was for a number of years superintendent of mines for the Fire Creek Coal Company in Fayette County. In 1883 he moved into the Pocahontas District of Mercer County and located at Simons, where in the latter part of 1883 or the early part of 1884 he made the first shipments of Pocahontas coal from this section. He was active in the operation known at the Freeman & Jones Operation, but later became merged with the Caswell Creek Coal and Coke Company and finally became part of the properties of the Pocahontas Fuel Company.

Charles W. Freeman acquired his early education in the common schools of Simons and Bramwell, took a business course at Dunmore College at Staunton, Virginia, and completed his business education with special training in bookkeeping, general office work and auditing in Packard Business School of New York City. He then returned to Simons and entered the mines under his father, acquiring experience in all the various departments of coal operation, from actual mining to the handling and execution of mine foreman, superintendent and general manager. He was one of the leading operators of that section for a number of years. When the Caswell Creek Coal & Coke Company was sold to the Pocahontas Fuel Company, Mr. Freeman accepted as his share of the proceeds stock in the Pocahontas Company, and for a number of years has been one of the directors of this great corporation. Since then he has acquired other coal properties in Kentucky, including the Elkhorn Seam Company at Yager.

Mr. Freeman in 1909, at Lynchburg, Virginia, married Martha Francis Wheeler. They have four children: Mark Wheeler, Charles Wesley, Margaret Ann and May Llewellyn. Mr. Freeman and family are members of the Episcopal Church. He is a Royal Arch and Knight Templar Master and Shriner, a life member of the Elks, and belongs to the Bluefield Country Club, the Shenandoah Club of Roanoke, Virginia, the Falls Mills Hunting and Fishing Club at Bluefield, and is a charter member of the new Mer County Country Club. His favorite diversion is golf.

J. ROY NADENBOUSCH. Some of Berkeley County's most useful citizens in the past century or more have borne the family name Nadenbousch. Their service has been rendered as tillers of the soil, business men, public officials and several of the professions, particularly the law. Roy Nadenbousch is in the insurance business at Martinsburg, his father, John Nadenbousch, has for many years been one of the bankers of the city.

One of the first members of this old family in Berkeley County was Frederick Nadenbousch, who was born October 14, 1778, and died June 20, 1854. On April 6, 1815, he married Eleanor Collins, who was born May 4, 1792, and

Yours truly
Chas W Freeman

ed May 17, 1871. Their son, Moses Nadenbousch, was born at Hedgesville in Berkeley County April 5, 1827, and as a youth learned the trade of wagon maker and carpenter. From Hedgesville he removed to Martinsburg, and for many years was a successful building contractor in that city, where he died at the age of seventy-two. He married Margaret Ann Wood Harris, who was born July 1, 1833, and died at the age of sixty-two. Their seven children were named: Moses Preston, William Henry, John Thomas, Adrian Collins, Lucy May, Cora Belle and Robert E.

John T. Nadenbousch was born in Martinsburg, attended the public schools there and the J. P. Hynes Seminary, and at the age of sixteen was appointed deputy sheriff by his father, filling that office six years. He was then an employee of the Adams Express Company until 1894. In 1892 the Merchants and Farmers Bank had begun business as the First State Bank in Martinsburg, and John Nadenbousch joined it as assistant cashier in 1894. For some time and the cashier did all the clerical work required in the bank. In 1895 he was elected cashier, and has continued to fill that post for over a quarter of a century. This bank was reorganized in November, 1916, with a stock dividend of 100 per cent. It has a capital of $100,000, surplus and dividend profits of over $30,000, and deposits for a number of years have aggregated over $1,000,000. John T. Nadenbousch has been one of the direct instruments in the upbuilding of this splendid bank. He is a man of prosperous connections in Berkeley County, owns two farms in Arden district, and is a member of Equality Lodge No. 44, F. and A. M. He and his wife are both active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. At the age of twenty-six he married Laura E. Goff, a native of Hedgesville and daughter of James and Mahala (Miller) Goff.

J. Roy Nadenbousch, the only child of his parents, was born at Martinsburg and acquired a public school education there. Soon after leaving school he became an insurance solicitor, and his work has been continued along these lines. In 1911 he purchased a half interest in the Frank J. Amnell Insurance Company, an old established agency at Martinsburg, and later purchased the remaining interest. He has developed a very prosperous general service in all the important branches of insurance. He also has some general farming and orchard interests, being especially interested in horticulture.

At the age of twenty-one he married Eva E. Gerling, a native of Martinsburg, West Virginia, and daughter of Louis Gerling. Mr. and Mrs. Nadenbousch have one son, John Louis. Mr. Nadenbousch is affiliated with Equality Lodge No. 44, A. F. and A. M., Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, and Lodge No. 778, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Politically he is a democrat, casting his first presidential vote for William J. Bryan.

WILLIAM STANTON BERT, president of the Board of Education of the City of Martinsburg, Berkeley County, was born at Greencastle, Franklin County, Pennsylvania, on the 1st of March, 1862, and at the same place his father, John Bert, was born in the year 1835, a son of Peter Bert. Peter Bert was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and in connection with a revolution in his native land his property was confiscated. He then came to the United States, accompanied by his wife and by two of his brothers, Peter and John, the former of whom settled at Strassburg, Pennsylvania, and the latter at New Brighton, that state. The sailing vessel on which they crossed the Atlantic did not reach its destination until the lapse of fourteen weeks. The family name in Germany was spelled Bertt. Nephews of Peter Bert came to this country and settled in Baltimore, Maryland, and they changed the spelling of the name to Burt. From New York City Peter Bert proceeded to Greencastle, Pennsylvania, where he followed the work of his trade, that of tailor, but his death occurred within a few years, his widow, a native of France, having survived him by a number of years. They reared five children: Eliza, George, Benjamin, John and Adam. Adam Bert was killed in the battle of Fredericksburg while serving as a Union soldier in the Civil war.

John Bert learned the shoemaker's trade, and became skilled in the making of boots and shoes by hand. He became a successful manufacturer of boots and shoes, and continued his residence at Greencastle until his death, at the age of seventy-six years. He married Rebecca Houser, who was born at Greencastle, a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Cantner) Houser. Mrs. Bert died at the age of twenty-six years, leaving three children: Mary Elizabeth, Julia Frances and William Stanton. The father later married Kate Good, and four children were born of this second marriage: Charles Wesley, Arthur A., John W. and Elizabeth R.

William S. Bert attended school until he was eleven years old, and then devoted six years to clerking in a grocery store. He next entered upon an apprenticeship to the tailor's trade with the firm of L. Cantner & Son, and after his three years' apprenticeship he worked a similar period as a journeyman at his trade. He next went to Mercersburg, where he served two years in the merchant tailoring establishment of J. W. Reaick, and became an expert cutter. He then returned to Greencastle and formed a partnership with T. W. Brendle in the merchant tailoring business. Six years later he engaged in the manufacture of trousers and overalls, in which he continued operations at Greencastle until 1898, when he became associated with his brother Charles in operating the Shenandoah Pants Factory at Martinsburg, West Virginia. Later he withdrew from the firm and organized the Southern Merchant Tailoring Company, with which he continued his connection until 1906. From that year until 1910 he conducted a men's clothing and furnishing-goods store, from 1910 to 1913 he was engaged in business as a merchant tailor, and in the latter year became associated with the Royal Woolen Mills Company of Hagerstown, Maryland, and later with the National Woolen Mills of Parkersburg, West Virginia, of whose business at Martinsburg he has since been in charge.

Mr. Bert is a loyal and public-spirited citizen and has been influential in community affairs at Martinsburg. In 1910 he was elected a member of the city council, on which he served two years. He was again elected to the council in 1916, and he served two years as city treasurer. In 1920 he was elected president of the board of education. He and his wife are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Bert is president of the Sunday school class of 200 members. He is affiliated with Mount Pisgah Lodge No. 443, F. and A. M.; Lebanon Chapter No. 2, R. A. M.; Palestine Commandery No. 2, Knights Templars; the Scottish Rite Lodge of Perfection at Martinsburg; and Osiris Temple of the Mystic Shrine in the City of Wheeling.

In 1899 Mr. Bert married Miss Minnie M. Diffenderfer, who was born at Martinsburg, a daughter of Charles and Ann Maria (Poisal) Diffenderfer. Mr. and Mrs. Bert have no children.

BYRON W. STEELE, M. D. For the past several years Dr. Byron W. Steele has been engaged in the general practice of medicine at Mullens, and by his devotion to the duties of his profession, his close study and his pronounced skill has won a liberal and representative practice. His talents and sympathy have gained him recognition as a leader, and he has maintained throughout his career a high standard of professional ethics and honorable principles.

Doctor Steele was born at Moundsville, West Virginia, July 14, 1889, and is a son of Dr. S. M. and Florence N. (Cheadle) Steele. Dr. S. M. Steele was born September 14, 1860, in Tyler County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and after completing his normal school education at West Liberty engaged in school teaching for two years, in the meantime pursuing his medical studies. He then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, from which institution he was graduated with his degree with the class of 1886, and commenced practice at Moundsville, West Virginia, where he remained until becoming superintendent of the West Virginia Hospital for the Insane. He remained in this capacity from 1906 until 1914, and his talents as an authority on nervous diseases made his work of particular value. He returned from the hospital to Moundsville, where he now has a large practice and is numbered among the foremost members of his profession. He is a republican in politics and an Elk fraternally, and belongs to the Methodist Church, as does Mrs. Steele, who is a native of McConnellsville, Ohio. Four sons were born to them, all of whom served during the World war, three seeing overseas service. Dr. Byron W. Steele is the eldest of the sons. Leonard C. Steele was a sergeant in the Medical Corps of the Eighty-seventh Division and was overseas one year. He is now associated with the Wyoming Ice and Bottling Company at Mullens as bookkeeper. Rodney D. Steele was on the battle line with the Seventeenth Ambulance Company, Fifth Division, a noted company with splendid service to its credit. Marion Steele, the youngest son, was at the Students' Training Camp at Washington and Lee University when the armistice was signed.

Byron W. Steele attended the public schools of Moundsville, and was graduated from the high school there, following which he entered Marshall College and was graduated in 1910. He then enrolled as a student in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, his father's alma mater, and was graduated as a member of the class of 1914, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and for one year thereafter served as instructor. For the following year he served as obstetrician at Mercy Hospital, Baltimore, and during the next year held the same position at the Women's Hospital in that city. In 1916 he came to Mullens to take charge of Robertson's General Hospital as surgeon, and remained in that capacity until March 10, 1918, when he enrolled as a student in the Army Medical School at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. He received his commission as first lieutenant, was made an instructor, and in June, 1918, went overseas, where he was promoted captain and made orthopedic surgeon at Base Hospital No. 63. He remained in that capacity until March 11, 1919, when he was transferred to Base Hospital No. 91 as chief orthopedic surgeon. He returned to the United States in August, 1919, and again settled at Mullens, where he is in the enjoyment of a very heavy practice. Doctor Steele's physique and general bearing are such as to inspire confidence, and his real courtesy and sympathy likewise gain him the faith of his patients. He holds to the highest ideals in his professional service, and his work is characterized by a conscientious devotion to duty and a display of knowledge that demonstrates him a master of his vocation. His work has brought him before the people of Mullens and the surrounding community in a way that will not be easily forgotten, and he has never been found lacking in any of the essentials that are necessary for the making of a truly great physician. He keeps fully abreast of the numerous advancements being constantly made in his calling, and is an active and interested member of the Mercer County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a member of the Phi Beta Pi medical fraternity. In politics he adheres to the principles of the republican party, but his profession has kept him too busily occupied for him to engage in public life, although he displays a good citizen's interest in civic matters and gives his support to worthy movements and enterprises. Fraternally he is affiliated with Mullens Lodge No. 151, A. F. and A. M., and Princeton Chapter, R. A. M., in both of which he has numerous friends.

On July 14, 1920, at Mullens, Doctor Steele was united in marriage with Miss Frances P. Ould, daughter of W. T. Ould, of Glenlyn, Virginia. To this union there has been born one son, Byron W., Jr. Mrs. Steele, a woman of numerous graces and accomplishments, is a graduate of Concord Normal School at Athens, West Virginia, and also did special work at the University of Virginia. Prior to her marriage she was a teacher in the public schools. She and Doctor Steele are members of the Methodist Church. Doctor Steele is a member of the American Legion.

THOMAS D. CAMPBELL, of Piedmont, Mineral County, is prominently identified with the coal industry in this section of the state, as president of Hoff Brothers Coal Company and the Freepoot Coal Company.

The birthplace of Mr. Campbell is not far distant from the vigorous little industrial city in which he now maintains his home and business headquarters. He was born at Barton, Allegany County, Maryland, lying on the opposite side of the Potomac River from Mineral County, West Virginia, in September, 1877, and there he was reared to adult age; his educational advantages having been those of the public schools. His father, James Campbell, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in July, 1842, and was a child when the family came to the United States and established residence at Vale Summit, Maryland, whence removal was later made to Bloomington, that state, where he was reared to manhood. For many years he was engaged in the mercantile business at Barton, Maryland, and after his retirement from this enterprise he served several years as assistant appraiser and later as assistant surveyor of the port of Baltimore. He has been influential in politics and general civic affairs in Maryland, where he still maintains his home. He served three years as a soldier of the Union in the Civil war, and in later years has maintained affiliation with the Gray Army of the Republic. As a republican he has represented Allegany County five terms in the Maryland Legislature including the session of 1920, in which he was chairman of the delegation from his county. In the session of 1922 he was clerk of the minority party in the House of Representatives. Though he is nearing the age of four score years he is still vigorous and vitally interested in public affairs. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. As a young man James Campbell married Miss Emily Frombart, who was born in one of the Rhine districts of Germany, and who was reared near Newburg, West Virginia, where her parents established their home upon coming to the United States. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. James Campbell the following birth data are available: Katie, the wife of John Patton, died at Barton, Maryland, a short time ago; Joseph and John are twins, the former being a resident of Akron, Ohio, and the latter of Washington, D. C.; James lives at Frostburg, Maryland; Dr. William R. is a physician and surgeon at Hagerstown, that state; Thomas Dowery is the immediate subject of this sketch; George D. is a druggist at Lonsdale, Maryland; and Emma is the wife of John F. Sha of Newark, Delaware.

At the age of eighteen years Thomas D. Campbell became associated with mercantile business in his native place, and he continued his active association with the enterprise until 1917. There also he organized, in that year, the Bart Supply Company, which there conducts a large general merchandise business, in which he is still interested. Piedmont, West Virginia, Mr. Campbell is the owner of two well equipped meat markets.

In 1915 Mr. Campbell became associated with Hoff Brothers in coal-mining enterprise, and he is now president of the Hoff Brothers Coal Company, the mines of which, Barton, Maryland, and Cutlips, West Virginia, have given a yield of 125,000 tons in a single year. In 1916 Mr. Campbell became a principal also in the Hampshire Big Vein Coal Company, whose mine, at Barton, gives a normal output of 400 tons a day. He organized the Freepoot Coal Company, which is operating on a vein of Kittanning coal near Oakland, Maryland, with a normal output of 4 tons daily, he being president of this corporation. The property of this company was developed in the midst of the forest, the company constructing a standard-gauge railroad of one and one-half miles, besides having established a water system, erected a school house and a church and also forty houses for the use of employees in the mine. The Campbell Coal Company, a partnership organization, was established about 1917, and conducts a substantial brokerage business in the buying and selling of coal, with offices at Piedmont, West Virginia, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Mr. Campbell is a director of the First National Bank of Barton, Maryland, and of the Liberty Trust Company at Cumberland, that state. He has been a resident and vitally progressive and public-spirited citizen of Piedmont since 1919, his political allegiance being given to the republican party. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity and the Knights of Pythias, and he and his wife have membership in the Presbyterian Church. In the World War period he was active in the furtherance of the various patriotic causes, including the sale of the Government war bonds, and he was registered for military service, but not called.

At Barton, Maryland, on the 1st of September, 1909, Mr. Campbell wedded Miss Nannie T. McDonald, who was there born and reared, a daughter of William McDonald and a representative of the staunchest of Scottish ancestry. The Campbell residence at Piedmont is one of the finest in the city, and he is the owner also of the Campbell Building, in which his business offices are established.

KELLEY E. REED is senior partner in the firm of Reed & Lapsley, general contractors, with headquarters in South Charleston but with a business that reaches to all parts of the state and to outside states. Mr. Reed is an experienced and successful builder of railroads, sewers, tunnels and other heavy forms of construction, and it is said by his associates that he has never undertaken a contract without carrying it through with credit to himself.

The firm of Reed & Lapsley began operations in 1914. They handle railroad, street paving, general road work and also structural steel work. They did a great deal of business for the United States Housing Corporation during the war. This firm built a part of the interurban line between Charleston and Cabin Creek Junction. They have all the facilities for standard gauge railroad construction, and excavation machines for sewer and similar work. Many of their contracts with railroads are outside the state, but chiefly with the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Mr. Kelley E. Reed was born at Clay Court House in Clay County, West Virginia, in 1881, and as a lad took up railroad work. In 1907 he organized the firm of Board & Reed, contractors, and they built twelve miles of railroad in Tyler County. This piece of construction included two tunnels. They also handled a heavy job of construction for the Calina & Clinchfield Railroad through the breaks of the Lumberland Mountains, on Big Sandy River. There was nine miles they built through the mountains which cost $360,000, and was a twenty-four months' job. Mr. Reed continued handling railroad work for six years, finally selling his interest to Board & Duffield, and then did some individual contracting until he joined A. J. Lapsley, formerly of the firm Patton & Lapsley, general contractors. This firm was dissolved with the death of Mr. Patton, and since then Mr. Reed and Mr. Lapsley have been associated. Each is a practical contractor and superintendent of construction, and they give the closest personal attention to all their work.

Mr. Reed is interested in real estate in South Charleston and Charleston, and also coal production. He is vice president of the First National Bank of South Charleston.

He married Miss Rosa L. Layden. They have two children: Virginia Lee and Kelley E., Jr. Mr. Reed lives in South Charleston, and has taken an active part in the building of that industrial community. In fraternal circles he is a Mason and an Odd Fellow.

HENRY PAYNE BRYARLY. Nothing lends more dignity to the social life of a community than to find a record of successive occupation from father to son extending over a period of several generations, so that the family home and industry become a landmark, a steady influence, a symbol of human continuity. One of the oldest families in the history of Berkeley County is Bryarly. A home seat is close to the Village of Darkeville, on Winchester Pike, where Henry Payne Bryarly is keeping up the home and farm that came down from his father and grandfather.

His grandfather was Robert Bryarly, who owned a large tract of land in Arden District, including the present site of Tabler Station, and also a tract on Mill Creek, where he developed the power and built a flour and saw mill, an institution of great value in the early days and which he operated in connection with his farming. He was a slave owner, and most of the labor employed in the mill and in the fields were slaves. He also built a commodious frame house near the mill, and it was in that home that he spent his last days.

His son, Richard Henry Bryarly, inherited some of this land, including the homestead and the mills, and he increased the inheritance by purchase and good management. The homestead is pleasantly located east of and near the Winchester Pike and adjoins the Village of Darkeville. During his active career he enjoyed the congenial labor of farming and mill operation, and died there at the age of sixty-eight. He married Mary Payne, who was born in the same locality as her husband, a daughter of Nathan Payne. She died at the age of seventy. The family consisted of six sons and one daughter.

Henry Payne Bryarly was born at the old homestead and was eight years old when his father died. He remained with his mother, getting his education in the rural schools, assisted in the labor of the farm and finally succeeded to the ownership of the homestead and is still active in its responsibility.

At the age of twenty-four Mr. Bryarly married Mary Evans, who has been in the Village of Middleway, Jefferson County, West Virginia. Her father, Alexander Mason Evans, was born near Hedgesville, in Berkeley County, son of Howell and Evelyn Evans. Alexander M. Evans was a graduate of Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, and practiced medicine at Middleway until his death at the age of fifty-five. He married Harriet Scollay, who was born at Middleway. Her father, Dr. Samuel Scullay, was a native of Boston, Massachusetts, and a member of an old family whose memory is perpetuated by Scullay Square in the heart of the City of Boston. Samuel Scullay studied medicine, and on coming South located at Middleway, where he engaged in practice for many years. His wife was Sally Nelson, a sister of Dr. Marion Page Nelson, and a daughter of Gen. Thomas Nelson, who was a distinguished American officer in the Revolution. Mr. and Mrs. Bryarly have four children, named Harriet Scullay, Mary Payne, Harry Mason and Robert Presley.

ELBERT WILSON PEARMAN, the efficient store-manager and purchasing agent for the Pocahontas Fuel Company, Incorporated, Norfolk and Lick Branch Collieries, was born at Wytheville, Virginia, February 5, 1880, and is the son of Thomas Monroe and Mary Gallimore Pearman, also of Wytheville, Virginia. His father died January 22, 1920, at Ashland, West Virginia.

The public schools of Virginia and West Virginia afforded E. W. Pearman his early education, and at the age of eight years he began to work during his vacations as errand boy in the old Shamokin Coal and Coke Company store, which was later purchased by the Pocahontas Fuel Company. His father at that time being a resident of Maybeury, West Virginia. After leaving high school at Princeton, West Virginia, he supplemented his scholastic discipline by attending the West Virginia State Normal School at Athens, West Virginia.

He began his work as store-manager at the age of twenty-one, after having served as errand boy, janitor and clerk. He is now manager of stores for the Pocahontas Fuel Company at Maybeury and Lick Branch on the Norfolk & Western Railroad, the name of the local post office being Switchback. He has made a splendid record as manager of these stores of this important industrial corporation, in which service he has continued twenty-two years. He is a progressive business man and has a secure place in the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

Mr. Pearman is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he is chairman of the board of stewards.

In 1901, at Crockett Springs, Virginia, Mr. Pearman married Miss Lavinia Conner, daughter of the Rev. Giles A. and Lucy A. Showalter Conner, both natives of the Old Dominion State. To Mr. and Mrs. Pearman have been born eight children, five of whom are living, namely: John Watson, Merle Conner, Jean Louise, Elbert Wilson, Jr., and Thomas Monroe. The names of the deceased children are: Nelle Lavinia, Ruth Corinne and Virginia Elizabeth.

TOM F. KENNY, dean of the insurance agents at Piedmont, and ex-postmaster of the city, is one of the most representative men of Mineral County, and one who holds the confidence of everyone who knows him. Practically his entire life has been spent in this locality, and no man has its interests closer at heart than he. He was born on Racoon Creek, near the Village of Newburg, Preston County, West Virginia, December 25, 1853, a son of Thomas and Mary (O'Connor) Kenny, both from County Galway, Ireland, where they were married. Coming to the United States in 1847, they first established their home at Cumberland, Maryland, but later leaving that city for Preston County, West Virginia, making the trip by stage. On the present site of Newburg they bought an acre of ground, as they had learned the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, then in process of construction, was to have a station at that point, and realizing that the investment was likely to be profitable.

Thomas Kenny was a member of the surveying party, and carried the surveyor's chain almost the whole way from Cumberland to Grafton in the work of locating the line of the road. When the location work was completed he was employed by one of the contractors on the construction work, Jacob Humbard, and was connected with the actual building of the road as far west as Grafton. He then went with the track department of the road, and continued with it until his death, which occurred in 1867, his widow surviving him until 1886, when she died at the age of seventy-eight years, and both are interred in the Grafton Cemetery.

The children born to Thomas Kenny and his wife were as follows: John, Timothy, Mary, Patrick, Julia, Tom Francis and Michael. Of these children John Kenny spent his life at Grafton and was track superintendent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and died in that city. Timothy entered the railroad service and was a conductor on the Third Division of the Baltimore & Ohio until 1866, when he left the railroad, and, coming to Piedmont, built the Kenny House, which still bears his name. This became one of the most famous hosteleries along the road, and he conducted it until he reached an advanced age, when he retired, and he died at Baltimore, Maryland, at the home of his son, Rev. Father T. B. Kenny, of that city, and is buried in Maryland. Mary never married, but spent the greater part of her life at the Kenny House with her brother Timothy. She died at Piedmont, and is buried in the cemetery by the side of her parents. Patrick was also a railroad man, and for about forty years was a conductor with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and then retired from its service. He died in 1916, and he, too, is buried at Grafton. Michael was killed in the shaft explosion at Newburg in 1889, while engaged in coal mining. Patrick was a teamster during the war of the '60s, for the Federal Government, and John was assistant to the roadmaster of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, having charge of the reconstruction of bridges from the Ohio River to Martinsburg, destroyed by the Confederate forces. Julia, the younger daughter, married James Talbott, a resident of Monongia, West Virginia.

Tom F. Kenny spent his boyhood and youth at Newburg, and there received his preliminary education, his boyhood friends being the Crogan lads, one of whom has since become a distinguished lawyer of Kingwood, Preston County. The year his father died Tom F. Kenny came to Piedmont, and while completing his education lived with his brother at the Kenny House. Beginning his business career, he conducted a news stand, corner of Second Street and Childs Avenue, and occupied that spot for eighteen years, acquiring there his start in life. In 1893 he sold this business and was appointed postmaster by President Cleveland, succeeding William E. Heskett in that office, in which he continued until 1898, when he was succeeded by the republican nominee.

Upon leaving the postoffice Mr. Kenny embarked in the life and fire insurance business, in which he has since continued, and he represents many of the most reliable companies, including the Hartford, the Home of New York, the Continental, the Royal, the Commercial Union, the National Union, the Atlas Assurance, and the Camden Fire Insurance Company. He also represents the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company of Baltimore. Of late years he has confined his operations to the fire insurance and bonding business.

Before he was appointed postmaster Mr. Kenny had made his influence felt in democratic circles, and during a period of thirty years he was a delegate to the state and congressional conventions, and was a member of the one which after a siege of four days, nominated Governor Wilson. He also gave his support to William L. Wilson for Congress. The latter was nominated the first time at Piedmont by Col. John T. McGraw, of Grafton, in one of his first public speeches. In the democratic contest for president in 1912 Mr. Kenny was a supporter of the late Champ Clark, and did his best to nominate his candidate, but after Woodrow Wilson became his party's candidate he loyally supported him. In fact, Mr. Kenny has always been the advocate of the scholar in politics. He says, "If democracy was run in its purity as handed down to us by the framers of the constitution, we would have different conditions in our country now." He is a Roman Catholic in his religious faith.

Tom F. Kenny married at Newburg, West Virginia, January 17, 1881, Catherine D. Daily, a daughter of Dennis and Anna (McArthur) Daily, natives of Scotland, who located at Newburg about 1854, and Mrs. Kenny was born in that village June 8, 1855. There were seven daughters in the family of her parents, namely: Mrs. M. A. Moran, Mrs. Elizabeth Kenny, wife of Patrick Kenny, Mrs. Margaret Doonan, Mrs. Tom F. Kenny, Mrs. Esther Barrett, Mrs. Isabel Templeton and Miss Bridget Daily.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Tom F. Kenny were as follows: T. Daily Kenny, who is assistant to President William B. Cornwell on the Winchester & Western Railroad, with headquarters and residence at Winchester, Virginia; Stanley A., who is assistant auditor in the revenue department of the Federal Government, with headquarters at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; John Sheridan, who represents the American Can Company of Chicago at Cumberland, Maryland; and Ada Maria, who is a stenographer in the Department of the Interior, Washington, District of Columbia, where she has been since the beginning of the World war.

Stanley A. and John Sheridan Kenny volunteered for service during the World war. John Sheridan Kenny was the first to enlist from Piedmont, and was in the Second West Virginia Infantry. He was trained at Camp Humphreys, mobilizing first in Fairmont, and went overseas from Humphreys. He was sergeant of his company and was made purchasing agent for the camp while in France. After the signing of the armistice he was returned home without injury, and returned to civil life. Stanley A. Kenny went overseas after his brother, and was sergeant-major of his company, but did not get to the front before the signing of the armistice. He was returned home in 1919, also without injury. Taking the internal revenue department examination, he entered its service, where he has since remained.

THOMAS E. POWNALL, who for nine years was postmaster of Romney, is one of the active business men of the county seat of Hampshire County, and is a member of one of the older families of this section.

He was born at Rio in Hampshire County, April 10, 1875. His parents were Frank and Virginia (Baker) Pownall, his mother being a daughter of James Baker. Frank Pownall was born at Three Churches in Hampshire County in 1839, and as a boy on the farm had little opportunity to attend school beyond two terms in the country district. At the beginning of the Civil war he joined the Confederate Army, with the regiment attached to Gen. Stonewall Jackson's command, and saw some of the very heavy fighting before he was taken prisoner. For about a year he was confined at Camp Chase, Ohio. When the war was over and when he was released he returned to the farm, and that remained his business the rest of his life. He died in 1906. He was an active democrat and a member of local conventions, but his only elective office was in his school district. He was a Presbyterian. He survived his wife eleven years, and their children were: Bettie E., the wife of Stewart Zeiler, of Romney; Rebecca, wife of Charles Howard, living near Martinsburg; and Thomas Edwin.

Thomas Edwin Pownall spent the first twenty-one years of his life on the old farm, attended country schools, the Normal School at Basic City, Virginia, and at Fairmont, West Virginia, and for six years he taught school during the winter months in Hampshire County. Mr. Pownall is a lawyer by profession, having graduated from the law school of the West Virginia University in 1900. He carried on an active law practice at Romney, for five years, until he was appointed postmaster, under the administration of President Roosevelt. He was reappointed by President Taft, and finally, after nine years, retired early in the administration of President Wilson. During this period the business of the Romney Post Office more than doubled. When he left the office there were five routes radiating from Romney, one to Moorefield, one to Globe, one to Higginsville, one to Capon Bridge and one to Rio, so that Romney has been an important distributing center for mail. When he entered the post office all this mail from the outside offices was brought in by horseback, but the method of transportation now is entirely by auto. Since his administration of the post office Mr. Pownall has been engaged in the retail meat business at Romney. He has been active in other business interests, and was one of the original stockholders and is a director of the First National Bank.

Mr. Pownall did not follow his father's example in the choice of a political party, and has been a republican since casting his first vote for Major McKinley for president. He has attended local and congressional conventions, and helped nominate George Sturgis for Congress. He has been chairman and is the present secretary of the Hampshire County Republican Committee. Fraternally he is a past noble grand of Romney Lodge of Odd Fellows, and a past district deputy grand, and Mrs. Pownall and their oldest daughter are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

At Romney, June 29, 1904, Mr. Pownall married Miss Grace Virginia Parker, daughter of William C. and Fannie (Mytinger) Parker. Her father, a native son of Hampshire County, was successively a railroad man, in the livery business and finally a farmer. Mrs. Pownall was born at Romney, January 14, 1881, was educated in the local public schools and for six years taught school in Romney. She is one of a family of four daughters and one son, the others being Mrs. Belle Griffin, Mrs. Maude Frye, Miss Frances and William Earl. Her brother is an ex-service man, went overseas with the Sixth Division and was in the fighting in the Argonne Forest. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Pownall are: Virginia Hopkins, a student in the Romney High School, Marion Parker, Thomas E., Jr., and William "Francis Bill" Frank.

FRANK C. BURDETTE. The public profession of the law has been a matter of practice as well as a theoretical deal with Frank C. Burdette. He has been a member of the Charleston bar nearly thirty years, and whether in office or in private practice he has seriously conformed his efforts and influence in line with the principle that he was the servant of a great and noble profession, and not merely engaged in a vocation to earn a livelihood.

Mr. Burdette, who is the present prosecuting attorney of Kanawha County, was born on a farm in Lawrence County, Ohio, October 19, 1870. Shortly after his birth his parents, S. C. and Mollie (Taylor) Burdette, moved to Charleston, West Virginia. His mother was a native of Louisiana. S. C. Burdette was a first cousin of the famous humorist, the late Bob Burdette. S. C. Burdette was a sign painter by trade, but after removing to Charleston, read law, was admitted to the bar, and gained a high place in the profession. He served as prosecuting attorney, and for eight years was judge of the Circuit Court, retiring from the bench in 1914. He is now about seventy-six years of age, and in the past has been an active campaigner for the republican party.

Frank C. Burdette attended high school at Charleston, did some post-graduate work, and studied law in the office of his father and also in the office of George C. Sturgis, then United States district attorney. S. C. Burdette was assistant to Mr. Sturgis at the same time. Admitted to the bar in 1893, Frank C. Burdette entered at once into the work of his profession and also into republican politics. In 1894 he organized a republican club, with a membership of over 1,000. He was first elected to the office of prosecuting attorney in 1896, and served four years, after which he resumed private practice. Later he was called as assistant prosecutor to S. B. Avis and his successor, T. C. Townsend, for four years, and continued as assistant prosecuting attorney under B. Kemp Littlepage for four years. Mr. Littlepage was a democrat, while Mr. Burdette is a republican. In 1920 he was accorded the republican nomination for prosecuting attorney, and he carried the county by 6,200 majority, running 2,000 votes ahead of his ticket. He entered upon the office January 1, 1921. Mr. Burdette organized and is president of the Prosecuting Attorneys Association of the State.

His hobby is flowers, and he is a lover of nature in all her phases. For a number of years he has been a student of botany, and has gone into the more obscure relations between beauty as manifested in flowers and other environment and human behavior, particularly as human behavior is perverted into criminal acts under the influence of ugly environment. He has studied all the works of prominent psychologists who have covered this ground, and has had in his own experience as an attorney and public official the opportunity to study at first hand the reactions of abnormal individuals to the influences of color, forms and tone. At his country home at Edgewood, Mr. Burdette finds his recreation and practices his amateur art as a landscape gardener and grower of old fashioned flowers. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Burdette married Nellie Ault. Her grandfather, Major Ault, was a pioneer of the Cabin Creek District of the Kanawha Valley. Mrs. Burdette was born at Eastbank, West Virginia. They have two children, Mary Frances and Dorothy Perkins.

BERNHARD KAPLAN came to Weston about a quarter of a century ago, bringing here and opening a small stock of goods, and his enterprise as a merchant has enjoyed a continual growth and prosperity until he is now proprietor of the B. Kaplan Store, a complete department store, one of the best patronized in Lewis County.

Mr. Kaplan was born in Russia, November 1, 1870, son of Wolf and Leha (Sherer) Kaplan. His parents spent their lives in Russia, where his father was a business man. The mother died soon after the birth of her son Bernhard, and the latter was reared by his stepmother. He attended school in Russia, and at the age of eighteen, in 1888, came to the United States, landing at New York and going direct to Baltimore, where he found employment as a clerk. In 1896 he established a little business of his own as a dry goods merchant at Mount Jackson, Virginia, and the following year moved his stock of goods to Weston. He did business in men's furnishing goods for several years, but in 1911 organized a complete department store, with quarters in the Tierney Building. Later he bought and rebuilt the William L. Dunnington property, and now has a large building used for the various departments of his prosperous business. Mr. Kaplan is a citizen of much financial worth, thorough integrity and public spirit. He is a stockholder in the Bank of Weston, the Monongahela Power & Railroad Company, the Interstate Glass Factory and the Building & Loan Association. He takes part as a member in the Rotary Club and Chamber of Commerce, votes as a republican, and is affiliated with Weston Lodge No. 10, A. F. and A. M.

Mr. Kaplan married Miss Celia Silverman of Baltimore. They have two daughters and one son. Leha is a high school graduate and a graduate of Goucher College of Baltimore. Leonard, the only son, graduated from high school and graduated with high honors as ensign, being second man in a class of 541 from the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis in 1922. The youngest, Naomi, completed her college course in 1922.

JOHN BRANNON BENNETT is a lawyer by training and profession, practiced a number of years at Weston, but now has the active business management of the old Bennett estate at Walkersville, a noted general purpose and stock farm of 1,000 acres, a portion of the original tract of 5,000 acres once owned by his great-grandfather Bennett.

Bennett is one of the oldest and most distinguished names in the annals of Lewis County, West Virginia. William Bennett, its founder, was born in Pendleton County, Virginia, in 1775, son of Joseph Bennett, a native of Scotland, who settled in Augusta County, Virginia, before the Revolutionary war. William Bennett in 1797 bought a large tract of land in Lewis County from George Jackson, and he moved to the county in 1798 and throughout the rest of his life bore the reputation of a large land owner and a prominent citizen, serving on the first grand jury in the county. He died in 1857. His wife was Rebecca McCally, a native of Botetourt County, Virginia. They were married October 21, 1796. Her father, Dr. James McCally, resigned as captain in the British Marines to join the American Colonists in the Revolutionary war, and he spent his last years at the home of William Bennett in West Virginia. The grandfather of John Brannon Bennett was Jonathan McCally Bennett, who was born in Lewis County, October 4, 1816, and died October 28, 1887. During his youth schools were hardly available, but his active mind led him into a wide field of knowledge and he acquired the equivalent of a liberal education and became a very thorough and eminent lawyer. During his youth he was deputy county clerk and deputy sheriff, was admitted to the bar in 1843, was the first prosecuting attorney of Gilmer County, and practiced law with Judge Gideon D. Camden until the latter was elevated to the bench in 1852. Jonathan M. Bennett was elected the first mayor of Weston in 1846, and in 1852 took the place in the Legislature vacated by Mr. Camden. Not long afterward he was appointed auditor of public accounts for the State of Virginia by Governor Wise, and filled that post of duty until 1865. As auditor of the state he was at Richmond at the outbreak of the Civil war. He was instrumental in securing the appointment of Stonewall Jackson to a cadetship at West Point, and likewise was an influence in securing his appointment as a brigadier general in the Confederate States Army. He was elected president of the Exchange Bank of Weston in 1853. In 1858 he was defeated for nomination for Congress on the democratic ticket by only a small margin. It was largely due to him that Weston was selected as the site for the hospital for insane. After the war he resumed his law practice at Weston, was elected a member of the State Senate, and was one of the commissioners appointed to negotiate with Virginia relative to the division of the state debt. His report on that subject was one of the valuable documents that figured in the negotiations closed only a few years ago. He was also president of the Weston & Buckhannon Railroad.

The wife of Jonathan McCally Bennett was Margaret Elizabeth Jackson, a daughter of Capt. George W. Jackson and granddaughter of George Jackson, who was a member of Congress from Virginia and one of the Virginia Convention which adopted the Federal Constitution. Capt. George W. Jackson was born February 9, 1791, was appointed first lieutenant of the Nineteenth United States Infantry by President James Madison, July 6, 1812, served in the War of 1812, rose to the rank of captain, and was one of the distinguished citizens of Lewis County, where he died in 1876. Jonathan McCally Bennett and wife had four children. The daughter Gertrude became the wife of Dr. Fleming Howell, of Clarksburg. Mary Lee was the wife of William D. Bowie, of Baltimore, son of Governor Bowie. The two sons were William G. Bennett and Louis Bennett. Louis Bennett graduated in law at the University of Virginia in 1871, served for a time as principal of the State Normal School at Glenville, and later enjoyed an immensely successful law practice at Weston and had many widespread interests as a banker, owner of coal, oil and gas properties, and was speaker of the House of Delegates of West Virginia in 1891.

The late William George Bennett shared with his brother Louis in many of the best distinctions given to a lawyer business man and public spirited citizen. He was born at Weston, January 5, 1847, was educated under private tutors and in private schools at Richmond, Virginia, and as a member of the Virginia Military Institute Cadet participated in the battle of Newmarket and other phases of the closing days of the war. He graduated from the Military Institute in 1866, and received his law degree from the University of Virginia in 1869. He was the first member and the first presiding officer of the Alpha Tau Omega and an organizer of the Chapter of that fraternity at the University of Virginia. He practiced law at Weston twenty years, and was eminent both as a criminal and civil lawyer. He defended a great number of criminal cases, and only once was a man he defended convicted of felony. The character and ability that made him an able lawyer equally distinguished him on the bench. He was elected circuit judge as a democrat in a strong republican district in 1889, served a term of eight years and in 1897 was re-elected, retiring from the bench in January, 1905. He was defeated several times by a small margin as candidate for the nomination for governor. In 1892 and 1900 was the democratic nominee for justice of the State Supreme Court of Appeals, receiving 1,000 more votes than any man on his ticket. He was a delegate to the first Democratic State Convention, and for several years chairman of the State Executive Committee. In the early part of his career he was a member of the State Board of Hospitals for the Insane, and was appointed commissioner to assess railroads for taxation. He was one of the promoter and organizers of the Clarksburg and Weston Narrow Gauge Railroad, and was a director and attorney for that road and similarly connected with the Weston & Buckhannon Railroad.

Out of the ample fortune he acquired through his professional and business interests Judge Bennett improved, and increased the laud holdings of the Bennett family in Lewis County, and was probably the largest owner of farm lands in the county. He had at one time six farms, comprising over 2,000 acres. Next to his law practice his chief interest was horses. His Riverside farm became widely noted for its blooded cattle and standard bred horses. He also owned a breeding and training farm in Maryland. He was a director of the American Association of Trotting Horse Breeders and the American Trotting Register Association, and for years his horses made creditable performances on many tracks throughout the country. In Masonry he was grand master of the Grand Lodge of West Virginia, grand high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter, and grand commander of the Grand Commandery. William G. Bennett Lodge No. 46, at Walkersville was named for him.

Judge William G. Bennett died November 8, 1916. In 1872 he married Alice Brannon, daughter of Judge John and Amanda (Bland) Brannon. Her great-grandfather, Brannon was a native of Ireland, served as an American soldier in the Revolutionary war, and her grandfather, Robert Brannon, was a native of Virginia and a soldier in the War of 1812. Judge John Brannon was a brother of Judge Henry Brannon, of the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, whose biography appears elsewhere. Judge John Brannon was educated at Winchester, Virginia, was admitted to the bar in 1846, and the following year moved to Weston. He was a member of the Legislature in both Houses before the war, and served as circuit judge from 1872 to 1881. His wife, Amanda Bland, was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Newlon) Bland. Thomas Bland settled in Lewis County in 1817 and died in 1868. He was several times in the Legislature, a member of the Constitutional Convention of Virginia, was a soldier under General Harrison in the War of 1812, and was the father of Dr. William J. Bland, who served as superintendent of the Insane Hospital at Weston during the '80s.

Judge and Mrs. W. G. Bennett were the parents of six children: William G., Jr., who died in infancy; John Brannon; Hunter M. Bennett, who was admitted to the bar in 1903 and is active in practice; William Bland, who supervised the extensive farming interests of the family until his death; Margaret, who was educated at Winchester, Virginia, and at Mrs. Reed's School in New York, and is the wife of Robert Crain, a Baltimore lawyer; and Bertha, who finished her education at Washington, District of Columbia, and is the wife of Dr. George I. Keener.

John Brannon Bennett was born at Weston, April 15, 1875. He attended the Episcopal High School at Alexandria, Virginia, Washington and Lee University, Notre Dame University, Indiana, and the University of West Virginia, and graduated LL. B. from West Virginia University in 1906. He was admitted to the bar the same year, and enjoyed an extensive practice until he gave up the bar to take the management of the Bennett Stock Farm of 1,000 acres. While much of the reputation of this farm is due to its standard bred horses it also has one of the best herds of the state of Aberdeen Angus and Holstein dairy cattle. On September 19, 1915, John B. Bennett married Ethel Ayhurst, daughter of a former military man. They have five children: Jonathan M., Margaret Saxton and George Brannon Bennett. Mr. Bennett is affiliated with W. G. Bennett Lodge of Masons at Walkerville, belongs to the Scottish Rite body at Clarksburg, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and follows the family traditions in politics as a democrat.

EDWARD MARSHALL HAWKINS is another of the native sons of West Virginia to be prominently identified with the great coal-mining industry of the state. He is superintendent of the Harrison property of the Courtright-Cornog Collieries Company of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He is so interested in the ownership of coal and oil land in Ritchie County, and has real estate interests in the City of Clarksburg, Harrison County, where he maintains his home.

Mr. Hawkins was born on a farm near Clarksburg, Harrison County, November 25, 1878, and is a son of William and Nancy (Nuzum) Hawkins, the former a native of Taylor County, this state, and the latter of Harrison County. The father became one of the successful teachers in the schools of Harrison County and was a gallant soldier in the Union in the Civil war, in which he served more than three years, in the command of General Sherman, having been wounded in both legs and also injured by a horse stroke. After the close of the war he returned to Harrison County, and he continued as one of the honored citizens and representative farmers of that county until his death in 1907, his widow being still a resident of that county. Mr. Hawkins was an active member of the Methodist Protestant Church, as is also his widow, was a republican in politics, and was affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. All of the fine family of twelve children survive the honored father: Effie, wife of Sylvanus Frum; May, the wife of S. F. Deloe; Edward Marshall, subject of this review; Anna, wife of Rev. Perry Hill; Thomas, a blacksmith at McMechen, Marshall County; Morton, a miner at McMechen; Stella, wife of John Hill; Nettie, wife of Albert Duty; Naomi and Miss Mattie; Everett, a miner in Ohio; and Muriel, wife of Rev. Arthur Null.

Edward Marshall Hawkins passed his childhood and early youth on the home farm, and supplemented the discipline of the public schools by attending a normal school. He remained at the parental home until he had attained to his legal majority, and then became identified with coal-mining operations, first as a machine man, later as an electrician, and finally as mine foreman and mine superintendent in turn. For five years he was manager of the Monongah Glass Company's machine plant, and he is now prominently concerned again with coal mining enterprises, as denoted by the responsible position of which he is the incumbent. Mr. Hawkins is unwavering in his allegiance to the republican party, is affiliated with St. John's Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Shinnston, Harrison County, and he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Protestant Church at Clarksburg.

In 1899 was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Hawkins and Miss Aldie Douglass, and they have had four children. Carrie, who was born in December, 1902, entered the Fairmont High School when but twelve years of age, graduating at fifteen years of age, and graduated in the State Normal School at Fairmont when she was seventeen years old. Thereafter she graduated in the University of West Virginia, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and she is now a successful and popular teacher in the public schools of Clarksburg. Leonard, who was born November 28, 1911, remains at the parental home and is still attending school. The deceased children were: Clifford, who died aged three years, and George, who died aged three years and seven months.

HON. ALSTON G. DAYTON, who was judge of the United States District Court of West Virginia in the Northern District from 1905 until his death in 1920, represented an exalted type of "the public profession of law," and a record of his life and service is justly included in any collection of West Virginia biography.

The Dayton family has furnished many conspicuous members to a public service of the United States. The grandfather of the late Judge Dayton was captain of Patriot troops in the Revolutionary war. Another member of the family was Jonathan Dayton, who also served in the Revolution, was elected to Congress from New Jersey, and was speaker of the House of Representatives. Another member of the New Jersey branch of the family was William L. Dayton, who was a judge of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, a member of the United States Senate, and in 1856 was vice presidential candidate on the first republican ticket with John C. Fremont. He was appointed United States minister to France by President Lincoln, and died in France in 1864.

The father of Judge Dayton was Hon. Spencer Dayton, who was born in Litchfield County, Connecticut, January 22, 1820. He acquired his education through his own efforts, became a millwright by trade, and when the panic of 1837 put an end to his work in that line he took up the trade of carpenter and followed it until 1843. In the meantime he had studied Latin and Greek under a private teacher, and in 1843 began the study of law in the office of Nelson Brewster in Litchfield County. He was admitted to the bar there, and practiced one year in the East, but in 1847 moved to Western Virginia and located in Barbour County. He achieved in subsequent years a high reputation as a lawyer in what is now Central West Virginia. He was a staunch Union man at the time of the Civil war.

Alston Gordon Dayton was born at Philippi, October 18, 1857, son of Spencer and Sarah (Bush) Dayton. He completed his public school work at the age of sixteen, then entered the University of West Virginia, graduated A. B. in 1878 and A. M. in 1880, and was admitted to the bar in 1878. He then formed a partnership with his father, and took high rank among the able attorneys of the Barbour County bar, his reputation spreading over adjacent counties. For a quarter of a century he was one of the hard working attorneys and for a number of years member of the firm Dayton & Dayton, until the death of his father. He was appointed to fill an unexpired term in 1879 as prosecuting attorney of Upshur County. In 1884 he was elected prosecuting attorney of Barbour County, and it is said that the county never had a more able and efficient prosecutor. He served until 1888. His ability as a lawyer and his sound views as a republican contributed to his nomination to Congress in 1894. In the campaign that followed he defeated the scholarly William L. Wilson, author of the Wilson Bill, who had represented the Second District. Judge Dayton was a member of Congress for ten years, entering the Fifty-fourth Congress and serving through the Fifty-eighth Congress. He was again re-elected in 1904 to the Fifty-ninth Congress, but resigned ten days later, after completing a service of ten years and ten days. His record as a congressman was marked by many evidences of statecraft, and while he served his constituency faithfully he also won the confidence of his fellow members of the House. West Virginia never sent a more earnest, sincere and honorable man to Congress than Judge Dayton.

He went on the Federal Bench as judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of West Virginia in March, 1905. Besides the regular terms of court in his own district he held court by designation in the Southern District, also in Pittsburgh and New York, and once a year was on the bench of the Circuit Court of Appeals in his district. Judge Dayton continued his work on the bench until a short time before his death. The bar of West Virginia recognized in him a man of high ideals, of spotless integrity and noble character.

Judge Dayton was an elder in the Presbyterian Church more than forty years. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternities, the Knights of Pythias, and was grand master of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the state in 1893. November 26, 1884, he married Miss Columbia M. Sinsel, of Grafton. He is survived by his widow and their only son, Arthur Spencer Dayton of Philippi.

ARTHUR SPENCER DAYTON, of Philippi, represents the third generation of a family that has been distinguished in the bench and bar of Virginia and West Virginia for over eighty years. He is the only son and child of the late Judge Alston G. Dayton, to whom a separate article is dedicated in this publication. The son is one of the younger members of the bar, but took to his professional work fine talents and an unusually broad and liberal education, and already stands in the front rank of West Virginia lawyers.

He was born at Philippi, March 6, 1887. When he was about eight years of age his father removed to Washington to take up his congressional duties, and the son received most of his early education in the schools of Washington. Subsequently he entered West Virginia University, graduating A. B. in 1907, began the study of law there, and the following year graduated with the in cursa degree LL. B. His work in the university of his home state was supplemented by graduate study in Yale University, where he received the Master of Arts degree in 1909. Mr. Dayton was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of West Virginia, June 3, 1908. Though only twenty-one years of age, he had covered a remarkably wide field of research and scholarship, but his admission to the bar did not mark the end of his student career. He has found it as necessary to go to court with his lessons prepared as when he went to his classes, and among his contemporaries he is distinguished as much for his diligence as a student as the varied resources he is able to bring forth at demand in solving the problems and intricacies of litigation. He has been admitted to practice in all the higher courts in the state and the Federal courts. For the first two years he was a member of the law firm of Blue and Dayton at Philippi, and since then he has been alone in practice and has found his time more and more taken up with great bulk of cases that represent some of the most important in the state.

Mr. Dayton is also known for his substantial contributions to the literature of law. Several of his articles have been published in the Standard Encyclopedia of Procedure, published by L. D. Powell and Company. These articles include treatises on Contortari, Dismissal, Continuance and Nonsuit. All branches of the law have been included in his practice, and if there is a tendency at all toward specialization it is toward the litigation in which corporations are involved. He has exhibited especially the qualities of thoroughness and accuracy, has a wonderful grasp of legal principles, and his integrity is universally conceded. Among numerous professional connections he is attorney for two of the three banks of Philippi, for the Baltimore and Ohio and Western Maryland Railroad. Mr. Dayton was accepted and approved for army service abroad in the World war as first lieutenant, and was scheduled for sailing when the armistice was signed.

For a dozen years he has been active in republican politics, has been a spokesman of his county in the state republican conventions, was an alternate to the National Convention in 1912 and was chairman of the Second District Congressional Convention of 1916. Fraternally he is a Lodge and Chapter Mason, has done the work of the Subordinate and Encampment degrees in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a member of the Delta Tau Delta and the Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity, and belongs to the Duquesne Club and the University Club of Pittsburgh. He is an elder of the Presbyterian Church of Philippi.

On June 14, 1916, Mr. Dayton married Miss Ruth Wood Her father, Hon. Samuel V. Woods, was one of the leading lawyers of the West Virginia bar, and also a successful business man and financier. Mrs. Dayton was born in Park County and finished her education in National Park Seminary at Washington, District of Columbia.

FRANK G. BURDETT, whose experience has covered the important field of teaching, farming, civil engineering and building contracting, has been a resident of Charleston since November, 1890. In October, 1909, he was appointed county road engineer, and has been in continuous service from that date to the present. Every mile of modern highway in Kanawha County has been built since he came into this office. He has supervised and handled the technical problems involved in a large part of the improvements which have already gone far toward giving this county a system of high class roadways.

Mr. Burdett was born in Fayette County, West Virginia, September 14, 1856, son of David Clarkson and Susa (Byern) Burdett, and moved to Roane County with his parents. The old homestead where he was reared was on the line between Roane and Jackson counties. His father was a farmer all his life and died at the age of seventy-three. Frank G. Burdett remained on the farm until he was past thirty-two years of age. He acquired a good education, and from the age of nineteen to thirty he taught school in the rural district. At the same time he did farming, and early took up the work of land surveying. From this he broadened out into contracting and building, and in 1890 located in Charleston, where many residences of the city attest his skill and handiwork. Mr. Burdett continued active in this business until October, 1909, when the County Court appointed him county road engineer, and he has been in that office continuously. It was in 1913 that the first stretch of three miles of improved highway was constructed from Charleston north towards Sissonville. This was an asphalt concrete road. At the present time Kanawha County has about sixty-four miles of hard surface road, with extensions being made every year. This was done by contract and some by the county. Mr. Burdett has looked after the technical details, and has supervised the building of many county bridges.

Mr. Burdett is a republican, and has been active in the party through every campaign since he became of age. He married Maude C. Swaar, who died in 1892, and later married her sister, Elizabeth Swaar, both of Kanawha County. All of his children are of his first marriage, Nancy C., Tom S. and Susie S. Nat is a graduate of West Virginia University and is an attorney and coal producer living in Morgantown. Tom S. received his education at West Virginia University, and is a civil engineer at Charleston. Susie S. died in infancy. The son Nat married Margaret Davis, of Morgantown, and they have a son, Bobby.

OKEY JOHNSON HILL, now in his second term as Circuit Court clerk of Tyler County, is a man of versatile gifts and attainments. He has taught school, has been a successful lawyer and merchant, and is also a practical farmer and stock raiser. In referring in this brief introductory way to his place in the affairs of Tyler County it is appropriate to notice also that Mrs. Hill is deputy Circuit Court clerk, a unique honor, since she is the only woman in the state to fill such a position.

Okey Johnson Hill was born on McKim Creek in the Meigs District of Tyler County, June 27, 1872. His grandfather, Thomas Hill, was a native of Pennsylvania, and as young man moved to Marion County, West Virginia, and shortly after his marriage settled on McKim Creek, where he spent the rest of his life as a farmer. He married Miss Margaret Cooper, who also died at the old homestead on McKim Creek. The farm they owned there was the birthplace of Israel Nicholson Hill, who was born November 26, 1840, and in his mature years owned and farmed the homestead and lived there all the days of his useful and honorable life. He died December 1, 1916. He voted as a republican and was always attentive to his duties as a member of the United Brethren Church. During the Civil war he served as a member of the Home Guards. Israel N. Hill married Elizabeth McCullough, who was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, November 3, 1841, and now at the age of four score is still living on the home farm. She came when thirteen years of age with her parents to Pleasants County, West Virginia. The children born to her marriage were ten in number: George W., a merchant and later a farmer, who died in Wood County, West Virginia, September 29, 1910, aged forty-eight; Lannora, living on her farm on Sancho Creek in Tyler County, widow of Lloyd Davis; Horace Greeley, head carpenter in a large furniture establishment at Detroit, Michigan; John Taylor, a farmer three miles from Parkersburg in Wood County; Okey Johnson; Ida Lorene, wife of Charles Shutt, a farmer in Crawford County, Ohio; James Daniel, an employe of the Hope Natural Gas Company at Clarksburg, a Harrison County; Oliver, an employe of the Oklahoma Natural Gas Company, living at Warwick, that state; Miss Nettie and Miss Florida, both on the home farm with their mother.

Okey Johnson Hill stayed with the farm long enough to learn its practical duties, and all his life has had more or less active connection with agricultural matters. He attended the rural schools, took normal training in Tyler and Ritchie counties, and at the age of seventeen was appointed to his first responsibility as a teacher in the Brush Run School of Meade District. He remained in Meade District eight terms, and for one term taught in Center District. In 1898 Mr. Hill became a merchant on McKim Creek, and sold goods there until June, 1903. For nearly two terms he had served as justice of the peace, and while at that office he diligently studied law. Because of this early preparation he was able to complete his law course and graduate LL. B. from the West Virginia University Law School in 1904, having entered the school September 2, 1903. Mr. Hill was admitted to the bar December 8, 1904, and for a year or so practiced in Middlebourne. In 1906 he moved to Friendly, Tyler County, and was a merchant there six or seven years. On March 14, 1913, he returned to Middlebourne to resume his law practice, but in November of that year was by popular election called to his present duties as Circuit Court clerk. He began his first term of six years in January, 1915, and in November, 1920, was re-elected for a second six-year term. Besides being clerk he is also commissioner in chancery of the Tyler County Circuit Court.

Mr. Hill is a director of the Bank of Middlebourne and secretary of the Tyler County Farm Bureau, his eligibility to this office resting upon his ownership of 400 acres of farming land in Tyler and Ritchie counties. He does general farming and raises some blooded Polled Angus cattle. His home is a modern residence in Middlebourne. Mr. Hill is a republican, is a member of the Baptist Church, and is now serving his fourth consecutive term as president of the Tyler County Sunday School Association. He is a trustee of his church. Fraternally he is affiliated with Elson Lodge No. 111, F. and A. M., in Pleasants County, with Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M., Mountain State Oddfellowry No. 14, K. T., and he and Mrs. Hill are members of Friendly Chapter of the Eastern Star. He is past grand of Friendly Lodge No. 350, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, past chancellor of Middlebourne Lodge No. 86, Knights of Pythias, and also belongs to the approved Order of Red Men, Junior Order United Mechanics, Order of Owls, and is a member of the West Virginia Bar Association. During the war he assumed a personal share in the responsibilities for keeping Tyler County well represented in all the war causes. He gave much time to filling out questionnaires for recruits, and for this work received an honorary discharge from the Government, and also delivered a number of speeches in behalf of Liberty Loans throughout the county.

On January 15, 1898, in Ritchie County, Mr. Hill married Miss Zannie Alice Corbin, who was born at Highland in that county, was reared there and acquired a common school education. She is a member of the Baptist Church, and in addition to looking after her home and children is performing her duties as Deputy Circuit Court Clerk.

Her father, Joseph Corbin, was born near Highland in Ritchie County, November 4, 1843, and was a leading farmer in that section until he retired in 1914, while living at Belmont in Pleasants County. He was a democrat, a member of the Baptist Church and the Masonic fraternity. Mr. Corbin married Juliana Hogue, who was born at Beech Grove on Bond's Creek in Ritchie County in 1845, and died at her home near Highland in 1887. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Corbin were: Olive, wife of William Bogges, a farmer on Bond Creek; Alonzo Taylor, an oil contractor at Muskogee, Oklahoma; Mrs. Hill; Floyd Haymond, foreman in the oil field of the Ranger District in Texas; Sarah Rebecca, wife of Morris Morgan, an oil well contractor of Muskogee, Oklahoma; Lillian, wife of Samuel Campbell, a traveling salesman living at St. Mary's in Pleasants County; Howard, an oil well contractor at Muskogee.

Mr. and Mrs. Hill have an interesting family of six children. The oldest, McKinley Tennyson, born February 18, 1899, is specializing in agriculture at West Virginia University, and on September 18, 1918, was enrolled in the Students Army Training Corps at Buckhannon, serving until the armistice. He is a graduate of the Tyler County High School at Middlebourne. The second son, Franklin Herman, born March 26, 1901, is also a graduate of the County High School, and is now specializing in mechanical engineering at Virginia University. Edith Marion, born February 18, 1903, is a graduate of the County High School in the literary and normal courses, and is a teacher in the Emerson School at Monongah in Marion County. The three youngest children of Mr. and Mrs. Hill are Zelma Rebecca, born September 18, 1904, in the sophomore class of the County High School; Thelma, born September 8, 1911; and Ada Esther, born December 12, 1913.

LEONIDAS W. BARTLETT became widely known for his business and commercial interests at Buckhannon before he was appointed postmaster of that city. He is now in his second term, a very capable and efficient administrator of the office, and a popular citizen as well.

Mr. Bartlett was born at Webster in Taylor County, West Virginia, June 21, 1859, son of Dr. T. Bailey and Rhoda A. (Hudkins) Bartlett. His parents were also born, reared and educated in Taylor County. Doctor Bartlett served four years in the Confederate Army. After the war he returned to his family, completed his course in medicine, and then located in Harrison County, where he practiced for some years. Later he bought a farm in Lewis County. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and was affiliated with the Masonic Lodge at Lynchburg, Virginia. Of his five children four are living: Dora D., wife of John W. Linger, of Lewis County; Hannah R., widow of L. A. Linger; Camdena, wife of Leonidas A. Wetzel, of Clarksburg; Florence, deceased; and Leonidas W.

Leonidas W. Bartlett was reared in Harrison County, attended the common schools, and for a time was in the mercantile business at Buckhannon. From 1886 for a period of nineteen years he was a traveling salesman, and during that time he built up a large acquaintance all over the state. Mr. Bartlett has been a prominent leader in the democratic party, and has been a member of both the county and state committees. On July 1, 1914, President Wilson appointed him postmaster of Buckhannon, and he was reappointed November 21, 1918.

In April, 1888, Mr. Bartlett married Miss Anna Virginia Latham. Mrs. Bartlett is a daughter of the distinguished Col. George R. Latham, member of an old Virginia family. Colonel Latham was born on the Bull Run battlefield in Virginia, March 9, 1832, and at the age of seventeen accompanied his parents to Taylor County, West Virginia. Largely by his own efforts he acquired a liberal education, and taught school for a number of years before the war. In 1859 he was admitted to the bar, and opened the first law office at Grafton. He published a paper there during the campaign of 1860 in behalf of the Bell Everett ticket. At the beginning of the Civil war he immediately announced his Unionism, recruited a company, and took it to Wheeling, where it was mustered in as Company B of the Second Virginia Infantry. With this company he participated in the early campaigns in West Virginia. In the fall of 1864 he was elected a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress, serving from March 4, 1865, to March 4, 1867. On account of ill health he refused a renomination. From 1867 to 1870 he was at Melbourne, Australia, as United States consul, and in 1875 was elected superintendent of public schools of Upshur County.

Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett's only living child, Edna L., is a graduate of Wesleyan College of Buckhannon. Their son Frank attended a military academy and at the age of eighteen volunteered for service in the infantry, and while a sergeant was killed in the battle of Belleau Wood in France.

Mr. Bartlett is affiliated with Franklin Lodge No. 7, F. and A. M., Upshur Chapter No. 34, R. A. M., of which he is a past high priest, and is treasurer of the Knight Templar Commandery. He is one of the directors of the Peoples Bank of Buckhannon, and has some valuable real estate holdings both in Buckhannon and in Maryland. He and his family are members of the Baptist Church.

HON. WILLIAM SMITH O'BRIEN, former circuit judge of the circuit composed of Webster and Upshur counties, has been one of the prominent lawyers of Buckhannon for thirty years. He is an editor and publisher, and at all times exerts a forceful influence in politics and in community affairs.

Judge O'Brien was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, January 8, 1862, and is a son of Emmet J. and Martha Ann (Hall) O'Brien. The paternal family runs back into Irish history for many generations, and with distinguished connections, including the famous Robert Emmet. The grandfather of Judge O'Brien was Daniel O'Brien, who was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1774 and came to America in 1796. In 1804 he moved to West Virginia from Baltimore, and became a merchant at Beverly. He died in 1844. In 1815 he married Hannah Norris, daughter of Capt. John and Mary (Jones) Norris, of Lewis County. She was a relative of Gen. George Washington, connected through the Jones and Ball families. She died in Upshur County in 1880. The Norris and Jones families were from Fauquier County, Virginia, and were of English descent.

Emmet J. O'Brien, father of Judge O'Brien, was born at Beverly, and though he had only the advantages of the common schools he excelled in mathematics, particularly in geometry and surveying. He learned the trade of stone cutter and mason, became a bridge building contractor, and with his brother Daniel they constructed the abutments of the bridge across the Tygart's Valley at Philippi, West Virginia. He was a member of the first Constitutional Convention of West Virginia, and in 1867-68 represented the Sixth District in the State Senate. Before the War of the Rebellion he was commissioned a brigadier general of the militia by Governor Wise of Virginia. He was offered a commission in the Confederate Army, but refused because his sympathies were with the Union. He died in 1888, near Weston. General O'Brien married Martha Ann Vandervort, widow of Joseph Vandervort. She was a daughter of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Reger) Hall, and was born and reared on Big Skin Creek, Lewis County, West Virginia. Her great-grandfather, Jacob Reger, was of German descent, and settled on the Buckhannon River, near Volga, Barbour County, about 1776. Her paternal ancestor, Joseph Hall, father of Jonathan Hall, was born in England, and was a pioneer settler in the Reger settlement. His wife was Ann Hitt, a French Huguenot from North Carolina, who was married first to a Mr. Martin and then to William Strange, who was lost in the forest. His body was afterward found near the head waters of what is known as Strange Creek, Braxton County, West Virginia. She next married Joseph Hall.

The other children of General O'Brien and wife were: Alonzo Lee, who was a graduate of West Point Military Academy and was a lieutenant in the Regular Army at the time of his death; Daniel U., who attended West Virginia University, was prominent in the Cadet Corps at the University, served as captain in the Spanish-American war, and is now a farmer and stock dealer in Gilmer County; Mary Lillian, deceased wife of the late William M. Arnold, of Ravenswood, West Virginia.

William Smith O'Brien was a child when his parents moved from Barbour County to Weston in Lewis County, where he was reared on a farm. He did the work of the farm, was employed in brick yards, attended public schools and West Virginia University, and taught for about ten years in Lewis County. While teaching he studied law, his chief instructor being Judge John Brannon, of Weston, one of the ablest lawyers of the state. He graduated from the law department of West Virginia University in 1891, and the following year began practice at Buckhannon. For several years he was junior partner with Hon. William D. Talbot, until his death in 1907.

In 1912 Judge O'Brien was elected judge of the Twelfth Judicial Circuit, composed of the counties of Webster and Upshur. Early in his term what is known as "The West Virginia Bribery Cases" were removed from the Kanawha Circuit Court to Webster County for trial. Five members of the Legislature stood indicted for bartering their votes for money in the election of a United States senator. Judge O'Brien presided over the lengthy trials. They were convicted and sentenced to serve terms in the penitentiary. The Supreme Court of Appeals refused appeals.

The Upshur-Webster Circuit was heavily republican, but the campaign was in a sense non-partisan. In 1920 the state was redistricted, and Randolph and Upshur were joined. The circuit was republican, and Judge O'Brien went down in the landslide, but reduced his opponents' majority very materially. After retiring from the bench he formed a partnership with Jerome V. Hall, and under the firm name of O'Brien and Hall he again entered into the active practice of the law. He is also editor and manager of the Upshur Record, a democratic weekly newspaper published in Buckhannon. Judge O'Brien has been active in business and community affairs. He was one of the promoters and organizers of the Peoples Bank of West Virginia, one of the leading banking institutions of the city, and was one of its directors for many years. He is a member and trustee of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Buckhannon. He was president of the County Sunday School Association for many years, and teacher of the "O'Brien" Sunday School Class for nearly twenty-five years.

He is a past chancellor of Buckhannon Lodge No. 54, Knights of Pythias; is affiliated with Franklin Lodge No. 7, A. F. and A. M.; Upshur Chapter No. 34, R. A. M.; and Buckhannon Commandery No. 24, Knights Templar.

He was commissioned captain of Company B, Second Regiment of the State Guards. During the World war he served as chairman of the Legal Advisory Board for Upshur County, and was active in every war movement as opportunity afforded. In politics he affiliates with the democratic party.

On October 14, 1896, Judge O'Brien married Miss Emma White, daughter of Alexander P. and Mary White, of Camden, Lewis County. Mr. White is a first cousin of Stonewall Jackson. Mrs. O'Brien was educated in the common schools and in Broadus College. Judge and Mrs. O'Brien have four children: Perry Emmet, born August 2, 1898, a graduate of West Virginia Wesleyan College; Daniel Pitt, born August 31, 1900; Mary Martha, born

W. G. Gamm

November 30, 1902, and William Talbot, born August 29, 1904, who are now students in West Virginia Wesleyan College.

ULYSSES G. YOUNG has the prestige accruing from thirty years of able practice as a lawyer in Upshur County, and in that time he has carried many of the responsibilities of leadership in his home county and community. He is also a banker.

Mr. Young, who is senior member of the law firm of Young & McWhorter at Buckhannon, was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, January 22, 1865, son of Joseph A. and Mary V. (Griffith) Young, the former a native of Monroe County, West Virginia, and the latter of Augusta County, Virginia. Joseph A. Young after his marriage settled on a farm in Harrison County, and was one of the hard working and substantial citizens of that section. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church and he was a republican. There were eight children: Maggie, wife of B. H. Paugh; Ida M., wife of Burget Swisher; Esther, deceased; Ulysses G.; Mary V., wife of M. R. Creslip; E. L., of Barbour County; Kate B., wife of C. E. Creslip; and W. H. Young, a farmer in Upshur County.

Ulysses G. Young, while growing up on the farm, had formulated plans for a professional career. His common school education he supplemented in the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, from which he graduated with the degree Bachelor of Science and the law degree L. B. He then returned to Buckhannon, took the examination before three judges and was admitted to the West Virginia bar, and since then has been steadily engaged in a general civil and criminal practice in the courts of his district. Mr. Young is vice president of the Traders National Bank of Buckhannon and also its attorney. Among other interests he and a brother own a thousand acres in Barbour County.

Mr. Young was elected a member of the State Senate in 1894, and represented his district in the sessions of 1895 and 1897. He is one of the trustees of the Wesleyan College at Buckhannon and is treasurer of the permanent trust fund of the Methodist Conference. He is a past hanceller of the Knights of Pythias and a member of the Masonic Order, and belongs to the Official Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On July 11, 1893, Mr. Young married Lillie C. Pifer. She graduated from the Buckhannon Academy and spent one year in the Boston Conservatory of Music. Mr. and Mrs. Young have four children: Mary E., who is a graduate of Goucher College of Baltimore with the A. B. degree, is the wife of W. S. Jacob; Marjorie C., who graduated A. B. from Wesleyan College at Buckhannon; Ulysses L., Jr., who is a student in Wesleyan College; and Richard W., in high school.

HARRY E. WEBB, of Huntington, is one of the efficient and popular executives of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, is official position being that of superintendent of the Huntington and the Logan divisions.

Mr. Webb was born in Kanawha County, this state, not far distant from the City of Charleston, and the date of his activity was November 17, 1881. His father, Benjamin H. Webb, was born in the Virginia County that is now Gilmer county, West Virginia, in the year 1847, and died in the city of Charleston, October 27, 1921. Benjamin H. Webb as reared in Gilmer County, and there continued his residence until the early '70s, when he removed to a farm near Charleston and became one of the leading members of the bar of that city. As an able lawyer he built up a large and important practice, he was a loyal advocate and supporter of the cause of the democratic party, served several terms as justice of the peace, was a soldier in the Confederate service during the last year of the Civil war, as affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as is his widow, who still resides at Charleston. Mrs. Webb, whose maiden name was Almira V. Barbour, was born in Franklin County, Virginia, in 1857, a daughter of Capt. William C. Barbour, a member of the Thirty-fourth Volunteer Infantry, Company C, Wise's Brigade, Lee's army. He was killed in action a few days before Lee's surrender. Of their children the eldest was Della, who became the wife of John H. Thompson and who died near Charleston at the age of twenty-five years, Mr. Thompson being now a resident of the City of Chicago; Arian is the wife of Charles W. Brown, train dispatcher for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Harry E., of this sketch, was next in order of birth; Naomi is the widow of Mark O. Jarrett, who died in Kansas, in 1918, and she now resides with her widowed mother in Charleston; Kathryn is the wife of Allen T. Peyton, a contractor and builder at Charleston; Mary is the wife of Cabell Pearse, mine superintendent for the Carbon Fuel Company, with residence at Jochin, West Virginia; Louise is the wife of E. C. Hanna, auditor and treasurer for the Carbon Fuel Company at Carbon, Kanawha County.

The rural schools of Kanawha County afforded Harry E. Webb his early education, and in 1900 he graduated from the Capital City Commercial College at Charleston. For two years thereafter he held a clerical position with the Kanawha & Michigan Railroad, and he next was engaged in clerical work, for eight months, for the Cardiff Coal Company at Oakley, Kanawha County. On the 10th of June, 1904, he initiated his clerical service in the Huntington offices of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and on the 1st of November, 1914, he was advanced to the position of train master of the Clifton Forge division, with headquarters at Clifton Forge, Virginia, where he remained until November 1, 1916, when he was transferred to Logan, West Virginia, as train master for the Logan coal district. May 1, 1917, marked his promotion to the position of superintendent of the Logan division, and since March 1, 1919, he has been superintendent of the Huntington and Logan divisions, with headquarters in the City of Huntington. He is a stockholder in the Junior Oil & Gas Company, the Huntington Development & Gas Company and also the Scantoneed Container Corporation of Huntington. He is a member of the American Association of Railway Superintendents and is a democrat in politics. In addition to his modern home property at 805 Lincoln Place, Mr. Webb is the owner of other realty in Huntington, and also at Logan.

At Griffithsville, West Virginia, August 25, 1915, occurred the marriage of Mr. Webb and Miss Harriet W. McClung, daughter of James and Mary (Rosson) McClung, the father having been a retired employe of the Adams Express Company at the time of his death, in the City of Huntington, where his widow still resides. Mrs. Webb graduated from the Huntington High School and thereafter attended the University of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Webb have three children: Harry E., Jr., born December 9, 1916; Mollie Rosson, born September 26, 1918; and Barbour Hays, born October 2, 1920.

PERRY C. DUNAWAY, who is successfully engaged in the furniture and undertaking business at Charles Town, Jefferson County, was born at Stewardsville, Greene County, Virginia, and he is a scion of a family that was founded in the historic Old Dominion State in the early Colonial days, when John and James Dunaway, brothers, came from England and settled in Virginia. Raleigh Dunaway, Sr., grandfather of him whose name introduces this paragraph, was born and reared in Rappahannock County, Virginia, and there became the owner of an extensive landed estate, besides which he inherited a number of slaves, he having never bought or sold slaves, however. In connection with the Civil war he met with heavy financial reverses, in which he lost the most of his real estate and other property, and he removed with his family to Rockingham County, Virginia, where he passed the remainder of his life.

Raleigh Dunaway, Jr., father of the subject of this sketch, was reared on the home farm, or plantation, and as a youth he found employment in a general store at Elkton. At the age of twenty-one years he settled on a farm near Stanardsville, Greene County, Virginia, and there he continued his activities as an agriculturist until 1892, when he engaged in the general merchandise business at Leetown, Jefferson County, West Virginia. In 1917 he sold his stock and business, and he has since lived retired. His wife, whose maiden name was Fannie Lou Kennedy, was born and reared in Greene County, Virginia, as was also her father, Chester Kennedy, who entered the Confederate Army at the inception of the Civil war and who died while in service, at the age of thirty-five years, his widow, whose family name was Mayers, having survived him by many years. Raleigh and Fannie Lou (Kennedy) Dunaway became the parents of the following children: Daisy Fritts; Lulu Pearl, who became the wife of Robert W. Clendening and who died in April, 1918; Raleigh W., who is engaged in the grocery business at Charles Town; Virginia, who is the wife of W. R. Licklider; Jessie; Perry C., who is the immediate subject of this review; and Judson and Homer.

Perry C. Dunaway gained his early education in the public schools, and was a lad of fourteen years when he began to assist in his father's store. In 1906 he entered the service of Moulton Brothers, engaged in the wholesale drygoods and notions business in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, and for ten years he was a successful traveling salesman for this representative concern. For two years thereafter he was employed in the Westinghouse undertaking establishment in the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and in the meanwhile he attended the J. Henry Zong School of Embalming, in which he was graduated in 1911. In 1912 he went to Mercer, Pennsylvania, where he was employed in an undertaking establishment for a time, and he then passed two years in business at Point Pleasant, West Virginia. He then, in 1915, established his present furniture and undertaking business at Charles Town, where his success has been the direct result of effective service and fair and honorable dealings. In the Masonic fraternity Mr. Dunaway is affiliated with Malta Lodge No. 80, A. F. and A. M., and Jefferson Chapter, R. A. M., besides which he holds membership in Blue Ridge Lodge of the Knights of Pythias. He and his wife hold membership in the Presbyterian Church in their home city.

The year 1915 recorded the marriage of Mr. Dunaway and Miss Emma Louise Price, who was born at Pomeroy, Ohio, a daughter of David and Elizabeth (Eppel) Price. Mr. and Mrs. Dunaway have one daughter, Emma Louise.

WILLIAM C. PIFER, one of the substantial business men of Keyser, and ex-mayor of the city, comes of one of the old-established families of the country, the American founder of it having settled in Virginia while it was still a colony of England, and from him have sprung a numerous progeny. Those bearing the name of Pifer are to be found in many states of the Union, and wherever they are located they are numbered among the solid and representative people of their neighborhood. The majority of the Pifers have been farmers, but others have succeeded in business, and a few have adopted teaching as their life work. It is somewhat unusual that none of them have entered the ministry, the law or the medical profession.

The birth of William C. Pifer occurred at Stephens City, Frederick County, Virginia, in the neighborhood of Winchester, July 3, 1878, and he is a son of Randolph and Mary Catherine (Cooper) Pifer, both of whom were born in Frederick County, Virginia, and their lives were spent principally on a farm. When war broke out between the North and the South, Randolph Pifer, as did the majority in his community, cast his lot with the Confederacy, and enlisted in Company A, First Virginia Cavalry, was made captain of his company, and served until the very close of the war, being one of the 8,000 soldiers still following General Lee at Appomattox, in April, 1865. He saw much hard fighting, was twice wounded, a musket ball passing through his body just under the heart, but he recovered. With the declaration of peace he tried to accept the results philosophically and to forget the past. In fact he had but little personal feeling against those whom the chances of war had made his enemies, and upon one occasion it is stated that he accepted an invitation from the Federal forces across the Potomac River, at Harper's Ferry, and took dinner with the "Boys in Blue." With his old comrades of "the lost cause" he fraternized after the war, and enjoyed the reunions heartily.

With characteristic energy and determination Randolph Pifer became a public servant of Frederick County after the war, and was county assessor for one term and county treasurer for four terms, to which offices he was elected on the democratic ticket. He was of German stock, his father having been John William Pifer, whose father was born in Germany, but left his native land for America in young manhood. John William Pifer married a member of the Richards family. Randolph Pifer was one of six children, the four sons of which were: Randolph, Stanley, Cyrus and Clarence, but Randolph was the only one of them who served in the army. The two daughters were Laura and Harriet, the former of whom married Neal Snapp, and the latter, Josiah Rinker.

Until he was twenty-three years of age William C. Pifer remained on his father's farm, during which time he made himself useful and secured a country-school education, and for the last two years of the time was engaged in teaching in his home district. Abandoning the educational field, Mr. Pifer went with the wholesale firm of Naylor, Shroyck & Company, of Front Royal, Virginia, as office man and book-keeper for one year, leaving this concern to become a traveling salesman for the Birdsall Wagon Company of South Bend, Indiana. He worked out of Kansas City, Missouri, covering territory embracing Kansas, Oklahoma and Indian Territory, but after two years located permanently at Keyser, where he embarked in business.

At the beginning of his connection with West Virginia Mr. Pifer opened for business with a stock of pianos, and music merchandise, with a very small capital. At first he traveled with a wagon through this region selling instruments, and as fast as he sold one, used the money to purchase another, and in this way secured enough money to open his store. Beginning thus in a very small way, he has gradually expanded, and now has one of the most modern and well-stocked establishments of its kind in this part of the state. As the demand was created he added the Victor talking machine when the phonograph industry was in its infancy, and later the Brunswick Phonograph, and also carries both the Victor and Brunswick records for the trade.

In 1915 Mr. Pifer was elected as mayor of Keyser to succeed Mayor F. H. Babb, and was twice re-elected, serving in all six years. As he was the incumbent of the office during the war period he was kept very busy, and made a record which does him and his community great credit. It was during his administration that the city purchased its modern fire truck. The south side of Keyser was sewered and the water mains extended through that portion. All of the public improvements were paid for by a bond issue and when Mayor Pifer turned the office over to his successor the latter found affairs in an admirable financial condition. In politics he is a democrat, and has always been active in party affairs. Fraternally he belongs to Front Royal Lodge, A. F. and A. M.

Mr. Pifer married at Keyser Miss Maude May Chrisman, a daughter of John W. and Emma (Nixon) Chrisman. Mr. Pifer was born at Keyser, and educated in its public school. Mr. Chrisman came to Keyser from Virginia as an employe of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, which he is now serving as a conductor. He is one of the old employe of the road, having begun his connection with it as fireman when wood was used for firing purposes. Mr. and Mrs. Pifer have the following children: Robert Arnold, Isabe Geraldine, Kenneth, William and Marjorie. Mr. Pifer is an excellent example of the self-reliant man who has risen through his own efforts. There was no powerful influence or great wealth back of him when he located at Keyser, but he did possess determination to succeed, a willingness to work and a knowledge of his business, and these qualities combined with his cheerful service and pleasing manner have firmly established him in the confidence of the public and won for him a valuable trade. During the time he was the city's chief executive he made many personal sacrifices especially during the war, and left nothing undone which he thought would advance his community and add to its prestige. That he succeeded the many public improvements and flourishing conditions generally, amply demonstrate.

W. J. MAYS is the present efficient sheriff of Taylor County, was for a number of years in the police and mechanical service of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and has been a resident of Taylor County since he was two years old. He represents one of the pioneer families of West Virginia.

His pioneer ancestor was William Mays, who served with Virginia troops in the Mexican war, and spent his last years in Monongalia County, being buried in the family graveyard near Fannie Furnace in that county. His son, Frederick Mays, was born in Monongalia County, and married Eleanor Snider, a native of Preston County and daughter of John Snider. They had a large family of children, including three sets of twins: Jacob, Lewis S., James M., Mary E., who married George Boylan; Sarah E., who married William LaRue; John N.; Margaret A., who married Jake Ecoff; Sophia D., who married Wesley Hartman; Kate, who married John Smith; Richard C.; and Martha A., who became the wife of William Grimes.

John Nelson Mays, father of Sheriff Mays, is a retired farmer at Thornton in Taylor County. He was born in Marion County, February 4, 1843, but grew up near Independence, Preston County, where he acquired a subscription school education and a practical knowledge of farming. He has one of the most notable war records of the surviving soldiers of the Union. He was eighteen when in May, 1861, he joined at Morgantown, Company A of the Third Infantry, under Capt. J. J. Thompson and Col. David T. Hughes. After a period of training at Clarksburg the company was assigned to guard duty on the Parkersburg branch of the Baltimore & Ohio. After six months the regiment was put on scout duty with the Mountain Department of West Virginia, and after about two years the regiment was mounted and became the Fifth Infantry. While in service in the Valley of Virginia it participated in the battles of McDowell, Cloyd Mountain, Cross Keys, Port Republic and Culpeper, and fourteen days of fighting along the Rappahannock River. It was on patrol duty in Washington when Lincoln was assassinated and during the closing scenes of the war, including the Grand Review. In the meantime the regiment had been organized as the Sixth West Virginia Cavalry. After the war the Sixth Regiment was ordered to duty on the western plains. Mr. Mays in the meantime having re-enlisted. They proceeded by rail to Fort Leavenworth, and thence across the plains to Fort Laramie, Wyoming, to open the mail route closed by Indian hostilities. A year later Mr. Mays was returned to Fort Leavenworth, where he was discharged in June, 1866. In the first years of his army experience he was twice taken prisoner, first near Morefield Gap by General Rosser and Green's Confederate command, and later by the same forces at New Creek, now Keyser, West Virginia. Both times he made his escape from his captors. Later, in Nebraska, he was with a force guarding an ex-train carrying Government supplies. One evening he and a comrade were about a mile from camp looking for game. By some strange premonition he sensed danger, though there were no Indians in sight, and when his companion refused to leave off hunting he rode to the rear. He never saw his fellow hunter again, since he was hardly in camp when a band of 400 warriors came by, capturing his comrade and stampeding some cattle as another wagon train camped nearby.

John N. Mays had three brothers in the Union Army, Jacob, Lewis S. and Frederick G. After his discharge at Fort Leavenworth John N. Mays was returned to Weehling, where he was mustered out, and he soon resumed the routine of civil life as a farmer in Preston County, and later moved to Taylor County. He has always been a republican, never active in politics, held a commission for some years as notary public, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His first wife was Miss Phoebe Griffith, a native of Preston County and daughter of Ebenezer Griffith. She died three years after their marriage, as the result of an overdose of morphine administered by a physician. One of her two children died in infancy and the other is W. J. Mays. On March 10, 1875, John N. Mays married Miss Emma Hardinger in Taylor County, where she was born, August 10, 1851, daughter of Moses and Julia N. (Rose) Hardinger, natives of Pennsylvania and farmers in Taylor County. Emma was one of a family of five sons and four daughters, and three others are still living. The children of John N. Mays by his second marriage are: Ola, wife of Allen DeMoss, of Thornton; Alonzo, of Detroit, Michigan; Grace, who married Robert Travis, of Thornton; Ira E., of Detroit; Chauncey, of Richmond, Virginia; and Pearl, wife of Edward Haines, of Cumberland, Maryland.

W. J. Mays, son of this old soldier, was born near Evansville, Preston County, February 5, 1869, and was less than two years old when his father moved to Taylor County. He acquired a country school education, and at the age of eighteen became a blacksmith apprentice in the shops of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. After four years of apprenticeship he was raised to the regular rank and pay, and remained in the shops of the company for eleven years. Leaving that he conducted a dairy at Grafton five years, and then by appointment from Mayor James Love served two years as chief of police. The Baltimore & Ohio invited him to return to its service as a police officer, and subsequently he was promoted to captain of police for the Monongalia division, a post of duty he held two and a half years. During the World War period, when the railroad needed all available mechanical skill, he resumed his former trade in the railroad shops. While there he was persuaded by his friends to stand for nomination for sheriff, received that honor in the primaries of 1920, and in the fall of that year was elected by a majority of 2,144, the majority being larger than all the votes cast in the county for his competitor. He succeeded Sheriff Melvin Newlon in January, 1921.

Sheriff Mays is an active representative of all progressive movements in his city and county. He is a republican, a member of the Chamber of Commerce, a Methodist and is affiliated with the Masons, Modern Woodmen and Red Men. In Taylor County, November 30, 1891, he married Miss Margaret A. Knotts, daughter of John K. and Ann (Linn) Knotts. Her father was a Taylor County farmer, and represented one of the prominent family names there. Mrs. Mays, who was born March 23, 1872, was the youngest of eight children, the others being William L., Emory, Robert, Isaac A., Zebulon B., Spencer S. and Miss Mary J. Three of the sons became farmers and two railroad men.

Mr. and Mrs. Mays have an interesting family of five sons and five daughters. Clyde N. is chief clerk of the division of accounts of the Monongalia division of the Baltimore & Ohio. Edna Jean is the wife of Charles Payne, deputy sheriff of Taylor County. Abe Warder is deputy sheriff and jailer of Taylor County. Paul Herbert is the sheriff's bookkeeper. Verne K. was recently discharged from the artillery service of the United States Army. Mary M. is a senior in the Grafton High School, and the younger children are Samuel Linn, Margaret M., Virginia and Ruth.

BLAINE ZICKFOOSE is a prosperous farmer and dairyman of Upshur County, where his excellent farm of 137 acres is situated three miles west of Buckhannon, the county seat. He was born on the homestead farm of his father in Upshur County, and the date of his nativity was November 1, 1885. He is a son of George W. and Jane (Light) Zickefoose, both likewise natives of this county and representatives of old and honored families of this section of West Virginia. George W. Zickefoose was born in August, 1843, and his wife was born in 1844, her death having occurred in 1893. The father was successfully identified with farm industry in his native county through his entire active career, and is still the owner of a farm of 125 acres, the major part of his landed estate having been divided among his children. He is a republican and is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as was also his wife. Of their eleven children the following are living, and of the number the subject of this sketch is the youngest: J. S. Elias and Alvin are prosperous farmers in Upshur County; Eli resides at Hamlock, this county, and is a merchant by vocation; Elliott and Artemus are substantial farmers of Upshur County, and the latter also conducts a feed store in the Village of Altou; and Delbert is a merchant at Altou.

Blaine Zickefoose was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home farm and early gained experience that has proved of great value to him in his independent farm operations. He supplemented the training of the public schools by attending the West Virginia Wesleyan College and by a course in a business college at Parkersburg. He has had no desire to sever his allegiance to the basic industries of agriculture and stock-raising, and is one of the progressive farmers and dairymen of his native county. He is aligned in the ranks of the republican party, is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he and his wife are members of Reger Chapel of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In December, 1910, Mr. Zickefoose married Miss Lura M. Reger, who likewise was born and reared in Upshur County, and they have two children: Martin W., who was born August 27, 1913; and Tuttle B., who was born September 28, 1916.

CLARENCE WHEELER LEGGETT, prominent Clarksburg financier and business man, moved to that city more than a quarter of a century ago, reaching here with a very limited capital, and the large and important concerns now associated with him and in which he is a vital and responsible factor are a measure of his growing abilities and personal achievements.

Mr. Leggett was born on a farm near Waterford, Washington County, Ohio, May 12, 1856, son of Samuel and Rebecca (Cooksey) Leggett. The Leggett family was among the first to enter the Northwest Territory beyond the Ohio River. His great-grandfather moved from Baltimore, Maryland, over the Alleghenies, for a time lived in an Indian blockhouse on the site of the modern Waterford and not far from the historic City of Marietta. Robert Leggett, grandfather of the Clarksburg business man, was born in this block house in 1796. The Leggetts are descended from three brothers who came from England to the American Colonies. Samuel Leggett and Rebecca Cooksey both claimed a village named Waterford as their birthplace, though the Waterford of Samuel Leggett was in Ohio, while his wife's birthplace was Waterford, Virginia. They had two children, the only daughter Janie C. being deceased. The parents spent their lives in Washington County, Ohio, where the father was a farmer. He was an elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Clarence Wheeler Leggett grew up on his father's farm, attended rural schools, and completed his education in the Cumberland Presbyterian College at Beverly, Ohio. He graduated in 1876 at the age of twenty from Duff's Business College at Pittsburgh. Then followed an experience as a drug clerk in Ohio and subsequently in West Virginia and from clerking he was made salesman and later manager of the drug department of the J. N. Murdech & Company, wholesalers at Parkersburg. Still later he was city salesman and finally assistant buyer for the wholesale grocery house of C. C. Martin & Company of Parkersburg.

Mr. Leggett removed from Parkersburg to Clarksburg in 1895, and here established a merchandise brokerage business. This original line is still retained by him, though his interests are now broadly divided. The merchandise brokerage business is continued under the firm name of C. W. Leggett & Company. Mr. Leggett in 1908 bought the building occupied by the General Distributing Company, and the business of the Central Storage Company, and he still owns and operates this. He is chairman of the board of directors of the Clarksburg Trust Company, a director of the Empire National Bank of Clarksburg, president of the Community Savings & Loan Company, is treasurer of the Eagle Convex Glass Specialty Company.

Mr. Leggett arrived at Clarksburg, November 7, 1895. The capital he brought for the purpose of establishing himself in business was less than $500. More important was his determination to succeed, a diligent application of subsequent years, and the energy and ability that have paved the way to substantial success. Open and frank in his business dealings, always maintaining strictest regard for integrity of character and honesty, he has long enjoyed the confidence of all with whom his varied and extended affairs bring him in contact.

Mr. Leggett is a democrat, and that was the political faith of his ancestry. He is a Knight Templar and thirty second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Shriner, life member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, a Knight of Pythias and a member of the United Commercial Travelers. As a citizen of Clarksburg he has rendered a constant public spirit and influence in behalf of sound progress, though he has not been active in city politics. He was one of the organizers of the Clarksburg Board of Trade, now the Clarksburg Chamber of Commerce, and is active in its membership.

Mr. Leggett in 1895 married Miss Mary G. Coleman. They have one child, Frances H.

REV. RICHARD ASPINALL, A. M., B. D., is an honored and valued member of the faculty of the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, Upshur County, where he holds the chair of Bible and Philosophy, and where he has the distinction of being the first incumbent of this professorship.

Mr. Aspinall was born at Bolton, England, December 1, 1881, and is a son of Archibald and Catherine (Barlow) Aspinall, the father having been a successful contracting stone mason and having passed his entire life in England. In his native city Rev. Richard Aspinall acquired the equivalent of a high school education, and he was twenty-four years of age when, in 1905, he came to the United States and became pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Charleston, West Virginia, his ordination to the ministry having occurred after his immigration to the United States and after a course of preliminary study and other preparatory work. He continued in his pastoral charge at Charleston until the autumn of 1907, when he became a student in the West Virginia Wesleyan College, in which he was graduated with honors and from which he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He received from the New York University the supplemental degree of Master of Arts, and the degree of Bachelor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Drew Theological Seminary. For one year he held a pastoral charge at Philippi, Barbour County, West Virginia, and he then, in the autumn of 1915, was elected the first professor of the chair of Bible and Philosophy in the West Virginia Wesleyan College, in which capacity he has since continued his earnest and efficient service, the while he is known as a man of fine scholarship and of high ideals, which he is able to translate into objective helpfulness. He is an honored member of the West Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he having been ordained a deacon in 1909 and an elder in 1911.

Professor Aspinall is essentially broad-minded and progressive as a citizen and takes loyal interest in community affairs. In 1919-20 he was president of the Rotary Club of Buckhannon, and he was made district governor of the International Association of Rotary Clubs for the district comprising Western Maryland, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. When he assumed this position there were only twenty-seven Rotary Clubs in the district, and upon his retirement the district had forty-two thriving clubs. He is a member of the National Economic League, the headquarters of which are maintained in the City of Boston, Massachusetts, and he is actively identified also with the Religious Association of America. Professor Aspinall is a director of the People's Bank of Buckhannon, is a director also of a local building and loan association, and in politics he is a republican. In 1921 he made a trip to Europe, where he carried out a course of special study of post-graduate order at Oxford University, England.

C. W. Legg etc.

On the 11th of June, 1912, was solemnized the marriage of Professor Aspinall and Miss Maude Rumsell, who is graduate of the West Virginia Conference Seminary and of the vocal department of the Peabody School of Music in the City of Baltimore, Maryland. Mrs. Aspinall is influential and popular in both the cultural life and social circles of her home city, and is a specially talented musician. Professor and Mrs. Aspinall have two children, Catherine, who was born August 10, 1913, and Samuel R., who was born June 27, 1915.

HAROLD T. STURM is mine engineer of the Philmont coal mine of the Hercules & Pittsburgh Coal Company, and also of the Hesper Mine, all in Upshur County, and he maintains his home at Buckhannon, the county seat.

Mr. Sturm was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, October 26, 1896, and in the same county were born his parents, John J. and Leila (Tetrick) Sturm, who now reside at Shinnston, that county, where the father is living virtually retired, he having for a number of years been successfully engaged in business as a contractor in railroad construction. John J. Sturm is a past master of St. John's Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Shinnston, and a Knight Templar, is a stalwart republican and has served as a member of the County Court of Harrison County. Of the four children Harold, of this review, is the eldest; Richard, a graduate of the Shinnston High School is, in 1921, a student in Washington and Lee University in Virginia; Frank is attending the Shinnston High School; and Robert is attending the public schools of that city.

Harold T. Sturm was reared in West Virginia and Ohio, in each of which states he attended the public schools. Since his graduation from the high school at Shinnston he has given his active attention to mine engineering from the time of initiating his independent career, and he has aimed his standing in his chosen field of service. He is aligned loyally in the ranks of the republican party, and in the time-honored Masonic fraternity has received his thirty-second degree of the Scottish Rite, besides being a member of the Mystic Shrine, while his basic affiliation is with St. John's Lodge No. 24, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Shinnston.

In September, 1915, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Sturm and Miss Aladine Basel, who completed her education by attending the West Virginia Wesleyan College and who is a popular figure in the representative social activities of Buckhannon.

JOHN A. SHARPS is the patentee of the excellent device which gives basis for the conducting of one of the important industrial enterprises in the City of Buckhannon, Upshur County. His window-shade invention is manufactured by the Cutright-Sharps Company, and he was the active manager of the well equipped factory of the company for three years.

Mr. Sharps was born in Marion County, this state, on the 2d of August, 1871, and is a son of Jesse and Priscilla (Nichols) Sharps, both likewise natives of that county. He father had exceptional natural ability as a mechanic, and he was a skilled workman as a carpenter, wagonmaker and shoemaker, besides which he became a prosperous farmer in Upshur County, where he owned an excellent tract of 127 acres, upon which he was residing at the time of his death. He was a deacon in the Baptist Church for more than thirty years, was a democrat in politics, was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and his wife was a member of the adjunct organization, the daughters of Rebekah, besides being a devoted member of the Baptist Church. Of the five children four are living: William H., who was formerly in service as a locomotive engineer, is now a mechanic at Clarksburg, this state; he is the widow of Joseph Kiddy; Thomas G. is employed in a sawmill at Elkins; and John A. is the immediate subject of this sketch. The daughter, Mary J., is the deceased wife of John W. Kiddy.

John A. Sharps was a boy at the time of the family removal to the farm in Upshur County, and he gained his youthful education in the public schools of this county. He early manifested exceptional mechanical skill, and for a number of years he was actively identified with lumbering operations in this section of West Virginia. He was employed by a number of the leading lumber companies, and in the meanwhile he exhibited his mechanical genius by inventing a number of devices, of which the most important is the window shade which bears his name and for the manufacture of which the Cutright-Sharps Company was organized and incorporated and the manufacturing plant established at Buckhannon. W. T. McWorter is president of the company, Dr. O. B. Beer is its vice president, C. K. McCally is secretary and treasurer, and H. M. Wade is sales manager. The enterprise is proving successful, as a valuable contribution to the industrial and commercial activities of Buckhannon. Mr. Sharps was the active manager and superintendent of the factory. He is a stockholder and director of the company, is the owner of a fine fruit farm of thirty-four acres seventeen miles distant from Buckhannon, and is especially successful as a grower of the finest types of apples. His political allegiance is given to the republican party, he is affiliated with Centerville Lodge No. 81, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and he and his wife hold membership in the United Brethren Church. The maiden name of Mrs. Sharps was Lydia F. Cutright, and she is a member of one of the representative families of Upshur County. Mr. and Mrs. Sharps have six children: Edna (Mrs. Harmon Pringle), Coy W., Julia (Mrs. Lester Cain), Elsie G., Dessie C. and Oleta.

WILLIAM REPPERT, the popular superintendent of the Peerless Coal Mine Company at Buckhannon, Upshur County, was born in Preston County, West Virginia, December 17, 1883, and is a son of A. D. and Mary (Fortney) Reppert, the former of whom was born in Monongalia County, this state, March 3, 1851, about a decade prior to the separation of West Virginia from the mother state of Virginia. Mrs. Mary (Fortney) Reppert was born in Preston County, in 1854, was there reared and educated and there her marriage occurred. A. D. Reppert was reared at Morgantown, judicial center of his native county, and after his marriage he settled in Preston County, where he became superintendent of an ore plant. He later turned his attention to agricultural enterprise, of which he still continues a successful exponent in that county. He is a republican, is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and both he and his wife are active church members. Of the ten children all are living except one, four being residents of Upshur County, one of Preston County, one of Maryland, one of Michigan and one of Pennsylvania.

The public schools of his native county afforded William Reppert his early education, and he initiated his association with the coal-mining industry by taking employment in Marion County. He gave special attention to study in the engineering department of the industry, and with this department he continued his active association ten years, at the expiration of which, in 1909, he became a mine foreman in Marion County. He was thus engaged one year and for the ensuing three years was a mine engineer in Fayette County. In 1913 he became a mine foreman in Upshur County, and here his ability and effective service has led to his advancement to his present office, that of superintendent for the Peerless Mine Company, with headquarters at Buckhannon, the county seat, where he owns his attractive home property, at 100 South Florida Street. At Beckley, Raleigh County, he is affiliated with Beckley Lodge No. 95, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. He is a republican in politics, and he and his wife hold membership in the Christian Church.

October 9, 1910, recorded the marriage of Mr. Reppert and Miss Minnie R. Fortney, of Marion County, she having been graduated from the high school and also from the State Normal School at Fairmont and having taught school for one year. Mr. and Mrs. Reppert have two children: Oliver, born August 11, 1911; and William, Jr., born July 8, 1918.

EDWARD ARNOLD BRANNON, a member of the West Virginia bar since 1894, continues the high prestige enjoyed by the name Brannon in the bench and bar of the state, a prestige long associated with his honored father, the late Judge Henry Brannon.

Judge Henry Brannon, who was a justice of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals from 1888 to 1913, was born at Winchester, Virginia, November 26, 1837, member of a prominent family of Old Virginia and a son of Robert and Catherine (Copenhaver) Brannon. Robert Brannon was also a native of Winchester, and an influential citizen of that locality, being a planter and a hotel proprietor. His children were named John, Harriet, Stuart, Morgan M. and Henry.

Judge Henry Brannon was reared on a farm and had all the advantages of a liberal education in the years before the war. He graduated A. B. from the University of Virginia in 1857. He was admitted to the bar in 1859, and began his career as a lawyer in Lewis County, West Virginia, before the war, having studied law with his brother-in-law. He was in active practice at Weston from 1859 to 1881. He was prosecuting attorney of Lewis County from 1860 to 1864, was a member of the West Virginia House of Representatives in 1870-71, and for eight years, from 1880 to 1888, was judge of the Circuit court. Then followed his long career of a quarter of a century as justice of the Supreme Court of Appeals. His last term on the supreme bench expired December 31, 1912, and he died November 24, 1914. He was a democrat until 1896, and after that a republican. Judge Brannon was author of "Treatise on Rights and Privileges Guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution."

December 28, 1858, he married Hetta Jane Arnold, of Weston. Of their six children five are living: Ida J., widow of Dr. John I. Warder, of Weston; Ella V., wife of Frank J. Flannery, of Baltimore, Maryland; Mamie B. Whelan, of Huntington, West Virginia, widow of James J. Whelan; Gertrude, wife of J. Hoffman Edwards, of Weston; Edward A.; and Henry, Jr., deceased.

Edward Arnold Brannon, only living son of the late Judge Brannon, was born at Weston, April 4, 1870, and grew up in his native town, acquiring a public school education, attending a preparatory school at Baltimore, finishing his literary education in the University of West Virginia and Princeton University, and attended the law schools of the University of Maryland and of Washington and Lee University. After graduating LL. B. he was admitted to the bar in 1894, and now for almost thirty years has been associated with much of the important practice in his home state, having many cases before the Supreme Court. He has been city solicitor of Weston, was representative of Lewis County in the House of Delegates in 1910-11, and was democratic nominee for attorney general of the state in 1920. While he has participated in politics, his primary ambition has been satisfied within the strict limits of the law. He is one of the local attorneys for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway, and a director of the Weston Electric Light, Power and Water Company. He is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America.

February 10, 1909, Mr. Brannon married Irma K. Cowey. Mrs. Brannon is a graduate of the high school of Middleport, Ohio. They have three children: Henrietta H., born July 8, 1910; Alice J., born August 3, 1913; and Edward A., Jr., born October 18, 1915. Mrs. Brannon and her daughters are members of the Episcopal Church.

IRA B. WESTFALL for a quarter of a century has carried on a prosperous business as a building contractor over Upshur and surrounding counties, but his home is on a farm a mile east of Buckhannon, and with the aid of his children he cultivates the land and takes an active part in this agricultural community.

His birthplace was not far from the home where he lives today. He was born August 17, 1872, son of Granville

D. and Martha E. (Day) Westfall. Few families ante-date the arrival of the Westfall family in what is now West Virginia. In 1772, three years before the beginning of the Revolutionary war, his ancestor James Westfall came to Randolph County and settled on the present site of Beverly. The line of descent from James Westfall to Ira B. Westfall leads through his son Zachariah, George Westfall who married Ruhama Cutright, Watson Westfall, who married Rachel Tinney, and Granville D. Westfall, who was born in Upshur County March 4, 1848. He grew up on his farm, made good use of his educational advantages and for several years was a teacher. After his marriage he settled on Sand Run, then moved to Buckhannon, and finally to a farm nearby, where he died March 8, 1908. He was one of the leaders of the United Brethren Church of his community and was a democrat. Of his six children the following are living: Ira B.; Lenora, wife of T. W. Hinkle, of Buckhannon; Iva F., wife of A. M. Hughes, of Akron, Ohio; and W. E. Westfall, a carpenter and builder of Buckhannon.

Ira B. Westfall lived on the home farm until he was twenty-one, acquired a common school education and learned the trade of carpenter. He worked as a journeyman carpenter for several years, but for the past quarter of a century has done a business as a general contractor and has had a share of the contracts in the general up-building of this section of the state. He owns a business house and dwelling in Clarksburg, and also has seventy-six acres of farm land, his home farm comprising forty-two acres.

Mr. Westfall married Ida C. Lowe, daughter of William R. and Mary E. (Mowery) Lowe, natives of Virginia. Mrs. Westfall was reared on a farm and had a common school education. To their marriage were born twelve children, all but one still living: Lottie M., born September 29, 1897, wife of Henry Ours; Veta F., born July 12, 1899; William D., born September 5, 1901, now serving in the United States Navy; Burton J., born July 3, 1903; Winnie W., born February 9, 1906; Ida V., born August 4, 1908; Solomon D., born December 29, 1909; Virgil D., born November 20, 1911; Kelso L., born January 4, 1914; Mary E., born December 8, 1915; Henry F., born in September, 1917, and died January 1, 1918; and Robert M., born April 19, 1919.

The family are members of the United Brethren Church, of which Mr. Westfall is a trustee. He is a democrat and served as president of his local Board of Education two years.

ROBERT A. DARNALL is one of the prosperous citizens of Upshur County. He is a farmer and farm owner near French Creek, but his career has been one of varied service and activity, and he is one of the best known men of the entire county.

He was born in Upshur County June 20, 1850, son of Morgan A. and Jane (McDowell) Darnall. His father was a native of Greenbrier County and his mother of Monroe County, and they grew up in the same vicinity. Both were well educated, though they had only the subscription schools during their youth. After their marriage they settled on a farm in Upshur County, living near French Creek, and in 1859 moved to the farm now owned by Robert A. Darnall. Here the father died in 1883 and the mother in 1911. They were active members of the Baptist Church, of which Morgan Darnall was a deacon. He was affiliated with the Masonic Order and was a republican. During the Civil war he became captain and later was colonel of the Tenth West Virginia Infantry, Union Army. For a number of years he held the office of justice of the peace. Of his sixteen children, nine are still living.

Robert A. Darnall grew up on a farm in Upshur County and his advantages in the common schools were supplemented by two terms in the French Creek Academy. As a young man he taught school eight years. He was in the lumber business fourteen years, and since then has been quite steadily identified with the management of his farm of 325 acres in the French Creek neighborhood.

Henry Brannon

1914

FOR THIRTY TWO YEARS A JUDGE OF A WEST VIRGINIA COURT OF RECORD
CIRCUIT BENCH 1884-1888; SUPREME BENCH 1889-1912

Mr. Darnall was for six years a member of the County Court of Upshur County, is now one of the overseers of the poor, and is a fire insurance agent for the Grange Mutual Insurance Company. He is a republican, a member of the County Grange, and is a Baptist.

June 20, 1880, he married Malinda C. Rexroad, who was in the south end of Upshur County. They have five children: Thomas A., a mechanic at Buckhannon; Roscoe, a merchant of Gilmer County; Porter A. who is in wholesale and retail feed business with his brother, George A.; Nellie, wife of Fay Hammer, of Upshur County; and Nora E., wife of Philip Phillips, of Upshur County.

VERNON LEE BENNETT is a veteran business man of Rockwell, Upshur County, where for nearly forty years he has conducted a jewelry store.

Mr. Bennett was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, May 6, 1861, son of James M. and Jennima S. (Wilson) Bennett. His father, a native of Lewis County and a farmer by trade, was a first cousin to Judge George Bennett and Lewis Bennett. Vernon Lee Bennett grew up on a farm at Gladly Fork, received a common school education, and found his interests and activities centered in the home farm until he was twenty-two years of age.

On April 15, 1884, Mr. Bennett began business at Rockwell by opening a small stock of jewelry merchandise. He has been in business ever since, making his store responsive to the new ideas and developments of the community, owner of a prosperous business, also has 100 acres of land in Lewis County, and derives a valuable income from seven-acre peach orchard. His material prosperity is a well merited reward of so many years of work and management, and at the same time he enjoys the complete respect and confidence of his old friends and associates.

December 11, 1890, Mr. Bennett married Delia V. Boggs, daughter of Robert C. Boggs, the hotel proprietor at Rockwell. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which Mr. Bennett is a trustee, steward and a member of the Official Board. He is affiliated with the Masonic Order and the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and votes as a democrat, but has had no desire at any time to hold office.

SA D. PAGE is one of the substantial men in the French Creek community of Upshur County, has lived there nearly his life, has followed farming, still owns a good farm, is interested in many matters of community welfare, including good roads, good churches and schools.

Mr. Page was born on Mulberry Ridge in Upshur County, September 22, 1863, son of Frank and Martha (Young) Page. His mother was born on a farm near French Creek, daughter of Gilbert and Amarillys (Barrett) Young. Mr. Page was the son of Robert Young, who came to French Creek from Massachusetts. Franklin W. Page was born in Virginia and came to the French Creek community during the Civil war, was married and settled on a farm, where he continued farming until his death in July, 1872. His wife died in November, 1888. They were active church members and he was a republican. Their four children were: Asa D.; Charles, who died at the age of five; Festus Y., who is interested in the copper industry at Arkansas; and L. W. Page, of Buckhannon.

Mr. Page grew up on the home farm and acquired a common school education. He farmed for several years, spent a few years in the West, and since his return his marriage he has been settled down to the vocation of a farmer and stockman on his hundred acre place. He is so a stockholder in the Bank of Adrian. Mr. Page is a trustee of the French Creek Presbyterian Church, is affiliated with Columbia Lodge No. 81, F. and A. M., and his wife are members of the Eastern Star. He also belongs to Adrian Lodge of Odd Fellows and to the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. In politics he casts his vote as a republican.

September 9, 1907, Mr. Page married Elsie Bunten. They have three children: French, born in 1909; Martha H., born in 1911; and Ruth, born in 1914.

PARLEY E. CUTRIGHT. It has been the destiny of Parley E. Cutright to set in motion those enterprises and influences that in an important degree represent the business and community activities of the Upshur Village of Frenchton, a thriving and progressive center of trade, church, school and social advantages.

Mr. Cutright was born near Rock Cave in Upshur County August 27, 1882, son of Alonzo and Catherine D. (Strader) Cutright. His parents were also natives of Upshur County, his father born near Hampton and his mother near Tallmansville. They grew up here, acquiring common school educations, and after their marriage settled on a farm and spent the rest of their lives in that industrious vocation. The father died in 1908 and the mother in June, 1921. Alonzo Cutright was also a house carpenter. He was a member of the Methodist Church, a republican, and was affiliated with the Junior Order United American Mechanics. There were three children: Parley E.; Loyd F., a farmer and trader in Upshur County, who married Florence Neely; and Isea, wife of James V. Armstrong, of Clarksburg.

Parley E. Cutright grew up on the home farm, and attended the public schools and summer normals until qualified for teaching, a vocation he followed five years. He also learned telegraphy, and for fourteen years was in railroad service as an agent and operator. When he resigned from the railroad company Mr. Cutright engaged in the feed business at Frenchton, and three years later, in May, 1921, he expanded the scope of his enterprise to general merchandising. He is now senior member of the firm Cutright & Neely, general merchants. Mr. Cutright also owns a farm of eighty acres.

He has been the leading spirit in the growth and development of Frenchton in every direction. He was the first agent for the Coal & Coke Railroad Company here. His enterprise and capital have been responsible for the chief building development in the town. He was instrumental in organizing the United Brethren Church of Frenchton, and also secured the institution of Lodges of the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America, and served as the first officer in both these lodges.

On August 31, 1903, Mr. Cutright married Miss Maude Neely, daughter of Alva and Christianna (Hinkle) Neely. They have one child, Lola A., born November 4, 1904, now the wife of Monter Harper. Mr. and Mrs. Harper live at Frenchton and have one child. Mr. Cutright and family are active in the United Brethren Church, in which he is a trustee, and he is now superintendent of the Sunday School. He is prominent in fraternal affairs, affiliated with Rock Cave Lodge No. 81, A. F. and A. M., Upshur Chapter R. A. M., and the Buckhannon Commandery; is a past noble grand of Lodge No. 375 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; past councillor of the Junior Order United American Mechanics No. 77; past chancellor and former district deputy chancellor of the Knights of Pythias in Frenchton Lodge No. 59, and is affiliated with Camp No. 14680, Modern Woodmen of America. He and Mrs. Cutright are members of the Eastern Star, and he is past worthy patron of the Chapter. In politics Mr. Cutright is a republican.

JOSEPH P. MINEAR has devoted the greater part of his active life to the coal mining industry in West Virginia. He is now superintendent of the Minear Coal & Mining Company at Adrian, this being a family corporation.

The Minear family goes back into the pioneer history of Tucker County, West Virginia. The great-grandfather of Joseph Minear was David Minear, who came from old Virginia in 1789 and entered about five hundred acres of land in the vicinity of St. George in Tucker County. That land is still in the family name. David Minear is said to have built the first sawmill in this part of the state, and in the early days that mill cut great logs of walnut timber into common lumber. The grandfather of Joseph P. Minear was Enoch Minear. David Minear was founder of the Methodist Church in his community, building a church edifice, and his own children followed him in that religious faith. However, his grandson, David S. Minear, became a Presbyterian and was an elder in that church for many years. David S. was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and voted as a democrat. He married Mary J. Parsons, who was also born in the St. George community. They have six children: Crede W., who graduated from the Smith Commercial College at Lexington, Kentucky, and is cashier of the First National Bank of Hendricks, West Virginia; Joseph P.; John W., of Parsons; Crawford W., of Tacoma, Washington; Mary C., wife of Lomax Wamsley, of Herndon, Virginia; and W. S., who lives on the old homestead farm.

Joseph P. Minear was born at St. George February 1, 1870, grew up on the home farm, and supplemented his public school education in the Fairmont State Normal. He has had a busy career and for several years was in newspaper work at St. George and Davis. For six years he was railroad agent at Hendricks, and then became store manager for the Wildell Lumber Company, remaining in the service of that corporation six years. He then went to Harding, West Virginia, as store manager for the Davis Colliery Company, remaining there six years, and in 1917 took the responsibility of superintendent of the Minear Coal & Mining Company at Adrian. Mr. Minear is also one of the directors of the Bank of Adrian. He is a democrat, is affiliated with Hendricks Lodge of Knights of Pythias, a member of Beverly Lodge of Masons, and has attained the thirty-second degree in the Scottish Rite. Mrs. Minear is a member of the Eastern Star. They are active in the Presbyterian Church. In June, 1895, Mr. Minear married Anna T. Adams, daughter of John J. Adams. She graduated from the St. George Academy and was a teacher before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Minear lost their only child, a daughter.

HOMER O. VAN TROMP, M. D. The medical and surgical practice of the French Creek community in Upshur County is ably looked after by Doctor Van Tromp, who was born and grew up in this community and has made a splendid record in his chosen profession. He has practiced here for nearly ten years.

Doctor Van Tromp was born at French Creek September 26, 1877, son of John A. and Margaret (Ward) Van Tromp. His father was born in Rockingham County, Virginia, in March, 1840, and at the age of eighteen came to this section of West Virginia. He had acquired his early education in his native state, and he also attended subscription school in West Virginia. He was a student, and for many years was a successful teacher. He served nine months in the Twenty-fourth West Virginia Cavalry, and was discharged at the close of war. After his marriage he taught school in Upshur and Harrison counties, and finally moved to French Creek to educate his children at the old academy, and is still living at French Creek. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a prohibitionist. John A. Van Tromp and wife had seven children, one of whom died at the age of nineteen. Those living are: John M., a teacher and surveyor in Upshur County; Lulu, wife of Jerome Fultz, of Jane Lew, West Virginia; Dr. Homer O.; Miss Ira L., who has been a teacher; Miss Mary E.; and Aleta, who is a graduate of the Fairmont State Normal and has been a teacher.

Dr. Homer O. Van Tromp was reared at French Creek, attended the free schools there and took the work of the summer normal schools. As a young man he studied electricity and steam engineering, and for a time was electrician at the West Virginia State Reform School and was also in Washington, District of Columbia, employed as chief engineer at the National Training School for Boys. For several years he had set his mind on a medical career, and in preparation thereto he entered the Eclectic School of Medicine at Cincinnati, where he was graduated in 1913, and in the same year returned to French Creek to begin practice. Doctor Van Tromp is a member of the County State and American Medical Associations. He is a busy man in his profession, and at the same time takes a deep interest in everything connected with the general welfare and progress of the community. He is a stockholder in the Bank of Adrian, in the Upshur County Fair Association and the Buckhannon Chamber of Commerce. He is a republican, a Presbyterian, and is affiliated with Rock Cave Lodge No. 81, A. F. and A. M., and he and his wife are members of Aletha Chapter of the Eastern Star.

In 1907 Doctor Van Tromp married Blanch E. Broome, a daughter of Adolphus Brooks and member of a prominent family of educators and horticulturists in Upshur County.

THADDEUS K. WINGROVE. Wingrove is a name that has been identified with West Virginia community life for considerably more than a century. The first American ancestor of the French Creek citizen named above was John Wingrove, who was born in England about 175 came to America at the age of seventeen, lived in Vermont, where he married, and later moved to Virginia, and finally to West Virginia, establishing his home in Marsha County, where he lived out his life. His son, William Wingrove, was founder of the family in Upshur County and was a millwright by trade. His son, Harrison Wingrove married Maria Peebles, and they were the parents of Marshall P. Wingrove, who was born in Braxton County, West Virginia, November 20, 1834. Marshall P. Wingrove grew up in the French Creek community, acquired a good education, and after his marriage settled at French Creek, where he continued farming and the milling business the rest of his life. He was an elder and liberal supporter of the French Creek Presbyterian Church, and was a very active prohibitionist in politics. In 1858 Marshall P. Wingrove married Roxanna Anderson, who was born in Frenchtown Upshur County, March 19, 1834, daughter of James and Sarah (Syron) Anderson, who settled in Upshur County from old Virginia. Of the seven children of Marshall Wingrove and wife six are now living: Warren, of San Francisco; Oscar, of British Columbia; Maude, wife of J. Dunn, an attorney at Omaha, Nebraska; Miriam, wife of J. S. Curry, of Cleveland, Ohio; Thaddeus K.; and Clarence, a farmer and poultryman at French Creek.

Thaddeus K. Wingrove was born near French Creek, April 9, 1871. He grew up there, acquiring a public school education, and also attended the U. B. Academy at Buckhannon. Since leaving college his years have been steadily devoted to his trade as a carpenter and to his interests as a farmer. He also looks after his farm of sixteen acres half a mile southeast of French Creek. Mr. Wingrove is a democrat in politics, is affiliated with the Modern Women of America, and is an elder in the French Creek Presbyterian Church and a teacher in the Sunday School.

February 6, 1900, he married Miss Mayme Phillips, who was born at French Creek October 9, 1875. They have a son, C. Lyle, born March 19, 1906, now attending school at French Creek.

JACKSON V. BLAIR. In his experience as a lawyer Jackson V. Blair of West Union, West Virginia, has probably covered a wider and more important field in the adopted county of Doddridge, than any of his contemporaries, now engaged in the work of the profession. He was admitted to the bar in 1877, having been examined by Circuit Judges Charles S. Lewis and James M. Jackson, and by Okey Johnson, judge of the Supreme Court Appeals of West Virginia. He had studied law under the distinguished judge and public leader Hon. Chapman Stuart, with whom he became associated in the practice.

Mr. Blair was born April 16, 1853, on a farm on French Creek, south of Clarksburg, in Harrison County, Virginia, now West Virginia. His great-grandfather, William Blair, was a native of Scotland where he was educated for the Presbyterian ministry, but he declined the robes, left his native land at Philadelphia, passed into Virginia, rendered military service in behalf of the colonists and after use of the Revolution, purchased land on Hastings Run, butary to Elk Creek, in Harrison County, where he established his home. He married Miss Martha McCullough, a lady of culture, and to this union were born five children, the eldest of whom was Dr. Alexander Blair, grandfather of the West Union lawyer. Doctor Blair, for several years a leader in popular education, devoted the greater part of his life to the practice of medicine. He married Miss Mary Arnold, a native of Harrison County. Her sister, Roana Arnold, was the wife of Hon. Samuel Hays, who as congressman from this section of the old Dominion, appointed Thomas J. Jackson cadet to West Point, and gave him money to pay expenses thereto. Hays personally knew young Jackson, and lived to see him "sisted" "Stonewall" on the bloody field of Bull Run. To the marriage of Dr. Alexander Blair and Mary Arnold were born three sons and three daughters. The youngest son, George B., became a tailor by trade at which he worked, and also farmed some. He married Miss Harriet Morgan, a daughter of Morgan Morgan, ("Mod" Morgan, as he was known,) a native of Marion County. He was a near relative of David Morgan, famed in history as a frontiersman and Indian fighter in the upper Monongahela Valley. He was a brother of Col. Zaquell Morgan, founder of Morgantown. They were sons of Morgan Morgan, who was born in Wales, educated in London, and came to Delaware, where he married Catherine Hackett, the issue of this union being Morgan, Jr., Anne, Zaquell (or Zaquell), Evan, David, Charles, Henry and James. The father with his family, moved to the Valley of Virginia near Winchester, his estate being in Berkeley County.

Of David, Doctor De Hass in his History of Virginia, says: "Of those who removed with their families to Hackett's Fort was David Morgan, one of the earliest settlers on the frontier, and a man of great energy of character and sterling worth. He was a near relative of N. Daniel Morgan of Revolutionary memory, and like that distinguished officer, possessed, in a high degree, courage and capacity for almost any emergency." Into the marriage of George B. and Harriet Morgan four children were born, Jackson V. (subject of this sketch), Morgan Franklin, Mary Ellen (now deceased), Thomas and William A.

Their parents were members of the Baptist Church. Jackson V. spent his early years on a farm, attended the common schools and entered the State Normal at Fairmont in which he was graduated in 1875. He taught several years, his last being as principal of the West Union graded School. He was twice elected superintendent of the schools of Doddridge County, and served four years. June 17, 1890, Governor A. B. Fleming commissioned him a major, as judge advocate of the First Regiment, West Virginia National Guard, and he served four years. In 1898, Major Blair was the democratic candidate for congress from the old first district. Although he was not elected, he had the satisfaction of materially reducing his opponent's former majority. In 1912, he was his party's nominee for circuit judge and again made a most creditable record. His long and steady practice of law has been varied by other interests. He was one of the organizers of The West Union Bank, the oldest in the county, and is a member of its board of directors. He was also, one of the original stockholders in the Ideal Window Glass Company and was president thereof several years.

Socially, Major Blair is a Knight Templar, thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a Noble of the Mystic Shrine and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias lodges. He is also a member of the Baptist Church.

In 1879, he married Miss Ella M. Smith, daughter of Dr. Francis M. F. Smith and Julia Ann Smith, founders of Smithton, now Smithburg, three miles east of West Union. Captain Smith was a native of Fauquier County, Virginia, and a cousin of the renowned William Smith, who was governor of that commonwealth. The wife of Captain Smith was a daughter of Matthew and Maria Newlon Neely, substantial and most worthy pioneer citizens.

Mrs. Blair is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; past matron in the Order of the Eastern Star and a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Unto Major Blair and wife were born eight children, viz.: Julia, wife of Paul M. Ireland, an attorney; Smith, cashier of The Bank of Jacksonburg; William E. of Cincinnati; Anne Morgan, wife of George C. Crouse, expert abstractor of titles to oil and gas lands; Jackson V., Jr., lawyer of Fairmont; George Neely, broker of Akron, Ohio; Francis Keech, field agent of the Portland Cement Association; and Marion R., a student.

When the United States entered the World war, three of these sons enlisted in the military service. George Neely Blair was already in the service as sergeant on duty along the Mexican border. Thereafter, he enlisted for overseas service. On August 26, 1918, he was promoted and commissioned second lieutenant of infantry. He participated in engagements in the Meuse-Argonne and was at the front when the armistice was signed. After that he was transferred to the Army of Occupation in Germany, as second lieutenant of Company K, Twenty-sixth Infantry, First Division. In August, 1919, he sailed from Brest, France, and on September 4th of the following month, received his honorable discharge.

Francis Keech Blair, while a student at Bethany College, went to Pittsburgh and enlisted in the navy on the twelfth day after this nation declared war against the imperial government of Germany. He trained at different stations, was assigned to duty on sub-marine chasers and was transferred to The Canonics, attached to the mine-laying fleet that planted the mines across the North Sea, which "bottled up" the German war fleet, and it finally surrendered. On July 16, 1919, he was honorably discharged, as seaman, first class.

Jackson V., Jr., who had had military schooling at the Staunton Military Institute, and as cadet at the State University at Morgantown, enlisted in the aviation branch of the service. He completed the prescribed course at the Military School of Aeronautics at the University of Texas, September 19, 1918; trained in different fields and with his squadron, was ready to embark for overseas duty, when the armistice was signed. Thereafter he received an honorable discharge. While these sons were doing their duty in the army and navy, their father was active in home work, serving as chairman of the local draft board; and their mother in doing Red Cross work, and patriotically cheering her own and other soldier boys on to duty.

Major Blair, although approaching the "three score and ten" goal, is yet vigorous and active in the practice of his profession.

JOHN A. KIMBLE. The chief officer of the courts and law enforcer of Grant County is Sheriff John A. Kimble, a fearless and alert official whose work in office has justified fully the confidence of the citizens who put him there with their votes. For many years he was associated in the timber and lumber industry, and was in that business during the early years of his residence at Bayard.

Mr. Kimble was born in Pendleton County, April 4, 1863. His father, also named John A. Kimble, was born in Germany and as a young man came to the United States. In Pendleton County he married Miss Sarah Shirk, who was of Scotch ancestry. His father devoted his active years to farming, and at the time of the Civil war he enlisted as a Union soldier and died just about the close of the struggle. His widow was left the task of rearing her young children, and she did her part by them nobly. She finally married Isaac Harman, and by that union had one child, Rosa, wife of John Judy, of Maysville, West Virginia. The children by her first marriage were: William R., of Pendleton County; Wellington F., a farmer in the same county; Phoebe J., who married Jacob Harman and died in Pendleton County; Rebecca, wife of David Harman and a resident of Denver, Colorado; and John A.

Sheriff John A. Kimble spent the first thirteen years of his life in Pendleton County. He then left the home of his mother, and at that early age began making his own way in the world. His first employment was at Flinstone, Maryland, where he was waterboy for a tanbark crew, gathering tanbark for the market. He continued his work until the close of the fall season for gathering bark, and then came up the Potomac Valley to the vicinity of Luke, Maryland, where there was in operation a saw mill of the Davis Coal and Coke Company. For two years he operated the gang-saw of this mill. His next removal took him to Mount Pleasant, Ohio, where he worked as a farm hand and utilized some of the experience gained as a boy on the farm. For this work he was paid wages of $25 a month and board. After a year he continued his western experiences, and for about a year worked on a farm at Spring Hill, Johnson County, Kansas. From there he went on to Texas, joining a brother at Austin, and was in that state some seven or eight months. For a time he rode a cow pony for his brother, and he knows something of the life of the cowboy. Having in the meantime seen a great deal of the West and the Southwest, he returned to Maryland, and again resumed work with the Davis Coal and Coke Company in their saw milling plant at Deer Park, and later at Chafee on the Western Maryland Railway. From there he came to Grant County, West Virginia, and had charge of the timber property for the Wilson-Colston Company, and then removed to Henry, called Hamilton, and had charge of the timber and mill of the firm of Miller and Levering for eight years. While there he married, and when he left the service of the lumber company he located at Bayard, and has ever since been an influential factor in that community.

At Bayard he entered business, conducting a livery and a retail lumber yard. He followed this enterprise for about six years. Since then his time has been almost fully taken up with public office. For a dozen years he was postmaster of Bayard and deputy sheriff of the county, being appointed postmaster under the Roosevelt administration. He was deputy sheriff until his elevation to the position of high sheriff. He won the republican nomination for sheriff against three competitors in 1920, and was elected over his democratic opponent by more than 1,200 votes. He succeeded Sheriff W. H. Munsing in office in January, 1921. Sheriff Kimble has discharged his responsibilities as sheriff in a way to merit the esteem of all good people and to entitle him to the respect and awe of law breakers. He was personally instrumental in bringing to light the details of the Harman Bell murder and getting the guilty parties brought to justice. The manufacture of illicit liquor in Grant County is rapidly disappearing, since the law violators understand that the sheriff means to enforce the law impartially and firmly.

Mr. Kimble is a republican, cast his first presidential vote for James G. Blaine at Bayard, and for years was a consistent admirer of Colonel Roosevelt and supported him as a progressive candidate in 1912.

He still retains some important business interests at Bayard, having some holdings in the lumber business there, is a partner in the Barrett Hardware and Furniture Company and one of the first stockholders of the Bayard National Bank and one of its directors. He is a past noble grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, past master of Bayard Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and a member of the D. O. K. K. The family are Presbyterians.

On February 14, 1892, Sheriff Kimble married Miss Sarah E. Bartley, who was born in Deer Park, Maryland, in 1868, daughter of John F. and Sadie E. (Thrasher) Bartley. Her father was born in Virginia, served as a Confederate soldier in the war, and was a farmer. The children of Sheriff and Mrs. Kimble are: Beulah, who married J. B. Blocher, of Pierce, West Virginia, and has one child, Billie Blocher; Twila, a graduate of the Keyser High School and now connected with the Bayard Hardware and Furniture Company; and Juanita, a student at Dayton, Virginia.

HON. WILLIAM W. BRANNON, a representative member of the bar of Lewis County, has been engaged in the active practice of his profession at Weston, the county seat, for more than forty years. He was born at Winchester, Virginia, November 1, 1853, a son of Seward J. and Mary (Carper) Brannon, both likewise natives of that locality the father having been born in 1823, at Winchester, at his death having occurred in 1859. Seward J. Brannon became one of the prosperous farmers near Winchester and there remained until his death, his widow having survived him a score of years and her death having occurred in 1887. Both were zealous members of the Baptist Church. Of the eight children only two are now living—William W., of this review, and John Robert, a farmer near Middletown, Virginia.

William W. Brannon was reared on the home farm and gained his early education in subscription schools. On the 7th of February, 1872, he came to Weston, West Virginia and found employment in a brick yard, at a wage of $1.50 a day. He was thus engaged about three years, and in the meanwhile his ambition led him to take up the study of law, under the preceptorship of his uncles, who were at that time prominent members of the local bar. He made rapid advancement in his technical studies and was admitted to the bar in 1879. He opened an office and continued in individual practice two years, since which time he has had various associates in his large and representative law business. He has served as special judge, as notary public and as city attorney. In 1886 he was elected mayor of Weston, and was reelected for the four succeeding terms, and upon the expiration of his term, in 1890, he was elected representative of the Fourth District—Lewis and Webster counties—in the State Legislature. He gave his full term of characteristically effective service and did not appear as a candidate for re-election. While in the Legislature he was a member of five important committees of the House of Representatives. In 1899 Mr. Brannon was appointed by Governor Atkinson attorney for the State Board of Pardons, on which he served five years during a portion of which time he was president of the board. He was later appointed by the governor of West Virginia a commissioner on uniform state laws, and although he resigned this place he has never been formally released. He is a stalwart in the camp of the democrat party, has taken lively interest in all that concerns the civic and material welfare of his home city, county or state, and has long controlled a large and important law business, which has involved his appearance in many litigations of major order. Mr. Brannon owns an interest in 2,000 acres of land in Webster County and is interested also in oil and gas production in this section of the state. He is past chancellor of the local lodge of Knights of Pythias, has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge of the order in the state, and has served as a deputy grand chancellor besides having been a member of the Grand Tribunal of the fraternity. His wife is a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Mr. Brannon is now senior member of the leading law firm of Brannon, Stathers & Stathers, with offices both at Weston and Clarksburg. In 1904 he was elected president of the West Virginia Bar Association for one year, and he is likewise a member of the American Bar Association and of the World's Congress of Jurists and Lawyers.

Mr. Brannon wedded, on the 14th of February, 1888 Miss Addie Alkire, of Hackers Creek, Lewis County, at which time they had two daughters: Bertie is the wife of John L. Davis, a lumberman; and Miss Hattie remains at the parental home.

HANNON REED has been successfully identified with far enterprise and coal operations in his native state, and now one of the substantial and popular citizens of Martinsburg, Berkeley County.

Mr. Reed was born in the Village of Romines Mills, Harrison County, West Virginia, and on a pioneer farm of the same county his father, Fielding Reed, was born February 19, 1832, a son of Minor Reed, supposedly a native of Virginia and for many years numbered among the prosperous farmers of Harrison County. Late in life he removed to Ohio, where he continued to reside until his death. His wife, whose family name was White, having died in Harrison County, West Virginia.

Fielding Reed was reared on the old home farm, and after his marriage he resided for some time at Romines Mill next engaged in farm enterprise in that county, and purchased a farm in Lewis County, where he remained at five years, at the expiration of which he returned to Harrison County and purchased a farm on Elk Creek. He continued his successful activities as an agriculturist and stock-grower for many years and there he died at venerable age of eighty-two years, as one of the honorable native sons of the county. He became extensively engaged also in the buying and shipping of live stock, which he consigned to the markets in Philadelphia and Baltimore. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Debar, was born in Upshur County, a daughter of William and Mary (Reed) Debar, the latter of whom was a daughter of Stephen Reed, a Virginia farmer. Mrs. Sarah (Debar) died when comparatively a young woman and left three small children: Hannon, Nancy, Lincoln and Ida. Mary became the wife of William Miles and is now deceased; and Ida married Stephen Stewart. For his second wife Fielding Reed married Mary Boyer, who died January 1922, at Clarksburg, West Virginia. Of this union were born four children: Florence, Watt, Minnie and Mary. Florence is the wife of Robert Stewart; Minnie is the wife of Holden Stewart; and Mary is the wife of John Cunningham.

Hannon Reed gained his early education in the rural schools, and early acquired valuable business experience. At the age of twenty-one years he became associated with his father in the operating of a coal mine, and later he was engaged in farming in Barbour County, where he remained one year. He then returned to Harrison County, where he resumed his active alliance with productive farm industry in 1908, since which year he and his wife have maintained their home at Martinsburg, where he has been identified with various lines of business. He purchased a tract of land on the hill overlooking the city and surrounding confluence of the tract effectively and there erected the modern house in which he and his wife now reside.

November 19, 1884, recorded the marriage of Mr. Reed to Josephine Miles, who was born on a farm five miles northeast of Buckhannon, Upshur County, a daughter of A. J. Miles, who was born in England. John J. Miles' brother William and sister Priscilla likewise came to the United States, and Priscilla married a man named Williams, making settlement in Ohio; William settled in Upshur County, West Virginia. In this county John J. Miles purchased a farm, and he not only became one of the successful agriculturists of Upshur County but also actively identified himself with the mining of coal. He died in that county, aged eighty-seven years. He married Mary Miller, who was born in Virginia, a daughter of Joseph Miller, who was a farmer and farmer, his farm having been on Beverly, about three miles distant from Buckhannon. Joseph had five sons, Jacob, John, Joseph, Jr., James and George, and of the number all except Jacob became Union soldiers in the Civil war, George having been killed in battle and all of the others having long survived the war and having received pensions from the Government. Mrs. Mary (Miller) Miles died at the age of sixty years, she having been the mother of seven children: Susan, Priscilla, Edith, Philip, John, Sarah and Charles. Susan became the wife of Sherman Shreeves; Priscilla married Lafayette Phillips, who also served in the Civil war. In conclusion we have brief record concerning the children of Mr. and Mrs. Reed: Dorsey Miles Reed is in the employ of the United States Government. Tressie May is the wife of W. S. Fisher. Russell Fielding Reed entered the military service of the United States in April, 1918, and at Camp Virginia, was assigned to the Three Hundred and Eleventh Regiment of the United States Army, with which, on the 25th of May of that year, he sailed for France and proceeded with his command to the front lines. He gained a full share of the arduous and hazardous experience on the stage of conflict in the great World war, he was both wounded and gassed, he having been in a hospital in France at the time when the armistice was declared and brought the war to a close. Russell F. Reed received his honorable discharge after his return home, and to his enduring honor will stand his record of service in the greatest war in the annals of history.

KENT TYLER ROYAL, M. D., a member of the staff of Welch Hospital No. 1, maintained by the State of West Virginia at Welch, judicial center of McDowell County, is one of the representative young physicians and surgeons of this vital little industrial city.

Doctor Royal was born at Harvard, Massachusetts, October 25, 1891, and is a son of Dr. Herbert D. and Alma (Eaton) Royal, the former a native of Maine and the latter of Massachusetts, one of her ancestors having been Governor Bradford, the first chief executive of the Massachusetts colony. Doctor Royal traces his lineage to English origin on both the paternal and maternal sides, and is a scion of stanch Colonial stock in New England, that cradle of much of our national history. Dr. Herbert D. Royal is a leading physician and representative citizen of Harvard, Massachusetts, where he is serving as a member of the Board of Education and is otherwise prominent in community affairs.

In the public schools of his native town Dr. Kent T. Royal continued his studies until his graduation from the high school, and in 1911 he graduated from Worcester Academy. In 1915 he graduated from Colby University, Waterville, Maine, from which he received the degree of Bachelor of Science, and in preparation for his chosen profession he then entered the medical department of Harvard University, in which he was graduated in 1919, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. While a student in the medical school the doctor became a private in the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army, at Cambridge, Massachusetts, and served as medical examiner for the Students' Army Training Corps at Harvard University. After his graduation Doctor Royal came to West Virginia and entered professional service at Sheltering Arms Hospital, at Hansford, where he remained from March, 1919, to October 15, 1921, when he removed to Welch and assumed his present position at Welch Hospital, where he specializes in surgery. He is giving as much attention as possible to private practice also, and is an enthusiast in the work of his exacting profession. He is affiliated with the American Medical Association, the Southern Medical Association, the West Virginia State Medical Society, and the McDowell County Medical Society, as well as the Delta Epsilon medical fraternity of Harvard University.

In 1920, at New Albany, Pennsylvania, Doctor Royal wedded Miss Jane Benjamine, daughter of A. H. and Ann (Van Dyke) Benjamine, and the one child of this union is a winsome little daughter, Belle Ann. Doctor and Mrs. Royal are members of the Congregational Church.

THE POINT PLEASANT NATIONAL BANK affords valuable business and civic facilities in the thriving little City of Point Pleasant, the judicial center of Mason County, and is one of the substantial and well-ordered financial institutions of this section of West Virginia. The bank was organized in 1901, mainly through the promotive activities of James Vapehard, who became the first president and who retained this office five years, his resignation having then been given on account of his seriously impaired health, he was succeeded by J. O. Shinn, who has since continued as president of the institution. The bank opened its doors for business in the spring of 1902, and its original capital stock of $25,000 has since been increased to $30,000. J. Friedman became vice president of the bank at the time of its incorporation, and thus served until his death in 1920, when he was succeeded by Rankin Wiley, the present incumbent. W. L. McCoy, the first cashier, died in April, 1902, shortly after assuming his executive duties, and he was succeeded by the assistant cashier, James W. Windon, who has since continued the efficient cashier, and of whom specific mention is made in the sketch immediately following this review. A. L. Neale succeeded Mr. Windon in the office of assistant cashier, and continued his service in this capacity until June, 1921, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, H. L. Johnson. Mr. Neale continues, in 1922, one of the directors of the bank, and in addition to the president and vice president the present directorate includes also Dr. H. A. Barbee and W. H. Vaught. The stock of the bank is all held locally, and the institution thus is thoroughly representative of the general interests of this community and county. The two-story bank building was erected in 1907, and is a substantial and modern brick structure, the upper floor being rented for offices. The deposits of the bank now aggregate $300,000 and the surplus fund is $10,000. Regular dividends have been paid, and none of the stock of the institution is now on the market.

JAMES W. WINDON, cashier of the Point Pleasant National Bank, at the county seat of Mason County, has been an active executive of this institution from the time of its incorporation, as indicated in the foregoing record concerning the bank. He was born at Pleasant Flats, this county, in the year 1860, and is a son of John W. Windon, whose father, Joseph Windon, was a young man when he came from one of the more eastern counties of Virginia, in company with the father of James Copehart, and became one of the early settlers in Mason County. Here Joseph Windon married Miss Susan Mitchell, and they established their home on a large farm on Pleasant Flats, in the Ohio River bottoms, eight miles north of Point Pleasant, where he developed a fine property and became a successful agriculturist and stock-grower, a portion of the old homestead being still in the possession of the Windon family and the old home place being owned by the son James. Joseph Windon died at the age of seventy-five years, and his wife likewise attained to advanced age, both having been active members of the Presbyterian Church.

John W. Windon was reared on the old home farm and received the advantages of the local schools of the period. For a time he owned and operated a flour mill in Jackson County, and after selling this property he returned to Mason County and engaged in farm enterprise near Flat Rock, on Oldtown Creek, his operations having been of extensive order and he having been one of the representative farmers and influential and honored citizens of his native county at the time of his death, when seventy years of age. His first wife, whose maiden name was Mary Hogg, died when a young woman, and he later wedded Miss Jane Clendenin, who proved a devoted foster-mother to the three children of the former marriage, she having had no children of her own and having preceded her husband to the life eternal. Thomas, eldest of the children, owns and resides on the old homestead farm of the Hogg family, the same having been inherited by his maternal uncle, John T. Hogg; James W., of this review, was the second in order of birth; and Fannie is the wife of John Kincaid, a farmer near Hickory Chapel, Mason County.

On the old home farm James W. Windon passed the period of his childhood and early youth, and his educational advantages were those of the schools of his native county. For several years he was a salesman in a wholesale grocery establishment at Parkersburg, and thereafter he held a position in the office of the Burns Lumber Company at Sadie, Braxton County, this company having had mills on the present site of Nitro, on the Big Kanawha River, this Town of Nitro having been developed by the United States Government in connection with its activities in the great World war. In 1895 Mr. Windon came to Point Pleasant and entered the employ of S. L. Parsons, manufacturer of and dealer in lumber and railroad timber, his services having included inspecting as well as office work. Later he was employed in the offices of the Equity Milling Company at Point Pleasant, and he next went to Cincinnati, Ohio, in the employ of the T. J. Hall Company, coal operators and dealers. He was a valued office employee in this connection until he returned to his native county, where he accepted the post of assistant cashier of the Point Pleasant National Bank at the time of its organization, in 1901, and where he soon afterward was made cashier, as noted in the preceding article. He has been secretary of the Progressive Building & Loan Association since 1905, the year which marked its organization, and this association has erected many buildings and otherwise contributed much to the civic and material advancement of Point Pleasant. In addition to these interests Mr. Windon also conducts a successful general insurance agency at Point Pleasant. He has served as secretary of the local Board of Education and as a member of the board of trustees of the battle monument at Point Pleasant, marking the site of a battle that occurred in 1774. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife are popular factors in the representative social activities of the home community. Mr. Windon married Miss Ida L. B. Knap, of Cincinnati, Ohio, no children having been born to this union.

DAVID E. THOENEN. While its history as a village run back into pioneer times, Sistersville came into prominence as a commercial center following the opening of the oil field in that district about thirty years ago. The oil boom was at its height when David E. Thoenen added his presence to this community. He has been prominently interested in oil operations in this and other fields, but for twenty years has given chiefly of his time and effort to banking.

Mr. Thoenen was born at Hannibal, Ohio, August 1870. He is of Swiss ancestry, and the record of the Thoenens in that little republic runs back, according to family Bible, printed in 1727 and in the possession of relative, to the year 1599. The great-grandfather of David Thoenen was a Swiss physician, Jacob Thoenen, by name who served as a surgeon in the Swiss army, and was one of the contingents gathered together in the great army of Napoleon I. He participated in the ill-fated Russian campaign, and while on the retreat from Moscow he lost his life. The grandfather of David E. Thoenen was David Thoenen, who was born in Switzerland in 1799, and married in that country Mary Boren, who was born in 1800. They came to the United States in 1828, settling at Hannibal, Ohio, where David was a shoemaker and farmer. He died at Hannibal in 1887 and his wife in 1894.

John F. Thoenen, father of the Sistersville banker, spent all his life at Hannibal, where he was born in 1835 and died in 1916. He owned and operated a large farm there and was a citizen of most substantial character, implicitly trusted in business and civic affairs. For thirty-three years he was treasurer of the German Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company, held a number of local political offices and was a leader in the democratic party. He was a veteran Union soldier, serving four years in the Twentieth Ohio Infantry. He was a sergeant, and all through the war he kept a diary of his experiences, a book now carefully preserved by his son David E. Among the most important battles in which he was engaged were those of McDowell, second Bull Run, Chancellorsville, Antietam, Gettysburg and Winchester. He was a member of the German Evangelical Church. John F. Thoenen married Catherine Luikart, who was born in Wuerttemberg, Germany, in 1841, and the following year was brought by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Luikart, to America. Jacob Luikart was born in 1804, and on coming to the United States in 1842 settled on a farm near Hannibal, Ohio, where he died in 1874. Catherine Thoenen spent all her life from infancy at Hannibal, where she died in 1917. She was the mother of five children: Adaline, wife of Julius Fraley, a farmer at Hannibal; David E.; Ann, who died at Columbus, Ohio, aged thirty-seven, where her husband, Henry Isaly, is a merchant; Rosa, at Hannibal, widow of A. H. Walter, a school teacher; and Ida, wife of Robert Yausey, a merchant at Akron, Ohio.

David E. Thoenen spent his early life at Hannibal, attended the public schools there, and then taught rural schools. He completed his education in Delaware, Ohio, in 1894, and in 1895 removed to Sistersville. Here for three years he had charge of a lumber yard, and then he became personally interested in the oil field and is still active oil operator, under the firm name of Tuel Thoenen.

Mr. Thoenen in 1902 helped organize the People's National Bank of Sistersville, which was opened for business

H. B. Hoene

January, 1903, and in which Mr. Thoenen has been a factor from the beginning. In 1909 he was made assistant-cashier and later promoted to cashier, and is now the chief head of the institution. Mr. Thoenen served as one of Sistersville one term. He is a democrat, is or warden of the Episcopal Church and is a past master Phoenix Lodge No. 73, A. F. and A. M., a past high st of Sistersville Chapter No. 27, R. A. M., past commander of Mountain State Commandery No. 14, K. T., a second degree Mason and a member of West Virginia Society No. 1 at Wheeling, and is a past potentate of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg. He belongs to the Kiwanis Club and Country Club at Sistersville.

In 1901, at Sistersville, Mr. Thoenen married Miss Marjorie Russell, daughter of Joshua and Sarah (Sweeney) Russell, now deceased. It should be recalled when speaking of his father, Joshua Russell, that it was on his farm Polcat No. 1 oil well was drilled in 1890, that being the first of the Sistersville oil field. Mr. Russell besides being owned and operated a lumber and planing mill at Sistersville. Mr. and Mrs. Thoenen have three children: Russell, born June 22, 1902, now a student in Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania; Grace Virginia, born April 1904, attending Martha Washington Seminary in Washington, D. C., and Eugene David, born March 23, 1910.

JAMES S. CRAIG. It is difficult to give any one interesting activity the first place of importance in the career of late James S. Craig of Nicholas County. He was one of those rare men who apparently with equal facility handle the duties and responsibilities in widely separated fields. His record altogether is one that accounts for the honor generally assigned him of having been one of the foremost men in the development and the public affairs of Nicholas County.

He was in the sixth generation of the Craig family in America, founded in 1721 by William Craig, who came from England with his wife, Jean, and their sons, Robert, James and John, landing on the Delaware River and settling in Pennsylvania. The son Robert moved to Virginia in 1740, settling near Staunton. His son Robert, of the third generation, was a Virginia soldier in the War of the Revolution, serving as a member of Capt. John Given's company from March 15, 1777, to March 15, 1782. He was in a number of battles and campaigns and was at the siege of Yorktown, ending the war. In 1795 this old Revolutionary veteran purchased land in the Greenbrier Valley of what is now West Virginia, and lived there until his death in 1804.

He is only son to reach maturity also bore the name of Robert, and in 1837 he established his home in Nicholas County. His son John James was the father of the late James S. Craig. John James Craig had a long and active career as a farmer and citizen in Muddlety Valley of Nicholas County, where he died April 19, 1912, at the age of ninety-two years and five months.

James S. Craig was born at his father's farm in Muddlety Valley in 1842. He acquired an education above the average for the use of his time. He attended school in West Virginia and also in Ohio, and was a teacher of penmanship in Ohio when the Civil War began. A Union man in sympathy, he soon enlisted in Company E of the One Hundred and Forty-first Ohio Infantry, and was in active line, chiefly in the commissary department, until mustered September 3, 1864. His honorable discharge bore the signature of President Lincoln. October 16, 1865, James Craig began a public service at Summersville that continued almost without interruption until his death. At that date he was made county recorder of Nicholas County and also elected clerk of the Circuit Court and clerk of the county board of supervisors. October 1, 1872, was commissioned postmaster of Summersville, and was in charge of the postoffice at the county seat for eighteen years. His service as commissioner of the Circuit Court ended a period of nearly thirty-five years, until February 1908. For eight years he was commissioner of schools for Nicholas County, and for about fifteen years was a member of the Republican Executive Committee.

The late Mr. Craig was the pioneer real estate dealer in Nicholas County, and he made that business not only a source of personal profits, but of vital influence in the development and prosperity of the region covered by his operations. He entered that business in 1871, and in 1877 was appointed agent for Hon. James F. Patton and Gen. John Echols, executors of the will of the late United States Senator Allen T. Caperton. He represented these interests about twelve years, until all the lands in Nicholas, Webster and Greenbrier counties belonging to the estate were sold and accounted for, aggregating about 95,000 acres. These lands included the present site of Richwood. It was due to his persistent advertising that the attention of capital was attracted to the fine timbers and other resources of Gauley, Cherry and their tributaries, and finally resulted in the wonderful development of the Richwood community. His business for over forty years represented a wide-spread service, and it has been claimed that no person to whom he sold land and who complied with the incidental contract ever lost the property on account of bad title or failed to make money out of the investment. The late Mr. Craig owned individually or was interested in many parcels of real estate in Nicholas, Braxton, Webster and Greenbrier counties. The Village of Craigsville, Nicholas County, on one of his tracts, perpetuates his memory.

He was a director of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of his home town at Summersville, and was president of the Richwood Banking and Trust Company and had an active part in the building up of that little city. In business or public affairs he stood out as a man of sterling characteristics and broad vision, a natural leader in every matter connected with civic and material progress.

The late James S. Craig married Ellen F. Miller. She was born and reared in Monroe County, was educated in private schools, was a teacher prior to her marriage, and became widely known for her literary ability, a published book of poems classifying her among West Virginia authors. James S. Craig and wife had six children: Sterling M., a traveling salesman out of the City of Charleston; Arden L., who in an important sense is his father's successor in business and an individual article on his career is published herewith; Charles H., a resident of Charleston; Miss Lillie P., of Summersville; Dainty E., wife of Charles F. Igelman, of Evansville, Indiana; Camilla, wife of E. F. Coleman, of Richwood.

ARDEN L. CRAIG. As a banker and real estate man Arden L. Craig continues the business service so long represented by his late father, James S. Craig. He is a lawyer by profession, but the law has become secondary to his extensive business interests.

Mr. Craig, whose home is at Richwood in Nicholas County, was born at Summersville in the same county, September 8, 1874. He graduated A. B. from the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, and had an active experience as a teacher for several years. In 1901 he graduated from West Virginia University Law School. When he began practice he had the distinction of being the first lawyer to locate at Richwood, and for over twenty years has exercised an important influence in the development of that industrial town. His law office has become his headquarters for an extensive real estate business, and he is also the successor of his father as president of the Richwood Banking and Trust Company.

Mr. Craig has twice served as mayor of Richwood, is an active republican in politics, is affiliated with Richwood Lodge No. 122, A. F. and A. M., and attends and supports the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife is a member. September 11, 1907, Mr. Craig married Miss Ann Veon, of Waverly, Wood County, West Virginia. They have one son, Eugene, born June 4, 1912.

JOSEPH S. WHEAT was representative from Morgan County in the First and Second Legislatures of West Virginia. He was born in the Village of Berkeley Springs, March 31, 1803, a son of William and Elizabeth (Shaw) Wheat, the latter a native of Virginia, while William Wheat came from England. William Wheat at one time kept a hotel at Berkeley Springs. Joseph Wheat acquired a good education, became a civil engineer, and was too old for service as a soldier in the Civil war, but was an active Union man. He was taken prisoner by the Confederates and confined at Richmond for three months until exchanged. He was elected in 1863 to the House of Delegates as representative of Morgan County. While in the Legislature he was instrumental in the passage of the law establishing a free school system in the state. He also served several years as justice of the peace. Joseph S. Wheat died May 6, 1872.

He married Miranda Grove, a native of Frederick County, Virginia, and daughter of John and Eleonor (Newbaugh) Grove. Her father was a farmer and local Methodist minister and died at the age of eighty-one, his wife dying ten years later at the same age. Mrs. Joseph S. Wheat died December 17, 1890. She reared six children: Harriet, Henry, Mary, James, John and Alfred.

The daughter Harriet, became the wife of John Hunter and reared seven children namely, Raymond, Carrie, Bailey, Jessie, Leslie, Helen and Albert.

A second daughter Mary, married Edward Bechtol, a son of Aaron Bechtol. Edward Bechtol was well educated, for many years was in the tannery industry and was a life-long resident of Berkeley Springs where he died at the age of seventy-two. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bechtol reared seven children: Edward Ford, Eugene Leroy, Nellie, Harry F., William Guy, Maud S., and Florence May.

AARON BECHTOL was a permanent resident of Berkeley Springs and was elected and served as a member of the First State Senate of West Virginia. He was born in that part of Berkeley County, now Morgan County, and for a number of years carried on an extensive real estate business. He owned much property at Berkeley Springs, including the historic house in which he had his home and which was built by General Washington for a summer residence.

With the formation of the State of West Virginia, Aaron Bechtol was elected to the Senate from the Tenth District, and was a member of the Legislature that convened at Wheeling in June, 1863. He was also a member of the Second Legislature convening at Wheeling in January, 1864, and he likewise represented the Tenth District in the Senate in the Third Legislature, which met in 1865.

However, during the Civil war he was taken prisoner by the Confederates, and was held in Richmond for some time. After his release he returned home and lived at Berkeley Springs until his death.

Aaron Bechtol married Sarah Roach, a life-long resident of Berkeley Springs. They had four children, Mary, Henry C., John W. and James E. Mary became the wife of William Tritapoe. Henry married Alice Hines, John W. married Catherine Coughlin and James married Mary Wheat.

ALPHEUS W. PRITCHARD was born while James Monroe was president of the United States, and his life was prolonged in good works until the beginning of the twentieth century. The West Virginia community that should hold his memory in special honor is Clarksburg, which he saw grow from a village to a city, and in that growth he shared as a constructive business man.

He was born at Morgantown, West Virginia, July 4, 1819, son of George and Elizabeth (Betts) Pritchard. His parents were reared in Maryland, and Edward Pritchard, founder of the American family, was a native of Devonshire, England. Alpheus W. Pritchard grew up before free schools were instituted, and his education was acquired by private instruction in some of the subscription schools which then furnished educational advantages. He became an apprentice blacksmith, a trade he thoroughly learned and in which he was a skillful worker for a number of years, inventing and making many useful articles.

As a young man he moved to Clarksburg, and his work for several years was that of a blacksmith in this town. Subsequently he enlarged his business enterprise to merchandising, and eventually concentrated his energies almost entirely in the field of real estate. He had in a remarkable degree the faculty of foresight which enabled him to anticipate future developments and at the same time influence developments. He acquired some holdings that became valuable. One of the most interesting of these properties is situated on what was known in the early days as Point, and later Point Comfort. Here he owned many acres of land and built his house on one of the most attractive residence sites. He lived here for many years, and enjoyed the situation the more because it afforded a daily panorama from which he could estimate and observe the progress changes by which a small village had been converted into a thriving city by the hand and industry of man. On the site of his old home now stands the magnificent Thorne home, one of the most attractive in the city. The house is English architecture and was planned and designed by his daughter, Mrs. Joseph W. Thorne, whose husband is a native Harrison County.

Highly successful in business, the late Mr. Pritchard was known by all his friends and associates as a man of the highest integrity of character. His business brought him in touch with the public, and gave him something of a public character. He never took advantage of a man, never foreclosed a mortgage, and he succeeded not by making the misfortunes of others help him, but through constructive foresight and working always for the interests of his clients and the public at large.

June 27, 1843, Mr. Pritchard married Miss Mary Wolfe who was born in Harrison County, November 25, 1824. His birthplace was the farm which included the portion of land now occupied by the Clarksburg Country Club. Her father, David Wolfe, served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. To Mr. and Mrs. Pritchard were born nine children, the youngest of whom is Mrs. Metta Victoria Thorne of Clarksburg. Mr. and Mrs. Pritchard were very actively identified with the work of the Baptist Church.

Alpheus W. Pritchard died November 3, 1901, at the age of eighty-two. His widow survived him and passed away December 28, 1910, aged eighty-six.

N. PRICE WHITAKER, who died June 17, 1922, was prominent in the iron and steel industry, one of the executive officials in the Whitaker-Glessner Company of Wheeling and was one of the able business men of the state drafted into public service by Governor Morgan, who called him to Charleston to act as one of the members of the State Revenue Commission. Just a short time before his death he resigned from this commission and also from the West Virginia Capitol Commission.

Mr. Whitaker was born in Cecil County, Maryland, and was only forty-nine years of age at the time of his death. He came to West Virginia in 1893, after completing education in Cornell University and entered the iron and steel business with what is now the Whitaker-Glessner Company. He was advanced to the office of vice president in the operating department. When the state road commission was formed Governor Morgan selected Mr. Whitaker to represent the northern part of the state. On account of ill health he resigned May 1, 1922. At the time of his death Governor Morgan in a message to the family said: "He was an honorable man, a splendid citizen and able public official to whom I had become greatly attached through personal friendship and official association." Mr. Whitaker was elected in 1916 a member of the House of Delegates, being one of the four members from Ohio County, and served on the finance and other important committees.

Mr. Whitaker married Miss Rusling, of Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania. Their two children are Malcolm and Katharine.

CHARLES MILTON BROWN, M. D. The services rendered as a talented physician and surgeon have given Doctor Brown a reputation over several counties of the state and also the City of Huntington, where he was located for some time. He is now in charge of the mine practice for Mines Nos. 1 and 2 of the Paragon Colliery Company, Argyle Mine No. 1 of the Cub Fork Coal Company and the Orville Coal Company, his home being at Yohn in Logan County.

Doctor Brown was born at Mount Hope in Fayette County, West Virginia, February 19, 1870. His gran-

A. M. Pritchard

ther, John Brown, was a native of Virginia, and spent his life as a farmer and planter in Montgomery County, that state, where he died in 1856. Charles C. Brown, father of Doctor Brown, was born at Christiansburg, Montgomery County, in 1826, and lived to the age of eighty-four. During all these years he never tasted tobacco or whisky, and was never guilty of profanity. He was a man of great strength of will and character, and exercised a beneficent influence throughout his community. He died March 10, 1910. At the age of twenty he came to Beckley, West Virginia, and with Joshua Hannah opened a cabinetmaking and carpenter shop. A few years later he moved to Fayette County, and lived at Mount Hope for half a century. He was in the Confederate army four years, and in the battle of Gettysburg acted as field courier, and had three horses shot through his blanket, but was not wounded. His neighbors in Fayette County always appreciated his high degree of skill as a carpenter and cabinet maker. He erected many houses in that vicinity, and for years he was relied upon to supply all the coffins over a district miles around. For many years he was an officer in the Christian Church, and voted as a democrat until the prohibition party was organized and thereafter was an active worker in that party. He owned a farm near Mount Hope. His wife, Martha Anna Blake, was born in Fayette County and died in 1914, also at the age of eighty-four. Her father, William Blake, was a pioneer of that county and at one time owned 1,000 acres in the vicinity of Mount Hope. William Blake and wife came from Scotland, and at one time conducted a roadside inn on the old Giles, Fayette and Kanawha Turnpike.

Charles Brown and wife had seven children: William H., prosperous farmer at Shady Springs in Raleigh County; Lollie, wife of Charles Pack, of Shady Springs; Anna, who died at the age of sixteen, in 1879; Lizzie, wife of A. D. Moseley, a contractor of mining and building; Arrie M., wife of Cabell Moseley, merchant and farmer at Mount Hope; Charles Milton; Rosa F., wife of Alfred P. Bailey, a merchant and coal operator at Mount Hope.

Dr. Charles Milton Brown was noted as a youth for his great manhood and strong physique, and he did a great deal of arduous labor in the service of railroads, sawmills and in the timber. He attended district school at Mount Hope until he was twenty years of age. During 1894-96 he was a student of medicine in the University of Louisville, and was licensed to practice in West Virginia in 1896. He did his first practice at Jumping Branch in Summers County. Later he entered the Maryland Medical College at Baltimore, where he was graduated in medicine in 1902. He did a large amount of hospital work at Baltimore, and he supplemented his early training by extensive experience in post-graduate study. After leaving Baltimore, Doctor Brown was in practice at Mount Hope from 1904 to 1909. He had a large country practice. In 1909 he joined the staff of Kiser's Hospital of Huntington, and for the first year conducted clinics and classes in obstetrics and nursing, and was otherwise associated with the hospital until 1916. He then resumed his professional work at Mount Hope, and in 1920 took over his present responsibilities as mine physician at Yohn in Logan County.

In 1893, at Mount Hope, Doctor Brown married Ida E. Turner, daughter of William and Mary Turner, of Fayette County. Her father was a native of Scotland, and for many years was a mine foreman. The children born to Doctor and Mrs. Brown were: Anna Maud, now principal of the Mount Hope Junior High School, wife of J. C. Roby, who has charge of the stenographic work for the New River Coal Company; Iris, at home; Gladys, wife of H. T. Town, who is in the railway mail service on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, with home at Huntington; Regina, wife of R. L. Thompson of Charleston, West Virginia; Hercules, a school boy; Maxine, who is captain of the basketball team in the Junior High School at Mount Hope; and Charles W., who died in infancy.

Doctor Brown is a member of the Fayette County Medical Society, the State Medical Society and the Southern Medical Association. He is a democrat in politics and a member of the Christian Church.

A. L. AMICK, M. D. A busy worker in the medical fraternity at Charleston since 1910, Doctor Amick is particularly well known for his abilities as a surgeon, and served as a surgeon with the rank of Lieutenant in the army during the World war.

Doctor Amick was born in 1881, within half a mile of the famous Tyree Stone Tavern, near Clifftop, in Fayette County. This old tavern is the center of many important historical associations, and some particular reference is made to it on other pages of this general history. Doctor Amick's grandfather, Henry Amick, was one of the pioneers in that vicinity. The parents of Doctor Amick were J. A. and Betty (Masters) Amick, and his mother is still living. Doctor Amick was reared in the vicinity of the old tavern and its picturesque surroundings, acquired his early education in the schools of Fayette County, and subsequently entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, now the medical school of the University of Maryland. He was graduated in 1907, and for a year was resident physician in Mercer Hospital at Baltimore, and for two years was resident physician in the Miners Hospital at Weleh, West Virginia. Then, in 1910, he located permanently at Charleston, and has acquired an extensive general practice, with his time being more and more taken up with surgery.

Early in 1918 he joined the Army Medical Corps as lieutenant, and was assigned to duty at Camp Greene, Charlotte, North Carolina. There he was assigned as surgeon of Recruit Camp No. 5 and Tank Corps Battalions. The work he did there can best be summarized in a paraphrase of a special notice of commendation given by Dr. Clifford C. Wehn, captain of the Medical Corps and president of the Board of Review. Doctor Amick, in the words of Captain Wehn, filled his position most satisfactorily, and through his personal qualifications earned the trust that was reposed in him; he was skillful, diligent and tireless in the performance of his duty, and on account of his kindness and consideration shown to all with whom he was brought in contact he won not only the full cooperation but the unstinted regard of his entire command.

Following his discharge from the army in March, 1919, Doctor Amick resumed his duties at Charleston. He is a member of the State, County and American Medical associations. Reared amid the beautiful and picturesque mountains of Fayette County, he imbibed a lasting fondness for outdoor life and the pursuits of the wild. He is a lover of horses and dogs, and is a member of the National Fox Hunters Association and has attended several of the association's fox hunts, held usually in Kentucky. He is also a member of the Southern West Virginia Fox Hunters Association, and was master of hounds at the annual hunt held at Lookout in 1921. Doctor Amick is a well known authority on the Walker hound, and knows all the good points of thoroughbred racing stock in horses.

CHARLES E. VANCE is one of the prosperous and successful business men of Moorefield. He is an official in the Hardy County Bank, has achieved a real constructive triumph in redeeming one of the run down farms of Hardy County, and for many years has been in the service of the Union Tanning Company as woods foreman.

He was born at Upper Tract, Pendleton County, West Virginia, August 17, 1876. His grandfather, Robert Vance, came to West Virginia from Mansfield, Illinois, where the Vance family was a large one. He came to West Virginia before the Civil war, and in Pendleton County married a Miss Harman, of a well known family of this state. He spent the rest of his life in Pendleton County. Benjamin C. Vance, father of Charles E., was born in Pendleton County, carefully educated himself, began teaching when a youth, and completed a record of fifty-two terms of school, teaching in Grant, Pendleton and Hardy counties before he retired. He is now living at Fisher in Hardy County at the age of sixty-eight. While living at Petersburg he served as a magistrate, and has been an active member of the United Brethren Church. Benjamin Vance married Susan R. Lough, daughter of Daniel Lough, a carpenter in Pendleton County, whose family came from Germany. Mrs.

Susan Vance died at Petersburg in 1918. All her ten children are living: Charles E.; Myrtle, wife of Calvin C. Bensenhaver; Linnie, Mrs. Will Feaster; Bessie, who married John Shobe; Kenneth, of Petersburg; Elsie, wife of B. J. Roby, of Petersburg; Harman, who lives in Montana; Mary; Chloe, of Norfolk, Virginia; and Leola, wife of Clarence Emelright, of Winchester, Virginia.

When Charles E. Vance was twelve years of age his parents left Pendleton County and settled on a farm near Seymoursville in Grant County. In that locality he grew to manhood, attended school near Seymoursville, and obtained a part of his education under the direction of his father. At the age of sixteen he left school and for two years worked as a farm hand in Grant County, and for another two years was employed in the woolen mill at Keyser. He then took up farming for himself at Durgeon in Hardy County, and remained in that locality for nine years. He was farming on the shares, and when the owner of the farm died he had to change locations, and instead of resuming farming he accepted an opportunity to go to work for a tannery concern. His first employment was peeling bark and bossing the bark sheds, but subsequently he was put in charge as woods foreman, and that has been his active business responsibility for sixteen years, since 1906. His individual farming interests are located near Fisher in Hardy County. It is a grain farm, managed both extensively and intensively as a food producing proposition. His leading crops are corn and wheat, all of which are consumed on the ground, using the corn for feeding hogs for the market. Mr. Vance took possession of this land when it was reduced as a result of years of cropping to a minimum of productiveness. He tilled the land, enriched the soil by many successive crops of clover and manure, and out of the 225 acres he has 135 under cultivation. It is now recognized as one of the most productive tracts of land in the county. Its other equipment and improvements have been greatly added to by Mr. Vance, who has erected two barns, rebuilt the residence, put up a dairy and ice house, smoke house and cellar. Mr. Vance is a director and is vice president of the Hardy County Bank at Moorefield.

In politics he is a republican, and at times has been a delegate to county conventions and once was a delegate for the Second District Congressional Convention. His only fraternity is the Modern Woodmen of America. During the great war he assisted in the sale of bonds, in drives for the Red Cross and other auxiliary war funds, and was a member of the County Council of Defense.

In Oak Grove Church, near Fisher, Hardy County, October 9, 1898, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. Vance and Miss Annie Bensenhaver. She is a daughter of George and Grace (Bobo) Bensenhaver, her father still living. Mrs. Vance was born on the farm where she is now living and where her father was a tenant farmer for a third of a century. She is the only child of her father, and was well educated in the public schools and holds a state certificate to teach, and spent several years in teaching before her marriage. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Vance are: Grace, wife of Alfred Hedrick and mother of a daughter, Juanita; Kenneth Vance, who looked after the farm for his father; while the younger children are Trixie, Robert, Loring, Coker, William and Esther.

REUBEN PERRY SHINN for many years has been one of the most prominent and influential figures in the agricultural, financial and public affairs of Jackson County. He is still busy directing his extensive farming operations, is president of the First National Bank of Ripley, and in addition is also a member of the State Senate.

Mr. Shinn was born in Mason County, West Virginia, July 20, 1860. His grandfather, Samuel Shinn, was born in what is now West Virginia in 1804, spent the greater part of his life on a farm in Jackson County, and died there in 1884. George W. Shinn, father of the Ripley banker, was born in Mason County in 1834, grew up and married there, and about 1863 removed to Jackson County and owned a fine farm at Grass Lick near Fairplain. His death occurred in 1897 at Webster Springs in Webster County. George W. Shinn was also a man of prominence in the public affairs of his section of the state. He was a pioneer republican served eighteen years as a member of the County Court of Jackson County, and also represented the county in the House of Delegates when the capital was at Wheeling. He was a Mason and one of the very liberal and active members of the United Brethren Church. George W. Shinn married Elizabeth Stone, who was born in that portion of old Mason County, now Jackson County, in 1825, and died at her homestead in Jackson County in 1911. Of her children the first was Samuel F., who owns and operates a farm of 1,000 acres at Parchment near Ripley; James O. has a farm of 500 acres near Point Pleasants in Mason County; Permelia is the wife of Archie A. Reynolds, a merchant and farmer at Evans in Jackson County; Reuben P. is the fourth among the children. James A. and his younger brother, Nathan Ulysses Grant Shinn, own jointly a big farm of 1,200 acres in Jackson County, and James also has the distinction of being a former sheriff of Jackson County for four years.

Reuben Perry Shinn spent his years to the age of twenty-one on his father's farm, and made the best possible use of his advantages in the rural schools. When he left home to go to work on his own responsibility he took no capital, and yet, like his brothers, he has achieved remarkable success as a farmer as well as in other fields of business. Senator Shinn has never been completely divorced from the practical phases of agriculture, and though he has had his residence in Ripley since November, 1912, he keeps in the closest touch with his extensive farming operations. In addition he owns 2,300 acres of valuable land on Grass Lick and in other parts of the county. His farming is a diversified proposition, and he usually keeps from 250 to 300 head of cattle on his lands. He is also associated with a syndicate composed of Starcher Brothers, W. H. O'Brien, T. J. Sayre, W. Walker and himself in the ownership of 2,000 acres of farm land in Jackson County. He owns a large amount of real estate in Ripley, including one of the finest homes of the city.

Mr. Shinn has been president of the First National Bank of Ripley for the past twelve years. This bank was established under a state charter June 20, 1893, and was first called the Valley Bank of Ripley, but has been a national bank since August 4, 1915. The officers are R. P. Shinn, president; S. G. Starcher, vice president; and George E. Straley, cashier. The bank is capitalized at $35,000, has surplus and profits of $6,500, and deposits of approximately $400,000.

Mr. Shinn is a stockholder in the O. J. Morrison Store Company at Charleston and Clarksburg, and is vice president of the Jackson County Grocery Company.

For many years he has been a leader in the republican party in his section of the state. For eight years he was chairman of the county committee, for two terms was a member of the Fourth Congressional District Committee, and he was one of the state electors on the republican ticket in 1916, voting for Mr. Hughes for President. Mr. Shinn has twice been sheriff of Jackson County. He was first elected in November, 1904, serving the constitutional limit of four years, from 1905 to 1909. After an interval of four years he was again elected, in November, 1912, filling the office from 1913 to 1917. In November, 1920, he was elected a member of the State Senate, representing the district of Mason, Jackson and Roane counties for a term of four years. In the session of 1921 he was chairman of the agricultural committee, and a member of the finance, educational, fish and game and other committees. To the full extent of his influence and means Senator Shinn was a supporter of the Government at the time of the World war, and took a personal interest in the success of the various drives in his county. He is a past grand of Ripley Lodge No. 30, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

At Grass Lick in Jackson County in 1882 he married Miss Artemisia Shamblin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Shamblin, now deceased. Her father owned a large farm at Grass Lick. Mr. and Mrs. Shinn have four children: Cora, a teacher in the high school at Ripley, is the wife of Charles W. Lively. Belle is the wife of David L. Rogers, who owns a 200-acre farm and also helps operate be Shinn farms at Grass Lick. James B. is also associated with his father in his farming operations at Grass Lick. Valter Warren is a member of the engineering staff of the late Roads Commission.

CHARLES BUFFINGTON BALDWIN. An energetic operator in the coal and oil industries of West Virginia, Charles Buffington Baldwin, of Huntington, is also an accredited member of the legal profession, and is the repository of numerous interests of a business nature. He has achieved a number of accomplishments during his short but active career, and has attained a recognized position in the confidence of his associates.

Mr. Baldwin was born at Athens, Clarke County, Georgia, January 7, 1894, and is a son of Charles Warren and Juliette (Buffington) Baldwin. Charles Warren Baldwin was born in 1852, in South Carolina, and as a young man came to Huntington, West Virginia, where he was married, subsequently going to Athens, Georgia. He owned and operated a chain of rolling mills, one of which was located at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, to which city he removed in 1899, and here he died in November, 1914. Mr. Baldwin was a democrat, a member of the Episcopal Church and a thirty-second degree Mason. He married Juliette Buffington, who was born at Huntington in 1874, and was educated in the Huntington public schools, Marshall College of Huntington, and the Mary Baldwin Seminary at Staunton, Virginia. She arrives her husband as a resident of Huntington. Peter line Buffington, the father of Mrs. Baldwin, was born in Virginia and died at Huntington in 1876. He was a pioneer of the city and became its first mayor, and followed farming as a vocation, being a large landholder. At one time he took a prominent part in politics and was a member of the cabinet of Jefferson Davis. He was always a staunch democrat. Mr. Buffington married Miss Louise Garland, who was born in Westmoreland County, Virginia, and died at Huntington. After the death of her first husband Mrs. Charles W. Baldwin married the late Frank Bliss Enslow, of Huntington, who was a lawyer of distinction and a man with numerous important business interests. They became the parents of one daughter, Dorothy Louise, who attended the National Cathedral School at Washington, D. C., and now makes her home with her mother.

The only child of his parents, Charles Buffington Baldwin attended the public schools of Huntington, and after his graduation from the high school entered Marshall College, from which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1913. He then enrolled in the law department of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia, and was given a degree of Bachelor of Laws as a member of the graduating class of 1916. During his college career he was admitted to membership in the Pi Kappa Sigma and Theta Nu Epsilon Greek letter college fraternities. Admitted to the bar in 1916, in the same year Mr. Baldwin became local counsel at Huntington for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, a position which he retained until April, 1917, when he entered in the United States Army and was sent to the officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison. He was shortly assigned to the air service, where he was commissioned a first lieutenant, and eventually was made an instructor at the Wilbur Wright Aviation Field, near Dayton, Ohio, where during the remainder of his service he was engaged in teaching the art of flying to student army aviators. He was mustered out and honorably discharged in April, 1919, at which time he returned to Huntington and engaged in coal and oil operations, in which he has since been engaged. He is now president of the Transylvania Petroleum Company of Huntington and New York City, and a director in the J. M. McCoach Company of Huntington. Mr. Baldwin maintains an independent stand in regard to political affairs. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal Church. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M., and other connections with the Guyandotte Club, the Guyan Country Club and the Chamber of Commerce, all of Huntington. He owns a modern residence at No. 1310 Third Avenue, a very comfortable and attractive brick structure, and other real estate at Huntington, as well as a summer home in Summers County, West Virginia. In civic affairs he has always been a willing and energetic supporter of constructive movements and a friend of all enterprises tending to advance the general welfare.

On June 30, 1920, Mr. Baldwin was united in marriage with Miss Hazel B. Hatfield, of Huntington, daughter of Dr. Henry D. and Caroline (Bronson) Hatfield, residents of this city. Doctor Hatfield is an ex-governor of West Virginia and a distinguished physician and surgeon. Mrs. Baldwin is a graduate of Miss Baldwin's School for Girls at Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania.

THOMAS N. PERRY. The Buffalo Creek Valley of Logan County is one of the most recent scenes of the great industrial development in this part of the state. Maps published a dozen years ago revealed nothing of this development, neither railroad nor mining centers. The Perry family established themselves in this isolated environment years ago, when farming and grazing were the only resources except the money that could be made in clearing off the timber from the hillsides. Thomas Perry is a native, and one of the few older residents with the foresight and vision to estimate the probable development of the valley. While doing the routine work of a farmer he was busy investing his surplus capital and mortgaging his future earnings by buying land, until he had become one of the most extensive individual landholders in the valley. Naturally when the railroad came and with the development that has made the valley an almost continuous mining camp, he has become wealthy, and his wealth was earned not only by his good judgment but by the influence he has turned to promote the very developments that he long anticipated.

Mr. Perry was born on Buffalo Creek, on the site of the present Latrobe, January 18, 1869, son of Rhodes Ballard and Mahala (Mullins) Perry, both representing old families in this section of the state. The grandfather, James D. Perry, was born in Monroe County, West Virginia, August 14, 1809, and in early days he was a flatboatman engaged in the traffic down the Ohio and Mississippi to New Orleans. Subsequently he established the place near the mouth of Huff Creek and Guyandotte River where his son Rhodes was born, but later James moved into the Buffalo Valley and opened a farm on the site of the Village of Stowe. All these places are now covered by heavy coal operations, but at that time no thought was given to taking out the coal from underground, and there was only one profitable industry aside from farming and stock raising, the logging of heavy poplar timber, said to be the finest in the world. James D. Perry at one time owned land for five miles up and down Buffalo Creek, this tract being later acquired by W. W. McDonald. He used the land chiefly for farming and cattle raising. James D. Perry died August 5, 1885. His wife, Margaret Perry, was born July 15, 1815, and died in 1892, and they were both buried at Stowe. They were members of the Methodist Church.

Rhodes B. Perry was born on the Guyandotte River, where Mallory Mine No. 2, is now located, January 27, 1842, and until two years ago, when he moved to Barboursville, his home was always in the Buffalo Creek Valley. During his boyhood school advantages were maintained very irregularly, but in spite of these handicaps he managed to get a good education in the fundamentals, and has always been a reader and student of history and politics. In 1861 he went into the Union army in a cavalry regiment, and he had three honorable discharges. He was at the battle of Crosskeys, in the fight of Chapmanville in Logan County, and in many of the great battles of Virginia. The nearest he came to being wounded was in one engagement where his bootheel was shot off and he was once thrown by an outlaw horse. At Chapmanville he was taken prisoner, but was soon released. Soon after the close of his military service, on December 7, 1865, he married Mahilla Mullins. They traveled life's highway together for over half a century. She died February 21, 1920. She was born on Coal River in Logan County, April 12, 1847, daughter of Andrew J. Mullins. Her father was born January 19, 1820, and died November 12, 1904, and was a brother of Milton Mullins, who recently died in Logan County, when nearly 100 years old.

The home where Rhodes Perry lived for half a century was on the Buffalo, at the mouth of Cartwright's Creek. He served as a member of the school board while there. In 1918, after selling his land to the coal company, he moved to Barboursville, and is now retired. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Church. His six children were: James J., born March 3, 1867, now living at Martha, West Virginia; Thomas N.; John W., born June 18, 1871, a resident of Accoville in Logan County; Leanza F., born June 22, 1874, and died June 23, 1910, was the wife of Anthony Cook, their home being on part of the old Perry estate near Latrobe; Laura H., born April 27, 1877, died June 27, 1888; and Albert Ross, born June 26, 1880, a resident of Barboursville.

Thomas N. Perry acquired his early education in a log schoolhouse on the site of the present Lundale. His home and his work until he was thirty years of age were at the place of his parents. He helped cut away the timber from the hills, hauling it down and rafting it over the waters of the Guyandotte. From his logging enterprise he bought and paid for a farm of 180 acres above Latrobe. This farm he subsequently gave to his sister. He then bought 440 acres above Robinette, his brother J. J. living on that place. Thomas Perry acquired his present farm in 1891. His home is on this farm, located about a mile from the station of Accoville, up the right fork of the Buffalo. His farm comprises 339 acres and was bought from John Riffe. This by no means comprises all his land holdings, since from time to time he has invested until his property possessions extend along the valley for a distance of seven miles. While much of this land has become exceedingly valuable on account of the coal, Mr. Perry has always maintained an activity in farming and cattle raising. He is vice president of the Merchants and Miners Bank of Man, and a large stockholder in the Guyan Valley Bank at Logan and the Bank of Logan.

June 10, 1899, he married Emma I. Toler, daughter of Patterson Toler. She was born at Oceana in Wyoming County, West Virginia, June 3, 1878, and died December 16, 1920. Six children survive her: Alva Wirt, now an employe of the State Compensation Board of Charleston, Fred Mason, Denny Creed, Alice Ruth, Mack and Luther N. Mr. Perry in politics is a republican.

HARRY W. BAYER. The high standing which is that of Mr. Bayer as one of the representative members of the bar of Morgan County is the more gratifying to note by reason of the fact that he is a native son of this county, having been born on a farm in Sleepy Creek District. His father, Robert Bayer, was born in Washington County, Maryland, where he was reared and educated and where as a youth he served an apprenticeship to the plasterer's trade. He was a young man when he came to Morgan County, West Virginia, and after his marriage he here settled on the old homestead farm of his wife's parents and continued as one of the substantial farmers and representative citizens of Sleepy Creek District until his death. On this old homestead farm was born his wife, whose maiden name was Angeline Johnson, and she still resides on the place, which is endeared to her by many gracious memories and associations. She is a daughter of James and Sarah (Ohlinger) Johnson and a granddaughter of John Johnson, who was one of the very early settlers in what is now Morgan County. He here purchased land and reclaimed a productive farm, his farm having been situated nine miles distant from the courthouse and he having been familiarly known as Nine-mile Johnson, to distinguish him from another Johnson of the same personal name. It is of local historic interest that this sturdy pioneer in 1870, when 109 years of age, walked from his farm to Berkeley Springs to cast his vote for General Harrison for president of the United States. James Johnson passed his entire life in Sleepy Creek District, and was one of the substantial exponents of farm industry in his native county, where he commanded unqualified popular esteem. The Ohlinger family likewise was established in Morgan County in the pioneer days, this county having at that time been a part of Berkeley County, and the homestead farm of the family having been in the Hedgesville District. The subject of this sketch is the eldest in a family of three children, the other two being daughters, Sarah and Latona, who remain with their widowed mother.

Harry W. Bayer waxed strong in mind and physique through the discipline which he gained in connection with the activities of the home farm and the advantages which were his through the medium of the rural schools of the district. He advanced his education by attending summer normal schools, and at the age of nineteen years he became a teacher in a rural district. By his pedagogic service he earned the funds to defray the expenses of his course in the Shenandoah Institute at Dayton, Virginia. He taught eight terms of school, in Morgan and Berkeley counties and for two terms was principal of the graded school at Hedgesville. In the meanwhile he applied himself diligently to the study of law, and in 1893 was admitted to the West Virginia bar, after passing a specially successful examination before Judges Faulkner, Hobe and Dailey. He forthwith opened an office at Berkeley Springs, where he has since continued in active general practice, except for an interim of two years passed at Manning. He has proved his powers as a resourceful trial lawyer and well fortified counselor and has built up a large practice that marks him as one of the representative members of the bar of his native county. He gave twenty years of most effective service as prosecuting attorney of Morgan County, and was for two years city attorney of Manning. Mr. Bayer has been influential in the local councils and campaign activities of the republican party, and has served as a member of the Republican Executive Committee of Morgan County, as well as a member of the republican committee for this congressional district. He has frequently been a delegate to the district and state conventions of his party, and in 1920 was a republican candidate for nomination for the office of state commissioner of agriculture. His first presidential vote was cast for Gen. Benjamin Harrison.

As a youth Mr. Bayer became deeply interested in horticulture, and he started one of the first commercial orchards in Morgan County. He has been a progressive and public-spirited citizen, and his influence has been felt in connection with many movements and enterprises projected for the general good of the community. He organized the Peoples Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Morgan County, and continued his executive connection with the same until it had been established on a firm foundation and had developed a prosperous business. He was the organizer also of the Berkeley Springs Telephone Company, promoted and effected the establishing of the cold storage plant at Berkeley Springs, and has otherwise shown lively interest in all things touching the welfare and advancement of his home town, the judicial center of Morgan County.

At the age of twenty-nine years Mr. Bayer wedded Miss Agnes Slaughter, who was born in Berkeley County, a daughter of James T. and Henrietta C. Slaughter. Mr. and Mrs. Bayer have three children: Rana C., Beverly C. and Alice.

WILLIAM OPIE NORRIS, who for over twenty years has been interested in a growing real estate business at Charles Town, is member of a family that has been well known in Jefferson County for over a century, and included men of distinctive prominence in the affairs of the state as well as in the immediate locality.

His grandfather was George Norris, a native of either Northumberland or Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. There is a well established tradition that two brothers named Norris came from England to the colonies as early as 1750, one of them settling in Virginia and becoming the ancestor of the present line. The other brother settled in Camden, New Jersey, where he established a foundry and machine shop. In this plant his descendants made the first locomotive engine that ever pulled a railroad train in this country. Later the establishment was removed to Philadelphia, and became the foundation of the present Baldwin Locomotive Works. The name Norris is perpetuated by a street located near the works.

While a branch of the family is thus permanently related with big industrial enterprise, the grandfather of William O. Norris was a planter, and devoted his life to the management of his large estate and to his responsibilities as a leader in public affairs in Frederick County, Virginia, a county that then embraced Clark County. He was a magistrate of Frederick County, and upon the organization of Clark County, being the oldest magistrate, by provision of the law of Virginia became automatically the first sheriff of the new county. He married Jane Wormeley, who was born at Rose Hill, near Urbana, in Middlesex County, Virginia. Her father, Ralph Wormeley, was secretary of the Colony at the beginning of the Revolutionary war, and, remaining loyal to the crown he returned to England, his estate being confiscated. After the war he returned and recovered his property and occupied it until his death. This old Wormeley estate is on the Rappahannock River.

William H. Norris, father of William O. Norris, was born on the plantation known as Rosemont, near Berryville in Clark County, about 1820. He was educated by private tutors, and inherited a portion of his father's estate. At the time of his marriage he settled on a plantation in Kabletown District of Jefferson County. This property was his wife's inheritance. He operated the estate with slave labor, and continued there until his death in 1857, at the age of thirty-seven years. He married Mary Opie, who was born in Jefferson County. Her father, Hierome, owned several thousand acres of land and hundreds of slaves, and he represented his district in the Virginia Legislature for thirty-five consecutive years. The maiden name of his wife was Margaret Muse, also a life-long resident of Virginia. Mary Opie Norris died at the age of sixty-four.

Her son, William Opie Norris, was born on a plantation in the Kabletown District in Jefferson County, and finished his education in the Virginia Military Institute. After finishing his course he returned to the plantation, and was active in its management until 1900. In that year he moved to Charles Town and became associated with his brother-in-law, Colonel Chew, in the real estate and loan business. In 1872 Mr. Norris married Margaret B. Chew, a sister of Col. R. P. Chew.

GEORGE E. STRALEY, cashier of the First National Bank of Ripley, has been actively identified with that institution for ten years, and is one of the prominent young business leaders of Jackson County.

He was born on a farm near Ripley, December 2, 1884. His great-grandfather, Christian Straley, was a native of Germany and founded the family in West Virginia, in Lewis County, where he was a farmer and where he lived until his life. Stephen Straley, his son, was born in Lewis County in 1801, and as a young man moved to Jackson County and founded the Straley homestead a mile and a half north of Ripley, where he continued to live until his death in 1885. He married Mary Alkire, who was born in Lewis County in 1813 and died in 1875. Of their family five daughters and four sons the only survivor is Charles E. Straley, who still lives at the old homestead north of Ripley, where he was born October 9, 1856. He has been a farmer in that community all his life, and is a democrat and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Lucy Ramey, who was born in Jackson County in September, 1856. George E. Straley is the oldest of their children. Paul is unmarried and helps operate the home farm. Mary is a teacher in Marion County and has done advanced work in summer sessions of the State University. Charles V. is a student in the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia.

George E. Straley was educated in rural schools, in the West Liberty State Normal School, attended the University of West Virginia at Morgantown in the summer of 1910, and at the age of twenty began teaching. For one year he did work in the rural schools of Jackson County, for two years was a teacher in the public schools at Ripley, and another two years in Pocahontas County. Mr. Straley in 1911 entered the Valley Bank of Ripley as assistant cashier, and has continued with that institution, which since August 4, 1915, has been the First National Bank. He became cashier in 1916. Mr. Straley is also a stockholder in the O. J. Morrison Store Company of Charleston, in the People's Department Store at Ripley, and takes a public spirited part in all the general improvement projects in his community. He is now serving in his fourth year as a member of the City Council of Ripley, and for the past three years has been secretary of the Board of Education. He is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is affiliated with Ripley Lodge No. 16, A. F. and A. M., and is a past chancellor of Walker Wright Lodge No. 95, Knights of Pythias. He did much work of a patriotic nature during the war, helping fill out questionnaires, and was also a member of the several committees for the Liberty Loan drives.

In 1910, at Ripley, Mr. Straley married Miss Madeline Taylor, daughter of William and Alice (Riley) Taylor, the latter a resident of Akron, Ohio. Her father died on his farm near Ripley. Mr. and Mrs. Straley have two children, Marguerite, born July 1, 1912, and Robert, born September 1, 1916.

ARTHUR M. GOULD represents one of the old established families of Upshur County, has followed the traditional occupation of farming, and was one of the organizers of the Bank of Adrian, which began business January 7, 1920. Mr. Gould is president of this bank, which is capitalized at $25,000, and is one of the growing and prosperous banking institutions of Upshur County.

Mr. Gould was born on Bull Run, West Virginia, January 26, 1853, son of Benjamin and Eliza D. (Morgan) Gould. His father was born at French Creek in 1822, son of Gilbert Gould, who settled on French Creek from Massachusetts. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, was a successful farmer and large land owner there, and died in 1877. His wife was Mehitabel Taylor, and they were the parents of eight children. Benjamin Gould grew up in the French Creek community, acquired about three hundred acres of his father's estate, and was a leading and successful farmer for many years. He was a Presbyterian and a republican. Of his seven children, four sons and three daughters, three are now living: Arthur M.; Albert G., a farmer near Weston; and Percy B., a farmer in Upshur County.

Arthur M. Gould grew up on his father's farm and had a common school education. For many years he has owned and operated a fine farm of 140 acres, a mile and a half west of Adrian. His activities have extended beyond his home farm to various community affairs, including the Bank of Adrian. He has served as president of the Board of Education, is an active republican, and, like his father and grandfather before him, is an elder in the Presbyterian Church. On November 21, 1889, Mr. Gould married Mary Louise Sexton, a native of Upshur County and a daughter of F. E. and Virginia (Craig) Sexton, farming people of the French Creek District.

FRED E. BROOKS represents a family of scientific attainments, and is himself a scientist whose career has been largely devoted to study and eradication of the insect pests that ravage the fruit growing districts of West Virginia. Mr. Brooks began his scientific work on his own orchard at French Creek, was formerly connected with the State Experiment Station, and is now an entomologist in the employ of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Brooks, who keeps his home at French Creek, was born there June 8, 1868, son of Adolphus and Josephine (Phillips) Brooks. His parents were also born in the same community, were educated in the public schools there, and Adolphus Brooks was a teacher in the public schools, a teacher of music, owned and operated a farm, was leader of the choir of the Presbyterian Church and for forty years superintendent of its Sunday School. He always voted as a republican. Of his nine children seven are living: C. L. Brooks, superintendent of buildings and grounds at the State University; Abbie, wife of James McDonald; Fred E.; Rev. Earl A., a minister of the Presbyterian Church and a lecturer at Harvard University; A. B. Brooks, chief game protector of West Virginia; Mabel, wife of Dr. F. W. Vance, of Mannington; and Blanche, wife of Dr. H. O. Van Tromp, of French Creek.

Fred E. Brooks was reared in French Creek, had a public school and college education, and as a youth turned his scientific inclinations to account in the observation of his own orchard at French Creek. Later he was called to the State Experiment Station as inspector of orchards and nurseries, and for eight years remained there as associate entomologist. Since then he has been in the Federal service, making special investigations of insect pests of deciduous fruit trees. At the present time his work is an investigation of the insects attacking the nut trees in the Eastern States.

Mr. Brooks is well known in scientific circles, is a life member of the West Virginia State Horticultural Society; a member of the American Entomological Society and is a Fellow in the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Rotary Club at Buckhannon. Mr. Brooks is a republican and is an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

He married Miss Grace Coburn, of French Creek. Three children were born to their marriage: Maurice G., who is a student in West Virginia University and during the war was a member of the Student Army Training Corps; Elizabeth, deceased; and Dorothy, born in 1915.

CLAYFORD T. GRIMM, general superintendent of the Buckhannon River Coal Company at Adrian in Upshur County, is a young man who has worked his way through the technique of mining operations, is a competent engineer, and has a bright future as an official in the mine industries of the state.

Mr. Grimm was born at Newburg, Preston County, West Virginia, December 4, 1894, son of John W. and Jennie (Wolfe) Grimm, both natives of Preston County. His mother is still living. His father, who was born in 1864, was superintendent of a coal mine at Newburg, West Virginia. He lost his life in an accident at the Rosemont Coal Mine in 1912. He was a republican and an Odd Fellow, and both were active in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Their five children are: E. F. Grimm; Angie, wife of Walter J. Menear; Clayford T.; E. M., who was a soldier in the World war and saw service in France; and Charles T., a young man now in school.

Clayford T. Grimm was reared in Preston County, was educated in the Newburg High School and took correspondence work in civil engineering. He was associated for a time with J. H. Weaver & Company, Clarksburg Engineering Company, and in 1917 came to the Buckhannon River Coal Company's properties at Adrian and is now general superintendent of these mines. When he took charge the output of the mine was 250 tons per day, and the output now exceeds 1,200 tons. Mr. Grimm in 1914 passed the examination at Grafton and holds a first class mine foreman's certificate.

On September 10, 1915, he married Miss Genevieve Fallon. They have a daughter, Catherine, born July 6, 1917. Mrs. Grimm is a member of the Catholic Church. Mr. Grimm is affiliated with Rock Cave Lodge No. 81, F. and A. M., is a republican, and always tries to do his duty as a good citizen. He is a stockholder and director in the Bank of Adrian and a director in the Buckhannon Chamber of Commerce.

M. F. STOCKERT is one of the very prosperous and influential citizens of Upshur County, a farmer and stock dealer, also interested in banking and other affairs at Buckhannon.

He was born in Lewis County June 29, 1884, son of G. F. and P. (Bailey) Stockert. His father was born at Scottsville, Virginia, September 3, 1853, and his mother in Lewis County, August 25, 1857. G. F. Stockert as a boy went to Parkersburg and later to Lewis County, where he was reared and educated in the public schools. He was a good business man, had energy and persistence, and in spite of many reverses received a signal success in life. After his marriage he bought a sawmill, but after operating it for a time was stricken with illness and when he recovered he had lost his investment and had to borrow money to buy a cook stove and continue his simple housekeeping. In twenty years he moved twenty-one times, but eventually became highly successful in the timber business, buying up tracts and logging and converting the logs into lumber. He gave generously of his means to various public causes, was identified with Broadbent College, was a deacon in the Baptist Church, and built the water works and ice plant at Buckhannon. He was a member of the Masonic Lodge.

M. F. Stockert is the only survivor of seven children. He was educated in the public schools, graduated in a business course, and for several years was associated with his father in the timber business. Since then he has been farming and dealing in livestock. He owns a large amount of farming land, and is also a director in the Traders National Bank of Buckhannon, the largest bank in Upshur County.

October 16, 1904, he married Georgia Sharps, who was born in Upshur County, March 30, 1883. She was educated in the public schools and in Wesleyan College, and began teaching at the age of sixteen. Mr. and Mrs. Stockert have four children: Mary, born October 20, 1905; Frank, born March 17, 1908; William, born October 31, 1910; and John A., born May 10, 1915. Mr. and Mrs. Stockert are active members of the Baptist Church, he is one of the trustees of the church at Buckhannon and he is a Knight Templar Mason, and both are members of Buckhannon Chapter No. 18, of the Eastern Star, of which Mrs. Stockert is worthy matron. Politically Mr. Stockert is a democrat.

WILLIAM H. HOWELL, M. D. His brilliant record as a surgeon with the British and American military forces during the World war Doctor Howell has continued in times of peace in his native State of West Virginia, and is now superintendent and chief surgeon of the Methodist Episcopal Hospital at Spencer.

The Howell family originated in Wales and was established in Virginia in Colonial times. His great-grandfather, Larkin Dexter Howell, was a Revolutionary soldier. The grandfather, William Marple Howell, was born in Augusta County, Virginia, in 1839. During the Civil war he was a captain in the Confederate army under General McCausland, serving from the beginning until the end of the war. His old commander, General McCausland, is now a resident of Point Pleasant, West Virginia. William M. Howell was a resident of Barbour County, West Virginia, until 1867 from 1867 until 1880 lived in Roane County, and from there moved to Muses Bottom in Jackson County, where he owned a farm of 400 acres of rich bottom land. He devoted all his active energies to farming. His death occurred at his home in Jackson County in 1913. He was a democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a Mason. William M. Howell married Elzena Tennant, who was born in Barbour County, and is still living at the old home at Muses Bottom.

Daniel T. Howell, father of Doctor Howell, was born in Barbour County in September, 1860, and was liberally educated, attending Ohio University at Athens, Ohio. He is a member of the Delta Tau Delta Greek letter fraternity. He accompanied his parents to Roane County in 1867, and in 1880 established his home at Lone Cedar, near Ravenswood in Jackson County, where he was married and where for forty years he has been a farmer, specializing in the raising of cattle, sheep and horses. He is a democrat, and one of the very active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in this community. In 1921 he was worshipful master of Ashton Lodge No. 12, F. and A. M., at Ravenswood. Daniel T. Howell married Mattie J. McBride who was born in Loudoun County, Virginia, in November

William H. Howelf.

862. Doctor Howell is the oldest of their children. Miss Iabel, at home, is a graduate of the Ward-Beimont Girls school at Nashville and of the Boston Conservatory of Music and is an accomplished pianist. Thomas Harold, who inherits a portion of his father's estate at Lone Cedar, is a graduate of the Ravenswood High School, of the Michigan Agricultural College at Lansing, and was an enlisted man in the navy for a year during the World war. Marie A., a graduate of the Ravenswood High School, is the wife of Thurmon McGuire, now assistant chief engineer for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad shops at Huntington, West Virginia.

William H. Howell was born on the home farm at Lone Cedar in Jackson County, May 28, 1888. His education from the beginning was carefully considered from the standpoint of the most effective use of his talents. After he rural schools of Jackson County he entered the Staunton Military Academy at Staunton, Virginia, graduating in 1904. In 1904-05 he was a student in the Ohio University at Athens, and then entered the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, from which he graduated A. B. in 1907. He is a member of the Delta Tau Delta, the same fraternity as his father. Doctor Howell attended the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia two years, and completed his course in the University of Louisville, where he graduated M. D. in 1914. He is a member of the Alpha Kappa Kappa medical fraternity. As further preparation for his profession he spent one year as an interne in the Louisville City Hospital and another year in the Skin and Cancer Hospital and the New York Polyclinic. At that time Doctor Howell accepted an opportunity to go to England, in November, 1916, and join the Royal Army Medical Corps. For three months he was on duty at the leading War Hospital, and was then given field service as attestation medical officer of the Sixteenth Battalion, Rifle Brigade. His front line duty in Belgium and France took him to the great battle centers of Ypres, Arras, Messines Ridge, Cambrai. June 28, 1918, he was formally transferred to the American Army Medical Corps, though in his service he was still attached to the British Army. He was at the Marne, Chateau Thierry, and also in service in the campaign in Northern Italy along the Piave. In February, 1918, he was commissioned a captain in the Medical Corps, and on June 29, 1919, after three years abroad, returned home and received his discharge at Hoboken, New Jersey, June 30th. Doctor Howell received the British decoration of the Military Cross March 30, 1918, for gallantry and initiative displayed in the neighborhood of Cœchy on March 30, 1918. The French Government bestowed upon him the Croix de Guerre June 19, 1918, for activity displayed during the retreat from the Chemin de Dames. October 15, 1918, he suffered an abdominal wound near La Cateaux, south of Ambray.

From July 1, 1919, until February 1, 1921, Doctor Howell was associated at Parkersburg in surgical practice with Dr. W. J. Davidson. At the latter date he entered upon his duties as superintendent and chief surgeon of the Methodist Episcopal Hospital at Spencer. This is one of the well equipped hospitals of the state, with accommodations for forty patients. Doctor Howell is a member of the Little Kanawha and Ohio Valley Medical societies, the State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the Southern Medical Association. He is a democrat, and is affiliated with Ashton Lodge No. 12, F. and A. M., at Ravenswood, Parkersburg Lodge No. 198, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On June 18, 1916, at Parkersburg, he married Miss Eulah M. White. They were married only a few months before he entered the British Army Medical service. Her parents, Albert J. and Amanda (Wile) White, are residents of Parkersburg, her father being a retired furniture merchant and undertaker. Mrs. Howell is an alumnus of the Parkersburg High School. To their marriage have been born two sons, William Herbert, Jr., born September 24, 1920, and Albert Daniel, born October 17, 1921.

HARRY A. DARNALL, superintendent of the public schools of the village of Adrian, Upshur County, resides at Buckhannon, the county seat, and is one of the well known and essentially representative men of his native county, besides being a scion of one of the sterling pioneer families in that section of Virginia that now constitutes the State of West Virginia. He was born on a farm in Upshur County, July 12, 1860, and is a son of Colonel M. A. and Jane (McDowell) Darnall, both natives of what is now Greenbrier County, this state, where the father was born November 12, 1827, and the mother on the 25th of December, 1832. Colonel Darnall was reared in his native county, and there learned the blacksmith trade. In 1849 he engaged in the work of his trade at Frencheon, Upshur County, but later moved to Rock Cave, and in 1860 moved to the French Creek neighborhood. He organized and became captain of Company A, West Virginia Volunteers, which became a part of the Tenth West Virginia Regiment in the Union service. He made a record of most loyal and gallant service, won promotion in turn to the offices of major, lieutenant colonel and colonel, and continued in service until the close of the war. After the war he returned to his French Creek home, where he continued to follow the work of his trade until his death, on the 8th of October, 1882. Colonel Darnall became the owner of one of the excellent farms of Upshur County, was a man of strong mentality and sterling character, was a republican in politics, and he served for many years as a local magistrate. He was affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and both he and his wife were faithful members of the Baptist Church, in which he served as a deacon. All of their thirteen children attained to adult age; Anna is the wife of J. E. Vance, of French Creek; Robert is a prosperous farmer and trader in Upshur County and is a former president of the County Court; Calvin, who died in 1882, was known as one of the best mathematicians in Upshur County, and was identified with the teaching profession at the time of his death; William, a blacksmith by trade and vocation, died in 1886; H. B. has been a successful teacher in Upshur County, and has been for a quarter of a century the postmaster at French Creek; Harry A., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Wren, who was a successful teacher, is now the wife of James W. Ball, of Pickens, Randolph County; Ethel was a popular teacher in the schools of Upshur County and was twenty-two years of age at the time of her death, in 1886; R. L. has been an extensive farmer and fruit-grower in Lewis County for many years; Blair is engaged in the furniture business in the City of Ashtabula, Ohio; O. E. is cashier of a bank at San Diego, California; John C., a resident of Cincinnati, Ohio, is the inventor of the Darnall sterilizer, and a ball-bearing trolley wheel; Zona became the wife of Raymond Wade and is now deceased.

Harry A. Darnall was reared at French Creek and supplemented the discipline of the public schools by attending the United Brethren Normal and Classical Academy, in which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Pedagogy. Later he took post-graduate work in what is now West Virginia Wesleyan College, at Buckhannon, and in the pedagogic profession he has made a record of splendid success. He was for ten years superintendent of the public schools of Buckhannon, and brought the same to a high standard of efficiency. For twelve years thereafter he served as postmaster of Buckhannon, and he had the further distinction of being mayor of the city for one year. He was for five years editor of the Buckhannon Delta, and since that time has served with characteristic efficiency as superintendent of the public schools at Adrian. He is the owner of seven residence properties at Buckhannon, including his attractive home place.

Mr. Darnall is a stalwart in the ranks of the republican party, and has been active and influential in its councils and campaign work in his county. He has served as chairman of the republican county committee of Upshur County and as a member of the republican committee of this congressional district. He is affiliated with Franklin Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Buckhannon, and is a member of the Baptist Church in this city.

August 16, 1897, recorded the marriage of Mr. Darnall and Miss Carrie Loudin, who graduated from the West Virginia Wesleyan College, as did also their only daughter, Miss Beth, who was born February 9, 1899, and who is now a popular teacher in the Buckhannon High School. Robert, the younger of the two children, was born January 23, 1906, and is a member of the class of 1923 in the Buckhannon High School.

H. A. ZICKEFOOSE, president of the Peoples Bank of Buckhannon, is also serving as sheriff of Upshur County, to which office he was elected in November, 1920, and in which he had previously made a splendid record during the term from 1913 to 1916. After an interregnum of four years he was again called to the office of sheriff of his native county, for a term of four years, and this election attested alike the efficiency of his previous administration and the secure place that is his in public confidence and esteem.

Mr. Zickefoose was born on a farm in Upshur County, December 15, 1873, and is a son of Sampson and Marietta (Queen) Zickefoose. From his boyhood until he attained to his legal majority Sheriff Zickefoose was actively associated with the operation of the home farm, and in the meanwhile he profited by the advantages offered in the local schools. After leaving the parental home he was employed a short time in a lumber camp, and he next obtained employment in a boarding house, at a salary of $20.00 a month. He was thus engaged one year, and he then purchased from his brother a general store, with a small stock of goods, at Hemlock, this county, his investment in this enterprise being $475. He continued in successful business at Hemlock eleven years, and in the meantime had served as postmaster of the village. While conducting the store at Hemlock he had purchased a good farm, which he still owns, and also had become interested in the lumber business. After selling his store he removed to Buckhannon, the county seat, and for two years thereafter he was a traveling salesman for a wholesale grocery house. Upon retiring from this position he gave his attention to the lumber business until he was elected sheriff of the county, without opposition, in 1912. He gave a most vigorous and effective administration of four years, and upon retiring from office the audit of his books showed that the county still owed him $27.98. After an interval of four years his services were again enlisted in the office of sheriff, the duties of which he assumed in January, 1921. Sheriff Zickefoose is chairman of the Republican Executive Committee of Upshur County, and has been active and influential in the councils and campaign activities of his party for a number of years. He became a stockholder and director of the Peoples Bank of Buckhannon, and of this substantial institution he is now the president. He is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church. The maiden name of Mrs. Zickefoose was Nellie Lewis, she being a daughter of A. D. Lewis, a merchant at Hampton, Upshur County. Sheriff and Mrs. Zickefoose have one child, Gladys, who was born in 1909, and who is attending the public schools of Buckhannon.

E. W. MARTIN, a former postmaster of Buckhannon, Upshur County, in which city he still maintains his home, has been closely and successfully identified with coal production and real estate enterprise in this section of his native state, and aside from his varied business interests he has been an active and influential force in the ranks of the republican party in West Virginia.

Mr. Martin was born at Peel Tree, Barbour County, this state, in February, 1866, and is a son of John D. and Eliza (Young) Martin, the former was born at Buckhannon, Upshur County, and the latter at Staunton, Virginia. John D. Martin was for many years engaged in farm enterprise in Barbour County, where he also built up a prosperous general merchandise business at Peel Tree. After selling his property interests in that county he was for a number of years engaged in the mercantile business at Buckhannon, and later he resumed his activities as a farmer in Harrison County, where his death occurred in 1901. He was the only one of his generation in the Martin family to be aligned as a staunch supporter of the cause of the republican party, and both he and his wife were active members of the Methodist Protestant Church. Of the six children all but one are living, and of the number the subject of this review is the eldest; L. O., a prosperous farmer and livestock dealer, resides at Buckhannon. Rose C. is the wife of Jeremiah Dillinger, of Buckhannon. H. C. is one of the substantial farmers of Harrison County and Hettie is the wife of Alfred Stout, of Denver, Colorado.

E. W. Martin passed his childhood on the home farm and attended the rural schools of the locality. At the age of fifteen years he found employment as clerk in a general store, and after several years of service in this capacity he was for twelve years a successful traveling salesman. In 1898 he became postmaster at Buckhannon, and of this office he continued the incumbent until 1902. He was for sixteen years a member of the Republican State Central Committee of West Virginia, and he has been a delegate to three national conventions of his party, including that of 1920, where he was the first West Virginia delegate to vote for the nomination of President Harding. Mr. Martin served several years as vice president of the Peoples Bank of Buckhannon, and he is the owner of valuable real estate in Upshur and adjoining counties. In a fraternal way he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias.

WILLIAM H. GASTON is another of the native sons of West Virginia who has attained to success and influence in connection with commercial enterprise of important order, as is shown in the fact that he is secretary, treasurer and manager of the Werdenhamer Wholesale Grocery Company at Buckhannon, Upshur County, a concern that controls a substantial business throughout the territory tributary to this city as a distributing center.

Mr. Gaston was born in the Freeman's Creek District of Lewis County, this state, October 19, 1868, and is a son of Abram and Sarah A. (Morris) Gaston, the former of whom was born in the Duck Creek neighborhood in Harrison County, in February, 1830, and the latter of whom was born in September of the same year near Lost Creek, that county. After their marriage the parents moved to Lewis County and settled in the midst of the forest, where the father reclaimed a farm and improved a valuable place of 281 acres. He was an upright and loyal citizen, a democrat in politics and an active member of the United Brethren Church, as was also his wife. Of their children two died in infancy, Addison and Floyd. Adaline Bird died at the age of thirty-one and Dr. L. H. died at the age of forty-three years. Miss Mary resides in the Duck Creek District of Harrison County. Jane is the wife of M. J. Hall, of Freeman's Creek, Lewis County. Virginia is the wife of R. H. Hall, of Weston, Lewis County. Miss Ida May resides at Janclew, Lewis County; E. A. is a resident of McConnelsville, Ohio. Adaline is the widow of Lee Mundell. L. B. is cashier of the Peoples Bank at Janclew, Lewis County.

He whose name introduces this review was reared on the home farm, and in addition to receiving the advantages of the public schools of his native county he attended the West Virginia Conference Academy, the nucleus of the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. There after he graduated in a business college in the City of Lexington, Kentucky. As a young man he taught nine winter terms of school, for three years he clerked in mercantile establishments, and the next five years found him engaged in farm enterprise. In April, 1903, he established his home at Buckhannon, and he has been closely and influentially identified with the upbuilding of the substantial business of the wholesale grocery house of which he is the active manager, this position having been his since 1913. The company is incorporated with a capital stock of $150,000 and he is its secretary and treasurer also. He is also president of the Buckhannon Milling Company, of which Hugh Starcher is vice president and George E. Gaston, the secretary, treasurer and manager. Mr. Gaston and his wife are most zealous members of the Methodist Protestant Church at Buckhannon, he being treasurer, a trustee of its parsonage and teacher of a class of young women in its Sunday School. His political support is given to the democratic party, and he is one of the progressive business men and representative citizens of Buckhannon.

In 1894 Mr. Gaston wedded Miss May Lawson, of Berlin, Lewis County, and they have six children: George E., a graduate of high school, and with three years in Wesleyan College, is now manager of the Buckhannon Milling Company, as noted above; Howard L. is a high school graduate, has attended college three years, and is now attending Baltimore College of Dental Surgery, class of 1923; Loreene graduated in the Buckhannon High School and the West Virginia Wesleyan College, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and is also a graduate in the musical department of the same institution; Junior H. is now (1922) attending the Buckhannon High School; and the two younger children of the parental home circle are Lawson, attending the grade school, and Virginia May.

WILLIAM DENNIS MCCLUNG, M. D., who has practiced medicine and surgery a number of years in West Virginia, was in the public health service under the Government at the great war plant at Nitro, and came from there to his present important duties as superintendent of the Spencer State Hospital for the Insane in Roane County.

Doctor McClung was born at Rupert in Greenbrier County, West Virginia, April 17, 1876. The McClungs are a family that came out of Ireland, seven brothers of the name arriving in New York some time in Colonial days. The father of Doctor McClung was Joseph Edward McClung and the grandfather, Andrew C. McClung. Andrew C. McClung was born at Rupert in Greenbrier County in 1818, and after his marriage moved to Nicholas County, but in 1856 returned to Rupert, where he was prosperously engaged in farming until 1896. In that year he removed to Maywood in Fayette County, and died there in 1912. Though past military age, he furnished a substitute during the Civil war. Andrew C. McClung married Susan Sharp, who was born in Greenbrier County in 1821, and died at Rupert in 1884.

Joseph Edward McClung was born near Mount Lookout in Nicholas County, July 7, 1848, but from early boyhood his home was at Rupert in Greenbrier County, where his time and abilities were taken up with his extensive farming interests. He was a republican and a very active member of the Baptist Church. He had his home at Rupert, but his death occurred in the Charleston Hospital, March 9, 1921. Joseph E. McClung married Catherine Haggerty, who was born in Nicholas County in 1847, and is still living at Rupert. She is the mother of three children. Dr. James is a physician and surgeon at Richwood in Nicholas County and is a former member of the State Senate. William Dennis is the second in age. Laura is the wife of Sidney Smith, a farmer at Rupert.

William Dennis McClung acquired a public school education at Rupert. As a youth his inclinations were in the direction of the law, and for nearly three years he was a student in the law department of the West Virginia University at Morgantown. In 1901 he was admitted to practice in Greenbrier and Nicholas counties, and for two years he was busy with this profession at Lewisburg. Then, abandoning the law, he entered the Baltimore College of Physicians and Surgeons, from which he graduated M. D. in 1907. After his graduation Doctor McClung practiced medicine three years in Pocahontas County, and then for eight years was a physician and surgeon at Richwood. Early in the great war he passed an examination and was commissioned for duty in the public health service, and was assigned as assistant surgeon to the Government plant at Nitro, West Virginia, where he remained two years. For eighteen months he was also surgeon for the Charleston Industrial Corporation at Nitro. Doctor McClung resigned this work to become superintendent of the Spencer

State Hospital in July, 1921. He has had charge of the hospital since September 1, 1921.

He is a republican, and for two terms was mayor of Richwood. He is affiliated with Richwood Lodge No. 122, A. F. and A. M., is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling, and a member of Hinton Lodge No. 821, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Doctor McClung is a director and stockholder in the Citizens Bank of Richwood.

In 1912, at Baltimore, he married Miss Louise Kirby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter V. Kirby, residents of Ellamore, Randolph County, West Virginia. Her father is a farmer.

FRANK CAMPBELL DUNHAM. One of the valued business men and highly respected citizens of Berkeley Springs, whose energies have resulted in the concentration of an important business at that point and whose name mentioned in connection with an enterprise is sufficient guaranty of its solidity is Frank Campbell Dunham, office manager for the E. F. Millard Sand Works. During his residence at Berkeley Springs he has impressed his personality upon the people of this thriving community and has been identified with a number of movements which have contributed to the general progress and welfare.

Mr. Dunham was born at Darkesville, Berkeley County, West Virginia, a son of Washington Taylor and Mary Kester (Pine) Dunham. Washington Taylor Dunham was born at Darkesville, and as a young man learned the trade of tailor. This was the period before the day of large factories, and Mr. Dunham's grandfather, Francis Campbell Dunham, established himself in business as a tailor at Darkesville, where the farmers from all over the surrounding country would bring him their homespun cloth, from which he would make the clothes for all the men in the family, including the slaves. Both he and his wife, who bore the maiden name of Henrietta Crout, lived to advanced age and were highly esteemed in their community, where they performed many deeds of kindness.

Washington Taylor Dunham assisted his father in his little shop at Darkesville, but was more inclined toward the shoemaker's trade, to which he served an apprenticeship prior to the invention of modern shoemaking machinery. Shoes were then all hand-made, the soles being attached to the upper by the means of wooden pegs, and all shoes, of course, were made to order. Mr. Dunham was a master of his trade, which he followed for many years, and lived to see shoemaking methods revolutionized and the skill of machinery succeed the skill of the old-time artisan, whose occupation, like Hamlet's, is gone. He is still a resident of Darkesville, where everyone holds him in good will and esteem, as they do also his worthy wife, Mary Kester (Pine) Dunham, who was born near Gerrardstown, Berkeley County, a daughter of John Pine. Mr. and Mrs. Dunham reared five children, namely: Daisy, Claude F., Frank Campbell, J. Pine and Virginia M.

Frank C. Dunham attended the public schools of Darkesville, and upon completing his education began to work in the Crawford Woolen Mills of Martinsburg, remaining in the carding department for a period of nine years. He was then advanced to the post of shipping clerk for the same concern, but after three years resigned to embark in business on his own account at the Baker Quarry, where he remained in the mercantile trade three years. Coming then to Berkeley Springs, he established a general merchandise store at this place and conducted it successfully for five years, but eventually disposed of his interests therein to accept the post of office manager for the E. F. Millard Sand Works, a position which he still retains. He has continued to contribute materially to the success of this concern, and his solid business connections are of such a nature as to materially assist him in the transaction of his everyday affairs.

Mr. Dunham was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Millard, who was born in Lebanon County, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Edward F. and Sarah J. (Crook) Millard, a sketch of whose careers appears elsewhere in this volume.

Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dunham: Everett Millard, Dorothy Virginia, Anna Jane, Frank Taylor and Robert L., of whom Dorothy Virginia died at the age of six years, the others all residing with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. Dunham are members of the United Brethren Church, and Mr. Dunham belongs to Rev. George P. Hott's Bible Class. As a fraternalist he holds membership in Washington Lodge No. 1, Knights of Pythias, and as a skilled musician is the leader of the Berkeley Springs Brass Band. His acquaintance is wide and his friendships numerous.

EARL V. PARSONS. A lawyer by training and profession, Earl V. Parsons after receiving his honorable discharge from the army found it to his advantage to take up teaching instead of law practice, and for several years he has been a prominent figure in the educational affairs of Logan County. He is now district superintendent of schools at Logan.

Mr. Parsons was born June 13, 1886, in Parchman Valley, Jackson County, West Virginia. His ancestors were among the first settlers in the southwest corner of West Virginia. His parents, Austin L. and Clara E. (Dawkins) Parsons, were both natives of this state. His father was a farmer and cattleman, and one of the leading stock men of his day in this section of the country. Earl V. Parsons acquired a common school education in Parchman Valley, and by special study earned a teacher's certificate. For four years he taught school in Jackson County and in other districts in this section of the state. What he was able to earn and save from this work he applied to his higher education in Valparaiso University in Indiana, where he took both the pedagogical and law courses, graduating in 1915 with the degrees P. B. G. and LL. B. He was superintendent of city schools and principal of the high school two years of Matewan, Mingo County. He came to Logan County in 1917 as district superintendent of schools, with the intention to practice law later, but continued as district superintendent of schools until he was called to the colors. He was examined and in July, 1918, went to Camp Meade, where he remained eleven months. He had charge of a ward in the hospital all through the influenza epidemic. Mr. Parsons was discharged in May, 1919, and on returning to Logan he again accepted the position of district superintendent of schools of Logan District. This is one of the largest school districts in the state, and 186 teachers are under his supervision. While he is doing some very commendable work in the educational affairs of Logan County, Mr. Parsons intends eventually to get back into his regular profession as a lawyer.

On August 24, 1920, he married Miss Hazel Crigler, daughter of William F. and Sarah Crigler, natives of West Virginia. They have one son, William Earl. Mrs. Parsons is a Presbyterian, while Mr. Parsons is a Baptist and is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner.

REV. WALLACE B. FLEMING, PH. D., president of the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, Upshur County, has a record of splendid achievement both in the ministry of the Methodist Church and in the field of educational service. He was born at Cambridge, Ohio, November 23, 1872, and is a son of William A. and Mary (Glenn) Fleming, the former of whom was born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, in 1840, and the latter at Sharon, Ohio, in 1841. The father was afforded the advantages of a well ordered academy in the southeastern part of Pennsylvania, and thereafter became a successful teacher in the public schools. He followed the pedagogic profession in the State of Ohio for twenty-five years, and he and his wife now reside at Newark, Licking County, Ohio, where he retired from the office of county recorder in September, 1921, after having served in that office from the year 1917. He is a democrat in political allegiance, and at the time of the administration of Governor James E. Campbell he served as clerk of the State Senate of Ohio. Both he and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of their eight children six are living: Ida, a graduate of Muskingum College at

New Concord, Ohio, is now the wife of Prof. Paul Finck, and they reside in the City of Houston, Texas; Miss Ella remains at the parental home; Clara is the wife of Dr. Walter G. Roller, of Lancaster, Ohio; Rev. Wallace B., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Ira David is sales manager for the George P. Ide Company, the great collar manufacturers at Troy, New York; and William A. is an interested principal in a glass manufacturing company at Utica, Ohio.

Wallace B. Fleming gained his earlier education in the public schools at New Concord, Ohio, and after leaving the high school he there entered Muskingum College, in which he was graduated in 1894, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. In 1897 he graduated from Drew Theological Seminary at Madison, New Jersey, from which institution he received the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. He did post-graduate work at this institution and later in Columbia University, New York City, from which latter he received, in 1914, the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Upon his graduation in the theological seminary Doctor Fleming was duly ordained to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church and became a member of the Newark Conference of the church in the State of New Jersey, where he served as pastor of the Methodist Church at North Paterson from 1897 to 1899. From 1899 to 1904 he held an important pastoral charge at Bayonne, New Jersey, and his next pastorate was at Maplewood, that state, where he remained until 1911. Doctor Fleming then returned to his alma mater, Drew Theological Seminary, where he served as assistant professor of Greek and Hebrew until 1915, when he came to Buckhannon, West Virginia, and assumed the presidency of the West Virginia Wesleyan College, his vigorous administration having involved effective employment of his fine scholarship and also his discriminating executive ability, with the result that the work of the institution has been signally advanced under his regime. Doctor Fleming has written much along educational and religious lines, and is the author of a valuable work entitled "The History of Tyre." He is a republican in politics, and is affiliated with the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery of the Masonic fraternity in his home city. He is a liberal and broad-minded citizen who takes loyal interest in community affairs and who is well fortified in his convictions concerning economic and governmental policies.

On April 8, 1897, was solemnized the marriage of Doctor Fleming and Miss Bertha G. Baldwin, and they have two children: Paul, who was born April 3, 1898, graduated in West Virginia Wesleyan College in 1920, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and is now teacher of science in the high school at Montgomery, this state; Bertha Jane, who was born September 29, 1905, has profited by the advantages offered in the academy connected with the West Virginia Wesleyan College, and she remains at the parental home, a popular figure in the social and church life of the community.

HARRY C. LINTON, who maintains his residence and executive headquarters in the City of Buckhannon, Upshur County, is superintendent of the Moore-Kappel Company, which is engaged in the manufacturing of lumber on Middle Fork at Midvale, Randolph County, this being one of the important industrial concerns of this section of the state.

Mr. Linton was born in Randolph County, on the 14th of January, 1883, and is a son of John and Mary (Shaw) Linton, the former of whom was born in the State of Pennsylvania, in 1855, and the latter of whom was born in Marion County, West Virginia, in 1859. John Linton has been consecutively identified with farm enterprise from the time of his marriage and is one of the substantial and honored citizens of Randolph County, his political allegiance being given to the republican party and he and his wife being active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of the four children the eldest is Hattie, who is the wife of Mond Davis; Floyd is employed in a factory at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Harry C., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth; and Daisy is the widow of Robert Wakefield.

Harry C. Linton gained his youthful education in the public schools and remained on the home farm until he had attained to his legal majority. He has gained broad and comprehensive knowledge of the lumber industry, and by his ability and effective service has risen to his present responsible position in connection therewith. He has applied himself vigorously to business, and thus has had neither time nor desire for political activity or public office, though he accords loyal allegiance to the republican party. His wife is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On the 11th of September, 1905, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Linton and Miss Dail Koon, who was born in Upshur County, August 25, 1886, a daughter of J. K. P. and Sarah (Grim) Koon. Her father likewise was born in Upshur County, where his education included a course in a business college. He became one of the progressive exponents of agricultural and live-stock enterprise in his native county, where he owned and operated a large farm, and he was a bank stockholder and had other interests that marked him as one of the substantial men of the county. He was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was a staunch republican, and was one of the honored citizens of Upshur County at the time of his death, which occurred in 1906, his widow being still a resident of this county. They became the parents of eight children: Lela, Blaine, Maude, Dail, Goff, Stacy, Cataline and Harry.

Mr. and Mrs. Linton have three children, whose names and respective dates of birth are here recorded: Mabel, November 27, 1912; Pauline, May 6, 1916; and Helen L., December 9, 1919.

During the period of his active and constantly advancing business career Mr. Linton has manifested a sense of loyal stewardship in civic affairs, and he takes lively interest in all that concerns the well being and progress of his home city and county, the while his fealty to his native state is marked by full appreciation of its manifold attractions and advantages. He and his wife have a wide circle of friends and are popular in the social activities of their home community.

ALBERT G. RUTHERFORD, M. D., the able and efficient superintendent of Welch Hospital No. 1, in the City of Welch, McDowell County, was appointed to this responsible position on the 1st of July, 1921, and is giving in administration that attests to his professional ability and also his executive powers. In that part of Logan County, West Virginia, that later became Mingo County, Doctor Rutherford was born on the 25th of May, 1877, a son of Lewis and Arminta (Ferrell) Rutherford, and a grandson of Dr. Elliott Rutherford, who was graduated in the Cincinnati (Ohio) Medical College and who for many years was a leading physician and surgeon at Matewan, now in Mingo County, where he died at the venerable age of eighty-five years, a noble and honored citizen who had devoted his life to the service of his fellow men. He was born at Guyandotte, Cabell County, Virginia (now West Virginia), where his father, a native of Scotland, settled in the pioneer days. Doctor Rutherford gained more than local reputation in his profession and gave effective service as a member of the State Board of Health, besides which he represented his district in the State Legislature. He was one of the prominent and influential citizens of the Tug River Valley, and served as a surgeon with the Confederate forces in the Civil war. Lewis Rutherford became one of the representative farmers and timber dealers of what is now Mingo County and was also the owner of 2,300 acres of coal land. He owned and operated a sawmill on Sprouse Creek, and sent many rafts of logs down to Tug and Big Sandy rivers. He was a signally vital and discriminating business man and was successful in his various operations, his home having been five miles west of Matewan. He was a democrat, and both he and his wife were earnest members of the Baptist Church.

He was sixty-one years of age at the time of his death, and his wife passed away at the age of fifty-two years. They became the parents of eight sons, and of the number Doctor Rutherford of this sketch was the second in order of birth. One of the sons, Dr. Lafayette Rutherford, is engaged in the practice of medicine at Sapulpa, Oklahoma, and is president of two or more banking institutions in that state, he being a graduate of the University of Louisville, Kentucky. Dr. Grover Rutherford, another of the sons, was graduated in the dental department of the University of Louisville and engaged in the practice of his profession at Muskogee, Oklahoma. He died in Muskogee on October 3, 1919.

Dr. Albert G. Rutherford is indebted to the public schools of his native county for his early education, and in 1897 he was graduated in Marshall College at Huntington. At Matewan he taught the first graded school in Mingo County, and through his successful work as a teacher during a period of four years he earned the funds to defray the expenses of his course in the medical department of the University of Tennessee at Nashville, in which he was graduated as a member of the class of 1900. After thus obtaining his degree of Doctor of Medicine he took a post-graduate course in surgery in the celebrated New York Polyclinic in 1905, and in 1910 he did post-graduate work in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania. Since that time he has taken special post-graduate work each successive year, and has availed himself of the advantages of leading medical colleges and hospital clinics in Chicago, Philadelphia and New York City.

In 1900, shortly after his graduation, Doctor Rutherford engaged in the general practice of his profession at Williamson, judicial center of Mingo County, where he remained two years. He then removed to Thacker, that county, where he became official physician and surgeon for the Thacker Coal & Coke Company and the Thacker Coal Mining Company, besides serving as local surgeon for the Norfolk & Western Railroad. In these connections he had charge in a professional way of the service at eight or more different coal mines, besides which he served twelve years as health officer of Mingo County and as president of the Board of Health of that county. At the time when he assumed his present office at Welch he was president of the Mingo County Medical Society, and he has been made an honorary member of the McDowell County Medical Society. He is actively identified also with the West Virginia State Medical Society, the Southern Gynecological Society, the American Medical Association and the American Railroad Surgeons Association. In the period of the nation's participation in the World war Doctor Rutherford served as medical examiner of the Draft Board of Mingo County. The Doctor is a director of the Commercial National Bank of Williamson, of which he was one of the organizers. He is a stalwart republican and he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Doctor Rutherford is a past master of O'Brien Lodge No. 101, A. F. and A. M., at Williamson, where he is affiliated also with the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, his chivalric affiliation being with Ivanhoe Commandery No. 10, Knights Templars, at Bramwell, Mercer County, and his Scottish Rite affiliations being maintained at Cincinnati, Ohio. He is a member of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston, the Lodge of Elks at Bluefield and Ferrell Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Thacker, of which he is a past noble grand.

In 1903 Doctor Rutherford wedded Miss Minnie Harris, daughter of William A. Harris, of Whiteport, Kentucky. They have no children.

In the closing paragraphs are given a resume of Welch Hospital No. 1, of which Doctor Rutherford is the efficient superintendent.

One of McDowell County's biggest assets is the Welch Hospital No. 1, located in this city. This institution is supported and maintained by the state and was established by an act of the Legislature in 1899. While this hospital is known as the "Miner's" hospital, it is not operated exclusively for the benefit of those who are connected with the mining industry, but stands as a ministering angel for all who are in need of medical care and attention.

Situated in the center of $3\frac{1}{4}$ acres of land in the western portion of the city it is the city's real beauty spot. The institution is located on land donated by the citizens of Welch, another example of the generosity of the people. The ground is level and well located. The buildings are of brick construction and consist of the main building which is three stories high, the nurses' home, the homes for employes, the power plant and the laundry.

In the main building are located the administration offices, the operating room, the sterilization room, private rooms, with wards in either wing. On the first floor is located the administration office with private offices for the superintendent and the superintendent of nurses, a waiting room for relatives and friends of patients; wide, spacious, well ventilated corridors, a laboratory, the X-ray room, as well as the various wards, of which there are eight.

The second floor is given over entirely to private rooms. On the third floor is located one of the most modern operating rooms in the state. Recent improvements made on this floor put it on a par with many of the country's leading institutions. A new sterilization room and instrument room adds greatly to the facilities. On this floor is also located a bandage room in which the nurses prepare bandages and dressings. Present plans include further improvements on this floor devoting one room entirely to tonsil operations.

The capacity of the wards and private rooms at the present time is about one hundred although in an emergency this can be increased to one hundred and twenty-five.

The Welch Hospital has the most complete X-ray equipment obtainable and in this department is better equipped than most of the leading institutions in the country. This equipment was just recently installed and one section of the main building is given over to work of this nature.

If the Welch Hospital is well able to meet every emergency from an equipment standpoint it is also well equipped from the standpoint of personnel. The institution is now in charge of Dr. A. G. Rutherford, who took charge in July, 1921, following the resignation of Dr. C. F. Hicks, who was dearly beloved by the people of this community. Doctor Rutherford is a graduate of the University of Tennessee and since receiving his degree at that institution has taken extensive post-graduate work in different parts of the country. He was with Mayo Brothers at their clinic as well as taking extension work at the University of Pennsylvania.

The staff was recently reinforced by the arrival of Dr. George Edward W. Hardy, of Baltimore, Maryland, where he was associated with Dr. J. N. T. Finney, the celebrated surgeon who was consulting surgeon of the A. E. F. Doctor Hardy is a graduate from Johns Hopkins, receiving his A. B. degree in 1913 and his M. D. in 1917. He is a native of Baltimore and at the close of his school work entered the service as a first lieutenant. He was assigned to Camp Meade as sanitary inspector and later assigned to Rockefeller Institute in New York City, where he was stationed for fourteen months. This was a demonstration hospital and much of his time was given to experimental work with the Carrell-Dakin treatment. While at this hospital Doctor Hardy was in charge most of the time.

Following his discharge from the army with a rank of captain, Doctor Hardy returned to his native city and was given a post at the Union Memorial Hospital as assistant to Doctor Finney. Welch is extremely fortunate to have a man of the caliber of Doctor Hardy connected with one of its institutions.

Dr. W. W. Wilson is the hospital's X-ray expert. Following his graduation from the University of Maryland he entered the Bayview Hospital at Baltimore as surgical interne. While at school he was resident interne of the Maryland state prison. Doctor Wilson came to the local institution in October and later returned to Baltimore to take extension work on the X-ray under the experts, Batjer and Waters.

Miss Rose Fuller is superintendent of nurses of the local institution and is assisted by Miss Virginia Barnett. Both women are graduates of Lewis Gale Hospital of Roanoke.

Miss Fuller is particularly proud of her nurses' training school. At the present time there are fifteen girls in training, but within a short time this number will be increased to twenty-five. Regular school sessions are held following the regular hospital duties, lectures being delivered by Doctor Rutherford, Doctor Hardy, Doctor Wilson, Dr. J. Howard Anderson, Dr. F. B. Quincy and Dr. H. G. Camper.

ISHMAEL G. CUTRIGHT is one of the successful lumber manufacturers of Central West Virginia and maintains his home and office headquarters in the City of Buckhannon, Upshur County. He was born in this county, on the 17th of January, 1871, and is a son of Granville S. and Elizabeth (Hinkle) Cutright, the former of whom was likewise born in Upshur County, October 29, 1842, and the latter of whom was born in Randolph County, August 1, 1839. Elmore Cutright, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born and reared in Upshur County, where the family was founded in the early pioneer days. Elmore Cutright married Nancy Wolfe. He was a son of Jacob and Nancy Elizabeth (Westfall) Cutright, and Jacob was a son of John and Rebecca (Truby) Cutright, whose marriage occurred in 1788.

Granville S. Cutright was reared on the old home farm in Upshur County, and while he attended school only four weeks he supplemented his education by careful study and reading and became a man of broad information and mature judgment. His marriage to Elizabeth Hinkle occurred November 30, 1867, and prior to this time he had been a gallant young soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he served three years as a member of the Upshur Battalion of Light Artillery, in which he was made a corporal. After the war he continued as one of the substantial agriculturists and stock-growers of his native county for many years. His political allegiance was given to the republican party, and both he and his wife were consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of their nine children one died in infancy and another at the age of fourteen. Abraham H. is a resident of Salt Lake City, Utah, where he is engaged in the real estate business. W. B., a graduate of the University of West Virginia and also of Columbia University, received from the former the degree of Bachelor of Arts and from the latter that of Bachelor of Laws. He was a member of the faculty of the preparatory department of the University of West Virginia in 1896-7, thereafter having been for one year principal of the State Normal School at West Liberty, and he is now engaged in the practice of law in Buckhannon, as one of the leading members of the bar of his native county. D. H. is a successful farmer in this county. I. G., of this sketch, was the next in order of birth. C. B. is a lumberman and farmer of Clarksburg, this state. Miss Iva K., a graduate of the Buckhannon High School, is now bookkeeper in the office of A. P. Russell, of this city. Miss Corinne is the youngest of the number.

I. G. Cutright remained on the home farm until he was twenty-two years of age, and in the meanwhile had profited fully by the advantages of the public schools. For ten years he was engaged in the general merchandise business, and for twenty years he has been actively identified with the lumber industry in this part of the state, besides which he has operated rather extensively in the buying and leasing of coal land and has important real-estate interests aside from this. He is president of the company owning the Upshur Office Building. He is a director of the Cutright-Sharps Company, manufacturers of window-shade rollers at Buckhannon, and is also a stockholder in the Buckhannon Bank.

Mr. Cutright is one of the liberal and progressive citizens of Buckhannon, is a republican in politics and has served as a member of the City Council. He is past chancellor of the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and has represented the same in the Grand Lodge of West Virginia. He and his wife are communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

On the 28th of June, 1905, Mr. Cntright wedded Miss Mary E. Brown, who was born in Pennsylvania and who graduated from the high school at Butler, that state. They have five children: Virginia B., I. G., Jr., Iva Catherine, Mary E. and Nancy C.

EDMUND H. KELLY has shown in his business career marked energy, initiative and progressiveness, and is now one of the prominent exponents of the automobile business in the City of Buckhannon, Upshur County, where he is secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Kelly Motor Company.

Mr. Kelly was born in Preston County, West Virginia, November 10, 1869, and is a son of Smith and Mary (Browning) Kelly, both natives of the State of Maryland. Smith Kelly was reared on the Maryland farm of his father, Edmund Kelly, and eventually he became the owner of a small farm in Preston County, West Virginia, where also he followed the carpenter's trade. He was fifty-two years of age at the time of his death, and his wife survived him by a number of years. Both were devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in the same Mr. Kelly served many years as class leader. He was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was a republican in political proclivities. Of the eleven children two died in infancy and one at the age of six years, the other eight attaining to years of maturity.

Edmund H. Kelly passed his boyhood days on the home farm and profited by the advantages of the public schools of his native county. At the age of nineteen years he found employment, but until he attained to his legal majority he turned over to his parents the most of his earnings. At the age of twenty-one years he found employment in a livery establishment, and he received for his services $12.50 a week. After passing two years in this service he invested his earnings in sheep, which he later sold for $200. With this financial fortification he purchased the livery business of his employer and incidentally assumed an indebtedness of $1,800, for which he gave his notes. He continued in the livery business at Terra Alta twelve years, and then made an advantageous sale of the property and business, after which he went South, for the benefit of his health, which had become impaired. After returning to West Virginia he engaged in the buggy business at Buckhannon, and developed a substantial and prosperous enterprise, with a large stock on hand to meet all demands. He continued this business two years, or until September, 1917, when he purchased a lot and erected a substantial building for use as an automobile garage and salesroom. Here he opened his automobile business on the 1st of September, 1918, and as agent for the Buick automobiles he has here built up a well ordered and prosperous business, his garage being modern in equipment and facilities, and the enterprise being conducted under the corporate title of the Kelly Motor Company. Mr. Kelly is the owner of a fourth interest in 100 acres of coal and pasture land and a half interest in a valuable little tract of ten acres of coal land, besides which he is a stockholder in the Buckhannon Light & Water Company. He is one of the vital and valued members of the Buckhannon Board of Commerce and the local Rotary Club, is president of the Board of Education of his home city, is a republican in politics, and both he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he being a trustee of the church at Buckhannon. Mr. Kelly is affiliated with the Lodge, Chapter and Commandery bodies of York Rite Masonry, and is a past master of the Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons at Terra Alta, Preston County. His wife, whose maiden name was Maude L. Warden, is a daughter of Rev. J. M. Warden, a clergyman of the Methodist Church, and her public-school discipline was supplemented by a two years' college course. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly have one child, Mary E., born July 28, 1914.

STANLEY B. HERSMAN, the efficient superintendent of the West Virginia Central Gas Company, maintains his residence and official headquarters at Buckhannon, Upshur County, and is one of the progressive business men of the younger generation in this city.

Mr. Hersman was born on a farm near Berlin, Lewis County, West Virginia, on the 17th of June, 1888, and is a son of Mark and Oliver R. (Hinzman) Hersman. Mark Hersman was born in Lewis County, March 4, 1844, a son of George and Sarah (Starcher) Hersman, whose marriage was solemnized June 17, 1834. George Hersman was a son of Mark Hersman, who was born August 11, 1790, and whose marriage to Polly Kiger occurred April 4, 1811. Mark Hersman's father, Christopher Hersman, was a son of Matthias Hersman, who was born and reared in Germany and who became the founder of the family in America, he having come to this country in 1763 and having settled in Hampshire County, Virginia, where he reclaimed and developed a farm and where he passed the remainder of his life, which was prolonged to the remarkable age of 125 years. Christopher Hersman became a farmer and trader in Pennsylvania, and his son Mark became an exponent of farm industry in Ohio and what is now West Virginia. George Hersman, grandfather of the subject of this review, was numbered among the substantial farmers of what is now Lewis County, West Virginia, and there his son Mark was born and reared on the home farm. Mark Hersman had the genius of success, and exemplified the same in his progressive and extensive operations as a farmer near Berlin, Lewis County, where he became the owner of a valuable farm property of 340 acres. He was a loyal soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he served two and one-half years. He was affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, was a republican in politics, and both he and his wife were active members of the Methodist Protestant Church. Of their twelve children the following are living at the time of this writing, in 1921: Mollie is the wife of Theodore Queen, of Hodgeville, this state; Blaine is superintendent of the West Virginia & Maryland Gas Company at Rowlesburg, Preston County, this state; Miss Nita was the next in order of birth; and Stanley B., of this sketch is the next younger; C. Sarah is the wife of Olin Rohr, of Berlin, Lewis County; and Grace is the wife of Harrison Lewis, of that place.

The boyhood and early youth of Stanley B. Hersman were diversified by work on the home farm and attending the public schools of his native county. At the age of eighteen years he entered the employ of a gas company, and he has since continued his connection with the gas industry in this state. He has been a resident of Buckhannon since 1919, and is the valued superintendent here of the West Virginia Central Gas Company. He owns a farm of about eighty-five acres near Berlin, Lewis County. Mr. Hersman is past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias Lodge at Buckhannon, is affiliated also with Franklin Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is a staunch democrat in politics, and he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

September 19, 1909, recorded the marriage of Mr. Hersman and Miss Maude F. Sutton, and they have four children: Harry, Harold, John and Grace.

ORIE O. BENNETT, M. D., is an able physician and surgeon who is honoring his native state of West Virginia by his faithful stewardship in his chosen profession as well as by his sterling characteristics as a citizen. He is one of the representative practitioners in Upshur County, with residence and professional headquarters at Buckhannon, the county seat.

Doctor Bennett was born on the parental homestead farm in Nicholas County, this state, and the date of his nativity was August 1, 1871. He is a son of Jacob H. and Francis J. (Nicholas) Bennett, both likewise natives of Nicholas County, where they were reared and educated, where their marriage was solemnized and where Jacob H. Bennett became a prosperous farmer as the owner of a valuable landed estate of 230 acres. His father purchased in an early day a tract of 1,000 acres in Nicholas County and eventually divided this property among his children. Jacob H. Bennett and his wife reside at Hinkleville, Upshur County, and both are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Bennett is a republican in politics. Of the two sons Doctor Bennett of this review is the younger, and the elder, Dr. E. C. Bennett, a graduate of the Eclectic Medical College in the City of Atlanta, Georgia, is now engaged in the successful practice of medicine at Richmond, Nicholas County, West Virginia.

Dr. Orie O. Bennett as a boy and youth assisted in the work of the home farm, and in the meanwhile only availed himself of the advantages of the local schools. Later he continued his studies in Shelton College, besides having for a time been a student in the West Virginia State Normal School at Athens and for part of a session was a student at the Willamuth University, Salem, Oregon. For three years he was successfully engaged in teaching in the schools of his native state and for an equal period thereafter he followed the same vocation in the State of Washington. Upon his return from the Pacific Coast he finally entered the Southern Medical College in the City of Atlanta, Georgia, and later he completed his technical course in Barnes Medical College in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, from which he received his degree of Doctor of Medicine. For twenty-three and one-half years thereafter Doctor Bennett was actively engaged in general practice in Webster County, West Virginia, where he controlled a large and representative practice and was a citizen of prominence and influence in his community. Since resigning his practice in that county the doctor has maintained his home and been established in successful practice in the City of Buckhannon. He is a stockholder in the Buckhannon Building and Loan Association and also in the Metal Products Corporation at Fairmont, this state. He is a republican in politics and is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity.

On November 24, 1898, Doctor Bennett wedded Miss M. E. Dnke, of Webster County, and they have two children: Mabel is a graduate of the Buckhannon High School and also of the West Virginia Wesleyan College; and Wayman, who is fourteen years of age (1922), is attending the high school at Buckhannon.

LOWRY W. PAGE, M. D., has been engaged in the practice of his profession in his native county since 1909, and since 1916 has made Buckhannon, judicial center of Upshur County, his place of residence and his professional headquarters. His prestige indicates alike his personal popularity and his professional ability, and he is distinctively one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his native county. The doctor maintains active affiliation with the American Medical Association, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the Upshur County Medical Society. He was born at French Creek, this county, on the 15th of December, 1872, and is a son of Frank and Martha (Young) Page, the former of whom was born in Highland County, Virginia, and the latter in Upshur County, West Virginia, as now constituted. The marriage of the parents was solemnized in Upshur County, and here the father became a progressive exponent of farm enterprise. He was in the very prime of life at the time of his death, and his widow is still a resident of this county. Of their four children three are living: A. D. is a prosperous farmer at French Creek, this county; Festus Y. is associated with copper-mining enterprise in the State of Arkansas; and Doctor Page, of this sketch, is the youngest of the number. The father was a staunch republican and was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as is also his widow.

The early education of Doctor Page included the advantages offered by the public schools of French Creek, later attending the Normal Clinical Academy at Buckhannon, and thereafter he made a record of ten years of effective service as a teacher in the schools of his native state. In preparation for his chosen profession he entered the Eclectic Medical College in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, and in this institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1909. After thus receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he further fortified himself by the valuable clinical experience which he gained by serving as an interne in Seton Hospital at Cincinnati. He initiated his professional career by engaging in practice in the Village of Rock Cave, Upshur County, where he continued his successful practice until he broadened his field by removing to the county seat, Buckhannon, where he has been established in active general practice since 1916.

Doctor Page is one of the loyal and progressive citizens of Buckhannon and is a director of the local Chamber of Commerce. He served as deputy clerk of Upshur County from 1902 to 1906. His political alignment is with the republican party, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The doctor is affiliated with Franklin Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Upshur Chapter No. 34, Royal Arch Masons; and Buckhannon Commandery of Knights Templars.

The year 1894 recorded the marriage of Doctor Page and Miss Clara Hammer, and their only child, Basil L., was born July 24, 1899. He is a graduate of the Buckhannon High School and the West Virginia Wesleyan College, and was a member of the Students' Army Training Corps at this college in the period of the World war. In 1922 he entered the Western Reserve Medical College at Cleveland, Ohio.

BENJAMIN F. MALONE, who is now living retired in the attractive little City of Buckhannon, Upshur County, was born at Malden in Kanawha County, Virginia (now West Virginia) on the 19th day of December, 1849, and is a son of William and Charlotte Brian Malone, natives of the Valley of Virginia, where the father followed farming until in middle life he became a stone and brick mason in Kanawha County. He was a soldier of the Union in the Civil war, and five of his sons likewise gave themselves to the same service. Of these five young soldiers Benjamin F. Malone is the only one now living, the brother and three half brothers having answered the last roll-call. One sister, Mrs. R. C. Morrison, widow of the late L. W. Morrison, lives in Buckhannon. Benjamin F. Malone passed a part of his childhood and early youth on a farm and attended the common schools of his locality. On March 15, 1864, he enlisted in Company M, Third Regiment, West Virginia Cavalry, for the term of three years or during the war, and served until the discharge of his regiment June 30, 1865, having taken an active part in the Lynchburg raid in Virginia, the historic Shenandoah Valley campaign under General Sheridan, and under the same commander in a movement beginning February 27, 1865, from winter quarters near Winchester, and ending so far as fighting was concerned with the surrender of the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia, April 9, 1865. It is with pardonable pride that Private Malone recalls that as an unmounted cavalryman he "footed" a distance of 600 miles through the valleys and over the mountains of Virginia under General Hunter, rode other hundreds of miles with the distinguished officers Averell, Custer and Sheridan, meanwhile taking a man's part in several important battles and numerous minor engagements, winding up with a day's duty with his regiment as escort to the great commander in chief, General Grant, on his way from near Burkeville to the place of Lee's surrender, a night of duty as picket guard between the lines on Appomattox field, and after a wearisome ride from near the southern boundary of Virginia through Petersburg and Richmond to the nation's capital and a place in Custer's Third Cavalry Division in the spectacular Grand Review on Pennsylvania Avenue on a glorious day in May.

After his term of army service he attended school, clerked in a store, taught in the district schools of Upshur County, taught the first term of the public school for colored children in Buckhannon, and later taught a winter term in Mason County, and in 1870 went to Woodford County, Illinois, where he taught two terms of school in country districts. At the close of his first term of school in Woodford County, in March, 1871, he went to Chicago, where he was employed in the shipping room of a varnish factory until the great fire of October following, when he returned to Woodford County and again taught a short term of school, at the close of which he returned to Chicago and found employment as store-keeper for a firm of lumber manufacturers whose plant was located at Bluffton, near Muskegon, Michigan. At the expiration of his year's engagement and a change of the lumber business having intervened he returned to Chicago and again for about five and one-half years was employed in connection with light manufacturing concerns, later being for several years employed as a collector of Chicago and Cleveland firms and as such traveled extensively in Ohio and West Virginia.

During the later period of his residence in Buckhannon and in the newer town of South Buckhannon he filled the responsible office of town sergeant for about eight years and served a term as mayor of the new town of South Buckhannon. He was for about fourteen years connected with the West Virginia Humane Society and its successor, the State Board of Children's Guardians, most of that period as a local agent and later as a district agent, a placement officer in the state work for children.

For nearly twelve months in the years 1901 to 1902 he was a resident of Oklahoma, having attended one of the "drawings" of land in Caddo County. He was not successful in the great drawing, but profited somewhat in modest investment in town lots in Anadarko.

Benjamin F. Malone is a republican and with ample independence, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with firm opinions of his own, a past grand in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a past post commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, a pensioner and a bachelor, a pioneer prohibitionist of Upshur County, and a woman suffragist from Susan B. Anthony to date.

OSCAR B. BEER, M. D., who is established in the successful practice of his profession at Buckhannon, the judicial center of his native county of Upshur, has definite prestige as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of this section of the state, and in his practice he specializes in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. Doctor Beer has been engaged in practice for a quarter of a century, and was one of the successful physicians and surgeons who represented West Virginia in the Medical Corps of the United States Army in the period of the late World war.

Doctor Beer was born on a farm in Upshur County, March 4, 1870, and is a son of George W. and Mary (Taylor) Beer. George W. Beer was born in Clarion County, Pennsylvania, in 1847, and was a lad of fifteen years when he enlisted for service as a Union soldier in the Civil war, in which he made a record of loyal and effective service. In the schools of the old Keystone State he received a liberal education, and he gained a splendid record of fifty-three years of effective service as a teacher in the rural schools, West Virginia. He has long been numbered among the substantial farmers of Upshur County, and still gives his attention to teaching school during the winter terms. Mr. Beer is a staunch republican, is affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic, and he and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. They have nine children, of whom Doctor Beer of this sketch is the eldest; A. W. is a progressive farmer in Upshur County; Blanche, a graduate of the West Virginia Wesleyan College, became a successful teacher in the public schools and is now the wife of W. I. Conley, of Upshur County; Pearl is the wife of Stark Kittle, and they reside near Belington, Barbour County; Essie, formerly a popular teacher, is the wife of E. R. Smith; Myrtle likewise is married and remains a resident of this state, as does also Mrs. Dorothy Greer; Gypsy is the wife of Guy Holderman; and Mamie is the wife of O. Tallman.

Dr. Oscar B. Beer passed the period of his childhood and early youth on the old home farm, and his educational advantages in the meanwhile were those of the public schools. He had become a successful teacher in the rural schools prior to entering the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, where he effectively supplemented his academic education. In 1896 he graduated from the Amerieus Medical College in the City of Baltimore, Maryland, and since receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine he has been continuously engaged in the work of his profession. In addition to controlling at Buckhannon a large and representative private practice the doctor also conducts a well equipped sanitarium in this city, where he has the best of facilities for the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, in which he specializes, as previously stated.

When the nation became involved in the great World war Doctor Beer promptly enlisted in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, and was soon commissioned a captain in the same. He continued in the service three months, during the greater part of which period he was stationed at the base hospital in Greenville, South Carolina. He is vice senior commander of the post of the American Legion at Buckhannon, and is the oldest member of the Legion in Upshur County. The doctor holds membership in the Upshur County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is past chancellor of the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and is a trustee of the Presbyterian Church in his home city. Doctor Beer is a progressive and liberal citizen, is president of the Curtright-Sharp Window Shade Company, one of the leading industrial concerns of Buckhannon, and is a stockholder in the Buckhannon light and water plant.

December 29, 1895, recorded the marriage of Doctor Beer and Miss Ada Sexton, and they have one son, Sexton, who was born in 1898.

JEREMIAH ALEXANDER MILLER. As an active resident of Wheeling for over sixty years, prominent as a banker, real estate operator, and with widely diversified interests, the career of Col. J. A. Miller can be noted only briefly in a suggestive outline. His friends and associates bear witness to the fact that he has been one of Wheeling's most useful as well as most honored and successful citizens.

Jeremiah A. Miller was born near Martinsburg in Berkeley County, Virginia, December 9, 1844. His father, John F. Miller, a native of Pennsylvania, was for a number of years a school teacher in Morgan County, and his wife, Rosanna Ellenberger, was a native of that county. They were married in Berkeley County. John F. Miller died at Martinsburg in 1852, and his widow died a number of years later in Wheeling. Jeremiah A. is the only survivor of their three children: John was a merchant and died at Columbus, Ohio, in 1919, and Belle died at Wheeling at the age of thirty.

J. A. Miller acquired a public school education and was eighteen years of age when he came to Wheeling in 1862. From that year until 1868 he was a grocery salesman, and from 1868 to 1884 was in business as a wholesale fancy grocery merchant. During 1884-5 he was a member of the firm Boyd, Miller Company, wholesale shoes.

Colonel Miller's active association with Wheeling banking affairs is a matter of interesting record. He has been a stockholder and director of the bank for forty years, and during this time he served as cashier and manager, then resigned to take the office of vice president and, later, president, the position he now holds. The institution under different names has been in the financial district of Wheeling for over sixty years. It was the first Wheeling bank to take advantage of the National Bank Act, being incorporated as the First National Bank in 1864. Some ten or twelve years later it surrendered the National charter and has since been known as the Bank of the Ohio Valley. Colonel Miller since 1905 has been president of the bank. He is also president of the Center Wheeling Savings Bank, which was organized in 1901 and is president of the Community Savings & Loan Company. Colonel Miller is president of the West Virginia Printing Company, and for a number of years was associated with the real estate firm of Alexander & Miller Land Company, also with North Park Land Company.

He was one of the promoters and the president of the Board of Directors of the first electric street car lines in Wellsburg, Wheeling and Moundsville, West Virginia, being among the first electric car lines in the United States. He helped to organize and was president of the first ice manufacturing company in this section of the United States.

In his civic record one service, that stands out perhaps above all others at Wheeling, has been his continuous membership of forty-four years on the Board of Education. He is chairman of the Wheeling Public Library Committee of the Board of Education, and among other services he was mayor of Wheeling in 1883-84, president of the Board of Directors of the West Virginia Penitentiary from 1890 to 1894, and regent of the West Virginia State Reform School in 1895. Colonel Miller was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention of 1912 at Baltimore, when Woodrow Wilson was nominated for his first term. He was aid-de-camp with the rank of colonel on the staff of Governor J. B. Jackson, also chief marshal of democratic parades in the presidential campaigns of 1876 to 1892, inclusive. Colonel Miller has a distinguished record in Masonry and Odd Fellowship. He is a thirty-third degree Scottish Rite Mason, is a trustee of the West Virginia Grand Lodge of Masons, and is president of the Masonic Temple Association of Wheeling. He is the oldest past grand master and past chief patriarch of West Virginia Odd Fellows. He was grand master of the Grand Lodge in 1876-77. He is a past grand commander of the Grand Commandery of West Virginia Knight Templars, also past grand high priest of the Grand Chapter of West Virginia Royal Arch Masons and a member of the Mystic Shrine, Mecca Temple, New York, for thirty-five years.

Colonel Miller married Miss Ida M. Deiters, a native of Ohio County, West Virginia. They have two daughters: Anna Isabelle, a graduate of Randolph-Macon College of Lynchburg, Virginia; and Ruth Alexandria, who is a graduate of the Wheeling High School and is now a student in Randolph-Macon College.

CURRAN E. GITHENS, M. A., Ph. D., the valued superintendent of the public schools of the City of Wheeling and a prominent figure in educational circles in West Virginia, was born at Cameron, Monroe County, Ohio, and is a son of Dr. P. D. and Elizabeth (Ruble) Githens, the former of whom died in 1917, on his farm near Beallsville, Monroe County, Ohio, where his widow still maintains her home.

Dr. P. D. Githens was born at Camden, New Jersey, a son of William T. Githens, who was there born in the year 1799, and whose death occurred at Wheeling, West Virginia, in 1860, he having here established his residence in 1838 and having become a successful coach and steamboat builder. His wife, whose maiden name was Sophia Bronner, was born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and was a resident of Wheeling, West Virginia, at the time of her death. Joshua Githens, father of William T., was born in Philadelphia, became a substantial capitalist in his native city, served as a patriot soldier in the war of the Revolution and was a resident of Philadelphia at the time of his death. The family name of his wife was Abel. The original American progenitor of the Githens family came from England in 1671 and settled on Cooper's Creek, near Salem, New Jersey. Dr. P. D. Githens was a boy at the time when the family home was established in Wheeling, and here he received his early education. In preparation for his chosen vocation, he entered the celebrated Rush Medical College in the City of Chicago, and after finishing his course was actively engaged in the practice of his profession in Monroe County, Ohio, for fifty-five years. A man of fine intellectual and professional ability, he had a high sense of stewardship and manifested the same in his many years of earnest and helpful service to humanity. His practice as a country doctor covered a wide area of territory, and he was loved and honored in the community in which he lived and labored to goodly ends. He was appointed to the office of major in the Ohio militia at the time of the Civil war, this appointment having been made by the governor of the state, but he never was in active service at the front. His political allegiance was given to the democratic party, and his religious faith was that of the Society of Friends, of which he was a birthright member. Of their children the first born, William David, died at the age of twenty years; Professor Githens of this review was the next in order of birth; Bernard P. is engaged in the buying and shipping of live stock at Belleville, Ohio; C. A., who was engaged in real estate business at Marshfield, Wisconsin, was killed in an automobile accident in that state in 1916.

Prof. C. E. Githens gained his preliminary education in the public schools of Belleville, Ohio, later received normal school training, and in 1896 he graduated from Franklin College, one of the admirable institutions of his native state, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Thereafter he did effective post-graduate work in Harvard University, and his alma mater, Franklin College, conferred upon him the supplemental degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy, besides which he received the Master's degree also from Bethany College.

Professor Githens initiated his pedagogic career when he was but fifteen years of age, at which time he began teaching in a rural district in his native county. Later he became principal of the public schools at Hannibal, Ohio, and after there remaining two years he served in turn as principal of schools at Clarington and Belpre, that state. He finally became superintendent of schools at Wellsburg, West Virginia, and in 1903 he was made principal of the Union District Schools of Wheeling, in which capacity he continued his effective service until he was appointed to his present office, that of superintendent of the schools of this city. He is a member of the Mathematical Association of America, the American Mathematical Society, the Circolo Matematico di Palermo, the National Educational Society and the State Teachers Association of West Virginia. Under his supervision as superintendent of the city schools of Wheeling, he has twelve schools, 236 teachers and 6,300 pupils.

Professor Githens is a well fortified advocate and supporter of the principals of the democratic party, and while in his native Ohio county he served two terms as assessor, which compassed the full gamut of his official ambition. He and his wife hold membership in the Second Presbyterian Church at Wheeling, and he is serving as elder in the same. In the Masonic fraternity his basic affiliation is with Nelson Lodge No. 30, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and in the West Virginia Sovereign Consistory of the Scottish Rite, he has received, up to 1921, the eighteenth degree—Rotarian.

Professor Githens wedded Miss Emily C. Stegner, daughter of the late Godfrey and Rosina (Held) Stegner, of Monroe County, Ohio, where the father was a representative farmer. Professor and Mrs. Githens have two children: Florence is the wife of A. H. Kelley, assistant auditor for a leading shipbuilding concern at Newburgh, New York; and Philemon Stegner was, in 1921, a student in Pittsburgh University, Pennsylvania.

JAMES A. RUSMISSELL, M. D., who is engaged in the active general practice of his profession at Buckhannon, Upshur County, has here made a record that entitles him to recognition as one of the representative physicians and surgeons of his native county. He was born at Frenchton, this county, May 4, 1879, and is a son of John D. and Amanda A. (Hull) Rasmisell, both of whom have been residents of this county from the time of their births, the father being one of the substantial farmers and sterling citizens of the county, where he is the owner of a valuable farm property of 500 acres.

Doctor Rasmisell reveres with satisfaction to the benignant influences that compassed his boyhood and early youth, for he was reared on the home farm and early began to aid in its work. After leaving the public schools he continued his studies in the West Virginia Wesleyan College, and in preparation for his chosen profession he entered Maryland Medical College in the City of Baltimore, Maryland. After receiving from this great institution his degree of Doctor of Medicine he passed two years

t Orlando, West Virginia. For the ensuing five years he was engaged in practice at Gassaway, Braxton County, West Virginia, and since that time he has made Buckannon the central stage of his able and effective professional service, save for the period of his association with the nation's military service in connection with the World War. The doctor has insistently kept in touch with the advances made in medical and surgical science. He is actively identified with the Upshur County Medical Society, the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In 1921 Doctor Rumsissell took a special course in surgical work in the American Hospital in the City of Chicago. He is an ex-member of the West Virginia State Board of Medical Examiners, and his loyal service in the ranks of the republican party needs no further voucher than the statement that he is serving a 1921 as member of its State Central Committee in West Virginia. Both he and his wife hold membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In 1912 Doctor Rumsissell wedded Miss Anna L. McNutt, and they have one child, James A., Jr.

Doctor Rumsissell became a member of the West Virginia National Guard in the year 1914, and he entered active Federal service before the nation became formally engaged in the World War. He was first at Fairmont, West Virginia, and then went to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, where for ninety days he received special training for army service as a surgeon. For one year thereafter he was with the Medical Corps of the United States Army in the camp at Hattiesburg, Mississippi, and as regimental surgeon of the One Hundred and Thirtieth Engineers he went with his command to France, where he was assigned to duty as medical officer in charge of the secondary depot at La Tracy, in which service he continued eight months. Thereafter he held various assignments of important order, he having received commission as a major in the medical corps soon after he entered the service of the Government. He returned to the United States in June, 1919, and after receiving his honorable discharge he resumed the practice of his profession at Buckhannon.

CHARLES ROESSING, superintendent of the William Flacus Oak Leather Company, one of the important industrial concerns of Buckhannon, Upshur County, is a recognized expert and authority in all departments of the tanning business, his initial knowledge of which was gained in his native town of Rothenburg on the Fulda River in Hessen-Vassau, Germany, where he was born on the 12th of August, 1868. He was afforded the advantages of the schools of his native place and was still a boy when he began working in a local tannery, where he thoroughly learned his trade. As a youth he served one year and two months in the Prussian Army, and he was an ambitious young man of twenty-four years when in 1892 he came to the United States, where he felt assured of better opportunities or advancement. For two years he worked at his trade as the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and he then, in 1894, came to Buckhannon, West Virginia. Here he held the position of department foreman of the William Flacus Leather Company until 1900, and for two years thereafter he was similarly employed in the State of New Jersey. He next returned to Pittsburgh, but six months later he again came to Buckhannon, where he held the position of superintendent of a tannery until 1908, when he returned to his native land and there made a visit of three months. Upon coming back to the United States Mr. Roessing built a tannery at Buckhannon, and this he operated in an independent way until 1910, since which year he has held the position of superintendent of the William Flacus Oak Leather Company. He is one of the substantial and loyal citizens of Upshur County, and here resides upon his well improved little farm of forty-four acres, adjoining the City of Buckhannon. He is a republican in politics and takes deep interest in all that concerns the welfare of his home community.

In the City of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Roessing and Miss Catherine Kerst, who likewise is a native of Germany, and they have three children: Carl, born May 13, 1893, whose early educational advantages included those of the West Virginia Wesleyan College, married Claudia L. Hiner, and they have one son, Charles H. George, who was born October 12, 1898, and who completed a two years' college course, remains at the parental home. Lena, who was born February 18, 1895, graduated from the Buckhannon High School, later completed a normal course in the West Virginia Wesleyan College, after which she was engaged in teaching in the public schools until her marriage to Lloyd Travis. They have one child, Ralph.

J. RALPH DAWSON has developed at Buckhannon, Upshur County, a substantial and prosperous underwriting business as representative of the celebrated New York Life Insurance Company, besides which he is here the secretary of Oke Coal Company, the other officers of which corporation are as here noted: O. S. Talbott, president; W. M. Miner, vice president; and W. G. Talbott, treasurer.

Mr. Dawson was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, on the 15th of October, 1892, and is a son of Homer E. and Iona (Somerville) Dawson, both likewise natives of Harrison County, where the former was born in 1866 and the latter in 1869. The parents were reared and educated in their native county, and there the father continued his active operations as a farmer until 1912, when he removed with his family to Buckhannon, he being the owner of a well improved farm in Upshur County and three valuable farm properties in Harrison County. Homer E. Dawson is a democrat and is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as was also his wife, whose death occurred in 1913. Of their nine children seven are living, and of the number the subject of this sketch is the eldest; Frank E., who was for eighteen months in the nation's military service at the time of the World War, is now in the employ of the National Supply Company in the State of Kansas; Martha, a graduate of the Buckhannon High School, is the wife of Dr. A. C. Thrash, of Lost Creek, Harrison County; Roscoe L. likewise represented West Virginia as a soldier of the United States Army in the World War period; and the three younger children, Homer D., Clyde G. and Hazel, remain at the parental home.

J. Ralph Dawson was reared on the farm to the age of eighteen years, and in the meanwhile attended the public schools of the locality. Thereafter he attended West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon until his graduation in the same. For four years he was engaged in the merchant-tailoring industry at Buckhannon, and after selling this business he turned his attention to the life-insurance business, in which he has met with unequivocal success. He is a staunch supporter of the principles of the republican party, is affiliated with Franklin Lodge No. 7, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and also with the Lodge of Perfection in the Scottish Rite of the fraternity. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

April 22, 1916, recorded the marriage of Mr. Dawson and Miss Lettie Matheny, and they are popular factors in the social activities of their home city. They have no children.

REV. MOORE MCNEILL has been justly called the best loved man in Ritchie County. Gifted with many talents, blessed with long life, he has used both as a constant opportunity for doing good. His good deeds will follow him while the memory of lesser but perhaps more prosperous men fades.

He was born in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, November 9, 1830, in early life took up the ministry, and at this writing is in his ninety-second year. He is widely and universally known and respected, and when he lays down the cross to wear the crown of glory no one in the community will be more sadly missed.

The McNeills are of a sturdy Scotch-Irish lineage. In Scotland for several generations they were known as "dissenters." About 1689 some of them removed from Scotland to Ireland, and one or more of the family was represented in the siege of Derry. Following that a part of the family settled in Wales. Thomas McNeill, the direct ancestor of Rev. Moore McNeill, was born in Wales in 1747, and was a small child when his parents immigrated to the American colonies, settling in Capan Valley of Frederick County, Virginia. There Thomas McNeill married Mrs. Mary (Hughes) Ireson, and in 1770 he moved from Franklin County to what is now Pocahontas County, West Virginia. He entered three hundred acres of land, which still remains in the possession of his descendants. Thomas McNeill gave service on the side of the Colonists in their struggle for independence.

His son Jonathan married Miss Phoebe Moore. Her father, Moses Moore, was a romantic figure in Revolutionary times and in the Indian wars. He was three times captured and carried from his home on Swago across the Ohio River to the vicinity of Chillicothe, Ohio. Once he was compelled to endure the ordeal of running the gauntlet. Another captive preceding him was stabbed, bruised and hacked to pieces before reaching the end of the line. Moses Moore, therefore, decided that death was the least he could expect, and determined to sell his life dearly. He went down the line some distance and when a squaw struck him with a long-handled frying pan he wrenched it from her, knocked her down with his fist, and then striking right and left with the handle of the frying pan, he proved such a terror to his persecutors that many of the squaws ran away. The spectacle altogether pleased the Indians, who permitted this little diversion as an entertainment for their squaws, and they crowded round him praising him with the words "good soldier," and decided to spare his life. Afterwards he made his escape and returned home.

The parents of Rev. Moore McNeill were William and Nancy (Griffey) McNeill. Nancy Griffey was a daughter of Jonathan Griffey, whose name in the records of Bath County, Virginia, where he married, is spelled Griffice. Jonathan Griffey was a native of Switzerland, was a follower of Lafayette to the Colonies, a soldier until the close of the Revolution, and thereafter lived in Virginia. Jonathan Griffey was in the last battle of the war, the siege and surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

William McNeill and wife had the following children: Jonathan; James, a Confederate captain; Claibourne; Jane, who became the wife of John E. Addison; Elizabeth, who was married to Solomon Cochran; Agnes; and Reverend Moore.

Rev. Moore McNeill has been a stanch republican since the organization of the party, and he cast his first vote for the whig candidate Zachary Taylor, though the family were strongly Southern in their sympathies. During the last month of the Civil war Governor Arthur I. Boreman of West Virginia commissioned him captain of a company of state troops to take the place of Captain Haller, who had been killed.

Rev. Mr. Moore was licensed to preach in 1859. For ten years he was identified with the Methodist Protestant Church, and then transferred himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which Conference he now belongs. His first appointment was at Kingwood, and other communities that recall with affection and gratitude his services as pastor were Mannington, Harrisville, Spencer and Dallas. Very appropriately one might quote from the words of a former history of Ritchie County: "He is one of the most widely known and beloved citizens of the county, having endeared himself to the hearts of the many by his comforting ministrations in times of sorrow and bereavement. Perhaps no other minister in the history of the county has married or buried a larger number of its citizens."

Now, in his ninety-second year, he is spending the evening of his life at his country home "Locust Grove" near Smithville. He still takes a great interest in the affairs of the world and the people with whom his duties have brought him in contact. His singularly long life has been an expression of great devotion and consecration to the ideals of service upheld in the ministry of Christ.

In the peaceful scenes of evening as in the laborious hours of life's noontide he has had the devoted companionship of his wife. Her maiden name was Jane Eliza Caldwell, a daughter of John and Jane (Poole) Caldwell, who were born in that portion of the old Augusta District of Virginia now Marshall County, West Virginia. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. McNeill were: Owen M.; Cloy Tutt; Ida, wife of George W. Clammer, of Fort Collins, Colorado; E. Augusta, wife of Gus J. Shaffer, of Kingwood; Minnie H., wife of Rev. A. L. Ireland, of the West Virginia Conference; Ellen H., Mrs. H. H. Cochran, of Clarksburg; Isa Pierpont, wife of Stanley J. Morrow, of Dallas, Texas; Alfreda, wife of Kenney P. Wright, of Washington D. C.; Burley S., who occupies the old home William K., a farmer in Ritchie County; Frank C., of Smithville; and Otis, deceased.

GUSTAVUS JOSEPHUS SHAFFER. With the commercial development of Preston County during the past half century perhaps no one citizen has been more deeply interested than Gustavus Josephus Shaffer, always known among his many friends and associates as Gus J. Shaffer. Mr. Shaffer is still active in banking and business at Kingwood, and he long been one of the prominent leaders of the democratic party in this section of the state.

His grandfather and the founder of the family in Preston County was Adam Shaffer, a native of Germany, who came to America just before the Revolutionary war, locating in Lebanon County, Pennsylvania, and from there removing to Maryland. In Washington County, Maryland, he married Catherine Wotring. She was one of the heroines of the Revolution. On the day the battle of Brandywine was fought she was busy molding bullets for the Patriot Army and her mother and older sisters raked and set up buckwheat while the husband and father was fighting in the cause of independence. The bullet molds Catherine used on this occasion can be seen in Aurora, West Virginia today. Adam Shaffer immediately after his marriage came in company with his wife's father to the German settlement of Aurora, West Virginia, and established his home near Brookside, Adam and Catherine Shaffer had the following children: Tewart, John, Jacob, Daniel, William, Samuel, Abraham and Adam, Jr.

Daniel Shaffer, father of Gus J., married Elizabeth Isert, of a family that was identified with the Colonial history of Cumberland, Maryland, where Daniel found his wife. Daniel Shaffer was born in 1805 and lived out his busy career on a farm in Brookside in Preston County where he died in 1863. His family consisted of five sons and three daughters: George Francis; Martin Luther Jesse W.; Gustavus Josephus; Arthur McKinley; Susar, who became the wife of Thomas Humbertson, of Frostburg, Maryland; Mary R., who was the wife of George Lantz of Aurora; and Priscilla, who married James H. Wilson and died at Aurora. Of these children George Francis entered the Lutheran ministry and was president of the North Carolina College at Concord, North Carolina. At the beginning of the Civil war, he was, president of a Female Seminary in that state. After the war he did missionary work throughout the South, and died at Spartanburg, South Carolina, full of years and with a life of great usefulness to his race.

Daniel Shaffer, father of these children, was a local minister of the Lutheran Church and a justice of the peace. He issued a great many marriage licenses and also performed the marriage ceremonies. While he was not a participant in partisan politics, he was in many ways recognized civic leader in his community of Aurora. Another son, Martin L., was sheriff of Preston County when the Civil war came on, and then resigned his office and became a sutler in the Federal Army.

Gus J. Shaffer was born at Aurora in Preston County, January 15, 1847, and he was still a schoolboy when the Civil war was being fought. He learned the blacksmith's trade, and after reaching his majority engaged in merchandising at Fellowship. A few months later fire destroyed his stock of goods, and he then removed to Rowlesburg in Reno District, where he began manufacturing and dealing lumber. Two or three years later he moved to Tunnelton, and continued in the lumber business until 1886. Mr. Shaffer was one of the original promoters and stockholders of the Kingwood Railroad Company. Before the road was completed he was elected its superintendent, having charge of the track laying, and continued as superintendent during the first year of the road's operation. On resigning he moved to Kingwood, and resumed the lumber and mercantile business. For seventeen years Mr. Shaffer was managing partner in the Shaffer & Brown Company, one of the largest mercantile firms in Northern West Virginia. His partners were the late Junior Brown, Arnold Bonafield and F. L. Shaffer, and he is the last survivor of these. Mr. Shaffer is now the oldest man in point of service in the rank of Kingwood. For many years he has been one of its stockholders and vice president, and was also one of the building committee to erect the handsome bank home a few years ago.

Like his father, Mr. Shaffer is a "dyed-in-the-wool" democrat, and has been with that party steadily since casting his first vote for president for Seymour and Blair in 1868. He has been on the ticket as a party candidate several times, greatly reducing the republican majority that was normal in Preston County. He was once elected justice of the peace of Kingwood District. He has been a delegate to state conventions, and helped nominate Governor MacCorkle and other state officers. He was in the convention which nominated Governor Fleming, and was a partisan of Colonel Martin, named as the dark horse to break the deadlock in the Second Congressional District Democratic Convention. He helped nominate the state democratic leader William L. Wilson, distinguished author of the Wilson bill, and he knew that statesman personally.

Mr. Shaffer was reared in the Lutheran Church and has always regarded himself as a Lutheran. Mrs. Shaffer is a Methodist, and in the absence of a Lutheran Church at Kingwood he has given his support to the Methodists and is one of the trustees of the local society. Many years ago Mr. Shaffer became a Knight of Pythias, and has a veteran's medal for a quarter of a century of active membership.

The first wife of Mr. Shaffer was Louisa Menefee, of Ionongalia County, daughter of John Menefee, who in his time was a man of prominence in the Newburg district. Mrs. Shaffer died in 1880, leaving two children: Morris, a farmer near Tunnelton; and Elizabeth, wife of H. C. Shaffer, of Cumberland, Maryland. The second wife of Mr. Shaffer was Florence Thomas, daughter of former sheriff Elisha Thomas of Preston County, where she was born. She died in 1888, the mother of three children. The eldest of these is Frank T., one of the promoters and a freitor and salesman in the Kingwood Wholesale Grocery Company, who married Miss Bessie L. Clark, of Miller, Ohio. Harry G. Shaffer, a lawyer at Madison, West Virginia, and a member of the State Senate from the Eighth District, married Brookie Turley. Jessie, the youngest of the three children, is the wife of Dr. John W. Gilmore, of Wheeling, West Virginia.

July 30, 1890, Mr. Shaffer married in Ritchie County, West Virginia, Miss E. Augusta McNeill, daughter of Rev. Moore McNeill, former pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Kingwood. Mrs. Augusta Shaffer, who was a successful teacher before her marriage, received her certificate of membership in the Kingwood Chapter of the daughters of the American Revolution in January, 1920. He is entitled to wear four bars, indicating her Revolutionary ancestry through four soldiers of the war.

ELLIS E. EDGELL, M. D., who maintains his home at Buckhannon, judicial center of Upshur County, is now turning his attention primarily to oil and gas production enterprise in his native state, but he has to his credit many years of active and successful service in the work of his profession, in which he gained prestige as a specially able physician and surgeon.

Doctor Edgell was born in Ritchie County, West Virginia, on the 1st of November, 1862, and is a son of John and Susan (Morris) Edgell, both likewise natives of what is now the State of West Virginia, the former having been born in Wetzel County, in 1812, and the latter in Taylor County, in 1831. After their marriage the parents settled on a farm in Ritchie County, and there they passed the remainder of their lives, the father having been the owner of a small farm at the time of his death. John Edgell was a staunch supporter of the cause of the democratic party, and both he and his wife were earnest members of the Baptist Church. Of the seven children the eldest was A. W., who became a successful physician and surgeon and who continued in the practice of his profession until his death. Cyrus J., K. C. and G. E. likewise were successful physicians, and all are now deceased; Thénie is the widow of T. L. Terrell; Lyda is the wife of G. B. Simmons; and Dr. E. E., of this sketch, is the youngest of the number.

Doctor Edgell was reared on the home farm and gained his early education in the local schools. Like all of his brothers he adopted the medical profession as his vocation, and for the same he prepared himself most thoroughly and effectively. For one year he was a student in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, and he then entered the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, in which institution he was graduated as a member of the class of 1892 and with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. After about five years of successful practice at Webster Springs, Webster County, he transferred his residence and professional headquarters to Clendenia, Kanawha County, and after there continuing his active general practice about five years he was for one year engaged in practice in the City of Charleston. He became substantially interested in oil and gas production and finally retired from the practice of his profession to devote his attention to his important business affairs in this industrial field. He is a director of the Buckhannon Bank and takes loyal interest in all that concerns the civic and material welfare of his home city and county, as shown in his support of varied business enterprises and by his liberality in public affairs. He is a democrat, is a member of the Buckhannon Country Club, formerly maintained active affiliation with various professional organizations, including the West Virginia State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and he attends and supports the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife is an active member.

On Christmas day of the year 1906 Doctor Edgell wedded Miss Jessie Smith, and they have two children, Marie and Ernest E.

HON. GOHEN CLARKE ARNOLD, who represents the Thirtieth District in the State Senate, is one of the able lawyers of the Buckhannon bar, and he achieved his political success in a community where the people have known him all his life.

Senator Arnold was born at Buckhannon, January 5, 1885, son of Stark W. and Elizabeth E. (Gohen) Arnold. His father was born at Beverly, Randolph County, West Virginia, December 20, 1850, while his mother was born at Cincinnati, January 10, 1851. Stark Arnold was reared at Beverly, was educated in private schools and graduated in law at Columbia College. He practiced law for a number of years and then removed to New York State and joined the Methodist Conference, and was active in the ministry the rest of his life. He was affiliated with the Masonic order, and was a republican in politics. At one time he was prosecuting attorney of Upshur County, and also represented Upshur and Randolph counties as a member of the State Senate. There were four children: Grace, who lives at home and is a graduate of the seminary at Buckhannon; Mary J., wife of Dr. J. L. Pifer; Gohen C.; and Beatrice, wife of James V. Griffin, of Columbus, Ohio.

Gohen C. Arnold was born in Upshur County, was educated in the West Virginia Conference Seminary, and graduated A. B. and LL. B. from West Virginia University. Since then he has been engaged in active practice at Buckhannon, and is one of the directors of the Buckhannon Bank.

He was elected a member of the State Senate in 1916, and is now on his second term. In the session of 1919 he served with distinction as chairman of the finance committee, and was an active member of a number of other important committees. In the session of 1921 he was elected president of the Senate, which office he now occupies. He was appointed a member of the State Capitol Building Commission by Governor Morgan in 1921. Senator Arnold is a republican, a member of the Masonic Lodge, is a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is affiliated with the Delta Chi and Delta Tau Delta college fraternities. His principal hobby and recreation is hunting.

HON. J. C. McWHORTER, who for eight years was on the bench of the Twelfth Judicial Circuit, has been a practicing lawyer at Buckhannon since 1894, and on a number of occasions has appeared as one of the influential leaders in the larger affairs of the state. He was particularly active in the movement which culminated in the state wide prohibition act of West Virginia.

Judge McWhorter was born on a farm in Upshur County, July 5, 1866, son of Dr. John M. and Rosetta (Marple) McWhorter. His father was born at McWhorter in Harrison County, January 22, 1822, while his mother was born in Upshur County in 1827 and died in 1869. Doctor McWhorter was reared in Harrison County, was educated for the medical profession, and after his marriage settled on a farm in Upshur County and conducted farming as well as the practice of medicine. He was a life-long student, had a large and well selected private library, and was the first licensed preacher in the Universalist Church in West Virginia. He was a past master of his Masonic Lodge and a democrat in politics. Doctor McWhorter had nine children, five of whom are living: F. J. McWhorter is a retired merchant at Buckhannon; L. V. McWhorter, now a fruit grower at Yakima, Washington, is author of a book entitled "Border Settlers of Northwestern Virginia," and out of his friendship for the Yakima Tribe of Indians grew another book entitled "A Crime Against the Yakimas"; Flora is the wife of G. C. Lawson, of Athens, Ohio; J. C. McWhorter is the fourth; Lena is the wife of W. I. Jenkins, of Lost Creek, West Virginia.

Judge McWhorter grew up on a farm in Upshur County, attended the free schools, also the Fairmont State Normal, and graduated in 1894 from West Virginia University, receiving the degree of LL. B. after specializing in studies in the university for four years. After his admission to the bar he began practice at Buckhannon, and has handled a very extensive civil practice during all these years. He was nominated by the democratic party and elected judge of the Twelfth Judicial Circuit in 1904, his term of service being eight years, 1905-12. The circuit was then composed of Upshur, Webster, Braxton and Nicholas counties.

Judge McWhorter is a director and attorney for the Traders National Bank of Buckhannon, is a stockholder in the Peoples Bank, a stockholder of and attorney for the Bank of Adrian, West Virginia, and has some valuable financial interests in real estate, coal and timber lands. His home is at 95 Kanawha Street.

Judge McWhorter in 1912 was chairman of the Ratification Federation, the organizing nucleus which led the fight for state-wide prohibition. He drafted and was the author of the state-wide prohibition act, and the amendment was carried by over 92,000 majority. Judge McWhorter is a member of the Masonic Lodge, and is one of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church at Buckhannon.

On August 26, 1895, he married Miss Elizabeth Alkire, only daughter of Washington Alkire. She is a graduate of the Wesleyan Academy at Buckhannon. Judge and Mrs. McWhorter had three children: Nellie E. graduated from high school and the Beachwood School, and is the wife of Mathew Edmiston; Donald W., who was a high school graduate, died at Detroit in February, 1920, at the age of twenty; and Pauline, who is a graduate of high school, is now attending Knox School at Cooperstown, New York.

MORGAN M. BROOKS, principal of the Buckhannon High School, has been connected with the educational affairs and institutions of West Virginia almost consecutively for thirty years. He is a school man of high ideals and with a most commendable record of administrative efficiency.

Mr. Brooks was born on a farm in Upshur County July 23, 1873, son of Rev. B. B. and Seba (Morgan) Brooks. While Professor Brooks has devoted his life to education, he represents a line of Methodist ministers, including some of the pioneers in the church in West Virginia. His grand father, Rev. R. L. Brooks, was born in the southern part of West Virginia, and for many years endured the burdens and hardships of an itinerant ministry over the state. He married Judith Atkins and was the father of two sons and four daughters, two of whom are still living. Rev. B. B. Brooks, now deceased, was born in Lincoln County, Virginia, June 10, 1842, had a public school education, prepared himself for the ministry of the Methodist Church, and while he was pastor of several churches and for many years a member of the Conference, he also owned a farm, cultivated it and conducted a store. He was a republican in politics. Rev. B. B. Brooks married Seba Morgan, a member of the historic family of Morgans in West Virginia and a descendant of the pioneer Indian fighter David Morgan. Rev. B. B. Brooks and wife had thirteen children, and seven are still living: Geneva, widow of Samuel Barton, of Charleston, West Virginia; R. L., who graduated from the Glenville State Normal School, taught for fifteen years, and is now in the lumber business at Buckhannon; Morgan M.; Helen, wife of Dan Price, of East Holden, Maine; Virginia, wife of Joseph Coffinduffer, of Jawesville, West Virginia; Orpha, wife of James Hoover, of Snow Hill, Maryland; Flora, wife of William E. Jones, of East Bank, West Virginia.

Morgan M. Brooks grew up on a farm, acquired his early education in the common schools, graduated from the Glenville State Normal, and also took work in the West Virginia Wesleyan College, from which he graduated A. B. He also attended for several terms West Virginia University and Columbia University. Professor Brooks began teaching at the age of seventeen. From 1904 to 1913 he was principal of the Grafton High School and from 1914 to 1919 was principal of the Wesleyan Academy at Buckhannon. He has been principal of the high school of that city since 1919.

In 1899 he married Mary C. Hamilton. They have two daughters: Martha V., born January 1, 1905, a graduate of high school and now attending West Virginia Wesleyan College; and Margaret E., born October 3, 1908, a student in the Junior High School at Buckhannon. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Professor Morgan is on the Official Board. He is a past chancellor of Oak Hall Lodge No. 120, Knights of Pythias, and a member of Grafton Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has been a worker in the republican party, and is secretary of the County Committee of Upshur County.

MILLARD FILLMORE HAMILTON, M. D., of Mannington, graduated in medicine and qualified himself for the practice of that profession forty years ago. Except for brief intervals his professional work has all been in Mannington. Doctor Hamilton is more than a capable physician and surgeon, is a citizen known for his progressiveness and leadership in many movements, is a former mayor of Mannington and has also to his credit a record of service in the Legislature.

He was born near Mannington February 22, 1860, son of Ulysses and Malissa (Yost) Hamilton. He is a descendant of Henry Hamilton, who came to America in Colonial times from the north of Ireland, where his ancestry, a branch of the great Hamilton family of Scotland, had been established in earlier generations. Henry Hamilton first located at Winchester, Virginia, where he married Elizabeth Tryand. Subsequently he removed to the vicinity of Morgantown, West Virginia, and in 1818 he left Monongalia County and settled on Plum Run in Marion County.

M. F. Hamilton M.D.

his son, Boaz Fleming, was born in Morgantown in 1798, and was ten years of age when the family settled in Fairton County, where he became a widely known and influential citizen. He was a staunch democrat. He was defeated as a candidate for county clerk of courts in 1852, but in 1858 was elected to that office and served three years. October 26, 1828, he married Maria Parish.

Their son, James Ulysses Hamilton, was born at Fairmont January 12, 1839. In 1843 the family established their home at Salt Lick in Marion County, where James U. Hamilton grew up and lived his active life as a prosperous farmer and influential citizen. He died on his farm there in 1915. He married Malissa Yost, daughter of Nicholas Yost, of Fairview and member of the old and prominent family of that name in Marion County. Malissa Hamilton died January 1, 1916, in her seventy-ninth year.

Millard Fillmore Hamilton spent his early life on his father's farm, attended common schools, the Fairmont Normal School, and began the study of medicine under theceptorship of his uncle, Dr. P. D. Yost, of St. Louis, Missouri. Doctor Hamilton in 1883 graduated from the American Eclectic Medical College of St. Louis. He began practice in Mercer County, Missouri, but in 1883 returned to West Virginia, and has been a leading physician and surgeon at Mannington since that date, except for a period of six months during 1885-86 when he was on the Pacific coast in practice at Fort Ross, California. Doctor Hamilton has held the post of district surgeon for the Baltimore and Ohio Railway for thirty-eight years, and for the past twenty-five years has been a member of the United States Board of Examining Surgeons for Pensions, and president of the board during the last five years. He is a member of the Marion County, West Virginia and American Medical Associations, has served as vice president of the West Virginia Eclectic Medical Association, and is a member of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Association of Surgeons.

He was one of the organizers and incorporators of the Opera House Company, and helped organize and was president during its existence of the Mannington Development Company. He was one of the promoters of the Mannington Lumber Company, and has always taken a deep civic pride in all matters pertaining to the welfare of Mannington and vicinity. For sixteen years he was president of the Bank of Mannington. He is owner of a number of houses in Mannington, several farms, and on one of these at Salt Lick he built a beautiful home, where he and his family spend the summer months. In 1921 at their bungalow in the country were entertained the members and their wives of the Marion County Medical Society. This place is one of the notable horticultural projects of the county, Doctor Hamilton having developed an orchard of between 1,800 and 2,000 fruit trees.

Doctor Hamilton has been a member of the City Council of Mannington, and in the spring of 1918 was elected mayor. He was in the office during the World war. In that time the streets were filled with thousands of drafted men and their relatives and friends, Mannington being the drafting center for Marion County outside of Fairmont. Under such conditions the city was so well policed that there was not a single accident, tragic or otherwise. In 1918 Doctor Hamilton was elected a member of the West Virginia Legislature. In the session of 1921 he introduced a joint resolution, adopted, requesting the Federal Government to select Berkeley Springs in Morgan County as the site for one of the five soldier sanitariums which the Government contemplated building in different parts of the country. This subject is still pending, only one of the sites having been selected to date. Doctor Hamilton was appointed a member of the Board of Trustees of Berkeley Springs by Governor Morgan.

In August, 1888, Doctor Hamilton married Miss Bessie J. Bassett, daughter of Festus D. Bassett, of Mannington. Doctor and Mrs. Hamilton have two sons. Dale H., born August 25, 1894, is a graduate of agriculture and horticulture from West Virginia University and now has charge of his father's fruit farm. During the World war he was in the Government's Spruce Division on the Pacific Coast, where he had charge of eight hundred men in getting out spruce timber for airplane building. Dale H. Hamilton married Carla Lee Yorgensen, of the State of Washington, and they have one daughter, Phyllis Jean, born October 19, 1921.

Dewey Dallas, born March 17, 1898, is now a student in the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati. He took two years of preparatory work for his medical course in West Virginia University, and was there during the war, and had volunteered and entered the Officers Training Camp at Camp Taylor, Kentucky, but the armistice was signed before a commission was issued.

MARSHALL COLLEGE, which is Huntington's largest institution contributing to the reputation of that city as an educational center, is primarily a teachers' college, preparing students to teach and supervise, but a great many men and women have received a portion of their general education there in preparation for business or professional careers.

The present institution is the outgrowth of Marshall Academy, established in 1837, shortly after the death of Chief Justice John Marshall, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in whose honor the school was named. It was organized as a private institution. In 1856 the work of the Academy was enlarged and reorganized, and the name changed to Marshall College.

The Civil war greatly affected the fortunes of the school. So serious was the situation at its close that a number of leading citizens in this section of the new state of West Virginia succeeded in having the Legislature take it over as a state normal school; normal in name, but wholly academic in organization and in fact, and such it remained with varying fortune, save a little teaching of pedagogy, school management, etc., until 1897, when a practice school of one grade was organized; but the state refused to support it, and, accordingly, this nucleus was abandoned after two years of unappreciated effort to develop the normal training feature, and the school continued as an academic institution as before.

In January, 1902, the department of education was organized, and a model or practice school for teachers was opened. This was the first step toward normal school work in the state, and the school has since then been officially known as Marshall College.

The school was established on the site of the present eastern section of College Hall thirty-four years before the founding of the City of Huntington. None of the records of the school during the period of time it was an academy are preserved. During the time of the war they were lost or destroyed, and it has been impossible to bring together any reliable data concerning the early days. All reliable statistics with reference to Marshall College date from the year 1867.

The president of Marshall College is Frederic R. Hamilton, a graduate of the University of Wisconsin. The vice president and professor of literature is C. E. Haworth, a graduate of Colgate University.

MOSES TAMBURINI. This is the name of the veteran merchant of Bayard, Grant County, where he has been selling goods and building up a fine mercantile service in that mining community for nearly thirty years. His career is an interesting example of an American of foreign birth who came to this country with neither capital nor influential friends and has made good both in business and good citizenship.

He was born at Trentino in Tyrol of Austria, April 23, 1859. His father, John Tamburini, was born in the same locality and his ancestors had lived there for generations. John Tamburini married Margaret Bertini, and both died and were buried near their old home. The father was a farmer and millwright. Of their four children three grew to mature years: Mary, who married Bartholomew Girardin and lives in Tyrol; Moses; and Henry, who after spending some years in the United States and West Virginia returned and is now living in his native country.

Moses Tamburini as a boy learned farming as practiced in the mountain country of Austria, also the trade of millwright, and had a limited education in the common schools. On leaving home he spent a year or so in France, chiefly employed in and near the City of Paris. His last work in that country was quarrying stone for the building of high fences to enclose the vast estate of the wealthy Rothschilds near Paris.

Leaving France, he started for New York, and passed through old Castle Garden with his wardrobe as his chief capital. He arrived in this country March 23, 1883. He and a shipmate who had traveled with him went to Philadelphia, and there through an employment office they were directed to a farmer who wanted help. Eleven dollars a month and board was the highest wage offered, less money than they were making in France, and they finally decided to look elsewhere. They took the pike leading to Cincinnati, and followed it until their money was exhausted. This brought them within about a mile of Bayard and to a point where the old West Virginia Central Railroad was then in progress of construction. They secured their first employment in America with the construction company, and did common labor until the road reached the top of the mountain. Remaining with the same company, the two young foreigners labored in the stone quarry and also in the mines of the company until January, 1885.

At that date Mr. Tamburini started off to see more of America, and going by way of Chicago and Minneapolis and over the Great Northern reached Portland, Oregon. Business was dull there, and further travel and investigation offered no special opportunities in California. He spent a couple of days at Seattle, Washington, and while there visited the Yakima tunnel, then in process of construction, saw Tacoma, and after several months of very intermittent employment and little beyond the pleasure of travel to reward him he returned to West Virginia in April, 1885.

Then for a few months he again did railroad work, and was in the mines digging coal until February, 1893. At that date he went back to his old home in Tyrol, but in April again came to America, and resumed work in the mines for the West Virginia Central. In 1894 occurred the great industrial strike, and he then gave up mining for good. About that time he decided to marry the young woman of his choice and who had consented to travel life's highway with him. They were married at her old home at Keyser, and set up housekeeping in Bayard.

In 1894 Mr. Tamburini opened his first stock of merchandise, a stock of groceries in Bayard, and his splendid mercantile enterprise today is located on the very spot where he started in that year. From groceries his trade gradually expanded to general merchandising, including departments of millinery, furniture and building material, and his is the most popular place to supply the needs of merchandise in the little mining town.

Besides his work as a merchant Mr. Tamburini helped organize the First Bayard National Bank, and has served as president of that prosperous institution from the beginning. He has declined public office, having no inclination for politics beyond voting as a good citizen. He took out his first papers as a citizen at Keyser in 1887, and two years later received his final papers in the same court. He has been a democrat throughout his voting career. He was reared a Catholic, and is still in the same faith.

The date of his marriage was August 9, 1894. The name of his bride was Margaret Hughes. She was born in Mineral County, West Virginia, about a year younger than her husband. Her father, Terence Hughes, was born in the town and county of Longford, Ireland, where he married Mary Kenny. They came to the United States during the administration of President Andrew Jackson, and after moving about the country several years settled at old Hampshire, West Virginia, where Mrs. Tamburini was born. Terence Hughes helped build the tunnels in the construction of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, and in later life was a coal miner. He died about the close of the Civil war and was buried in the cemetery at Frostburg, Maryland. His widow survived him until 1899, being about ninety-five years of age when she died. There were ten children in the Hughes family, the four survivors being: Mrs. Elizabeth Moore, of Washington, D. C.; James, of Western Port, Maryland; Francis Hughes, of Mount Savage, Maryland; and Mrs. Tamburini. Of the deceased children Peter the oldest, left two sons; Mary, who married Michael Murphy, was survived by ten children; Mrs. Bridget Halp was survived by five children.

Mrs. Tamburini was educated in the public schools. West Virginia, attended the Shenandoah Normal School and was a very popular and successful teacher for eleven years. She was teaching when she met her husband at El Garden, Mineral County. Of the four children born to Mr. and Mrs. Tamburini three survived. Mary Josephine, graduate of DeSales Heights Academy at Parkersburg and who finished a normal course in the preparatory school at Keyser, is a teacher in the Bayard schools. The son John is a graduate of Duquesne University of Pittsburgh and his brother Terence graduated from the same school. The sons are actively associated with their father's business at Bayard.

JAMES O. SHINN is president of the Point Pleasant National Bank, at Point Pleasant, the judicial center of Mason County, an institution of which specific record is given on other pages of this work, so that further description is not demanded in the present article.

Mr. Shinn, known and valued as one of the influential citizens and representative business men of Mason County, was born in this county, on the 19th of February, 1855. His father, George W. Shinn, was born in Harrison County, Virginia (now West Virginia), and was a representative of the family in whose honor the Town of Shinnston, the county, was named. About 1830 he accompanied his parents on their removal to what is now Mason County, where the parents passed the remainder of their lives, the father Samuel Shinn, having developed one of the excellent farms of the locality and period and having been somewhat past the age of eighty years at the time of his death. As young man George W. Shinn married Miss Elizabeth Stoner of Jackson County, and he became an extensive farmer in Ripley District, that county, where he owned a landed estate of about 1,000 acres. He was a republican in politics and on the ticket of his party was elected a representative of Jackson County in the Lower House of the State Legislature, in which he served three terms. He was for eighteen years a member of the County Court of Jackson County, an organization made up of three commissioners, who select one of their number as presiding judge, this honorable preferment having come to Mr. Shinn. He was one of the leading citizens of Jackson County at the time of his death when sixty-three years of age, and his widow passed away at the venerable age of eighty-five years, she having retained splendid mental and physical powers and having frequently ridden horseback after she was eighty years old. Both were earnest members of the United Brethren Church and their pleasant and hospitable home was ever open to extend welcome and entertainment to the clergymen of the church. Their five sons and one daughter all survived the loved mother: Frederick is a prosperous farmer in Jackson County; Mrs. Permelia Randles likewise remains in Jackson County; James O., immediate subject of this review, was the next in order of birth; Reuben P. resides at Ripley, Jackson County, where he is president of the First National Bank and he is, in 1922, a member of the State Senate; John A. and Nathan N. are associated in the ownership and operations of a fine farm estate of 1,300 acres in Jackson County, including the old homestead of the parents.

James O. Shinn was reared on the home farm in Jackson County and received the advantages of the schools of the period. He served one term as sheriff of that county, and in this capacity conducted in 1897 the last public execution in the state, his earnest efforts having been the principal influence in causing the laws of the state to be so changed that all criminals sentenced to death are executed at the state penitentiary. In 1908 Mr. Shinn was elected to represent the Fourth District in the State Senate, his constituent senatorial district comprising Roane, Jackson and Mason counties. In the Senate he was assigned to various important committees, including that on agricul-re, of which he was made chairman. Through his effective championship was effected a valuable amendment to the seed law of the state, greatly to the advantage of agriculturists, and he obtained also a change in the city charter of Point Pleasant, by which the power to license saloons was transferred from the jurisdiction of the city council to that of the County Court, the result being the elimination of the saloon business at Point Pleasant. In connection an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the state, which upheld the law as enacted, Point Pleasant having thus become a prohibition town prior to the enactment of the national prohibition laws. Mr. Shinn made spirited campaign in Mason County in favor of submitting the prohibition amendment to the voters of the state, and the county gave a strong support to the movement. As member of the Senate he was active in the deliberations of the floor of the Upper House and in those of the various committees to which he was assigned. As a speaker he took an active part in the attempts to effect an organization of the Senate at the memorable time when its membership was so equally divided between republicans and democrats as to defeat such organization for a considerable period, the conflict between the opposing forces being such that fifteen republican members of the Senate went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and there passed several days. Senator Shinn opposed this action of the colleagues, and at first refused to leave the capital city, but he finally consented to accompany the republican members of the Senate to Cincinnati, though he felt at the time that the move was wrong, both politically and as a matter of justice to his constituents. He participated in the deliberations in Ohio city and finally determined to return alone to the West Virginia capital if necessary, but the other senators finally yielded to his counsel and returned to Charleston, where was effected with the opposition a compromise that resulted in an excellent organization of the legislative body and also in much wise and constructive legislation in the spring session.

Mr. Shinn has maintained his residence in Mason County since 1910, is the owner of a valuable farm property of 60 acres adjoining the city limits of Point Pleasant, and giving special attention to the breeding and raising of the best of superior types, his farm having an average herd of 150 head of fine cattle. While still a resident of Jackson County Mr. Shinn was president of the Valley Bank, Ripley, an institution later reorganized as the First National Bank, his brother R. P. having succeeded him in the presidency. Of his becoming president of the Point Pleasant National Bank due record is given in the sketch of the history of that bank elsewhere in this publication. He has proved a most careful and conscientious bank executive, with a fine sense of personal and official stewardship and with full appreciation of the responsibilities involved. On his farm he has a fine rural home, and this attractive residence, with its beautiful grounds, he purposes ultimately to endow as a home for orphan children. He continued a leader in the local councils of the republican party, has been affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for virtually a quarter of a century, is a past noble grand of the same and has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge of the state. He places high estimate upon the work and service of the various religious bodies, and is liberal in his support of the churches of his home city, where his wife is an active member of the United Brethren Church.

The maiden name of Mrs. Shinn was Mary Krebs, and she was born and reared in Mason County, where her father, late Charles Krebs, was a successful farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Shinn have no children, but in their home they have reared six children and given to each of them excellent educational advantages. Cora, Clara and May Krebs and Harry Carter have now departed from the home of the other parents, but Adam Krebs still remains with Mr. and Mrs. Shinn at the time of this writing, in the spring of 1922.

WILLIAM J. WALDIE is one of the progressive business men of Point Pleasant, county seat of Mason County, where he is president of the Point Pleasant Lumber Company, a corporation that was formed in 1921 and that bases its operations on a capital stock of $50,000. In addition to being president of the company Mr. Waldie is also its treasurer and general manager, E. H. Woelffel being vice president and M. G. Tyler, the secretary of the corporation. The large and well equipped retail yard of the company at Point Pleasant has already built up a most substantial and prosperous retail trade in the handling of lumber and general lines of building materials.

Mr. Waldie was born in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, in 1865, his father having been engaged in the meat-market business at Carnegie, that county. Mr. Waldie early gained practical experience in connection with lumber production, and as a youth was employed in the lumber woods and yards of Pennsylvania, Michigan and Oregon. He finally became a lumber salesman and later engaged in the retail lumber trade in his old home city of Carnegie. In 1907, at the height of the oil boom in Hancock County, West Virginia, he engaged in the lumber business at Hollidays Cove, that county. Later he went to the State of Oregon, where he had charge of lumber yards operated by the Stanley-Smith Lumber Company, in the employ of which corporation he continued five years. In the ensuing two years he built up a fine trade for the retail lumber yards of which he had charge at Norwalk, Ohio, and he next went to Houghton, on the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, where he was placed in charge of the retail department of a leading lumber concern, besides having general supervision of logging operations, with a force of 100 men. His service in this connection continued three years. In the course of twenty-five years he had made not infrequent visits to friends in West Virginia, and the impression he thus gained of the advantages and attractions of this state finally led him to establish his home at Point Pleasant and to organize the lumber company of which he is now the president and the business of which, under his vigorous management, has grown to substantial volume, with constantly cumulative tendencies. The yards of the company are situated in the north part of the city, above high-water mark on the river and thus immune from flood damage. Mr. Waldie is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Church at Point Pleasant, which he is serving as a steward and as teacher of the men's class in the Sunday school. He is an enthusiast in hunting and fishing, and while residing in Northern Michigan was a member of the Houghton Gun Club. He has many fine trophies acquired in his hunting expeditions, including deer heads handsomely mounted, and he has made many interesting hunting trips, in Michigan and other states, in his vacation periods, the while he is deeply concerned in game protection and preservation and the proper enforcement of game laws.

Mr. Waldie married Miss Elizabeth Dawson, of Carnegie, Pennsylvania, and they have three children: Thomas is associated actively with the lumber company of which his father is president. He was identified with the Government ship-building activities at Portland, Oregon, and after the close of the war he was identified with business interests at Hood River, that state, until about the opening of the year 1922, when he came to Point Pleasant and became associated with his father's lumber business. Stanley entered the nation's service, from Michigan in connection with the World war, and was assigned to the Motor Transport Corps. Jean, the only daughter, is the wife of Jamie Miller, of Norwalk, Ohio.

JAMES HENRY FELTON, who resides at Belington, Barbour County, was born and reared in this county and is a scion of one of the sterling pioneer families of this section of West Virginia. He was born September 30, 1859, on the old homestead farm in Philippi District, this county, five miles northeast of Philippi, in the beautiful valley of the Tygart River. His father, Daniel Felton, was born in Frederick County, Maryland, January 19, 1807, and in 1814 the family home was established in what is now Preston County, West Virginia, where his father, John Felton, became a pioneer farmer on the Cheat River, near Kingwood. Of John Felton further mention is made in the personal sketch of another grandson, Capt. John C. Felton, on other pages of this volume. Daniel Felton was reared under the conditions and influences of frontier life in the western part of the Old Dominion State, and in Barbour County was solemnized his marriage to Lucinda England, a daughter of John England, who was reared in Belington District and who, as a loyal supporter of the Union, was a member of the Home Guard during the Civil war. Daniel Felton became one of the substantial farmers and honored and influential citizens of Barbour County, and remained on his old homestead farm until his death, on the 24th of September, 1894. His widow, who was born in September, 1837, is still living (1922) and is eighty-four years of age at the time of this writing. Of their children James H., of this review, is the first born; Samuel D. is a farmer near Arden, this county; Sarah A. is the wife of J. E. Moore, a farmer in that locality; and Mary Ellen is the wife of Israel P. Fry, their home being in the State of Pennsylvania.

James H. Felton profited by the advantages of the rural and select schools, as is shown in his having been for six years a successful teacher in the schools of his native county, his final term having been in the Overfield school in Elk District. After retiring from the pedagogic profession he became actively identified with farm enterprise and in the manufacturing of and dealing in lumber and timber, with which later line of enterprise he has continued his connection, to a greater or less extent, to the present time, and besides which he still owns and has general supervision of his fine farm in his native county. He cast his first presidential vote in 1880, for General James A. Garfield, and has since continued his allegiance to the republican party. He remained on his farm until 1890, when he removed to Philippi, the county seat, upon his election to the office of clerk of the Circuit Court, a position which he retained six years. Thereafter he again resided on his farm until 1899, when he was appointed to the position of examiner of property accounts in the office of the quartermaster general in the United States Army and Navy Building in the City of Washington, D. C. His appointment came through Gen. Charles G. Dawes, who was the comptroller of the currency, and he became well acquainted with General Dawes, whose splendid powers were brought into service in connection with the nation's participation in the World war, and who has since proved one of the ablest men ever enlisted in the work of organizing the financial affairs of the Government upon a proper system of economic stability and retrenchment. Mr. Felton continued his service at Washington 3½ years, and he then returned to his farm, upon which his family had remained. Here he has continued his association with agricultural and live-stock industry and the lumber business, and he has maintained the family home in the City of Belington since August, 1912. Here he has given most effective service as president of the Board of Education of the independent district of Belington. The religious faith and affiliation of the family is that of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

September 22, 1885, recorded the marriage of Mr. Felton and Miss Lora D. Gall, who was born in Pleasant District, Barbour County, July 17, 1862, and who is a daughter of George W. and Elizabeth (Talbot) Gall. Gretchen, eldest of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Felton, is the wife of Atlee C. Bolton, of White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, and they have two children, Craig Felton and Margaret. Grace is the wife of R. M. Wylie, of Baltimore, Maryland. Minnie is the wife of Clarence Dilworth, of Huntington, West Virginia, and they have one son, Richard. Miss Prudence is principal of the Junior High School at Belington, she being a graduate of the West Virginia Wesleyan College, which her sisters likewise attended. Mrs. Wylie graduated from the Mountain State Business College and attended Marshall College, with which latter institution she was identified in a clerical and executive capacity for ten years. Mrs. Dilworth graduated from Marshall College, and prior to her marriage was a successful teacher in the public schools, including those of the City of Charleston. Miss Prudence Felton likewise graduated from the Mountain

State Business College at Parkersburg, and all of the sisters have proved successful and popular teachers.

ROBERT PIERRE BELL, of Point Pleasant, Mason County, is a representative figure in newspaper circles in West Virginia, where his precedence is based on his being editor, secretary-treasurer and general manager of the Register Publishing Company of Point Pleasant, which issues both daily and weekly editions, and by his being also editor an agent, as well as publisher, of the Methodist Advocate-Herald, the official organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the Western Virginia Conference.

The Point Pleasant Register was established in the year 1861 by George W. Tippet, who continued as its editor and publisher until he retired and was succeeded by his son Frank B., the latter having continued the publication of the weekly paper until 1909, when the plant and business passed to the control of the Register Publishing Company, which is incorporated under the laws of the state. L. C. Sommerville being president of the company and Robert P. Bell is secretary, treasurer and general manager. The weekly edition, with a circulation of 2,400, extends its influence over a wide radius of territory and is serving the second and third generations of citizens in its field. The daily Register has been published since 1916, and is maintained at a high standard, both as a news and advertising vehicle. The printing plant, representing a valuation of $65,000, is one of the best of its kind in the state, the equipment including three linotype machines, one Duplex and one Optimum power presses, printing direct from paper roll and all other facilities of a modern newspaper and job printing establishment. This plant also issues the Methodist Advocate-Herald, which was founded by the late Dr. T. J. Wade of Parkersburg, and which later was published by John A. Grose. In 1919 the publication passed to the ownership and control of the Methodist Publishing Company and Mr. Bell has since been editor and agent for this week periodical, which has wide circulation throughout the state and which is the official organ of the Western Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, this conference including West Virginia and portions of Virginia and Kentucky, to which states the circulation is extended. The Advocate-Herald is a sixteen-page weekly, issued in book paper of excellent grade, and is now in its twenty-sixth volume.

George W. Tippet, founder of the Point Pleasant Register, was a practical newspaper man of wide experience and was a pioneer in journalistic enterprise in West Virginia, the Register having been established in the opening year of the Civil war and having from the beginning been the present been an effective advocate of the principles of the democratic party.

Mr. Bell is also engaged in farming and stock raising in Mason County, and until recently was secretary of the Mason County Farm Bureau, of which he was one of the original organizers.

Robert P. Bell was born at Grantsville, Calhoun County, West Virginia, June 18, 1883, and is a son of William and Rachel R. (Ferrell) Bell, both natives of Calhoun County, the respective families having been founded in what is now West Virginia in the period of the Revolutionary war. Samuel Bell, grandfather of the subject of this review, was a gallant soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, and sacrificed his life in the cause, his death having occurred at Alton, Illinois, where he was held as a prisoner of war. Robert P. Bell passed the period of his childhood and early youth on his father's farm, at his initial incursion into the realm of the "art preservation of all arts" was made when he became an apprentice in the printing office of the old Grantsville Signal, of which C. H. Craddock was then editor and publisher. Later he advanced his education by taking an English course at Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tennessee, and in the meanwhile he proved his powers as a successful teacher in the public schools of his native state. In 1912 he became secretary of the Point Pleasant Nursery & Fruit Company and in 1913 he became associated with the Point Pleasant Register, of which he has been editor and general manager.

since 1914, besides being secretary and treasurer of the Register Publishing Company. He is a past grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in the Grand Lodge of which he has taken degrees also. His brother S. P. is a past grand master of the West Virginia Grand Lodge of his fraternity and a representative member of the bar of Spencer, Roane County, of which city he is serving as mayor in 1922. He was a delegate to the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the order at Baltimore, Maryland, and the family affiliation with the order has been one of prominence and influence for a long period of years. Mr. Bell has also taken its initial step in the Masonic fraternity of Point Pleasant. He is also a member of the local Kiwanis Club.

Mr. Bell has also served as mayor of the City of Point Pleasant. In 1914 he was the democratic nominee for clerk of the County Court of Mason County, being defeated by less than 100 votes, the county being considered republican by from 1,000 to 2,000.

June 1, 1909, recorded the marriage of Robert P. Bell and Miss Catherine L. Steinbach, who was born and reared in Mason County and who is a daughter of William C. and Sophia (Muench) Steinbach, the former of whom was a lad of thirteen years when he came to the United States from his native province of Saxony, Germany, his wife being a native of the United States, but her parents having been born in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Steinbach still maintain their home at Point Pleasant. Mr. and Mrs. Bell have four children: William Edgar, Robert Emerson, Esther Lee and Richard Steinbach.

JOHN F. LEWIS, sheriff of Mason County, has measured up to every qualification of good citizenship and business efficiency. He has been widely known over this section of West Virginia as a farmer and grower of fine livestock, still operates a dairy farm, and has bred and trained and owned some noted horses. The energy and vigor he has put into his private affairs and his public service came to him from a long line of distinguished soldiers and frontiersmen. His ancestry is one of the most notable possessed by any West Virginian.

The founder of his branch of the Lewis family was John Lewis, a son of Andrew and Mary (Calhoun) Lewis. He was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, but was born in France in 1773. While living in County Donegal, Ireland, he killed a landlord in resisting an illegal attempt to eject him from his possessions, and fled to Portugal and thence to America, first locating at Philadelphia. In 1732 he became the first white settler at Bellefonte in Augusta County, Virginia. He married in 1716, in Scotland, Margaret Lynn, and among their sons who gained special distinction in colonial American history were Andrew, Thomas, William, and Charles.

The direct ancestor of John F. Lewis was Andrew Lewis, who was born in Ireland about 1720. He and his brothers early became conspicuous in the frontier struggles. He was major in Washington's Virginia Regiment in the Western campaign of 1754-55. He was appointed brigadier general at the beginning of the period of hostilities of 1774, and was commander and chief at the battle of Point Pleasant on October 10, 1774. His brother, Col. Charles Lewis, was killed in that great battle with the Indians. During the Revolution Andrews Lewis served as a brigadier general. He died in 1781. His wife was Elizabeth Givens, and their sons were John, Thomas, Samuel, Andrew and William M. Thomas Lewis, son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Givens) Lewis, settled in Mason County, West Virginia, on lands granted his father for his services in the Indian campaigns of the revolution. Members of the Lewis family have been prominent in the community around Point Pleasant ever since. He married Sallie Thornton, and their children were Thomas, Andrew, William, Evans and Samuel.

Andrew Lewis, grandfather of Sheriff Lewis, married Annie Boswell. Their children were William, Pallas, Samuel and Columbus.

Pallas S. Lewis was born in 1823, and in early life was teacher and later a farmer, and died in middle age. He married in 1848 Hannah Barnett, who was born in 1831, daughter of William and Susie (Daugherty) Barnett. She died at the age of eighty-seven. A portion of the old Barnett homestead is still owned by John F. Lewis. John F. Lewis had four brothers: Andrew E., who lives on the old Miller farm near Point Pleasant; James C., whose home is on Three-mile Creek; Henry C., a locomotive engineer living at Covington, Kentucky; and William E., who died in early life.

John F. Lewis was born on the Kanawha River, three and one-half miles from Point Pleasant, January 26, 1862. He was reared on the farm, and at his father's death took over its management and remained at home until he was twenty-seven. In 1890 he married Margaret Schools, who was born in 1863, daughter of Paul and Mary Schools. John F. Lewis was first called into public service from the farm when he came to Point Pleasant as deputy sheriff under John C. Porter and R. L. Barnett. He held that office seven years, and in 1904 was appointed postmaster at Point Pleasant, an office he held for eleven years. In 1920 he was elected on the republican ticket to the office of sheriff, with a majority of between 1,400 and 1,600. His time has been completely devoted to the duties of this office, his son Harry being his deputy.

His dairy farm is on the old Barnett homestead. His herd consists of Jersey cattle, and in former years he also bred and exhibited Hereford cattle and won many honors at local fairs. Mr. Lewis has many of the traits and tastes of a native Kentuckian, particularly in the line of fine horses. He has bred both cattle and race horses, has trained many fine animals for the track and show ring, and he still keeps a fine saddle horse. Mr. Lewis has steadily indulged in every phase of an active outdoor life, and while he has mingled with men both in politics and socially he is an exemplar of strict temperance and has never gambled or drunk whiskey. He has been interested in community affairs, was a member of the school board eight years, and fraternally is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a member of the official board of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis had five children: Mary, deceased, Hannah, deceased, Harry, Sallie B., deceased, and Katie, who married Joseph Lunsford, of Point Pleasant, and has one daughter, Betty Joe, aged two years. Harry married Lou Gibbs and has two children, Mary Louise, six years of age, and Ruth Virginia, two years of age.

CHARLES B. SMITH, the resourceful and popular general manager of the Elkhorn Coal & Coke Company and the Fall Run Collieries Company, with headquarters at Maybenry, McDowell County, was born at Abbsvalley, Virginia, July 14, 1884. He is a scion of Scotch and Irish ancestry, and both his paternal and maternal forebears settled in Virginia in an early period. Mr. Smith is a son of John Marion and Margaret (Taylor) Smith, both natives of Virginia, the father having been a merchant at Abbsvalley and later having been for many years established in the wholesale coal and feed business at Salem, that state. John M. Smith was a gallant young soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war, as a member of the Sixteenth Virginia Infantry, recruited in Tazewell County. In battle he was shot through the breast, the bullet coming out of his back, but upon his recovery from this remarkable and severe injury he returned to his regiment, with which he served until the close of the war.

The early education of Charles B. Smith was acquired in the public schools of Salem and Graham, Virginia, and in the high school at Graham, that state. He then entered the historic old University of Virginia, in which he was graduated in 1907, with the degree of Civil Engineer. For seven months thereafter he was an engineer on road-construction work in Cuba, and upon his return to the United States he entered professional service in the West Virginia coal fields. For three months he was employed as an engineer for the Red Jacket Coal Company, and for eight years thereafter he was mining engineer for the Empire Coal & Coke Company. At the expiration of this period he assumed his present office, that of general manager of the Elkhorn Coal & Coke Company. He is known as an able executive, as a man of exceptional technical ability in his profession, and as the genial, whole-souled and considerate personality who gains and retains the high regard of those employed under his supervision.

Mr. Smith is a man of fine physical powers, and is fond of out-door sports and recreation. He is a member of the Bluefield Country Club and is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his wife is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in the faith of which she was reared.

In 1915, at Glad Springs, Virginia, Mr. Smith wedded Miss Edna Bonham, daughter of Ballard M. and Emma (Crotty) Bonham, her father having been for many years engaged in the hotel business and being now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have two children: Charles B., Jr., and Margaret Taylor.

STEPHEN B. THOMPSON was the first and has been the only cashier of the Roane County Bank, and his long and faithful service with that institution has undoubtedly contributed in large measure to its solid resources and undoubted integrity as one of the most successful banking institutions in this part of the state.

Mr. Thompson, who first and last has had a number of other interesting and useful relations with his home community, was born in Roane County July 5, 1867. His grandfather, William W. Thompson, was born in old Virginia in 1812, and on coming West first settled in Harrison County and in 1862 located in Roane County, where he lived until his death in 1882. His first wife and the grandmother of the Spencer banker, was a Miss Jackson, a native of Harrison County, who died there in 1845. She was the mother of three sons and two daughters, all now deceased. The second wife of William W. Thompson was Susanna Morrow, who was born in Harrison County and died in Roane County. Their family consisted of one son and two daughters, and the only survivor is Thomas Albert, now a retired merchant at Spencer.

Francis M. Thompson, father of Stephen B., was born in Harrison County January 1, 1844, and was about eighteen years of age when his parents removed to Roane County, locating a mile south of Spencer. About that time he joined the Confederate Army, and served three years. He was at the battle of Gettysburg and later was captured and for the last nine months of the war was in a Federal prison at Point Lookout, Maryland. His active civil life was devoted to farming, and he was one of the prosperous men of his day in Roane County. He retired to Spencer in 1911, and he died at the home of his son William in Charleston in December, 1919. He was a democrat and a member of the Baptist Church. Francis M. Thompson married Susan S. Daniell, who was born in Roane County in 1848, and died at Spencer in 1913. Stephen B. is the oldest of their children. William is a traveling salesman with home at Charleston; Robert Lee died at the homestead at Walnut Grove at the age of fourteen; Charles W. is a resident of Vallejo, California, and for the past ten years has been an employe in the Mare Island Navy Yard; Rossell G. is a farmer at Radnor, Ohio; Homer F., a resident of Charleston, is district manager for the wholesale tea and coffee house of William S. Skull & Company.

Stephen B. Thompson spent his early life on his father's farm near Spencer, attended the rural school, and in 1886 taught a term of school in Roane County. During 1887 he was a student in the Fairmont State Normal, and after leaving there resumed teaching in Roane County, and some of his older friends and associates recall his good work as a teacher during the years 1887 to 1891. In 1891 Mr. Thompson was appointed deputy County Court clerk, and those duties took him to Spencer. He filled that office until 1898, and on August 8, 1898, took his place as cashier of the Roane County Bank. This bank was opened for business on that date, and it has steadily maintained its service as a general banking institution, with constant increase in resources and good will. This bank has capital stock of $50,000, its surplus and undivided profits amount to $115,000 and the deposits average $800,000. The executive officers are: C. S. Vandal, president; Harry C. Wood, vice president; and S. B. Thompson, cashier.

Mr. Thompson is also treasurer of the Roane County Building & Loan Association, is a director and stockholder in the Roane Grocery Company, wholesale, and does an extensive business in general insurance, writing fire, accident and health policies. He is a democrat in politics and has served five different terms in the city council, his last term in that body expiring in April, 1921. He is treasurer of the Methodist Protestant Church, is a past grand of Campbell Lodge No. 101, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Spencer, and is a member of the Spencer Rotary Club. During the war he was treasurer of the Roane County Chapter of the Red Cross, and was chairman of the county committee for the third and fourth Liberty Loan drives both of which went over the top with an excess of quota. Mr. Thompson and family live in a modern home at 212 Front Street. He married at Parkersburg in 1893 Miss Ida May McMillan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jordan R. McMillan, now deceased. Her father was a farmer. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Thompson. Ronald E., born August 23, 1894, is a druggist at Spencer; Ida Kathleen, born September 21, 1896, is a graduate with the A. B. degree from Wellesley College, Massachusetts, and is a member of the Zeta Alpha sorority. On the 5th of July, 1922, she was married to Austin Davis Twigg, of Baltimore where they make their home. The youngest, Marion C. born in November, 1900, has recently graduated from the U. S. Military Academy at Annapolis, and is now a junior officer in the navy, being now an officer on the flagship of the Asiatic Fleet.

HON. URIAH BARNES. While he has practiced law successfully and has been an influential member of the Legislature, Uriah Barnes is now and will be in the future known permanently for his remarkable industry and his mature scholarship as a legal writer and contributor to the literature of the legal profession.

He was born in Jackson County, West Virginia, in 1838. His father, Charles W. Barnes, was a native of Ohio, and the Town of Barnesville, Ohio, was named for the family. Charles W. Barnes about 1875 settled in Jackson County, West Virginia, and is still living there. Uriah Barnes was accustomed to farm labor when a boy, secured his education in public schools, and also attended West Virginia University. At the age of sixteen he began teaching, and taught for two terms.

His home has been at Charleston since 1901. He finished a business course in Elliott's Business College, did clerical work in several offices, and in the meantime was diligently studying law and qualified for practice in 1908. The next four years he was at the state capitol with the Supreme Court of Appeals, briefing cases for the use of the judges of that court. No law school could offer opportunities for a more thorough training for a young lawyer, and it was in this work that Mr. Barnes improved his talent for a legal analysis and a clear statement that distinguished his own publications. For years he has been a student of the best in standard and general literature as well as in his own field. For years he was a law instructor in the University College of Law and for one year was secretary of the College of Agriculture and the Experiment Station at Morgantown. His literary work has been done both as an editor and author, and he has contributed a number of articles to law encyclopedias. Recently he compiled and edited the ordinances of Charleston. His first important achievement was editing the "West Virginia Code" of 1916, making a careful and exhaustive study of all state statutes. This was issued in a handy form, but has recently been fully revised to include all the laws down to 1922, with full annotations to the same date, and has been published as "Barnes' West Virginia Code of 1922, Annotated." One or the other of these books is probably known to every practicing attorney in West Virginia and in many other states as well.

In 1919 his "Barnes' Federal Code" appeared. This book is now the standard and monumental work in its field.

Ulrich Barner

The American Law Review said: "It marks an epoch in law publishing." The "Bench and Bar of West Virginia," by Judge Atkinson, speaks of this work as follows: "He brought to bear in this work a comprehensive knowledge, a sound and discriminating judgment, a genius for editorial detail that have combined to bring him universal recognition as a master in his field. The remarkable sale of the Federal Code in every state in the Union and abroad, and the unsolicited encomiums upon it, coming from bench and bar and from eminent scholars and educators throughout the country, attest its rank as a masterpiece of compilation."

Mr. Barnes was elected to the House of Delegates in 1920 as a member from Kanawha County. He served on the judiciary committee and the committee on public buildings and humane institutions, and was sponsor for a law creating the State Board of Children's Guardians, and the State Training School for Mental Defectives. He introduced a minimum wage bill, which was killed in committee, and was author of a bill favored by many of the ablest lawyers and judges of the state for the reform of the judicial procedure.

Mr. Barnes has participated in a number of republican campaigns and has attended three national conventions of the party. He has a mind of remarkable power, and has carried on his studies and investigations over a large field involving sociology, economics, political science and history, as well as the literature of his own profession. He is a member of the Methodist Church.

Mr. Barnes married Lena Belle Lee, and they have two children, Hugh and Margaret.

CLERC ALEXANDER PARRISH is manager and one of the proprietors of the industry and business at Spencer that supplies the principal service in building materials and lumber manufacture for Roane County. Members of the family have been in the timber and lumber business for a number of years, and Mr. Parrish is one of the most substantial figures in the community.

He comes of pioneer and frontier stock of old West Virginia. His great-great-grandfather and great-grandfather were frontiersmen in the real sense, living in West Virginia when Indians and big game both flourished here. Both these ancestors were named William Parrish, and were born in England, and were pioneers in the vicinity of Fairmont. They were family connections of the noted Morgan family of that region. The grandfather, also named William Parrish, was born at Fairmont in 1804, moved out of that locality to the vicinity of Mannington and in 1855 to Elizabeth in Wirt County, and in 1868 established his home at Ripley. He spent all his life engaged in agricultural pursuits, and was a very successful and influential citizen. He was a democrat in politics, and died at Ripley in 1886. William Parrish married Elizabeth Hamilton, who was born near Fairmont in 1804, and died at Ripley in 1896.

Caldor H. Parrish, father of Clerc A. Parrish, was born at Mannington in Marion County in 1848, and lived there until he was seven years of age, when his parents moved to Elizabeth, where he remained until he was twenty, and since then has been a resident of Ripley, Jackson County. Farming is his business, and he is still active in the growing and feeding of cattle and other livestock. He is a democrat, and a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, doing much to keep up the work of this denomination. Caldor H. Parrish married Mary Frances Parsons, who was born at Middleport, Ohio, in 1856. Their family consists of the following children: Della, of Spencer, widow of William Huddleston, who was a lumber dealer; Abbie D., wife of Benjamin D. Shatto, a baker at Spencer; Homer Clinton, a grocer and clothing merchant at Spencer; Grace Elizabeth, wife of Allie B. Gainer, owner and operator of the Spencer meat market; Clerc Alexander, wife of Iden M. McWhorter, a merchant at McWhorter in Harrison County; Marie E., wife of Everett M. Inmett, assistant cashier of the Roane County Bank of Spencer; Isabelle, wife of Henry D. Goff, and both are now pursuing advanced studies in the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor; and John C., assistant manager of the Spencer Planing Mills.

gann at Ann Arbor; and John C., assistant manager of the Spencer Planing Mills.

Clerc Alexander Parrish was born at Ripley in Jackson County December 5, 1884, and acquired his early education in the public schools there. In 1907 he graduated from Branniger's Business College at Parkersburg, and for two years he studied law in the office of his cousin, Oscar Parsons, at Ripley. He abandoned his ambition in the law to become a practical business man. From 1909 to 1913 Mr. Parrish was a merchant at Spencer. He then bought the planing mill and lumber yard of his brother-in-law, William Huddleston, deceased, and he and his sister, Mrs. William Huddleston, are now partners and sole proprietors of this successful industry. The firm deals in lumber and building supplies, and works up a great deal of native timber in the planing mill.

Mr. Parrish is a democrat, a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, is affiliated with Ripley Lodge No. 16, F. and A. M., is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of West Virginia Consistory No. 1 at Wheeling, is a member of Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg, and belongs to the Spencer Rotary Club.

His business interests include, besides the lumber and planing mill, a large amount of valuable property in Roane County. He has three tracts, each containing eight acres of valuable land, one a mile west of Spencer, one a mile south and one a mile north. He also has 335 acres on Mill Creek in Jackson County. In 1921 he put up two dwelling houses at Spencer, and his own home is a modern residence on the Arnoldsburg Pike, a mile east of Spencer, where his home is surrounded by five acres of ground.

In 1916, at Spencer, Mr. Parrish married Miss Virginia Louise Godfrey, daughter of Albert and Elizabeth (Bireley) Godfrey, the latter a resident of Spencer. Her father, who died at Parkersburg, was an oil operator. Mrs. Parrish is a graduate of the Parkersburg High School and finished her education in an art school in Tennessee. The two children born to their marriage are Robert Godfrey, born October 5, 1917, and Jackson Clerc, born June 3, 1920.

ROY L. McCULTY is one of the younger group of progressive citizens in Roane County, where he has been a teacher, banker, public official, and had an interesting record of service during the World war. He is the present County Court clerk.

Mr. McCulty was born at Schilling in Roane County September 6, 1889. The McCultys came from Ireland to Virginia in Colonial times. His grandfather, William McCulty, was born in Virginia in 1820, was married in Hardy County, West Virginia, and soon afterward settled in Roane County, where he lived his life as a farmer until his death at Schilling in 1897. His wife was Angeline Cooper, who was born in Hardy County in 1825, and died at Schilling in 1907. Henry S. McCulty, father of County Court Clerk McCulty, was born at Arnoldsburg, Calhoun County, West Virginia September 12, 1864, and as a young man moved to Schilling, where he married and where he lived on a farm for several years. In 1891 he entered the ministry of the Methodist Protestant Church, and has been an active and prominent worker in that denomination, preaching in Roane, Ritchie and Pleasants counties, and is now pastor of the Weston Circuit at Weston in Lewis County. He is a republican, and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Rev. Mr. McCulty married Elizabeth Coo, who was born in North Carolina January 19, 1868. Their children are: Homer S., an undertaker at Pennington in Ritchie County; Roy L.; Kenna, an attendant in the Ohio Hospital at Athens; William G., a merchant at Spencer; Floral Ruth, wife of Alva Locke, a stationary engineer at St. Mary's, West Virginia; Harry K., who clerks in a general store at Spencer; Hallie Curtis, a coal miner at Weston; and Clifford, living with his parents at Weston.

Roy L. McCulty acquired a rural school education in Roane County, attending school to the age of seventeen, and for seven years taught in the rural districts. He acquired his first knowledge of the office with which he is now connected as deputy County Court clerk, and continued so until 1913. In that year he became a clerk in the First National Bank of Spencer and remained until he enlisted February 22, 1918. Mr. McCulty was in Camp Upton, New York, until May 27, 1918, when he went overseas with the Thirty-ninth Engineers, attached to the Seventy-seventh Division. He was with his command on the firing line in the Toul sector for four months, and while there was made a line sergeant. Following that for six months he was at Beaune, and for four months was at Dijon, and while there was promoted to be a sergeant of the first class. Mr. McCulty after more than a year overseas returned to the United States July 8, 1919, and received his honorable discharge at Camp Lee, Virginia, on the 19th of July. On returning home he resumed work in the First National Bank of Spencer, remaining there until August, 1920.

Mr. McCulty was elected County Court clerk of Roane County in November, 1920, and began his six year term on January 1, 1921. He was elected on the republican ticket. He is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church and is secretary of Maria Lodge No. 38, F. and A. M., at Spencer, member of Spencer Chapter No. 42, R. A. M., is a past grand of Campbell Lodge No. 101, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a member of the American Legion.

HARLEN SIMON CRUMMETT is state superintendent for the Ohio Fuel Oil Company, with headquarters at Spencer. He is a veteran of the oil district of West Virginia and comes of a family that has supplied many expert and technical men to the oil industry.

Mr. Crummett was born in Ritchie County October 26, 1880. His grandfather, Jacob Crummett, was born in Pendleton County, West Virginia, in 1822, but spent his active life as a farmer in Ritchie County and was also a lay preacher of the Methodist Church. He died on his farm four miles southeast of Harrisville, at the head of Dog Run, in Ritchie County, in 1907. His wife, Mahala Simmons, was born in Pendleton County in 1822, and is still living with her children, a centenarian. Her son, George F. Crummett, was born in Ritchie County October 24, 1853, and since his marriage has lived on one farm, located seven miles south of Harrisville in that county. Besides farming he has followed the trade of carpenter. He is a republican, an active worker in the Methodist Church and a member of the Odd Fellows. George F. Crummett married Mary Alice Wilson, who was born in Ritchie County June 3, 1856. They became the parents of a large family of children: Mrs. Bernice Westfall, of Ritchie County, whose husband is a teamster; Harlen Simon; Jacob, an oil field worker who died in Oklahoma at the age of thirty-six; Valera, wife of Raymond Haugh, an oil and gas well driller in Ritchie County; Clarence Albert, an oil field worker living at Robinson, Illinois; Howard, district foreman for the South Penn Oil Company in Ritchie County; Carrie, at home, widow of Charles Bogges, a painter by trade, who died in Ritchie County; Glenn, an oil field worker in Ritchie County; Sadie, wife of Charles Cowan, a worker in the oil fields in Ritchie County.

Harlen Simon Crummett spent the first sixteen years of his life on his father's farm in Ritchie County, and while there attended the rural schools. On leaving home he found employment in the oil fields, beginning in the Cairo field of Ritchie County. In 1899 he entered the service of the Southern Oil Company, with which he remained seven years, beginning as a roustabout and then in the capacity of pumper. For two years following that he was foreman for this company, and in 1908 came into the Rock Creek field of Roane County for the South Penn Oil Company, in the capacity of a gang pusher for eleven months. Leaving that corporation, he has since been with the Ohio Fuel Oil Company, serving as a roustabout three years in the Hammack field of Roane County, subsequently was a foreman until January, 1919, at which date he was given the responsibility of superintendent of all the West Virginia operations of this company. Mr. Crummett has had his home at Spencer since the fall of 1917. He has a force of a hundred men under his supervision. He owns a modern home on Front Street in Spencer.

He was thoroughly alive to his patriotic responsibilities during the World war, and took an active part in promoting the success of the various drives in his section. He is a republican and a member of the Baptist Church. In 1902 in Ritchie County, he married Miss Elizabeth Weinrick, a native of that county. They are the parents of three daughters: Thelma, born May 23, 1903, is the wife of Carl C. Hunt, an oil field worker living at Gay in Jackson County; Freda, born May 11, 1905, is in the junior class of the Spencer High School; Mildred, born February 21, 1907, is also in her third year in high school.

REUBEN MILLARD THOMASSON, representing a family that has been identified with Roane County nearly a century, is one of the ablest citizens and business men of Spencer where for some years he has devoted his talents to building up a very successful general insurance business.

His great-great-grandfather was G. W. Thomasson, who came from Scotland to Boston, Massachusetts. His son John Poindexter Thomasson was born in Dinwiddie County, Virginia, in 1784, and as early as 1829 he acquired his first lands in Curtis District of Roane County, and in the early '40s he established his permanent home in that district. He was one of the very wealthy and influential men of old Virginia and of West Virginia. For one term he sat in Congress, and he was a member of the lobby in the Virginia Legislature promoting the formation of Roane County. He was a democrat in politics. His land holdings made him one of the wealthiest citizens of old Virginia. In 1857 he paid taxes on more than 47,000 acres. In 1865 he owned at least 300,000 acres, distributed over Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky. John P. Thomasson died in Curtis District of Roane County in March, 1867. He grew up in Louisa County, Virginia, where in 1806 he married Nancy Hancock, who was born in that county in 1784 and died in Roane County in 1870. Mordecai James Thomasson, grandfather of the Spencer business man, was born in Louisa County, Virginia, in 1817, and spent his active life as a farmer in Curtis District of Roane County, where he died in January, 1867. He married Susan Rader, a native of Jackson County, who died in Curtis District.

Lewis L. Thomasson, their son, was born in Roane County January 20, 1850, and spent all his active life there as a farmer. When he retired in 1917 he moved to Akron, Ohio, where he died April 23, 1919. He was active in the democratic party, served a number of terms as constable, was a pillar in his Baptist Church and was affiliated with the Junior Order United American Mechanics. Lewis L. Thomasson married Emaline Parsons, who was born September 13, 1852, in Roane County, and is now living with her son Hoyt at Akron, Ohio. Her children were Ida A. wife of Forest W. Heaton, a machinist at Akron; Lonnie, a farmer near Urbana, Ohio; Harvey A., a building contractor at Akron; Clyde Clayton, a street car conductor at Akron; Hoyt, an employee of the Firestone Rubber Company at Akron; and Reuben Millard.

Reuben M. Thomasson was born in the Curtis District of Roane County October 10, 1879, and for the first eighteen years lived on his father's farm. It is interesting to note that all his education was acquired in one schoolhouse in Curtis District, a school that he attended three and a half months each year from the age of eight until he was eighteen. When he left home soon afterward Mr. Thomasson became a fireman on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad out of Grafton, and six months later left railroading to become an employee in the general store of M. DePue & Sons of Kyger, where he remained two years. The next two years he worked in the compounding department of the Diamond Rubber Company at Akron, and in 1903 began his experience as an insurance man at Spencer. While getting in this business he was employed in a grocery store at Spencer from 1903 to 1906, and from 1908 until January, 1911, had charge of the Spencer Drug Store. Since then he has devoted his time exclusively to general insurance business and the facilities of his organization extend all over the county. In life insurance he represents the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, and represents eight of the standard fire insurance companies, his offices being in the Kelley Building on Market Street.

Aaron T. Hess' war record is numbered among those on the "honor-roll" in the Confederate Museum at Richmond, Virginia.

Soon after the close of the war between the states Mr. Hess entered the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. He was soon advanced to the position of train conductor, and he continued in the service of this railroad corporation twenty-seven years. In the meanwhile he had established his wife and his son Edward L. in mercantile business at the corner of North Queen Street and Hess Avenue in Martinsburg, and they made the enterprise very successful. To assist them in the conducting of the business Mr. Hess finally felt it incumbent upon him to resign his railroad position. He was postmaster of Substation A located in his store. In 1910 his son Edward assumed full management of the business, and Mr. and Mrs. Hess have since lived retired, in the enjoyment of an attractive home and surrounded by friends who are tried and true.

At the age of thirty-three years Mr. Hess wedded Miss Elizabeth C. Staub, who was born in Martinsburg, Virginia, a daughter of Henry L. Staub, who was born and reared in Baden, Germany, and who was a young man when, as the only representative of the immediate family to take such action, through the advice of his uncle he came to the United States and established his residence in Martinsburg, Virginia. Three of his paternal uncles, Henry, Philip and Jacob Staub, preceded him to America. In Martinsburg Henry L. Staub married Eva Margaret Heiningner, who likewise was born in Baden, Germany. Mr. Staub was a miller, and for a term of years followed the milling business at Martinsburg, Virginia (now West Virginia). He finally removed to Frederick County, Virginia, where he purchased an extensive farm and mill on Green Spring Run, and there he lived, near Winchester, until the close of his life, when he was seventy-three years of age. Mrs. Eva Margaret (Heiningner) Staub died at the age of thirty years and six months, and was survived by four children: Mary M., Elizabeth C., John F. and Louisa Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Hess became the parents of seven children: Edward Lee, Frank Tilden, Mary Virginia, Henry Hunter, Margaret Catherine, Carrie Leonora and Nellie Estelle.

Edward Lee, who met his death in an automobile accident November 22, 1914, married Mary Becker, who survives him, as does also one son, James Frederick. Frank Tilden Hess married Bessie McPherson, of Baltimore, Maryland, where they reside, and he is president of the Hess Printing Company of Baltimore. Carrie Leonora is the widow of Carroll G. Henkel, born near Spokane, Washington State, and has three children, Carroll Hess, Elizabeth Catherine and Virginia Marnell. Nellie Estelle is the widow of Prof. Martin L. Wachtel, and she has two sons, Martin L. and William Hess, twins, born in Martinsburg, West Virginia.

Mr. Hess is a democrat in political adherence, is affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans, and he and his wife are earnest communicants of St. John's Lutheran Church at Martinsburg.

CHARLES W. CAMPBELL has been engaged in the practice of his profession in the City of Huntington since 1885, and is not only one of the leading members of the bar of Cabell County, but is a citizen who has exerted much influence in public affairs and civic life and who has served in various offices of public trust.

Mr. Campbell was born on a farm in Monroe County, West Virginia, September 29, 1856, and is a son of Robert D. and Mary Catherine (Johnson) Campbell, who continued their residence in that county until their deaths, the father having been one of the substantial farmers of the county.

Charles W. Campbell, one of a family of ten children, was reared to the discipline of the home farm, and he acquired his preliminary education by attending the district schools. He made substantial progress in his studies and as a youth put his acquirements to practical test by becoming a teacher in the schools of his native county. At Hamlin, judicial center of Lincoln County, he read law, and upon examination before three Circuit Court judges, Evermont Ward, Ira J. McGinnis and David E. Johnson, he was admitted to the bar in April, 1881. Thereafter he was engaged in practice at Hamlin for four years, at the expiration of which, in 1885, he removed to the City of Huntington, which has continued as the central stage of his successful professional activities during the intervening period of nearly thirty-six years. Mr. Campbell is a member of the Cabell County Bar Association, the West Virginia Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He served one term as president of the state association. He is a democrat in political allegiance, and has been active in the councils of his party. In the autumn of 1885 he was appointed assistant prosecuting attorney of Cabell County and as such he served somewhat more than three years. He was elected a member of the city council, gave six years effective service and was the only democratic member of council, comprising twelve members. In 1911 Mr. Campbell was elected to the House of Representatives of the State Legislature, in which he made an excellent record and served as chairman of the important judiciary committee. In 1919 he was elected mayor of Huntington, and in that administration he brought to bear the force and resolute purpose to achieve the special objects that had prompted his selection for the office. The city had been operating under a somewhat loose municipal system, and the protection of the better element of citizens was shown in the election of Mr. Campbell, who effectively carried out his promise of enforcing existing laws. As a result it may be noted that Huntington is the only city in the state that enforces closing of business places on Sunday, this being but one of numerous improvements effected in the government of the city. Mr. Campbell is an elder and active member of the Presbyterian Church in his home city.

He married Miss Jennie Ratliff, of Wayne, this state, a lady had five children: Nannie Marie is the wife of Colman A. Staats; Ruth is the wife of Archibald M. Hewi Rollo D., a graduate of both the literary and law departments of Harvard University, is engaged in the practice of law at Huntington; Charles W. likewise resides in this city as does also Jennie Eloise, who is the wife of P. W. Long.

JOHN JAMES DOWER, mayor of Point Pleasant, throughout his active life been identified with the business interests of Mason County, in which county he was born at Hartford, February 8, 1868.

His father, Patrick F. Dower, was born in County Waterford, Ireland, in 1841, came to the United States in 1850 and settled at Hartford, West Virginia, and his business was chiefly as a contracting teamster and farmer. He died at his home at Graham in Mason County in July, 1918. He was a democrat and a Catholic and active in the Mason County Grange and Farmers Alliance. Maria Theresia Weaver, who became his wife, was born in Mason County in 1851 and died at Graham in 1890. Her children were John James; George W., a farmer at Graham; Margaret J. of Graham; Mary E., wife of Thomas O'Conner, a merchant at Graham; Patrick V., of Martins Ferry, Ohio; Staunt M., a merchant at Columbus, Ohio; Albert A. and Jeron A., in business at Pittsburgh; Agnes T., wife of William Lightly, of Pittsburgh; Mrs. Frances M. O'Shaunnessy, of Pittsburgh; and Josie E., wife of William Boggess.

John James Dower acquired the equivalent of a high school education in Mason County, and from the age of seventeen to twenty worked on the home farm. After that he was in the mercantile business at Graham until 1905, a during fifteen years of that time was station agent for the Ohio River Railroad, which in 1900 became part of the Baltimore & Ohio system. For seventeen years he was either postmaster or assistant postmaster of Graham. For several months Mr. Dower was a salesman for the St. Groceries Company of Parkersburg, and then returning to Mason County was with the mercantile firm of W. E. Haman & Company at Letart. June 1, 1906, he became traveling salesman and vice president for the Point Pleasant Grocery Company, and that has been his chief business ever since. In 1920 he was chosen secretary and treasurer of the Davis Orchard Company of Mason County.

Mr. Dower was elected mayor of Point Pleasant, May 2, 1921, and began his orderly and efficient administration of municipal affairs July 1, 1921. He is a democrat, a member of the Episcopal Church, is a past master of Minto Lodge No. 19, F. and A. M., was high priest in 1921.

Charles K. Blackwood

Point Pleasant Chapter No. 7, R. A. M., is a past commander of Franklin Commandery No. 17, K. T., is a member of the Lodge and Encampment of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and past chancellor of Oriental Lodge No. 49, Knights of Pythias. During the World war he served as county food administrator, and gave his effective aid to all patriotic causes.

In 1899, near Letart, he married Miss Carrie B. Luse, daughter of Algernon and Rhoda E. (Hart) Luse. Her father was a soldier of the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Dower have five children. The oldest, Theresa A., was born in May, 1900, is a graduate of the Point Pleasant High School, has gained some scholarship honors in the extension work of the University of West Virginia, where she is now regularly enrolled as a sophomore, and during the summer of 1921 she was an instructor in the extension department. Eleanor, the second child, was born March 14, 1903, is a senior in high school; Mary, born in 1905, is in the sophomore class; and the two younger children are John J., born in 1908, and Louise, born in 1912.

PERRY BRADBURY BUXTON, now in his second elective term as Circuit Court clerk of Mason County, was for many years identified with the flour milling industry, and his experience has covered many points both in West Virginia and Ohio.

He was born at Kygerville, Gallia County, Ohio, July 1857. His father, Darius Verney Buxton, was born at Amerosey, Ohio, in 1830, was a flour miller, and after 1870 conducted a mill in the Union District of Mason County, West Virginia, until his death in 1889. He served as a lieutenant in the Union army during the Civil war, was an active republican, and a member of the Swedenborgian church. His wife, Sarah Samantha Bradbury, was born at Kygerville in 1833, and died at Gallipolis, Ohio, in 1914. Their children were: Electa Lodice, of Gallipolis, widow of Frank Miller; Perry Bradbury; Mary Agnes, wife of Ezekiel H. Burdette, a hardware merchant in Mason County; Charles, who was Circuit Court clerk of Mason County when he died July 29, 1913; and Horace Arthur, a farmer and merchant in Arbuckle District.

Perry Bradbury Buxton was educated in the public schools of Kygerville and of Mason County. At the age of ten he began working in his father's mill, and before he was sixteen, during his father's illness, he took charge of the mill. Leaving home at the age of twenty-two, he had a long and varied service as a manager or superintendent of various mills, spending one year at Wilkesville, Ohio, six months at Gallipolis, one year at Point Pleasant, twenty-seven months at Cottageville in Jackson County and twenty months at Silverton in the same county and six months at Sandyville in Jackson County. Leaving West Virginia, Mr. Buxton had an experience working at the carpenter's trade at Corsicana, Texas, until 1889, when he returned home on the death of his father and took charge of the old mill in Union District, operating it until 1897. He was then in partnership operating a flour mill at Buffalo, West Virginia, seven years, for six months was part owner of a mill at Leon, and in 1905 returned to Point Pleasant and became manager of the mill of the Point Pleasant Grocery company. He continued in this capacity until he resigned December 31, 1913, but is still a director of the Point Pleasant Grocery Company. In the meantime, on August 5, 1913, he was sworn in as successor to his deceased father Charles as Circuit Court clerk, and in November, 1914, was elected for a full term in that office and in 1920 re-elected for a second six-year term.

Mr. Buxton is a republican, has served as a member of the Point Pleasant Board of Education, is a past master of Kanawha Valley Lodge No. 36, F. and A. M., past grand of Point Pleasant Lodge No. 33, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, a member of Fidelity Encampment at Point Pleasant, and Point Pleasant Council No. 146, Junior Order United American Mechanics.

In 1888, in Jackson County, West Virginia, he married Miss Bessie E. McGlochlin, daughter of John and Nancy McGlochlin. Mr. and Mrs. Buxton have three children: Frederick H., born April 5, 1889, owner of an automobile repair and sales shop in Point Pleasant, was in the army service nine months as an automobile repair mechanic, being located at Richmond, Virginia, Georgia, Camp Funston, Kansas. Walter S., born October 23, 1891, is bookkeeper in the state tax commissioner's office at Charleston. Helen Virginia, born in 1902, is a graduate of the Point Pleasant High School and assists her father in his official duties.
Vol. III—53

CHARLES K. BLACKWOOD, a representative business man and progressive citizen of Point Pleasant, Mason County, is here president and treasurer of the Western Rivers Company and secretary of the Point Pleasant Grocery Company, of which latter corporation adequate record is given in the personal sketch of its president, F. L. Evans, on other pages of this volume.

The Western Rivers Company was founded in 1913, the interested principals in the organization thereof having been C. K. Blackwood, Homer Smith, J. S. Spencer, M. T. Epling and C. R. McCulloch. Mr. Blackwood became president and treasurer of the company and Mr. Epling, its general manager. The original capital stock of $20,000 has been increased to $100,000. The company instituted operations as a river-dredging concern, and with its dipper dredges did important channel work for the United States Government. Derrick boats and other modern facilities were later added to the equipment, and the business of the company now includes general contracting in river improvements, including rip-rap stone work, removing of obstacles to navigation, laying of gas mains across rivers, placing intake pipes for water works, erecting filtering cribs, etc. In 1920 the company instituted the conversion of its plant at Point Pleasant into a sand and gravel collecting outfit, and this department of the enterprise has since received major attention. On the 1st of January, 1922, J. F. McCulloch became general manager of the company, after purchasing the interest of his predecessor, Mr. Epling. The company gives employment to an average corps of twenty-five men, operates a suction sand-digger of the best modern type, two derrick boats, one steamboat and six barges, all used exclusively in sand and gravel work. The sand and gravel thus removed by the company are utilized largely in the improving of roads and for commercial purposes. The company has facilities for the handling of 200,000 tons of sand and gravel annually, and the material excavated is derived from virtually illimitable sources, so that its commercial value is certain to be appreciated for generations to come. The material is nearly all granite, with some quartz, results from glacial action, while in the hills are to be found great deposits of the finest type of sandstone. The rivers of this section produce in the ratio of two parts of gravel and one of sand—the most desirable combination for concrete work. Point Pleasant, at the mouth of the Kanawha River, which here debouches into the Ohio River, seems to supply the ideal combination for such purposes, localities nearer the head of the Ohio River lacking the requisite proportion of sand.

Mr. Blackwood was born in Kanawha County, this state, on the 11th of December, 1870. His grandfather, William Blackwood, came from Warren County, Virginia, to what is now Cabell County, West Virginia, in 1854, and here passed the remainder of his life. In that county his son William R. married Miss Henrietta Shelton, and in 1866 the young couple removed to Kanawha County, William R. Blackwood having previously served as a soldier of the Confederacy in the Civil war and having been captured by the enemy in 1864, at Winchester, was held a prisoner until the close of the war. He became one of the successful farmers of Kanawha County, where his old homestead is now owned by the Government and is the site of the wonderful industrial town of Nitro, there established for industrial production in connection with the nation's participation in the World war. William R. Blackwood died in 1897, and his widow remained on the old homestead until her death in 1917, at the age of seventy-five years. Their son Charles K., of this sketch, was born and reared on this old homestead, and his youthful education included a two years' course in a college at Barboursville.

As a young man Charles K. Blackwood taught school two years, and for seven years thereafter he was employed in the office of a contracting company. He has been a resident of Mason County for the past twenty-five years, was one of the organizers of the Point Pleasant Grocery Company, of which he is still secretary, and to the affairs of which he gave his effective supervision for a period of ten years. He now centers his activities in his executive service as president and treasurer of the Western Rivers Company.

Mr. Blackwood is a staunch supporter of the principles of the democratic party, and was twice nominated by his party for representative in the House of Delegates of the State Legislature. He was for two terms a member of the Point Pleasant Board of Education, he is actively identified with the Kiwanis Club in his home city, and here he and his wife are zealous communicants of Christ Church, Protestant Episcopal, he being a member of the vestry of this parish. In the time-honored Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with the local Blue Lodge and Chapter, of the latter of which he is a past high priest, and at Point Pleasant also he is a past commander of Franklin Commandery No. 17, Knights Templars, his Mystic Shrine membership being in Beni-Kedem Temple in the City of Charleston.

Mr. Blackwood wedded Miss Margaret L. Neale, daughter of the late E. L. Neale, who was a representative agriculturist and stock-grower near Ben Lomond, Mason County. The early educational advantages of Mrs. Blackwood included those of the Lewisburg Female Seminary. Mr. and Mrs. Blackwood have two children: Neale, a member of the class of 1925 in the University of West Virginia, where he is taking an engineering course; and Attarah, who is attending the public schools of Point Pleasant.

WYATT A. ABBITT. Through a busy career Wyatt A. Abbit has been a carpenter, and now for many years, a general contractor and builder, and for nearly twenty years his home and center of his work and interests have been in Charleston.

Mr. Abbit was born in Appomattox County, Virginia, in 1871, son of Charles A. and Elvira (LeGrand) Abbit, also natives of Virginia and members of old families in that state. Wyatt Abbit acquired a common school education, learned the carpenter's trade in his home county, and for several years was a journeyman before he took up the contracting business on his own account. In 1900 he removed to West Virginia, and for three years was associated with the building and operation of the large industrial works at Kanawha Falls, now the plant of the Electro-Metallurgical Company.

Mr. Abbit in 1903 came to Charleston, which city has since been his home. As a contractor and builder he has taken a leading part in the creation of the modern Charleston. His construction work is exemplified in a large number of structures, residential, commercial and industrial, but of late years his business has been chiefly confined to business buildings. Among those erected by him during the last two or three years may be mentioned the Buick Home, a parochial school, the Soloff Hotel Building on Quarrier Street, the addition to the Telephone Building, the remodeling of the Plaza Theater, which he built originally in 1912, the Professional Building, the Simon Cohen Apartment House, and a number of garages and other structures. Mr. Abbit built the plant of the Virginia Rubber Company at St. Albans.

His thorough and first hand knowledge of real estate and buildings in Charleston led to his being selected as a member of the Appraisal Committee, consisting of five, charged with the duty of appraising the value of the various contemplated sites for the location of West Virginia's state capital, to take the place of the old capitol destroyed early in 1921. Mr. Abbit is also president of the Equity Finance and Loan Company of Charleston, and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Virginia Rubber Company. He is active in the Chamber of Commerce, and represents his line of business in the Rotary Club.

Mr. Abbit married for his first wife Anna Belle Coleman, who is survived by five children. Mrs. Sallie Evans, Mrs. Kathleen Jones, Mrs. Julia Barlow, Elliott and Andrew Abbit. For his present wife Mr. Abbit married Mildred (Simpson) Wildman.

WALTER R. GROSE is a leader in educational affairs in West Virginia, and for the past ten years has been superintendent of the Buckhannon City Schools. He is member of a family that has been in West Virginia since pioneer times, and in the various generations they have played a worthy part in the building of homes, the development of the land, and also in the learned professions.

Superintendent Grose was born in Nicholas County, West Virginia, October 10, 1871, son of William and Rebecca Ann (Stephenson) Grose. His parents were also born and reared in Nicholas County. His great-grandfather came from Warm Springs, Virginia, to Nicholas County, having acquired a grant of land direct from the government of Virginia an account of his services in the War of 1812. He located on this land shortly after the War of 1812 and lived out his life there. He was buried on his estate. William Grose, grandfather of Superintendent Grose, married a Miss Koontz, a native of Nicholas County.

William Grose, father of Superintendent Grose, grew up in Nicholas County on a farm, attended the old subscription schools, and did considerable work in his early life as a teacher. Later he became a prominent merchant and farmer, owning a farm near Summersville, and conducting a general store near that village. He was a republican, a staunch Union man in sentiment, and one of the three in his district who voted against secession. He and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of their ten children four are living: B. F. Grose, a farmer and stockman on the old homestead in Nicholas County; Rev. Logan S. Grose, who graduated A. B. from Bothan College, and is now pastor of the Zane Street Methodist Church in Nicholas County, attended the common schools there and later graduated A. B. from the Wesleyan College of Buckhannon, and did post-graduate work in the University of Pittsburgh. Mr. Grose began teaching at the age of nineteen and continued to teach in the intervals of his college and university career. Since 1904 his time has been fully taken up with school work. He was superintendent of school at Richwood from 1906 to 1912, and since 1912 has been head of the city school system at Buckhannon. Mr. Grose is an enthusiastic educator, is an inspiring worker among his fellow teachers and among young people, has been in great demand as an instructor in county teachers' institutes, and is active in the various professional organizations.

On October 13, 1892, he married Maria S. Rader. They were schoolmates in Nicholas County. They have two children. Neva Pearle, born November 10, 1893, is a graduate of the Richwood High School, received her A. B. degree from Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, and is now teacher of foreign languages in the high school at Huntington, West Virginia. The son, Clarence Herman Grose, was born August 30, 1896, graduated from the Richwood High School and from West Virginia Wesleyan College with the Bachelor of Science degree, and is now teacher of chemistry in the Huntington High School. At the close of the World war he was in the Artillery Officers Training School at Camp Taylor, Louisville.

The Grose family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Grose is affiliated with Richwood Lodge No. 102, A. F. and A. M., is a charter member of Richwood Chapter No. 37, R. A. M., a charter member of Buckhannon Commandery, Knights Templar, and he and Mrs. Grose and their daughter are members of the Easter Star. He is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, the Rotary Club, Buckhannon Chamber of Commerce and the Country Club.

Both Superintendent and Mrs. Grose are direct descendants of Sergeant Benjamin Lemasters, who was a soldier of the Revolution, enlisting in 1776 and serving for three years. He was with Washington at Valley Forge, and participated in the battles of White Plains, Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, Germantown, Fort Mifflin and Monmouth and was wounded at Princeton. During the siege of Fort

W. A. B. H. H.

McIntyre he carried dispatches for General Washington. Shortly after the close of the war he moved to Nicholas County, West Virginia, taking possession of his land grant on Bucks Garden Creek. He became a large landholder here, and most of his possessions are still owned by his descendants. He and his wife had ten daughters, and all of them married and reared families.

WILLIAM POST was born in Upshur County, and several years before reaching his majority was in business on a small scale as a stock shipper. He has had an active association with the agricultural, livestock and business interests of the county for over half a century.

Mr. Post, who lives at Buckhannon and is president of the Traders National Bank of that city, was born December 30, 1853, son of Isaac and Emily (Carper) Post. Isaac Post was born in Virginia, where his father settled on coming from Holland. After his marriage Isaac Post settled on a farm in Upshur County, and became one of the honored and highly respected citizens of that locality. He and his wife were active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They had four children: Ira C. Post, who lives in Harrison County and for a number of years has been regarded as one of the most progressive farmers and farm leaders in that part of the state; Virginia C., wife of Porter Maxwell; William; and Adam Post, of Upshur County.

William Post grew up on a farm and acquired a common school education. At the age of sixteen he made his first ventures as a cattle shipper, and from this early enterprise he accumulated a capital of about five hundred dollars. In all the years since then he has kept in touch with the livestock industry, growing, feeding and shipping to the market, and has progressively increased his land holdings until he pays taxes on several of the good farms of Upshur County. With his growing business interests he became one of the organizers and a stockholder in the Traders National Bank of Buckhannon, and has been active president of that institution since its organization. Mr. Post and wife now spend their winters in Florida. They are active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and Mrs. Post with the Eastern Star.

In September, 1891, he married Miss Anna Hurst, who was born in Upshur County in August, 1871, and was educated in the public schools and the seminary. Her father, the late Maj. John L. Hurst, was a Union soldier who for bravery on the field of battle was promoted to major. He was several times wounded. After the war he served as county clerk. Major Hurst died during the influenza epidemic in 1917.

Mr. and Mrs. Post have lived in Buckhannon most of the years since their marriage. They have two sons. Isaac H., a graduate of Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, is a student of law at Harvard University. John H., who graduated from Wesleyan College, was a flying instructor at Mather Field in California during the war, and was rated as a very proficient flyer. He is an educated farmer, having taken advanced courses in agriculture at Cornell University, and is a thirty-second degree Mason.

CORLEY RAYMOND INGRAM while a young man for his responsibilities as county superintendent of schools of Tyler County, is exceptionally well qualified for leadership in educational affairs. He is himself a man of thorough education, high ideals, a splendid character, and has given the most energetic administration of school matters and in way to set new standards of efficiency in the county.

Mr. Ingram was born at Alvy, Tyler County, May 3, 1896. His father, Jarrett Trainor Ingram, a son of Nathan Ingram, was born in Tyler County in 1851, and has spent all his life in the county. He now lives at Pursley. For a number of years his interests were those of a farmer, but he early became identified with the development of the oil resources in the Sistersville field, has been a contractor, and is still one of the heavy producers in that section. He is a republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Jarrett T. Ingram married Hannah Jane McIntyre, who was born at Alvy, Tyler County, in 1874. Her father, James McIntyre, was also born at Alvy, in 1841, has been a merchant and an extensive farmer, and still owns the large farm on Pursley Creek where he resides. He is a democrat in politics. James McIntyre married Agnes Underwood, who was born in Tyler County in 1844. They had a family of six children: Ikey M., connected with the Goodrich Rubber Company at Akron, Ohio; Pearlle, wife of Emanuel Elder, a farmer at Marysville, Ohio; Laura, who died at the age of nineteen; Hannah Jane, Mrs. Ingram; Anna, wife of David L. Core, a school teacher at Pursley; and Benjamin Cleveland, an oil operator and producer at Sistersville.

The children of Jarrett T. Ingram and wife were: Laura Frances, wife of Louis Averele Gorrell, owner of a public garage at Middlebourne; Miss Zeldia May, at home; Corley R.; Frederick Gay, a graduate of the County High School and assisting his father in the oil business and on the farm; Paul McClairn, who attended the County High School two years and now works for his father; Norwood Trainor, a student in the County High School; and Ruth Underwood, attending the Middlebourne Grade School.

Corley Raymond Ingram first came in contact with the rural schools of Tyler County as a pupil. For two years he attended grade school at Sistersville, graduated in the regular course and the teachers training course from the Tyler County High School in 1917, and took two years of training in the West Liberty State Normal School in Ohio County. Mr. Ingram taught his first school at the age of twenty years, looking after the rural school of Coal Valley. In November, 1918, he was elected county superintendent, and began his term of four years July 1, 1919. Under his administrative supervision as county superintendent are 161 schools, with a corps of 161 teachers and a scholarship enrollment of 4,500. Mr. Ingram is also president of the Board of Directors of the Tyler County High School and is a member of the State Educational Association and the National Education Association. While in normal school at West Liberty he was a member of the Webster Literary Society and the Bryants Literary Society, and also secretary of the Y. M. C. A. Poor eyesight caused his rejection when he applied for service in the World war, but he did all he could as a speaker and participant in the various local drives. He is a republican, a member of the Church of Christ, and is owner of an attractive residence in Middlebourne.

December 25, 1919, at Wheeling, Mr. Ingram married Miss Ada Lallathin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lallathin, who live in Monroe County, Ohio, where her father owns a large farm. Mr. and Mrs. Ingram have one daughter, Mary Kathryn, born July 15, 1921.

ARTHUR K. PERRY, president of the Merchants and Miners Bank of Junior and for a number of years active in the civic and business affairs of that community, in the line of public service performed his best work as a specialist with both the State and Federal Departments of Agriculture as an inspector for the protection of forests and orchards.

Mr. Perry was born in Meade District of Upshur County, West Virginia, October 24, 1869. His grandfather, Elias Perry, came from Erie County, New York, and established his home on French Creek in Upshur County, where he spent the rest of his life as a farmer and where he was laid to rest in the community cemetery. His children were Hubbard, John, Edwin, Elias, Wilbur, Fannie, who married John Love, and Mrs. Marshall Gould.

Hubbard Perry, father of the banker, was a native of Upshur County, and was one of the early volunteers for the service of the Union in the Civil war. He was in Company E, of the Fourth Regiment of Virginia Cavalry, and while in the service nearly all the war period and in many arduous campaigns he was never wounded or captured. He was a private soldier, and among other battles he was with Sheridan at Cedar Creek. After the war he returned to the farm and pursued the routine of country life until his death in 1877, at the age of forty-nine. When he went to the polls he cast his vote as a republican, and he was a worshipper in the Presbyterian Church. Hubbard Perry married Harriet Phillips, daughter of Edwin and Sophronia (Young) Phillips. The Youngs were an old Massachusetts family that settled in Lewis County, Virginia, in that portion now Upshur County. The ancestry of this branch of the family runs back to an Englishman who was a man of letters and "wrote for the King," probably meaning that he was secretary to King George the first. Among his children was Henry Young, who lived in England during the latter years of George the second, while Holland and England were at war with France. While in a boat along the coast he was seized and pressed into the English Navy, and for seven years performed his duties with the Royal Navy and finally landed at Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts. An educated man, a teacher, he prepared three times to return to England, but something prevented his going each time, so that providence seemed to have designed to make him an American. He married Lydia Ross. Their oldest son, Robert Young, was born at Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts, and had two brothers, William and Freeman, and four sisters, Anna, Cynthia, Elizabeth and Margaret. Robert Young married Lydia Gould. Their children were Paschal, Ann, Anson, Gilbert, Festus, Loyal, Louisa, Sophronia and Freeman. The daughter Sophronia was born November 17, 1812, and on April 22, 1830, was married to Edwin Phillips in Upshur County, where they lived out their lives. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Phillips were: Harriet, who became the wife of Hubbard Perry; Abizer; Josephine, who married Adolphus Brooks; Beecher, Marion, Aletha, Wallace, Linn, and May, who became the wife of William O. Phillips. The children of Hubbard Perry and wife are: Emma, wife of George Talbott and a resident of Elkins; Lucy, who married Jonathan Hathaway, of Buckhannon; Marion, who died in infancy; Orr, of Elkins; Edwin E., of Macedonia, Ohio; Delia, a resident of Pittsburg; Arthur Kirke, the banker; and Grace, who died as Mrs. John Finley.

Arthur K. Perry lived in the community where he was born until he was eighteen. He made good use of his advantages in the local schools at that time. After a course in the U. B. Academy at Buckhannon, where he took a business training, he engaged in a private business career until he attended lecture courses in the West Virginia University at Morgantown for special work in agriculture and horticulture. After finishing the course he was appointed state orchard inspector, and performed the duties of that position for one year in Berkeley County. For another year he did inspection work in the forests of the state against the chestnut-blight. He was then called to the Federal Department of Agriculture as an inspector specially detailed to look out for the white pine blister rust. He was in this work from 1916 to 1920, inclusive, and through the forest areas of West Virginia, New Jersey, North Carolina and New York. This is one of the most destructive pests ravaging the American forests, and the origin of the rust was placed to Germany, being imported to America on young trees. It affects the five-leaved species of pine.

Mr. Perry after leaving the service of the Federal Government was with the Gage Coal & Coke Company at Junior until the mines of that company closed. He was made superintendent of the State Game Farm in 1922. This farm is in process of development at French Creek, and has been put aside as a preserve for the propagation of game birds, particularly the Chinese ring-neck pheasant. The farm comprises seventy-five acres, and is the property of the chief state game warden, Mr. Brooks, who has set it aside to the state for experimental purposes. Mr. Perry's duties there are in the summer season. He personally owns a tract of land adjacent to the Game Farm, and this and other lands will eventually comprise a State Game Refuge under the care of the commonwealth, where no hunting or fishing will be permitted.

As a citizen Mr. Perry has served as recorder and also as mayor of Junior. He was one of the leaders in organizing a bank for the community, and in 1917 the Merchants and Miners Bank was launched, with him as one of the first vice presidents and directors. Since January, 1922, he has been president of the bank. Mr. Perry is a Master Mason, a Presbyterian, and has been a steadfast republican, casting his first vote for Benjamin Harrison in 1892, and his voting in National elections has been regular except in 1912, when he voted for Roosevelt.

At Junior, October 10, 1900, Mr. Perry married Miss Frances Row, daughter of Andrew J. Row, and granddaughter of Benjamin Row. The other children of Benjamin Row were: Mary, wife of Emuel Viquesney; Julia, who married Andrew Williams; and Polly, who became the wife of Samuel Latham. Andrew J. Row was born in Page County, Virginia, but spent the greater part of his life in West Virginia, where he was a farmer, miller and merchant. He died in 1905, at the age of seventy-one. His first wife was Delilah Williams, and their children were Alva; Benjamin; Mary, who married Granville Brady; Virginia, who became Mrs. Columbus Thorn; Celia, who married Clarence Wilson; Rosa, who is Mrs. Washington Arbogast, of Junior; and Margaret, who died as the wife of Adam Thornhill. Mary K. Fitzgerald, second wife of Andrew J. Row, died in 1915, at the age of seventy-seven. Her children were Lillie Bell, wife of S. S. Bolton and now deceased; Frances Amanda, wife of A. K. Perry; and Icie, wife of Frank Shomo, of Junior. Mrs. Perry was born October 10, 1876.

SIMON PRINCE RICHMOND has followed the profession of shorthand reporter for over twenty years. In that field he has received real distinction by the skill, thoroughness and reliability of his work. His service has been by no means local. He has reported conventions and court proceedings in many of the sections of his home state and in assemblies throughout the country.

Mr. Richmond was born on a farm in Summers County, West Virginia, January 20, 1870, son of Enos R. and Catharine (Walker) Richmond. His father is still living, and they descended from William Richmond, who came from England and settled in Norfolk, Virginia, but soon after the Revolutionary war, removed to New River Falls, in what is now Raleigh County, West Virginia.

Simon Prince Richmond had to work on his father's farm a few years before and even while he was in his first year in the common schools. He is one of the men who has gone beyond his early environment, has overcome adversity and difficulties in his path of achievement, and has made all his opportunities. He completed his early education by attending the Concord Normal School at Athens during 1889, and at the age of sixteen taught his first term of school in his native county. He continued teaching for fifteen years, and after a term of from three to five months each winter spent the rest of the year on the farm.

Mr. Richmond moved to Charleston in 1901, in which years he graduated in shorthand and typewriting at the Capital City Commercial College. He also studied law, beginning in 1907, was admitted to the bar in 1910, and for several years did office practice in the offices of Brown, Jackson & Knight at Charleston, one of the most prominent law firms of West Virginia, and the firm with which he began his career of stenographer soon after graduating from commercial school. In 1921 he withdrew from this firm and became associated with Charles V. Price and Ben D. Keller, a shorthand firm with offices in the Boyce Building. These three men are official reporters for the Circuit Court of Fayette and Nicholas counties, and also for the Circuit Court of Webster, Braxton and Gilmer counties, and they do the reporting for the Criminal Court of Raleigh County. The firm conducts a general shorthand reporting business, and handle a large volume of special work for conventions and associations.

This has been the particular field of Mr. Richmond for many years, and he is the official reporter for the State Pharmaceutical Association of West Virginia, for the State Bar Association and for a number of years has been the assistant secretary and official stenographer for the Farmers' National Congress. He reports all the annual proceedings of this congress and prepares the reports for publication. Mr. Richmond is a Knights Templar and Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner.

Simon P. Richmond

He married Miss Sarah Fink. They have four children: Justus O., T. Carter, Percy P. and Gladys.

WILLIAM EDMUND WATSON. The following brief sketch is published for its value as a personal record of one of West Virginia's leaders in the coal mining industry.

William Edmund Watson was born at Detroit, Michigan, May 19, 1885, but is a member of an old West Virginia family. His great-grandfather, James Dent Watson, came from Maryland and was an early settler in Monongalia County. The Fairmont coal operator was named for his grandfather. His own parents were Lee P. and Lucy D. (Lowe) Watson, the former a native of Monongalia County. He practiced law for a time in Detroit, and subsequently in Ashtabula, Ohio. He died in 1900, at Smithtown, Monongalia County, West Virginia. His wife, who died May 4, 1913, was born in Ohio County, Virginia, daughter of Jacob S. Lowe, who was born near Bethany in Brooke County, and after his education in Bethany College was minister of the Christian Church.

William E. Watson was educated at Fairmont, attended high school at Ashtabula, Ohio, and for two years was in the University of West Virginia. He has been connected with the coal industry since he was twenty-one. In 1909 the Rosbud Fuel Company was organized by him. In 1913 he organized the Fairmont and Cleveland Coal Company of Fairmont, and has been its president. Mr. Watson is a Mason, an Elk and a member of the Fairmont Country Club.

STEPHEN G. JACKSON. In the midst of a busy career whose substantial achievements promised greater fulfillment Stephen G. Jackson died January 3, 1922. His associates and friends knew and appreciated his keen, logical mind and sound judgment, enthusiasm for the law and a ready capacity for hard work, and recognized in him an able member of the Clarksburg bar, who had built up in thirteen years a professional reputation extending over Harrison County. Thoroughly trained in the highest schools of his calling, he had justified his years of study by success in practice, and he commanded respect as an honorable lawyer of the bar and the public alike.

Stephen G. Jackson bore a name well known in American history both in public and military life. The founder of the family in New England in Colonial days was Robert Jackson, who was born in England, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and took a prominent part in affairs relating to the early settlements. Stephen G. Jackson was born at Jane-Lewis County, West Virginia, March 6, 1884, a son of John G. and Martha J. (Bassel) Jackson, the former of whom was born in Lewis County, March 7, 1857, a son of James William Jackson, of Harrison County, Virginia, and Sallie Ann Goodloe, of Albemarle, West Virginia, and grandson of Stephen Pomeroy Jackson, also born in Harrison County, Virginia. The next direct ancestor, Stephen Jackson, was born in New Jersey, a son of Edward Jackson, also born in New Jersey, and a son of Joseph Jackson, born on Long Island, a son of James Jackson, also born on Long Island, who was a son of John Jackson, of Long Island, son of Robert Jackson, the original settler. Of these ancestors both Edward and Stephen Jackson, father and son, served in the Revolutionary war, and Stephen Jackson served also in the War of 1812. Both served as Indian scouts and both were wounded at the battle of Yorktown. They were pioneer settlers in what is now West Virginia, and the late Stephen G. Jackson owned the land on which they settled immediately after the Revolutionary war and bought in 1792.

Stephen Jackson, the military hero, married Elizabeth Pomeroy, a member of one of the old New England families that has been notable in its contributions to American citizenship of the highest order, an example of the present day being found in that distinguished statesman, Hon. Elihu Root.

John G. Jackson, who is president of a bank at Jane-low, West Virginia, has been a merchant and banker for many years and prominent in political affairs in Lewis County. At one time he was the democratic nominee for the State Senate and for other important offices. On account of his temperance principles and pioneer advocacy of prohibition at a time when such opinions were new and startling, he was forced into leadership of the prohibition party in his section, and at one time was the prohibition candidate for governor. He married Miss Martha J. Bassel, who was born in Harrison County, January 19, 1856, and died March 15, 1908, leaving two sons: James Henry and Stephen G. She was a daughter of Henry Bassel, a brother of the late John Bassel, a prominent lawyer in West Virginia.

Stephen G. Jackson, who was in the tenth generation from Robert Jackson, attended the local schools in his native place and prepared for the University of West Virginia at Morgantown Academy. He entered the university in 1903, received his B. S. degree in 1907 and his LL. B. degree in 1908, and the same from Yale College in 1909. He immediately entered into practice at Clarksburg, in association with Edward G. Smith.

In 1907 Mr. Jackson married Miss Jessie Moorhead, who is a daughter of William and Alice (John) Moorhead, of Morgantown, West Virginia. Their one daughter, Alice, is yet in school. Mr. Jackson was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church and of the Masonic fraternity, and kept an active interest in Sigma Chi and Phi Alpha Delta college fraternities of Yale and the University of West Virginia. In politics he was active as a democrat, but to the law he gave the fullest efforts and enthusiasm of his all too brief life.

THE PHELPS CAN COMPANY is one of the several establishments that have made an important industrial community at Weirton in Hancock County, practically surrounding the historic old village of Holliday's Cove with factories, teeming population and all the institutions and improvements of twentieth century existence.

This plant was established at Weirton in the spring of 1911 by the president of the original company, W. J. Phelps of Baltimore. At that time the plant started with a capacity of 350,000 cans daily and about a hundred employees. Subsequent additions and improvements have trebled the capacity, and employees now number about 350, with a payroll of about $6,500 a week. The tinplate is obtained from the adjacent Weirton Steel Works, the annual consumption being between 600,000 and 700,000 boxes of tin plates. The plant at Weirton makes a specialty of tin containers for evaporated and condensed milk, the output being sold to condensaries all over the United States and Canada.

The company is capitalized at $50,000. The president and treasurer of the corporation at Baltimore is W. J. Phelps, the vice president and secretary is Forest Bramble, of the same city, while the executive in charge at Weirton is J. Howd Phelps, assistant treasurer and manager. This company maintains four plants, one at Baltimore, another at New Philadelphia, Ohio, the one at Weirton, and another established in 1921 at Clarksburg, West Virginia. Mr. J. Howd Phelps and Mr. J. B. Dresel, the superintendent, started the plant at Weirton and have been in active charge ever since. The plant has floor space of 110,000 square feet, about two and a half acres, and a double railroad track runs the entire length of the factory.

The Phelps family have been pioneers in can manufacture. W. J. Phelps as a boy made cans by the hand process before the introduction of any of the complicated machinery now used in can making. He started his first can factory at Baltimore about 1890. The Phelps Can Company now stands third in the United States in relative size and importance, and is probably the first in a specialized output for packers.

J. Howd Phelps was eighteen years of age when he entered the shops of the Baltimore plant, and has grown up in the business. He is a Mason, is affiliated with the Scottish Rite Consistory at Wheeling, is a member of the Weirton Masonic Club, and belongs to the Scottish Rite Orchestra at Wheeling and also a similar orchestra at Steubenville, Ohio. Mr. Phelps, whose home is at Holliday's Cove, married Sarah Marie Turner, a native of New York State. Their four children are Dorothy, Howd, Jr., Marjorie and Virginia.

LEVI JEWELL is associated with his father, W. R. Jewell, in a very prosperous business as a breeder of Hereford cattle. The Jewell farm has some of the best stock of this kind in West Virginia, and the Jewells are recognized authorities on the Hereford strain and have made a distinctive success of their business.

The Jewell Stock Farm is eight miles south of Weston in Lewis County. Levi Jewell was born on another farm, two and a half miles north of Weston, May 2, 1882, and all his life he has been interested in matters of good farming and good livestock. He is a republican in politics, and is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On August 26, 1903, he married Bertha E. Smith, who was born on a farm in Lewis County, December 28, 1887, and supplemented her advantages in the common schools by attending Wesleyan College at Buckhannon. Her father was Wilson E. Smith. Levi Jewell and wife have nine children, named Ernestine, Walter, Howard, Paul, Robert, Clyde, Irene, Ralph and Ruth.

There are three partners in the Hereford cattle industry conducted by the Jewells, W. R. Jewell, and Levi and Albert Jewell. W. R. Jewell was born four miles north of Weston November 29, 1852, son of Albert and Catherine H. (Ramsey) Jewell. Albert Jewell was born in the State of Maine in 1816, and his wife was born in Virginia in 1814. Albert grew up on a farm, had a public school education, and when he removed to Virginia he taught school. He married in that state and then came to Lewis County, West Virginia, where he continued teaching and farming. In 1856 he moved to the vicinity of Roanoke, and two years later to the farm three and a half miles north of Weston, where he spent the rest of his life. His wife died in the village of Janelw. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He was a republican. Albert Jewell and wife had five children, and the two now living are Flavilla C., wife of A. A. Maddox, and W. R. Jewell.

W. R. Jewell spent most of his early life on the farm in Lewis County, and had only nominal advantages in the common schools, but later made up the deficiencies by attending private school. In the fall of 1874 he became a teacher, and he was identified with the educational affairs of Lewis County for a number of years. In the spring of 1881 W. R. Jewell married Catherine Fisher, who was reared and educated in Lewis County. They have four children: Levi, mentioned above; Florence, wife of I. G. Horner; Albert, who married Aruminta Clark; and Gay, wife of Z. P. Hammer.

The family are members of the Baptist Church. W. R. Jewell is affiliated with Weston Lodge No. 10, A. F. and A. M., the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Vandalia, and is a republican. For four years he held the office of sheriff of Lewis County, and was elected in 1904 to one term in the Legislature.

The Jewell Stock Farm comprises a thousand acres. The Jewells have spent a number of years and much money in carefully laying the foundation of their herd of Herefords. This herd comprises sixty females, and the herd bull is Mapleton Lad 18th.

QUINCE JONES. Starting without a cent of his own or of borrowed capital at the age of twenty-one, Quince Jones in twenty years has earned the right to be classed among West Virginia's bankers, capitalists and men of affairs. His home for a number of years has been at South Charleston, and he has been one of the actuating principals in the development of that prosperous young city.

Mr. Jones was born in 1881 in Raleigh County, where he was reared in the home and on the farm of his parents, Dan and Fannie (Mankin) Jones, residents of Raleigh County. He attended the free public schools, worked on the farm, and in 1901 left home and connected himself with the lumber business in the Mankin Lumber Company at Oak Hill in Fayette County. There he learned the fundamentals of the business which has been the basis of his solid prosperity. He was with the Mankin Company until 1908. In that year he entered the mercantile business at Colcord in Raleigh County. He furnishes contracts for logs to the Bowman Lumber Company of St. Albans. The headquarters of his timber business are at Coal River, and in conjunction he conducts a large general store.

In 1915 Mr. Jones removed to South Charleston. He is president of the First National Bank of South Charleston, a financial institution which gained additional resources and capital by absorbing the Bank of South Charleston in September, 1921. This bank handles the financial affairs of the City of South Charleston. Besides his banking interests Mr. Jones owns business and residence property, and in the fall of 1921 built and owns a modern picture show house. His own home is a spacious brick residence on the hill at Montrose.

Mr. Jones is president of the Loudon District School Board and is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner. He married Miss Ella Miley, of Raleigh County, and their three children are Daryl, Basil and Quince, Jr.

FREDERICK LUTWYCHE ROUND, M. D. Reared in several of the great industrial communities of Pennsylvania, Doctor Round learned the machinist's trade, but left that to train himself for the profession of medicine and surgery, and for the past twenty years has been one of the busy men in his profession in Southern West Virginia. Most of his work has been in the mining district and as a mine physician, and his present location is at Monaville in Logan County, on the Omar branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Doctor Round was born in the City of Birmingham, England, May 31, 1872, son of Frederick and Arabella (Lutwyche) Round, both natives of England and of English ancestry. In 1873, when Doctor Round was about a year old, the family came to the United States and settled at Pottsville, Pennsylvania. In 1880 they removed to North Umlerland, Pennsylvania, in 1883 to Sunbury and in 1889 to Danville. Later they again lived at Sunbury. Frederick Round became a prominent man in the iron and steel industry of Pennsylvania. For a time he was general bookkeeper of the Pottsville Iron and Steel Company, was connected with the Van Allen Nail Works at North Umlerland, the Montour Iron and Steel Company, was manager of the Danville Nail Works, and subsequently was general manager of the Sunbury Nail Works. He was a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, and at the time of his death was registrar of his diocese. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Frederick Lutwyche Round was reared and attended schools in the several Pennsylvania cities above named. He was in high school at Sunbury, and on leaving high school began an apprenticeship in a machine shop at Danville owned by the Montour Iron and Steel Company. He served the apprenticeship for four years, but followed the trade eight years. In 1897 he took up the study of medicine under Doctor Paulus of Danville, and later entered the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, where he graduated M. D. in May, 1902. In search of a field for his professional work he came to Big Sandy, West Virginia, in November, 1902, was located there about a year, and for ten years was in practice at Davy. For two years his home and professional work were in Huntington, West Virginia, and then after a year at Wilcoe he located at Monaville, and for the past five years has been mine physician for the Island Creek Coal Company. He is a member of the various medical societies, and one of the leaders in his profession.

In 1908, at Bluefield, West Virginia, Doctor Round married Miss Minnie E. Fortner, of Davy, daughter of William and Octava (Darr) Fortner, both natives of Virginia. Her father was a Confederate soldier in the Civil war, and aside from his military experience his life was spent as a farmer. Doctor and Mrs. Round have two children, Virginia Arabella and Frederick William. Mrs. Round is a member of the

Linn Jones

Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while he returns the visit in which he was reared in the Episcopal Church. Doctor Round is a Royal Arch and Scottish Rite Mason.

DANIEL PENDLETON is a prominent lawyer of Spencer, so publisher and proprietor of the Roane County Reporter, and bears a name that has had honorable associations in the line of Roane County forty years.

His father was the late Hon. Walter Pendleton, who earned distinction in law and politics and worthily upheld the traditions of one of the oldest and most prominent families in the South. Walter Pendleton was a descendant of the English family of that name, the line of which is traced back into the Plantagenet era of early English history. The Pendletons were established in Virginia about 1774, and since then the family has produced many leaders in public affairs, and in every war of the nation there has been a Pendleton of high official rank engaged, including even the World war.

Walter Pendleton was born at Buchanan, in Botetourt county, Virginia, March 7, 1856, a son of Dr. Micajah Pendleton, a prominent physician of that state and a descendant of Edmund Pendleton, president of the Continental Congress that framed the Declaration of Independence and the first president of the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Walter Pendleton was reared and educated in West Virginia. He was admitted to the bar in that state in 1876, and practiced his profession at Hillsville in Carroll county until his removal to Spencer in 1882. He was a prominent leader in the democratic party in West Virginia and was democratic nominee for Congress in 1896, participating in a campaign in a republican district and when the strength of the republican party was at its high tide. He was defeated by only a small majority. In 1908 he was nominated by his party for judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, and again was defeated, though winning thousands of votes ahead of his ticket. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was affiliated with Moriah Lodge No. 38, F. and A. M., Spencer Chapter No. 42, Royal Arch Masons, and Parkersburg Lodge No. 198, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Walter Pendleton died at Havana, Cuba, March 16, 1921. His death brought profound sorrow to his many old friends and associates in Roane County, where he had practiced law almost forty years. He began his professional career in West Virginia practically among strangers, went through a period of considerable hardship while struggling for recognition, but for a number of years before his death was regarded as the foremost representative of the local bar. A professional friend characterized his career as follows:

Walter Pendleton was a lawyer of the old school. The strongest advocate found in him a worthy opponent and one who always played the game fairly. His manner was courteous, his logic convincing, his sincerity was apparent. He believed that his client was entitled to the best that was in him and he rendered it without stint or measure, but he did not seek undue advantage or stoop to the plane of a shyster at any time. Coming as he did from the old state of Virginia and with a family whose name adorns the pages of her history, a fact of which he was always proud, he ever exhibited the traits of the 'Virginia gentleman' but not with haughtiness or seclusion. He understood the struggle of the young and inexperienced practitioner at the bar because he himself had passed through the same, and he deemed it a pleasure to extend to such a one the old hand of assistance. He reached a ripe age, yet he ever permitted his spirit to grow old. He was happiest when he was surrounded with his younger companions, which he believed was the secret of his heart staying young."

The first wife of Walter Pendleton was Nellie McMath, a native of Foster, Kentucky, who died at Spencer in 1892, survived by two sons, Daniel and Dudley. Walter Pendleton afterward married Miss Pearl Monroe, a native of Parkersburg, who died at Spencer in 1911. Her father was the late Dr. W. W. Monroe, one of the prominent dentists of Parkersburg.

Daniel Pendleton was born at Spencer, April 6, 1887, and was liberally educated, beginning in the public schools of Spencer, later graduating from the Parkersburg High School and receiving his law degree from the University of West Virginia at Morgantown. He practiced law at Spencer until 1910, and for the following five years was an active member of the Oklahoma bar at Ada. In 1915 he returned to Spencer, and was associated with his father until the latter's death. Among other interests represented by him he is attorney for the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company.

Mr. Pendleton in 1918 acquired the ownership of the Roane County Reporter, the official democratic paper of this section of West Virginia, and a journal of great influence and prestige. This paper was established in 1878 as The Bulletin, was later sold to a stock company and finally became the Roane County Reporter in 1911.

Mr. Pendleton is chairman of the Democratic County Committee of Roane County. He is president of the Spencer Independent District Board of Education. He is a Rotarian and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Moriah Lodge No. 38, A. F. and A. M., Spencer Chapter No. 42, R. A. M., West Virginia Consistory No. 1 of the Scottish Rite at Wheeling, Nemesis Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Parkersburg, Spencer Lodge No. 55, Knights of Pythias, and Parkersburg Lodge No. 198, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Pendleton is a stockholder in the Roane County Bank and in the Spencer Water & Ice Company, and has a considerable amount of property, including his home, one of the best residences in the city, his office building on Church Street, the Telephone Exchange Building, and he owns a farm near Ada, Oklahoma, and coal lands in Illinois. During the war Mr. Pendleton was active in all war work in Roane County, and especially exerted himself in publicity work during the various Liberty Loan campaigns.

In 1915, at Parkersburg, Mr. Pendleton married Miss Edna Morford, who was born at Morford in Greene County, Pennsylvania, and finished her education in the Wheeling High School. Her father, George L. Morford, was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, in 1863, was a teacher there during his early life, and in 1895 established a home and business at Spencer. In 1897 he removed to Parkersburg, and since 1908 has been active in business at Wheeling. He is a democrat and a Baptist. The mother of Mrs. Pendleton was Minnie Miller, a native of Greene County, Pennsylvania.

CHARLES W. WATSON owns one of the good farms and is one of the progressive farmers of Lewis County in the Roanoke community, where he has 160 acres of land.

Mr. Watson was born on Hackers Creek, West Virginia, November 9, 1846, son of William A. and Margaret A. (Wallace) Watson. His parents were both born in old Virginia, and the family has a notable record in connection with Colonial and early national affairs. His great-grandfather, Zachariah Watson, was a soldier in the Revolution. The grandfather, John F. Watson, was born April 10, 1789, and served as a soldier in the War of 1812. He died June 20, 1859. William A. Watson was born in Virginia, April 30, 1818, and his wife was born June 2, 1819. After their marriage they moved to Lewis County, West Virginia, and settled on a farm on Hackers Creek, later moved to the vicinity of Roanoke, at the mouth of Sand Fork, and were quiet and industrious citizens in that community the rest of their lives. The mother was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. William A. Watson took an active interest in the affairs of the democratic party, and for a number of years served as a member of the County Court and as justice of the peace. The record of the names and dates of birth of the children of William A. and Margaret Watson is as follows: Mary E., August 19, 1843; John B., February 16, 1845; Charles W., November 9, 1846; Margaret S., April 12, 1848; Sarah A., July 30, 1849; Lucinda C., May 21, 1851; Harriett M., December 31, 1852; Permelia, April 24, 1854; T. A., April 17, 1856; Jacob J., December 26, 1859; and Joseph W., May 11, 1860.

Charles W. Watson spent his early life on the old homestead, and the well improved farm he owns is a portion of the place owned by his father. There were few schools in the locality during his youth, and his education largely came from private instruction. His father died March 13, 1883, and after that he remained at home with his step-mother.

On March 1, 1893, he married Emma Wilson, who died with her only child. October 2, 1907, he married Martha Kelley, a native of Barbour County, West Virginia. They have a son, Wallace, born August 8, 1909. Mrs. Watson is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. He is affiliated with W. G. Bennett Lodge, A. F. and A. M., at Walkersville, with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Roanoke, of which he is a past noble grand, and he and his wife are Rebekahs. He has been an active worker in the democratic party, and has served as a member of the Board of Education.

SAMUEL C. JONES. The home and farm of Samuel C. Jones is ten miles southeast of Weston, in the vicinity of Vandalia, Lewis County. Mr. Jones is now eighty-one years of age, was a soldier in the Civil war, has spent most of his life in West Virginia, and the success he has made at farming and the performance of his duties as a citizen has commended him to the respect and esteem of all who know him.

Mr. Jones was born in Highland County, Virginia, April 3, 1841, son of Henry and Sallie C. (Eagle) Jones. His father was born in Highland County, May 18, 1812, son of Joseph Jones, who served as a soldier in the war of 1812. His wife was a daughter of James Trimble, a native of Ireland, who was conscripted by the English to fight the Colonists in America, and after the war never returned, but became a citizen of the United States. Henry Jones and wife were married in Highland County, Virginia, lived on a farm there for some years, and subsequently moved to West Virginia and settled in Upshur County, where he remained until after the Civil war, when he sold out and moved to Lewis County, where they spent the rest of their lives. They owned a farm of 250 acres in Lewis County, and were accounted successful. Henry Jones was a lifelong member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and for many years a class leader. He voted as a democrat until after the Civil war, when he became a republican. He was the father of five children: John, deceased; Mary E., wife of William Reger; Lydia, wife of Charles W. Tolbert; Margaret Ann, widow of William E. Tolbert; and Samuel C.

Samuel C. Jones grew up on a farm, had a public school education, and in September, 1862, enlisted in Company B, of the First West Virginia Light Artillery. He was with that command until the close of the war, and participated in several historic battles. When the war was over he returned to Upshur County, but soon afterward moved to Vandalia, where he became interested in merchandising and also served as postmaster. Selling his interests there, he went back to a farm in Upshur County. While a merchant at Vandalia he married Catherine E. Peterson on December 26, 1866. She was reared in Lewis County. Mr. and Mrs. Jones returned to Lewis County in 1869, and for half a century they have made their home on their farm of seventy-five acres near Vandalia.

They are the parents of eight children: W. T. Jones, a farmer on Skin Creek and married Kate Roach; Ida L. is the wife of John C. Chidester; Cora is the wife of B. E. Wells; Retta May is the wife of A. O. Harper; J. Ralph is a glass manufacturer at Bridgeport, West Virginia, and married Mintie Horner; Mary is the wife of J. S. Ocheltree; and H. G. and Sallie Gay, twins, the former married Mamie West and the latter is the wife of Fred A. Linger.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones have been faithful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church through a long period of years. He is a republican, though he has never sought any office.

Mrs. Jones, whose maiden name was Catherine E. Peterson, is a daughter of E. D. Peterson, one of the prominent farmers and citizens of the Skin Creek community of Lewis County. As a republican he represented his home district one term in the West Virginia Legislature, and helped write the constitution of the state. He was a prominent leader in the Methodist Church. He was the father of eleven children, five of whom are still living: Sarah J., widow of Acil Casto, who was a Confederate soldier; Catherine E., Mrs. Samuel C. Jones; Mary, widow of Thomas Eckes; Job B. lives in Missouri; N. E. Peterson is a farmer; David T. was a captain in the Union Army during the Civil war; Samuel T. fought on the Confederate side; the other deceased children were: John D.; Charles Peterson; Matilda, who was the wife of Leroy Horner; Christina, who was the wife of James V. Duncan.

JAMES B. MADISON is secretary-treasurer of the Virginian Joint Stock Land Bank, at Charleston. Mr. Madison is a young business man and banker, whose experience gives him exceptional qualifications for the management of a bank organized under the Federal Farm Loan Act.

He was born in Indianapolis, Indiana, April 28, 1885. His education was acquired in the public schools of his native city, and following that he took up the life insurance business. From a solicitor in the field he was promoted through various branches until he became superintendent of agents at the home office. Leaving the insurance business in 1910 Mr. Madison became an apprentice appraiser for a farm mortgage concern, and has engaged in all the departments of that business. He has the distinction and experience of having made appraisements and loans upon farm lands in every state in the United States and a large portion of Canada.

The Virginian Joint Stock Land Bank of Charleston was organized by Mr. Madison and his associates in 1917. Its service covers the states of West Virginia and Ohio and the Bank now has aggregate assets of about $5,500,000. This bank has the distinction of having made the first loan completed under the provisions of the Federal Farm Loan Act.

Mr. Madison married, in 1905, Miss Lillian Evelyn Ashe of Houston, Texas. They have one son, James B. Madison, Jr.

REV. GEORGE W. ANNON for nearly half a century has carried some of the active burdens of the ministry of the Church of the Brethren in Taylor and surrounding counties. His gaitful occupation for an even longer period has been farming, and he is still living at his old homestead near the village of Thornton.

His family has been in West Virginia more than a century. His grandfather, John Annon, was a Protestant Irishman, and as a young man came from Londonderry, Ireland, being sixteen weeks on the voyage across the Atlantic. He was a weaver by trade and set up his loom in the village of Brandonville, Preston County, but spent his last years in Barbour County, where he owned a farm, though he did not till it. He died there in 1861, at the opening of the Civil war, at the venerable age of 104. His patriarch married after coming to this country Isaac Gibson, who died in Barbour County when about eighty-five years old. Her children were: Elizabeth, who married Benjamin Myers and died in Tucker County; John J., whose record follows; Eleanor, who married Isaac Hornbeck and died in Wood County; Jane, who died in this county, the wife of Alesback Casteel; and Zachariah, who spent his life as a farmer in Barbour County.

John J. Annon, representing the second generation, was born at Brandonville, Preston County, May 2, 1817, was reared there, getting such advantages as the schools of the day afforded, became a teacher both before and after his marriage, and shortly after that event he settled in Barbour County. For a number of years he lived in the vicinity of Moatsville, where he owned a farm, and in 1864 moved with his family to Taylor County, and spent his last years on the farm where his son George now resides. He died in 1875. He was active in the Church of the Brethren and was a democrat by preference. His wife was Isabel Hileman, who died in Barbour County in her eighty-sixth year. Her father, George Hileman, of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry, came from Pennsylvania to est Virginia and was a skilled house carpenter. It was said of him that he could go into the woods, cut the lumber, frame a building, haul the finished material to the place of construction, and in the erection have every piece fit to the notch. He died in the Brandonville locality. His wife was a Cutshort, and they had a numerous family. A brief record of the children of John J. Annon and wife as follows: Benjamin, who died in Darke County, Ohio, as a minister in the Church of the Brethren and also an elder; Levi died in infancy; Sophia, who died in Barbour County, her first husband being Eugenius Stalnaker and her second Isaac Ball; Rev. George W. was a minister in the Church of the Brethren, and was very active in the ministry, having traveled thousands of miles on horseback, and was an elder; Zachariah, of Thornton, Taylor County, Indiana, who spent her life near Thornton, the wife of W. Arble; Elizabeth, who married John W. DeMoss and lives at Grafton; Sylvanus M., a merchant of Blaser, W. of Ohio County, also a minister of the Church of the Brethren and also an elder; Dema, who died at Independence, West Virginia, wife of Gilbert F. Montgomery; Ed Clara B., who died at Grafton, wife of Eugenius C. DeMoss.

George Washington Annon was born near Moatsville, Barbour County, February 17, 1844, and was about twenty years old when he accompanied his parents to Taylor County. He brought with him the educational training acquired in the popular schools of his native county and the vigor of industry which has never deserted him. He helped clear up and start the farm on Horse Run in Taylor County, and when he married, at the age of twenty-two, settled down near his father and has been one of the prosperous and hard-working men of that community ever since. Grain and livestock have been the main departments of his farm enterprise, and he has a large part of 118 acres under cultivation.

At different times Mr. Annon has been one of the trustees of Westernman School District No. 8. His voting record in politics indicates a degree of independence in expressing his convictions. His first presidential vote went to Horatio Seymour in 1868. Four years later he supported Grace Greeley, in 1876 Samuel J. Tilden, in 1880 General Hancock, but in 1884 he again picked a loser by voting for James G. Blaine. Beginning about that time, he vigorously supported the prohibition ticket, but eventually resumed his place in democratic ranks, voting for Mr. Wilson in 1916 and for Cox in 1920.

In 1873 Mr. Annon became an active member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes called Dunkard, and the following year he was elected a deacon. In 1875 he was elected to the ministry, and preached his first sermon the Westernman Schoolhouse on the text "I knew a man Christ." He was ordained to the eldership of the church in 1895, and is still active in carrying the Gospel to the people.

In Wood County Mr. Annon made the acquaintance of Miss Martha H. Hornbeck, and they were married at Independence, Preston County, April 19, 1866. She was born October 21, 1845, daughter of Isaac and Eleanor (Annon) Hornbeck. Her father was a native of Barbour County, was a Union soldier in the Civil war, and spent his active life as a farmer. Mrs. Annon was the oldest child, the others being: Lydia, who married James Harvey and died in Jackson County; Isabel, who died unmarried; Sidney, who became the wife of John Reed and died near Sandyville in Jackson County; John, a farmer of Jackson County; Jacob, who died in that county; Virginia, who never married; and Ella, who died young.

Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Annon the oldest was Ida P., who died at the old home, wife of William Rout, leaving a son and daughter. Clara Alice, wife of W. Kirk, who is a minister in the Church of the Brethren, died also an elder, at Hammond, West Virginia, she is the mother of three sons and seven daughters. Alonzo died in childhood. Lloyd Wilson lives at Clarksburg. James M., a resident of Ohio County, near Wheeling. Walter H., the youngest, is a mail carrier out of Thornton. He was drafted in the service of his country, March 5, 1918, was sent to Camp Greenleaf, Georgia, and from there was transferred to New Haven, Connecticut, to the Medical department, and served until January 2, 1919, when he was honorably discharged. Lloyd Wilson, who lives at Clarksburg, married Allie Robinson, and has three children, Edith Edna, sixteen years old will graduate in the spring of 1922, Marjora Mildred and Alberta.

BENJAMIN T. NEAL, JR. The ancestor of the Neal family was Capt. James Neal, who changed his name from O'Neal during the Revolutionary war because one of his brothers was a colonel in the British Army. Capt. James Neal was born about 1737, and raised a company to join Washington's Army at Valley Forge and subsequently was offered a commission as major in the army of General Greene. After the war he returned to his home in Greene County, Pennsylvania. He keenly felt the poverty of the frontier, and is said to have sold a land grant of four thousand acres in Ohio for three hundred dollars. In the spring of 1783, as a deputy surveyor, he surveyed the preemption right and settlement claim of Alexander Parker of Pittsburgh, the land upon which the city of Parkersburg has since been built. In the fall of 1785 he again left Pennsylvania, with a party of men bound for the Kentucky country, but he and some of his companions stopped at the mouth of Little Kanawha and decided to make permanent settlement. Here they erected the block house afterward known as Neal's Station, the first structure of the kind in what is now Wood County. In the spring of 1787 Captain Neal returned with his family to Neal's Station. During succeeding years, until the victory of General Wayne in 1795, this settlement was exposed to recurring raids of Indians, during one of which a son of Captain Neal was killed. He was not only the first settler but always first in the affairs of his neighborhood until his death, which occurred at Neal's Station in February, 1822. He was a captain of Frontier Rangers, and held the office of justice of the peace and commissioner for the examination of surveyors. His first wife, Hannah Hardin, who died in 1784, was a sister of Col. John Hardin, a distinguished character of the Revolution and founder of the Hardin family of Kentucky. She was the mother of all but one of Capt. James Neal's children. His two sons who continued his posterity under the family name were John and James Hardin.

Of these John Neal was born in Greene County, Pennsylvania, May 10, 1776, and died October 14, 1823. He was prominent in the affairs of Wood County, was a member of the County Court from May 12, 1800, until his death, served as high sheriff from 1807 to 1809, and in 1809 was elected a member of the House of Burgesses of Virginia, serving two terms. In 1796 he married Ephlis Hook, who was born about 1780 and died June 27, 1852. She was the mother of thirteen children, fourth among whom was Cincinnati James Neal.

Cincinnati James Neal, representing the third generation of the family in Wood County, was born January 1, 1803, and died August 25, 1869. On February 24, 1830, he married Mary Ann Collins. Their children were: Virginia M., Benjamin Tomlinson, Mary L., John Collins, Narcissa P., Gay A., Libbie B., Eliza K. and Deric P. Cincinnati Neal during a number of years was a merchant in Parkersburg, and subsequently at Cleveland, Ohio. His son, Benjamin Tomlinson Neal, Sr., was born at Parkersburg in February, 1838, and in 1867 was appointed the first agent at Parkersburg for the Adams Express Company. With this corporation he remained a faithful and responsible employe and official for more than forty years. In 1884 he was transferred to Columbus, Ohio, where he remained until he retired in 1910, but he died at Parkersburg. His wife, Sallie Burns Shrewsbury, was born June 24, 1840, and died December 18, 1881. She was the mother of four children: Fannie S., wife of Frank P. Moats; Benjamin Tomlinson, Jr.; Edward Burns, court official; and Wellington V.

Benjamin T. Neal, Jr., who therefore represents the fifth generation of the family in Wood County, was born December 2, 1873. He acquired a public school education, and since the age of sixteen has been connected with the banking business at Parkersburg. For fifteen years he was an employee of the Second National Bank, but since 1903 has been with the Union Trust & Deposit Company, of which he is treasurer. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. The church of the family is the Episcopal and nearly all those descended from Cincinnati Neal have been republicans in politics.

Benjamin T. Neal, Jr., married Mabelle Armstrong, daughter of William and Emily (Shannon) Armstrong. Their two children are Clifford B. and Emily A., and Clifford is now the only descendant in the fourth generation of the family of Cincinnati Neal.

WHEELING TRACTION COMPANY. The Wheeling Traction Company has played an important part in advancing the civic and material interests of Wheeling and the Ohio Valley, progressing from the old-time horse car mode of transportation to an extensive city and interurban electric railway system, giving service of inestimable value to the public.

In 1863 the Citizens Railway Company of Wheeling gave to Wheeling its first street railway service, consisting of horse-drawn cars which operated on wooden tracks. The line extended from South Wheeling to North Wheeling and from Wheeling to Bridgeport, Ohio. This service was continued until 1887, when the Wheeling Railway Company was organized and combined with the Citizens Railway Company. After this consolidation the lines of the Citizens Railway in Wheeling were electrified and electric cars were operated on the old horse-car tracks.

The first electric cars operated in Wheeling were known as the Vanderpool type. The motor was in the front cab and was geared with a sprocket chain running from the motor to a sprocket wheel on the axle of the car. These cars could only be operated in one direction and it was necessary to have turntables or a "Y" at any point where it was necessary to turn the car. Wheeling was the third city in the United States to have an electric street railway system.

The track was constructed with a flat rail similar to that used on the horse car lines and was laid on a 6 by 6 inch wooden stringer with cross ties every five feet. Power was conveyed to the car with two overhead trolley wires, as no return was used through the rail.

In 1889 the electric railway was extended south into Benwood. In 1893 the new Back River Bridge was built and the electric line extended to Bridgeport, Ohio. The Bellaire, Bridgeport and Martins Ferry Street Railway Company was also organized and built a line during this year from Bellaire through Bridgeport to Martins Ferry, Ohio. In 1895 another company was organized and a line was built from Benwood to Moundsville, West Virginia. In 1898 an electric line was built from Steubenville, Ohio, to Brilliant, Ohio, by a number of Wheeling capitalists. In 1899 the Wheeling Railway Company was re-organized under the name of the Wheeling Traction Company, and it took over the interests of the Wheeling Railway Company, the Bridgeport, Bellaire & Martins Ferry Street Railway Company, which covered the lines on the Ohio side of the Ohio River, and the lines between Benwood and Moundsville. In 1901 the Northern Ohio Valley Railway Company was organized by Wheeling people, which company was later known as the Pan Handle Traction Company, and an electric railway line was built between Wheeling, West Virginia, and Wellsburg, West Virginia. Two years later this line was extended to Lazeaville, West Virginia. In 1902 the line between Steubenville and Brilliant was acquired by the Wheeling Traction Company.

In 1904 a line was built by the Tri-State Railway Company, later known as the Steubenville, Wellsburg & Weirton Railway Company, from Wellsburg to Steubenville, and about two years later a line was built from East Steubenville to Weirton, West Virginia. In this same year, or in 1904, the Wheeling Traction Company extended its lines from Bridgeport to Barton, Ohio. In 1906 the line was extended from Martins Ferry, Ohio, to Rayland, Ohio, and in 1907 the Bellaire line was extended to Shadyside, Ohio. In 1912 the stock of the Wheeling Traction Company was taken over by the West Penn Railways Company of Pittsburgh. In 1917 the West Penn Railways Company took over the Steubenville, Wellsburg & Weirton Railway Company, operating between Steubenville and Wellsburg and Steubenville and Weirton. These last named lines are now being operated under lease by the Wheeling Traction Company.

The first power plant was installed in an old skating rink in South Wheeling, and in later years was moved to a more substantial building at Forty-second Street, Wheeling. At the present time power to operate the cars is largely obtained from the Windsor Power Plant located at Beech Bottom, West Virginia, about twelve miles north of Wheeling.

The Wheeling Traction Company has kept up with the electric railway industries throughout the country, and today has on its lines double truck steel passenger cars of the latest design. On the interurban lines large center entrance steel type cars are used. There is operated daily seventy cars on regular schedules; in addition, freight and express cars are operated daily between Wheeling and Moundsville and Wheeling and Steubenville-Weirton. The track and overhead lines have been rebuilt and maintained in accordance with standard practice of modern railway construction, and at present the system comprises 101 miles of track.

The company has a corps of about 600 employees, including those in the transportation, track and shop departments. The shops and barns of the company are located on Wheeling Island, McMechen, West Virginia, Beech Bottom, West Virginia, and at Follansbee, West Virginia. During the year 1921, 27,000,000 passengers were carried on the lines of the company.

From the beginning the local stockholders and executives of the Wheeling Traction Company have been men of representative citizenship and financial stability. Through the untiring efforts of C. P. Billings, vice-president, the service on the lines has been greatly improved and the fares charged by the company most equitably adjusted.

C. BURTON STALNAKER found his work ready for him when he reached the years of manhood and the necessary qualifications, took an increasing share in the burdens of management from the shoulders of his father, and subsequently acquired the entire homestead of the Stalnakers on Little Stone Coal Creek in Lewis County, five miles east of Weston. Mr. Stalnaker is one of the principal feeders and shippers of livestock in this part of West Virginia.

He was born on his present farm August 19, 1875, son of Sobieski and Christina (Waggoner) Stalnaker. His father was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, January 8, 1839, and his mother, in Lewis County, near Jane Lew, November 6, 1835. Sobieski Stalnaker was a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (McWhorter) Stalnaker, the former born near the present site of Jane Lew in 1800 and the latter born in 1811. Samuel Stalnaker had a family of fourteen children, named Andrew, John, Charles, Julian, Levi, Levi 2nd, Marion, Walter, Sobieski, Amanda, Whitman, Margaret, Adam and Elizabeth.

C. Burton Stalnaker has always lived at the old homestead, and began performing some of its practical duties while attending school. After his marriage he became a partner with his father in the management of the 600 acres, and in 1916 he bought the livestock and land and has since carried on a large and profitable business in the feeding and shipping of livestock of all kinds. He has shipped many carloads in a single shipment. Besides the stock he buys he maintains good grades of cattle, horses and sheep. A considerable portion of his 600 acres is underlaid with coal, and shafts have been opened at two places, with a normal capacity of two carloads daily.

On August 19, 1897, Mr. Stalnaker married Agnes Lee Hefner, who was born in Upshur County, West Virginia, October 9, 1878, daughter of William T. and Virginia (Farrell) Hafner. Her parents were natives of Upshur county. Mr. and Mrs. Stalnaker have two children. Reta, born June 13, 1898, completed the course of the public schools and is the wife of Clark Smith, a farmer, who is in partnership with Mr. Stalnaker. Leda A. is now a student in the Western High School. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Stalnaker has taken a prominent and official part in his home church and has been superintendent of the Sunday school. He is affiliated with Golden Lodge No. 139, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America, and does his political duty as a republican.

JOHN C. FELTON. One of the venerable and honored citizens of Barbour County is Capt. John C. Felton, who resides upon his fine homestead farm in the Valley of the Tygart River, below Berryburg Junction. The Captain was born in the family home on the summit of a hill at Rowlesburg, Preston County, September 5, 1842, and is a grandson of John Felton, who settled in that locality in the early days, upon removal from Frederick County, Virginia. John Felton was born at Taneytown, Maryland, and his settlement in what is now Preston County, West Virginia, occurred almost a century ago. He served as magistrate and later as sheriff in that county, he having been a man of marked ability and sterling character, and thus having been well qualified for leadership in community affairs, the title he became one of the substantial pioneer farmers of Preston County. He was first a whig and later a republican in politics, and he and his wife held membership in the Methodist Church. The family name of Mrs. Felton was McHenry, and both attained to advanced age, he having been almost about seventy years of age at the time of his death, about 1850. Their children were nine in number: Henry, John, Joshua, Caleb, Samuel, Betsy (Mrs. Wetzell), Rudence (Mrs. Wotrting), Sarah (Mrs. Judon), and Mary. Henry Felton, father of Captain Felton of this sketch, was born in the year 1801 and was about eleven years old at the time of the family removal to Preston County. His loyalty to the Union at the time of the Civil war was manifested in service in behalf of the cause, though he was sixty years of age at the outbreak of the war, and he was busy in the Federal service when he was so badly injured in a railroad wreck near Fairmont that his death soon ensued, in 1864, his command having been on its way to be discharged and his death having occurred about two weeks after the wreck mentioned. He had given three years of gallant service as a member of the Sixth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. His active career was marked by close association with farm enterprises in Preston County, his home having been near the present town of Albright at the time of his death. He married Catherine Watring, the original spelling of the family name having been Wotrting, and Abraham Wotrting having settled in Pennsylvania about the time of the birth of Gen. George Washington. Mrs. Felton long survived her husband and continued her residence on the old homestead near Albright until her death in 1890. William, eldest of the children, passed his entire life in Preston County, was a road-builder by occupation and was past seventy years of age when he died, a number of children surviving him. Elias died when a young man. Malinda became the wife of Jacob Funk and died in Preston County. Daniel was one of the venerable residents of that county at the time of his death. Henry was a Union soldier in the Civil war, as a member of the Seventeenth West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and after the war he was a successful farmer. He was killed by a railroad train in 1892, and was survived by a number of his children. Elizabeth, the wife of Elisha Atha, died near Steubenville, Ohio. Eleanor died in Preston County. Her husband Isaac Wetzell, died while in service as a Union soldier in the Civil war. Captain John C., of this review, is the youngest of the number.

John Clay Felton was reared in Preston County, along the Cheat River, and well recalls the construction of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad line through Rowlesburg, where he saw the first locomotive cross the bridge. He continued his residence in his native county until 1869, when he removed to Barbour County. Prior to this it had been his desire to render loyal service as a Union soldier in the Civil war. He enlisted in Company A, Seventh West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, won promotion to the office of corporal and later to that of sergeant, and he continued in service with his original company until near the close of the war, he having re-enlisted at the close of his first term and he having received, under date of May 9, 1865, commission as first lieutenant of Company F of the same regiment. On the 26th of the same month he was commissioned captain of his company, a few days prior to the surrender of General Lee. Samuel Snyder was captain of Company A when Captain Felton first entered the service, his successor having been Captain Thomas Elliott, who later was succeeded by Captain John Fordyce. At the battle of Antietam the Seventh West Virginia Infantry lost one-third of its members in killed and wounded. Thereafter Captain Felton took active part in the battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, in which last he witnessed the famous charge of the Confederate forces under Gen. George E. Pickett. Thereafter Captain Felton took part in the Wilderness campaign, and fought at Spottsylvania and Cold Harbor. His regiment next took part in engagements around Petersburg, including the battles at Ream's Station and Hatcher's Run. The command followed the retreating Confederate forces and at the time of the surrender of General Lee was about one-half mile in the rear of the main army. The regiment took part in the grand review of the victorious forces in the City of Washington, and at Wheeling, West Virginia, Captain Felton received his honorable discharge on the 1st of July, 1865, he having never been wounded or otherwise injured in his remarkably active career at the front. He became one of the organic members of the post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Rowlesburg, later was affiliated with the post at Philippi and is now a member of Reno Post at Grafton. He has attended numerous West Virginia state encampments of this patriotic fraternity as well as the national encampments held at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania; Columbus, Ohio; and Indianapolis, Indiana.

Captain Felton cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, and has continued in unflinching allegiance to the republican party. He served ten years as magistrate in Pleasant District, Barbour County, and he and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was formerly in active affiliation with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

After his marriage, in 1869, Captain Felton soon removed to Clover District, Tucker County, where he continued his association with farm enterprise until 1891, since which year he has resided on his present homestead in Barbour County, where substantial success has attended his activities in the cattle and dairy business, the raising of poultry and the carrying on of general agriculture, his farm being one of the well improved places of the county.

July 1, 1869, recorded the marriage of Captain Felton and Miss Susanna M. Martin, who was born in Barbour County, September 29, 1845, and, like her husband, she acquired her education in the pioneer subscription schools, which were maintained in log buildings of the type common to the period and locality. Mrs. Felton is a daughter of Henry D. and Margaret (Means) Martin, the former a native of Barbour County and the latter of Preston County, their remains resting in the family burying ground on the old home farm in Barbour County. Barbara, eldest of the Martin children, became the wife of Sanford Scott, and she remained in Barbour County until her death; Anthony was one of the successful farmers of this county at the time of his death; Isaac died at Mount Morris, this county; Catherine married Ezekiel Hart and died at Peeltree, Barbour County; Jacob was a Union soldier in the Civil war and was killed in battle at Cedar Creek; Apalonia is the wife of E. C. Hull, and they reside in the State of Iowa; Matilda, wife of George Ryan, died in that state; George was a farmer at the old home place at Cove Run at the time of his death; Mrs. Felton was the next in order of birth; Lizzie became the wife of David Menear; Margaret is the wife of Upton Forman, of Weaverville, North Carolina; and Eveline (Mrs. Charles Cornwell) died in Barbour County.

In conclusion is given brief record concerning the children of Captain and Mrs. Felton: Henry Warren died in young manhood, in 1891. George C., who now has charge of the county farm in Taylor County, married Maggie Leach, and their children are Florin, Tracy, Leta, Pearl and Uriel. Jacob F., who resides at Clarksburg, this state, married Lula Saffel, and they have four children: Lillie, Howard, Bernard and Warren. Maggie is the wife of Ira Hoffman, of Arden, Barbour County, and they have five children: Lulah, Gerald, Clifford, William and Mary. Edgar C., who is associated with his father in the management of the home farm, married Miss Maude Proudfoot, and they have three children: Beulah L., Deveda Grace and Virginia Susanna. Harlan A. is identified with coal mining at Simpson, Taylor County, the maiden name of his wife having been Bessie McDaniel, and their children being five in number: Harold, John, Audrey, Edna and Hoy. Lizzie is the wife of Lee Colebank, who lives in Monongalia County, West Virginia, but whose post office is at Point Marion, Pennsylvania, and they have seven children: James, Opal, Mildred, John, Donald, Marguerite and Ralph. Upton, the youngest of the children, has proved the rover of the family and has variously employed himself in different parts of West Virginia and other states.

RALPH H. McDANNOLD, M. D. To the profession and practice of medicine and surgery Doctor McDannold has devoted the best years of his mature life, and is one of the valued men of his home community at Horner in Lewis County.

Doctor McDannold was born in Lewis County, two miles north of Weston, July 1, 1877. His grandfather, Thomas McDannold, was a native of old Virginia and died June 29, 1869, while his wife, Nancy Stewart, died July 17, 1881. Their children were Samuel, Elizabeth, Addison, Julia, Archie and Virginia. Of these Samuel McDannold became a physician, and had the unique distinction of practicing three-quarters of a century. He died at the age of ninety-six. Addison McDannold, father of Dr. Ralph McDannold, was born in Bath County, Virginia, October 20, 1835, and died January 14, 1896. His wife, Amanda Simpson, was born May 8, 1838, and died July 29, 1911. They were married June 19, 1859, and then settled on a farm in the Polk District of Lewis County. In 1880 Addison McDannold was elected sheriff of Lewis County on the democratic ticket, and filled that office with admirable efficiency for four years. After that he took up farming again on Polk Creek, and lived there until his death. He was the father of five children: William, born July 16, 1860; Lucy, born December 15, 1864, and died October 14, 1885; Eliza, born September 27, 1867; Miss Bessie, born July 7, 1875; and Dr. Ralph H.

Dr. Ralph H. McDannold grew up on his father's farm in Lewis County. He had a public school education and for several years worked at farming. Later he entered the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, where he graduated M. D., July 12, 1905. For a time Doctor McDannold practiced in Randolph and Upshur counties, but now for a number of years has been given the benefit of his skill and experience to his extensive practice at Horner. He is a member of the County and State Medical associations.

On August 10, 1910, Doctor McDannold married Lenora Harper, formerly a teacher in Randolph County, West Virginia. She died March 14, 1912, and her only child is deceased. On June 4, 1913, Doctor McDannold married Luna Phillips. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is affiliated with Rock Cave Lodge, F. and A. M.; Golden Lodge No. 139, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Modern Woodmen of America, while Mrs. McDannold is a member of the Eastern Star. In politics he is of the democratic faith.

THOMAS E. STALNAKER taught school for several years before getting started as a farmer, but in the main his activities have identified him as a man of practical and progressive leadership in the agricultural community of Horner in Lewis County. He is a well known citizen there, and has exerted an influence for good both in social and civic affairs.

Mr. Stalnaker was born near Horner, May 2, 1867, son of Sobieski and Christina (Waggoner) Stalnaker. His father was born in Harrison County, West Virginia, January 8, 1839, and his mother, in Lewis County, near Janelaw, November 6, 1835. Sobieski Stalnaker was a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (McWhorter) Stalnaker, the former born near the present site of Janelaw in 1800 and the latter born in 1811. Samuel Stalnaker had a family of fourteen children, named Andrew, John, Charles, Julian, Levi 2nd, Marion, Walter, Sobieski, Amanda, Whitman, Margaret, Adam and Elizabeth.

Sobieski Stalnaker was reared on McKenney's Run, and after his marriage spent his active life as a farmer near Horner. Of his eleven children two died in early life, one at the age of fifty, and the eight now living are: Elias M., a farmer in Lewis County; Rebecca, wife of A. C. Hardman; Thomas E.; George W., a farmer in Braxton County; Thaddeus S., a Lewis County farmer; Ira A., a salesman; Charles B., a farmer in Lewis County; and Victoria.

Thomas E. Stalnaker spent his early years on the farm near Horner. He attended the common schools there, took a commercial course at Buckhannon, and for three winters taught school. During the past thirty years he has been diligently engaged in his tasks as a farmer, and owns a well equipped place of 200 acres. He has also been active in public affairs, serving four years as deputy county assessor. He is a republican, a charter member of Golden Lodge No. 139, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a past noble grand of the Lodge, past chief patriarch of the Encampment, and has attended sessions of the Grand Lodge. He is a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On September 5, 1889, Mr. Stalnaker married Julia V. Hall, who was born in Lewis County, October 16, 1870. Their family consists of seven children: Roy S., who graduated from a commercial course at Buckhannon and now lives at Ashland, Kentucky; Thomas C., formerly a teacher now a farmer in Lewis County; Anna G., wife of Jacob Jackson, of Clarksburg, West Virginia; Frieda O., wife of Ray Harris, of Weston; Ethel, who is a graduate of the Weston High School and the wife of Stokes Swisher, of Weston; Mary, wife of Edwin Waggoner, of Weston; and Walter C.

ROSCOE C. SMITH, former superintendent of the Lewis County Infirmary, had a thoroughly successful record as a practical farmer as a chief qualification for that post. He is a good business man, capable in handling affairs of public trust, and was a decided success in his responsibility.

Mr. Smith was born near Horner in Lewis County, June 14, 1872, son of Ellis L. and Matilda F. (Hudson) Smith. His father was born near Horner, September 25, 1843, and his mother was born on Shin Creek, near Georgetown, August 6, 1843, and died in 1910. Ellis Smith was a son of Martin J. and Margaret (Talbert) Smith, the former a native of Lewis County, who died when past seventy-eight years of age, and the latter a native of Upshur County. Matilda F. Hudson was a daughter of Jacob W. Hudson, who lived to the advanced age of ninety-one. Ellis L. Smith, after his marriage, settled on a farm near Horner and devoted his years to farming, except for the four years he was a soldier in the Union Army. He was wounded July 4, 1862, but after recuperating joined his command and served until the close of the war. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Horner. His eleven children were named Clarence L., Flavilla F., Maggie, Jacob M., R. C., Washington H., Ellis L., Myrtle, Grace, Hugh and Esta.

Roscoe C. Smith grew up on the home farm and had a public school education. After he was twenty-one he continued working on the farm and later he and his brother Jacob M. bought 107 acres, which they farmed in partner-

p. When he sold his interest in that he bought land in Upshur County, at the headwaters of Stone Coal Creek. His property he sold in 1903, and then bought a farm his native community, near Horner. Mr. Smith owns 100 acres in his own name, while Mrs. Smith has thirty-acres. While still continuing the ownership of the farm, Mr. Smith accepted appointment as superintendent of the Lewis County Infirmary, in March, 1917, and devoted five years to the official administration of that important county institution.

In 1896 he married Mary E. Clark, who was born in Lewis County, May 1, 1878, and was educated in the common schools. Eleven children were born to their marriage, of whom ten now living are Virgil N., who was with the soldiers at a training camp during the World war; Lura M.; Ida; Commodore R.; Ercell; Madge; Milo M.; Gladys; Katie; and John R. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Horner. Mr. Smith is a past noble grand of Golden Lodge No. 139, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a member of the Encampment, the Modern Woodmen of America, and in politics is a republican.

J. P. SNYDER. Lewis County honors J. P. Snyder for twenty years of industry and faithful performance of duty. His military record as a soldier of the Confederacy, and his citizenship at all times.

Mr. Snyder is still living in the house where he was born, January 7, 1839, son of Peter and May C. (Stone) Snyder. His father was a native of Highland County and his mother of Pendleton County, old Virginia, and after their marriage they settled in Lewis County, in what is now West Virginia, in 1837. Peter Snyder acquired 400 acres of land when he came to Lewis County, and out of that prosperity he gained he subsequently owned 640 acres. He was a man of substance and high standing. He was a democrat in politics and a member of the Methodist Church. His first wife died, and he then married a Miss Fisher, and by that union had one child, Peter Snyder. By his first wife, Miss Stone, there were six children: Emma, who became the wife of Daniel Hoover; Jeremiah; Ezekiah and Uriah, both deceased; Josiah P.; and Mary, who died.

Josiah P. Snyder grew up on the home farm, acquired good education in the nearby schools, and his duties and interests were largely centered at the old homestead until the outbreak of the Civil war. He then joined the Confederate Army, was in the commissary department under General Jackson, and was in the struggle until the close. He was in several battles, but was never wounded. After the war he resumed his place on the home farm, and has steadily carried on his industry as a general farmer and stockman. He has 600 acres in Lewis County, his home being two miles from Weston, on the Parkersburg and Weston Pike. Mr. Snyder is a democrat.

JOSEPH FUCEY. Before his busy career was ended by death on Sunday, March 19, 1922, Col. Joe Fucey, as he is popularly known, had accumulated a record of achievements that made him one of the prominent railroad builders and contractors of the State of West Virginia. He was a veteran in the field of railroad building, a work he had carried on more or less continuously for forty years. There were half a dozen different lines in West Virginia and the Ohio Valley in whose construction he participated. While his work made a reputation for him over the state, he is especially known and esteemed as a citizen of Weston, where he had his home for thirty years.

Joseph Fucey was born in Italy, February 11, 1857, son of Russell and Lucretia Fucey. His parents were reared and educated in Italy, grew up and married there, his father coming a grist miller and farmer. Both were devout Catholics. The father died in Italy November 26, 1877. Of his nine children four are now living: Sullivan; Victoria, who is married and lives in South America; Dominick, a contractor in West Virginia; and Mary Antoinette, who is married and living in Italy.

Joseph Fucey was reared in Italy and lived there until he was twenty-two years of age. He had three years of service in the army. In 1881 he came to the United States, and for about two years lived in New York, doing railroad work. He early rose to the responsibilities of a foreman of the construction gang, and in 1883 moved to Pennsylvania and continued to act as foreman. He was at Pitt, Pennsylvania, and while there began taking small contracts or acting as sub-contractor. His first work as a contractor in West Virginia was in Preston County, where during 1886 he helped build the narrow gauge railroad from Tunnelton to Kingwood. Subsequently he was in construction work along the Ohio and Kanawha valleys, built four miles of railroad at Middletown, Ohio, two miles at Reading, Ohio, two miles at Coshocton, four miles at Short Creek, Ohio, and on returning to West Virginia built three miles of a railroad at Fairmont. During 1890 he was one of the contractors who changed the narrow gauge to a standard gauge from Clarksburg to Buckhannon. He also laid the railroad tracks from Weston to Sutton, and built a branch of thirteen miles from Flatwoods to Wayneville during 1891-92. During 1893 he built the pike from Kovan to Webster Springs. In 1892 Mr. Fucey established his permanent home at Weston, and while he did considerable railroad building afterward his organization and facilities were gradually adopted for a broader service of general contracting and he was head of this profitable business until his death.

Outside of railroads there are many evidences of his contracting experience over the state. He was the contractor for the old Fair Ground race track, now occupied by Highland Park at Clarksburg. In 1910 he built about six miles of the interurban line from Clarksburg to Weston, and in 1905 he built part of a similar line from Fairmont to Clarksburg. In 1909 he built the road for the Coal and Coke Railroad Company between Sutton and Gassaway. In 1917 he had the contract for the street paving at Burns-ville, West Virginia. Some of the concrete roads constructed in Marion County during 1919 were assigned to his organization, and during 1920-21 he built two miles of concrete and brick road in Lewis County, the first curbless road in West Virginia and which has been pronounced by Government engineers as the best road in the state. This was the last important contract he handled.

His business involved an enormous amount of capital in the aggregate, and also the handling of hundreds and even thousands of men and brought him in touch with prominent leaders in industrial affairs. As a contractor he enjoyed especially the esteem of engineers and other officials of railroad companies who were unstinted in their praise of his efficiency as a contractor. One of the prominent engineers of the Baltimore and Ohio System, C. McC. Lemley, once wrote concerning the work of grading and construction done under his direct supervision and concluded his letter with the words "Mr. Fucey I know to be an honest and reliable man, and would cheerfully recommend him to anyone as being thoroughly efficient in any work that he might undertake."

The death of Colonel Fucey came suddenly, following a day of visiting in Grafton with some relatives. He had never married. After the death of his father he supported his mother and brought her to the United States in 1896, and at the age of ninety-four she survives him at Weston. Colonel Fucey was a member of the Weston Lodge of Knights of Columbus, and a charter member of Grafton Lodge No. 482, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He was a member of the Catholic Church and a republican in politics. Through all his active years as a business man he was noted for his charitable spirit, and one of the provisions of his will is characteristic, being a request that ten per cent of his estate should be invested in the Citizens Bank of Weston and the proceeds be distributed among the poor of Weston as long as the funds remained. Colonel Fucey was a stockholder in the Citizens Bank, and was an official in the Dancer Manufacturing Company, having been vice president of that corporation.

During the World war period he took on active and prominent part in movements for the benefit of the cause, was a large contributor to war saving funds, Liberty Loan drives, and many times was called on as an arbitrator among his own people, proving his patriotism and loyalty to his adopted country by his true Americanism. He was recognized as the leading spirit and figure among the Italian people of the state, and his verdict and word was never questioned by them.

ELLIS L. SMITH. While he owns and lives on a good farm three miles east of Weston, Ellis L. Smith is most widely known over Lewis County for the good work he has done as a teacher and in school administration, a responsibility he has carried the greater part of his active life.

Mr. Smith was born on Stone Coal Creek in Lewis County, December 6, 1876, son of Lee and Matilde (Hudson) Smith. His father was born in the same locality, September 25, 1843. He had a private school education, and as a youth enlisted in the Union Army, performing the service of a brave and dutiful soldier. When the war was over he returned home, married, and then settled on the farm where he has lived ever since. He is a republican, and has been active in the Methodist Protestant Church. This old soldier and old time resident of Lewis County had a family of eleven children: Clarence L.; Flavia F., wife of Bruce Shoulders; Margaret, widow of T. J. Bonnell; Jacob M., a farmer in Lewis County; Roscoe C., a Lewis County farmer; Washington H., a member of the Weston police force; Ellis L.; Myrtle, wife of Wade Hardman, of Weston; Hugh, who is a railroad man; Grace, wife of Scott Bulcher; and Esta, wife of Naaman Lawson.

Ellis L. Smith was reared on his father's farm, and in addition to the public schools he attended a private normal and a state normal at Fairmont. Mr. Smith put in twenty-three years teaching in different schools of the county. For four years he was county superintendent of schools, and during that time did much to elevate and improve the standards of school work throughout the county. He is now serving his second year as principal of the Shady Brook School at Weston. Mr. Smith's farm comprises sixty-eight and one-half acres, and it furnishes him occupation for his vacation periods and also a delightful home for his family.

On March 14, 1900, Mr. Smith married Maude Bush. They have one daughter, Irene, born May 19, 1906, now a sophomore in the Weston High School. The family are members of the Methodist Protestant Church. Mr. Smith is a past noble grand of Golden Lodge No. 139, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, he and his wife are members of the Rebekahs, and he is affiliated with Weston Lodge No. 43, Knights of Pythias. Politically he is a republican.

ROBERT LONDON PEMBERTON was born in Pennington, Lancashire, England, March 9, 1860, the son of Robert and Abigail B. (Landon) Pemberton. His grandfather was Joseph Pemberton and his great-grandfather, John Ball Pemberton. In the spring of 1863 Robert Pemberton, at the age of fifty, came to America, locating near Philadelphia, and enlisted in Company I of the Pennsylvania Volunteers to repel the invasion of the state by the Confederates under Lee. In the fall of the same year he was joined by his wife and children—two daughters and the son, Robert.

In 1865 the family removed to Alleghany; in 1870, to Wellsburg, West Virginia; and in 1873, to New Martinsville, in the same state. In the last named town the boy, Robert L., began learning the trade of printer in the office of the Labor Vindicator, edited and published by Daniel Long. It was the first paper printed in Wetzel County. This was in the year 1875, and his connection with the paper afforded him opportunity to publish verses and other articles of his own composition.

In 1877 the Labor Vindicator ceased, and in that fall he went to St. Marys as printer of The Watchword, the first paper published in Pleasants County, Rev. F. M. Yates being owner and editor. This paper suspending, he taught the country school at Mount Olive, below St.

Marys, the following winter, having passed an examination which entitled him to a first-class certificate.

For several years after this he was employed in printing establishments at various places. On November 24, 1886, he married Margaret C., daughter of Robert Alexander and Annie Carroll Gallaher, and to them were born two children, Margaret and Robert, the latter dying in infancy.

Mr. Pemberton taught one term as assistant principal of the New Martinsville High School and six years was principal of the St. Marys School. In 1890 he was employed by the Census Bureau in Washington and New York, resigning in 1891, when he read law and was admitted to the bar.

In 1894 he was elected superintendent of schools for Pleasants County, serving four years. In 1910 he was elected a member of the House of Delegates, in which he was appointed chairman of the committee on printing of the committee of executive buildings, and was a member of several other committees.

In 1902 he became part owner of the St. Marys Oracle and in 1911 became sole owner, improving the plant by installing new presses and linotype machines.

He has contributed short stories and occasionally verse to eastern newspapers and magazines. For several years he conducted a column of verse and prose under the head of "Random Remarks" in the Oracle, and has published two volumes of verse, one entitled "Random Rhymes" and the other "Songs in Merry Mood." In the last five years he has written several serial stories. During twenty-five years he has been trustee and senior warden of the Episcopal Church of St. Marys. He is a member of the West Virginia Press Association, and also a member of the American Press Humorists.

THE JEFFERSON GLASS COMPANY. Prominent among the thriving industries of Follansbee, one that has enjoyed rapid and healthy growth is the Jefferson Glass Company, now a leading factor in the industrial prestige of this part of the state.

The Jefferson Glass Company had its origin at Steubenville, Ohio, where it was chartered in 1900, but in 1901 came to Follansbee because of the attraction offered by the possibility of gas facilities in the operation of the plant. When the buildings were first erected they covered approximately two and one-half acres of ground, but since that time the size of the plant has been doubled, now occupying some five acres, while the working force of sixty-five men has increased proportionately, and the annual pay-roll now amounts to about $250,000. The concern's product consists principally of illuminating glassware and automobile specialties, lenses, flashlight lenses, etc. The product of this plant is to be found in 90 per cent of all automobiles now in operation. During the World War the company made Government navy glass for the United States Navy, etc., and operated at about an 80 per cent war production basis. Dorman Sinclair, of Steubenville, was the former owner of the company, but sold out in May, 1910, and the Jefferson Glass Company is now an incorporation, with C. H. Blumenauer, president and manager. Mr. Blumenauer devoted all his attention to this company, a large amount of the success of which can be accredited to his ability and industry. Recently gas has been sent out of the state in such great quantities that it was found in the winter months sufficient natural gas was not available, and in order to make up the deficit this company installed gas producing machines at a heavy expense, thus supplying the demand. This makes the company largely independent of the matter of operating power.

In connection with the above company, but in a separate building, is the Jefferson Company, manufacturer of high grade electric lights, table lamps, etc. It is an independent company, with J. E. Austin, a practical lantern man, as president, and there are fifty men on the payroll, which approximates $50,000 annually. Mr. Blumenauer is treasurer of this concern and C. B. Roberts, manger, and the output, sold to jobbers and department stores, used in every civilized country in the world.

C. H. Blumenauer was born in Cumberland, Maryland, and in 1889 became a buyer for a Chicago jobbing house, remaining in that capacity until 1893. From then until 1910 he was identified with the Macbeth-Evans Glass Manufacturing Company, being in charge of their Chicago office, which was the western department of that company, and then came to his present positions. He has been wholly devoted to glass manufacturing since 1910, and prior to that had experience along the same line, so that he is one of the best informed men in his field of activity in the state. Energetic and progressive, he has utilized all opportunities as they have appeared, and in so doing has risen to a place of recognized importance in the business world. Mr. Blumenauer is a Mason of high standing, belonging to all the Masonic bodies. His home is at Wheeling, where he holds membership in a number of reading clubs, and also belongs to several civic bodies. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Association of Manufacturers.

Mr. Blumenauer married Miss Larue E. Martin, of Iowa, and to this union there have been born three children: Martha Mary, the wife of L. O. Griffith, secretary of the Jefferson Glass Company, and a resident of Steubenville, Ohio. He served as a lieutenant in the late war. Gertrude is the wife of Carl D. Roberts, director and manager of the Jefferson Company, and a resident of Steubenville. He held the rank of captain during the World war, and served as a replacement camp at the front in France. Edna is married and resides with her parents.

THE WHEELING SANITARY MANUFACTURING COMPANY. The initiation of the pottery industry in the City of Wheeling is to be credited to Charles W. Franzheim, George K. Heat and W. A. Issett, who enlisted the services of J. Carson, a practical pottery man from England, to assume the chief charge of the new enterprise. Operations began in the old Wheat tannery plant, which occupied the site of the present Wheeling Tile Company. Later the company selected the La Belle pottery plant, in the south end of the city. In the early days Messrs. Hearne and O'Brien also engaged in the manufacturing of general lines of pottery at Wheeling, but they were not successful and their plant passed into the possession of Anton Reyman, who brought from Germany an expert potter, with the intention of producing pure porcelain. He continued operations a few years, and about 1890 the Wheeling Potteries Company was organized and took over the plants of the two concerns mentioned above. Under this title the business was continued until adverse trade conditions resulted in the concern's being placed in the hands of a receiver. Within a short time thereafter a reorganization was effected, the result being the incorporation of the Wheeling Sanitary Manufacturing Company, which initiated operations on the basis of a capital stock of $750,000. With progressive industrial policies, careful and well ordered commercial methods, and ample capital this company has developed a substantial and prosperous manufacturing enterprise, which contributes much to the commercial prestige of Wheeling. The modern sanifactory of the company turns out vitreous china products of the best type, and the output includes toilet tanks, bathtubs and bathtubs of vitreous china, as well as porcelain bathtubs, laundry trays, kitchen sinks, etc., together with similar products of enameled type. The company now operates three well equipped manufacturing plants, two of which are established in the City of Wheeling and the third at Tiltonville, Ohio. The corps of employees in the plants averages 450 under normal trade conditions, and free salesmen are retained in representing the company in the jobbing trade of the United States, besides which an appreciable export business has been developed. The company's annual payroll at Wheeling aggregates $300,000. The company is at the time of this writing, in the winter of 1921-2, preparing to expend approximately $100,000 in improvements on the Wheeling plants, the principal improvement being the installing of a new type of kiln, made up of a group of sixteen chambers, instead of individual kilns, a type but recently introduced into this country from England and one that greatly conserves fuel. Of this progressive industrial corporation John E. Wright is president, and S. P. Alpaugh the secretary and treasurer. William F. Stifel, a director of the company, had likewise been a director of the old Wheeling Potteries Company. Mr. Wright, the president of the company, was appointed receiver of the Wheeling Potteries Company in 1910, and he was the primary force in effecting the reorganization and placing the industry on a substantial and profitable basis.

JOHN E. WRIGHT was born at Wheeling, December 19, 1862, his father, the late John Wright, having been one of the twenty-three men who in 1852 organized the LaBelle Iron Works, long one of the leading industrial concerns of the Wheeling District, he having been a practical man in the business and having had charge of motive power, as superintendent, from the time of the erecting and equipping of the original plant. He retired from active service in 1876, but retained his financial interests in the business until his death in 1907, at the venerable age of eighty-five years. John Wright was born at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and came to Wheeling in 1852, at the time of the organization of the LaBelle Iron Works. He was an expert iron man, he having learned his trade in one of the largest of the old-time iron mills in Pittsburgh. He was also a director of the Jefferson Iron Works at Steubenville, Ohio, and was active in political affairs, first as a whig and later as a republican, though he had no ambition for public office. His wife, whose maiden name was Eleanor Madden, was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, and their companionship of more than fifty years was severed by her death in 1903. They became the parents of seven children: Anna Virginia, widow of F. J. Hugens, resides at Wheeling; Miss Elizabeth died in 1921; Eleanor G. is the wife of C. A. Robinson, of Wheeling; William F. died at the age of twenty-three years; John E., of this review, was the next in order of birth; Margaret is the wife of C. L. Taylor, of Los Angeles, California; and Carrie M. is the wife of Thomas Stewart, of Wheeling.

John E. Wright gained his early education in the public schools and as a youth he became a skilled operator of a nail machine in the plant of the LaBelle Iron Works. Later he was made paymaster in the office of the concern, and he continued his advancement through various grades until he became president of the company in 1898. He thus continued until 1903, when he sold his interest in the business. In the following year he engaged in independent business as a broker and contractor, devoting five years to the iron and steel brokerage business and to contracting in public work. While president of the LaBelle Iron Works he purchased the Jefferson Iron Works at Steubenville, Ohio, re-built the plant and made the business a success, the same being still a subsidiary of the LaBelle Iron Works.

Mr. Wright wedded Miss Bessie Baron, daughter of Abraham Baron, and her death occurred nineteen years later, in 1914. She is survived by two children: Mary Eleanor is the wife of David W. Sloan, of Baltimore, Maryland; and John E., Jr., is superintendent of a plant at Elm Grove, a suburb of Wheeling.

EMMIT O. BOYLEN. On land and in the same community where the Pioneer Boylen settled and began his activities as a home-maker a hundred years ago Emmit O. Boylen has found his work, congenial duties, and the relationships that give life value. His home is on rural route No. 2 out of Philippi, but the locality is better known as Taylor's Drain. A prosperous farmer, Mr. Boylen has accepted opportunities for usefulness outside his private affairs, and has exemplified the same high standard of good citizenship that has always characterized the name in this section of West Virginia.

His pioneer ancestor was his grandfather, Abner Boylen, who on coming to West Virginia settled in the woods and on land now owned by Emmit Boylen. He put up a log cabin and that rude house, with its simple comforts, sufficed him during his life time and continued to be the home of his widow for several years. The old house stood until recently.

The oldest son of Abner Boylen was John Boylen, who was born at Taylor's Drain in Barbour County July 16, 1834. For his education he attended the old field subscription school, and farming was his regular occupation. His first farming experience on his own account was south of Philippi, but he soon returned to the Taylor's Drain locality and finally bought the Heck farm, on which he spent the rest of his life. Mr. Heck was one of the earliest settlers in that region, taking up land on Hacker's Creek and built a log house, in which he lived out his life. His wife and two children are buried at Taylor's Drain Church. John Boylen was a Union man, but his effort to get into the army was rejected. He began voting as a democrat, but the issues of the war made him a republican. He was a leader in the Methodist Church and helped build the church now standing on Taylor's Drain, and his home was the place of entertainment for the minister who served that community. John Boylen was a fine example of physical, mental and moral manhood, stood six feet tall, like men of his day wore a chin beard, and was kindly and helpful in his relations with his friends and natives. He was well informed by reading and observation and an interesting conversationalist.

John Boylen, who died April 13, 1908, at the age of seventy-four, married on September 23, 1862, Elizabeth Ann Read, who represented one of the prominent families in this section. She was born September 15, 1834, and died September 11, 1891. Her father, William Read, was born on Pleasant Creek in Taylor County, and married a Miss Sayre. William Read had a brother, Rev. Frank Read. Their mother was one of the finest types of pioneer women and one of the first settlers in this section of Barbour County. She possessed a great deal of courage and resourcefulness. When her husband, who was a great hunter and trapper and supplied most of the meat for the family in that way, was absent from home on his expeditions his wife would prop the cabin door to prevent wolves or bear or other wild animals from molesting her. Her husband was of German ancestry, and he used the language largely in conversation and also read and wrote it. The children of John Boylen and wife were: Francis A.; Celia A., wife of Absalom Poling, of Upshur County; John Calvin, a farmer near Berryberg; Matilda Jane, who married Lewis Poling, of Bedford County, Pennsylvania; William Irvin, who died in infancy; James Lloyd, who was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church and died in Lewis County, leaving two daughters; Emmitt O.; Ellis, who died in childhood.

Emmitt O. Boylen was born October 24, 1869, on the old Heck farm and in a log house which stood there. His birthplace was within a mile of the site where his grandfather settled, and for more than fifty years he has remained in this locality and on his present farm. He secured his education in the public school on Taylor's Drain. The day of the log cabin school had passed when he became a scholar. He came under the influence of some very able teachers in that school. One of them was Judge Ira E. Robinson, who was not only a good schoolmaster, but later distinguished himself as an able lawyer and judge. Another figure in the Taylor's Drain community was Scott White, now a Clarksburg banker, and still another who made a favorable impression was Jimmie Scott. Emmitt O. Boylen remained at home with his parents and cared for them in their declining years. When he married he brought his bride to the old home. He learned farming under his father, and has never departed to a great extent from the lessons he thus learned. He not only owns the homestead where he was born, but the place where his grandfather settled. He has grown beef cattle, has kept his stock at a good grade, and has bred some pedigreed Poland China hogs.

In the line of community service Mr. Boylen was postmaster at Boylen, being appointed during the administration of Colonel Roosevelt. He has also been a member of the School Board and supervisor of roads. He and Mrs. Boylen are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for many years he was a trustee and steward and has been one of the leaders in keeping up Sunday School work. He was superintendent of the Taylor's Drain Sunday School, and maintained that institution when his and on other family were the only ones interested.

At Grafton, October 23, 1895, Mr. Boylen married Miss Maude B. Slane, daughter of John and Annie (Finley) Slane, the former a native of Hampshire County, West Virginia, and the latter of Barbour County, born on Buckhannon River, where her father conducted a mill. John Slane was a Government teamster in the Civil war being a boy at the time, after the war was a carpenter in Grafton, and finally entered a pump factory as a turner and was in the service of that institution forty years. In 1914 he and his wife removed to Statesville, North Carolina, and they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in that Southern city on April 7, 1922. The members of the Slane family are: Grace, wife of George Stephens, of Statesville; Oscar, of Statesville, who is active head of several mirror factories in North Carolina, Kentucky and Tennessee and a man of wealth and influence; Mary Boylen, who was born September 1, 1877; Effie G., wife of Frank Wineskie, of High Point, North Carolina; Fred, of Statesville; Willis, of High Point; Lloyd, who died in childhood; Mabel, wife of Fred Whitescarver, of Pruntytown, West Virginia.

At their delightful home in the country Mr. and Mrs. Boylen have provided for the material comforts and education of a happy family of children growing up about them. These children are: Elbert D., Carl L., Walter, Fred, Clarence, Freda Belle, Neva Clare and Wilford L. The son Elbert is a merchant in the mining town of Midland. Carl is a student in an automobile school in Chicago. Walter Fred is now finishing his education in Broadus College at Philippi.

GEORGE D. MILLER is one of the prominent young men in the financial and business affairs of Huntington, and a large group of important interests center in him. His chief daily routine is in the First National Bank, of which he is cashier. Mr. Miller was born at Huntington, December 20, 1887. His father, the late George F. Miller, came to Huntington when a young man, and after his marriage at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, settled here permanently. He assisted in organizing the First National Bank of Huntington in 1884, and became its first cashier, holding that position until his death. In the meantime he had done something toward making this the largest bank in West Virginia in point of capital and resources. He was associated with the group of men who really built up Huntington to an important city. He was a democrat, but in 1896 changed politics on account of the free silver issue. He was a active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. South. George F. Miller married Lucy McConnell, a native of Catlettsburg, Kentucky, who died at Huntington. They were the parents of three sons: James I. is a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore and is practicing medicine at Huntington. Charles I. is in the wholesale dry goods business at Seattle, Washington.

George D. Miller, the youngest of the sons, was educated in the public schools of Huntington, and attended preparatory schools at Charlottesville and Alexandria, Virginia. He left school at the age of twenty, and soon afterwards became bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Huntington. He was promoted to teller, again to assistant cashier, and since April, 1920, has been cashier of this institution, now housed in the magnificent twelve-story business block that is the outstanding structure in the Huntington district. Mr. Miller is also a director of the bank.

He is associated with his brothers in the ownership of several business buildings in Huntington, and among the other interests that claim a share of his active energies are the Huntington Land Company, of which he is secretary, Ohio River Land Company, Pea Ridge Land Company, Kenova-Huntington Land Company, and the Enslow Park Realty Company, all of which he is treasurer, and he is president of the Miller-Hunt Homes Company.

Mr. Miller votes as an independent. He is affiliated h Huntington Lodge No. 313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Huntington Rotary Club, Guyandotte Club of Huntington, Huntington Country Club and West Virginia Country Club. During the war he exerted himself in half of all the patriotic causes, and was particularly valuable in leading and insuring the success of the Liberty Loan drives. Mr. Miller has a modern home at 1056 Sixth Avenue. He married at Huntington in 1908 Miss Chloe Little, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Edward S. Doolittle, now deceased. Her father was a prominent West Virginia lawyer and judge of the Circuit Court. Mrs. Miller is a graduate of Marshall College at Huntington and finished her education in the Randolph-Macon College at Lynchburg, Virginia. Three children have been born to their marriage: George D., Jr., born in 1911; Jane, born in 1914; Chloe, born in 1917.

WILLIAM CALVIN CAMP, M. D., is widely known over Boone County for the earnest and capable service he has rendered for nearly sixteen years as a physician and surgeon. He was in the service of the Government for most of the World war, and now largely confines his attention to his practice as a specialist, being located at Spencer. Doctor Camp was born on a farm seven miles south of Spencer in Roane County, April 30, 1877. The Camp family originated in Wales. Three brothers, James, Charles and Henry Camp, immigrated to Virginia in Colonial times. Doctor Camp is descended from James Camp, who settled in Wythe County, Virginia. William Anderson Camp, grandfather of Doctor Camp, was born at Wythe Court house in Wythe County in 1809, and from there moved to Boone County, West Virginia, and finally retired and died at the farm of his son near Spencer, June 23, 1896. He married Eliza Lowe, who was born in Monroe County in 1810, and died also in Roane County, in 1892. Henry Camp, father of Doctor Camp, was born in Monroe County, January 10, 1852, and in 1863 his parents removed to Johnson Creek, near Walton, in Roane County. He became a carpenter, followed his trade in connection with operating a farm five miles south of Spencer, and since 1920 has retired in Spencer. He is a republican. Henry Camp married Margaret Ann Hersman, who was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, January 26, 1856. Their children are: James Howard, a dealer in proprietary medicines at Owenswood in Jackson County; William Calvin; Ernest L., assistant cashier of the Second National Bank of Morgantown; Jacob Nestor, a foreman in the Goodrich Rubber Company's plant at Akron, Ohio; Carl H., an employee of the Goodrich Rubber Company at Akron; John, who operates the home farm; Dr. Harry, a dentist at Spencer; Offa, an employee of the Goodrich Rubber Company at Akron; and a dentist at Charleston, West Virginia; and Denver in the drug business at Charleston.

Dr. William Calvin Camp attended the rural schools of Boone County, and his boyhood environment was the farm. Subsequently for three years he was a student in Marshall College at Huntington and in 1905 entered the University of Louisville medical department, graduating M. D. June 1908. He did post-graduate work at Louisville in 1919, specializing in eye, ear, nose and throat. Doctor Camp began practice after graduation at Reedyville in Roane County, but left that community nine months later and settled at Gandeeville in the same county, where he enjoyed a prosperous professional business for ten years. In June, 1918, with a commission as first lieutenant, he was assigned duty in the Medical Corps at Camp Sevier, near Greenville, South Carolina, and remained there until honorably discharged December 3, 1918. Since leaving the army doctor Camp has practiced at Spencer, and more and more time and abilities are being sought for his special work in the eye, ear, nose and throat. His offices are in the Middle Building, at the corner of Church and Main streets, and he owns a modern home at 415 South Main Street.

Doctor Camp is a member of the various medical societies, a republican, and is affiliated with Moriah Lodge No. 1, A. F. and A. M., and Spencer Chapter No. 42, R. A. M. September 24, 1899, at Gandeeville, he married Miss Chessie Marks, daughter of J. Cornelius and Louise (Hayes) Marks, the latter a resident of Gandeeville, where the father, who was a farmer, died.

JOHN HUGH ROBINETT, D. O., of Huntington, West Virginia, is one of the leading practitioners of osteopathy in the state. He was born at Mechanicsburg, Bland County, Virginia, August 29, 1886, and is a descendant of one of the early families of the Old Dominion. His father, James Ward Robinett, was born at Kimberling, Bland County, in 1861, where he was reared and educated. At Point Pleasant, Virginia, he married Sue Jane Hoge, of Wise County, and began a prosperous career as a farmer and as proprietor and owner of a saw and flouring mill at that place. On September 1, 1904, he moved to Athens, West Virginia, where his wife died May 18, 1921, on the fifty-eighth anniversary of her birth. Since establishing his residence at Athens Mr. Robinett has been engaged in the general contracting business. The children of this union in order of birth are: Lillie Hoge, John H. (of this sketch), Lacie Estelle, Annie Jane, Sarah Lee, Hazel Ward and Cleo Idell.

Doctor Robinett acquired his early education in the rural schools of his native county, and after the removal of the family to Athens, West Virginia, he graduated from the Concord State Normal School in both the academic and normal departments in 1908. After his graduation he was employed as principal of schools at Chattahoochee, Mingo County, and in the year of 1910 he attended the University of West Virginia at Morgantown. He then entered the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Missouri, the original school of its kind. From this school he graduated as a member of the class of 1914, with the degree of Doctor of Osteopathy, under Dr. Andrew Taylor Still, who founded the science in 1874. Prior to his graduation Doctor Robinett had been associated in practice with Dr. R. M. Thomas at Fort Scott, Kansas. In 1914 he came to Huntington, where he has built up a large and representative practice and gained high standing in his profession. He has also extended his professional education with other schools. Since establishing his office in Huntington he has graduated from the School of Official Surgery, Des Moines, Iowa, and during the summer of 1922 he attended a special post-graduate course in the Electronic Reactions of Abrams, given by Dr. Albert Abrams, A. M., M. D., LL. D., F. R. M. S., of San Francisco.

At Huntsville, Missouri, on the 2d of August, 1916, Doctor Robinett married Miss Margaret Mae Thomas, who had been a successful teacher in the public schools of Missouri. She is a graduate of the Huntsville High School, and received her professional training in the State Teachers College at Kirksville. Mrs. Robinett is a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Jones) Thomas. Her father, who is now deceased, was a coal operator at Huntsville, Missouri, where his widow now resides. Doctor and Mrs. Robinett have two children: Mary Elizabeth, born October 14, 1917; and Paul Ward, born July 30, 1921.

Doctor Robinett is an influential member of the West Virginia Osteopathic Society, of which he served two years as president, and as chairman of the legislative committee of the same society since 1916. He is a member of the American Osteopathic Association, and has represented his state society in the House of Delegates of this association for two years. He is also a member of the American Osteopathic Society of Ophthalmology and Oto-Laryngology; the National League for the Prevention of Spinal Curvature; the International Society for Lymphatic Research, and the American Association of Official Surgeons.

The doctor is a liberal and progressive citizen. He is a member of the local Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club and Business Men's Association. He and his wife are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, where he has served as a member of the board of stewards, and as president of the Epworth League. In the Masonic fraternity his affiliations are with Huntington Lodge No. 53, A. F. and A. M.; Huntington Chapter No. 6, R. A. M.; Huntington Lodge of Perfection No. 4; Huntington Chapter, Knights of the Rose Croix No. 4; and West Virginia Consistory No. 1, A. A. S. R., at Wheeling. He is also a member of Beni-Kedem Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Charleston.

HERBERT SKEEN is in his second term of efficient service as Circuit Court clerk of Jackson County. He is one of the younger men of the county, represents an old family of this section, and his prominence in public affairs is due to his exceptional qualifications and also to his personal popularity and character.

Mr. Skeen was born at Kentuck, in Jackson County, August 3, 1887. His grandfather, Joseph Skeen, was born in West Virginia and was an early day hunter and farmer at Kentuck, where he lived out his life. The grandmother was his third wife, Matilda Casto, a native and life-long resident of Jackson County. David L. Skeen, father of the Circuit Court clerk, was born at Kentuck in 1864, and has spent all his life there. He owns a large farm, is a cattle raiser, a timber man, and for two years was road surveyor of Washington District. His political affiliation is with the republican party. David L. Skeen married Cordelia Winter, who was born in Jackson County in 1863. Their children were Romeo, who was a merchant and died on the home farm at Kentuck; Clifton, who died when nineteen years old; Herbert; Georgia Adeline, who died in infancy; Otho H., a farmer at Kentuck; Minnie A., who died at the age of twelve years; Elva, at home; Orla, who has passed away, the wife of Delmar Good; and Ada, wife of James Poling, principal of schools at Carpenter in Kanawha County.

Herbert Skeen spent the first twenty-three years of his life on the home farm, and partook of its responsibilities and labors at the same time that he was getting his education in the rural schools. He had special inclination for mathematics, learned the art of surveying, did considerable work as a land surveyor, and in 1912 was elected surveyor of lands for Jackson County. He resigned from this office in 1914 to make his first race for clerk of the Circuit Court, being elected in November and beginning his first term of six years in January, 1915. He was re-elected in November, 1920, and is now in the second year of his second official term.

Mr. Skeen is an influential republican. Outside of his official work he is manager of the Ripley Real Estate Company, and is an individual property owner, having a modern home at South Ripley. During the World War he was active both as an individual and as an official, serving on the Advisory Board of the county, making many speeches in behalf of the various war organizations and spending much time in filing out questionnaires for recruited men. He is affiliated with Ripley Lodge No. 16, F. and A. M., the Eastern Star, Ripley Lodge No. 30, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand; is also district deputy grand master of the Fourth District of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, and is a member of the Rebekahs. Other affiliations are with Walker Wright Lodge No. 198, Knights of Pythias, and Parkersburg Lodge No. 198, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In 1909, at Advent in Jackson County, he married Miss Lily Hamon, daughter of Joseph P. and Arena (Siders) Hamon, who still live on their farm at Advent. Mr. and Mrs. Skeen have three children: Dorothy Faye, born in 1911; Ralph Leon, born in 1913; and Inez, born in 1914.

RICHARD EDWARD TALBOTT. While he has been a member of the Philippi bar thirty years, only his early contemporaries know Mr. Talbott as a practicing attorney. The main interest of his career has been the Citizens National Bank, of which he has been cashier and active manager since its organization. He is a former state senator, and has frequently been recruited for official duty in his home city and county.

His family connections are associated with the very beginning of history in Barbour County. His grandfather, Richard Talbott, was the first known settler in what is now Barbour County, West Virginia. At that time all this portion of the state was included in old Virginia. The father of the Philippi banker was Richard T. Talbott, native of Barbour County, for many years a well known farmer and citizen at what is now Berryburg, but finally moved to Kansas and died at Pratt in that state in 1901 at the age of eighty-one. He married Margaret Webe who died at Des Moines, Iowa, in May, 1917, age eighty five. These old people were the parents of eight sons and six daughters, twelve of whom reached matured years, Richard Edward, being the ninth child.

Richard Edward Talbott was born in Pleasant District of Barbour County, February 21, 1867. The first eighteen years of his life he lived on the farm. While there he attended the common school, also select schools, became a teacher, and taught the school where he himself had been a pupil. He continued teaching during the winter months and attending school during the summer vacations, and for a time was a deputy in the office of the clerk of the county court, a work that paid him a salary and also gave him a knowledge of public business. Finally, in 1891, M. Talbott entered the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, where he graduated from the law department in 1893. He was a member and for one term president of the Parthenon Literary Society at the university.

Soon after leaving university he began his law practice at Philippi, but continued it for only about two years. In 1896 he was elected Circuit Court clerk of Barbour County, and served that office for six years. He was elected as a democrat and succeeded James H. Felton. Before the expiration of his term the Citizens National Bank was organized, and he was selected as the first cashier, and since retiring from office has given his undivided time to the duties of that position.

The Citizens National Bank was promoted by the David Elkins interests, together with local capital of Philippi. The late Henry Gassaway Davis was the first president and served six years. The bank was incorporated with capital of $40,000, and on July 1, 1921, the capital was increased to $50,000. The resources are now one and a quarter million dollars, and for a dozen years this has been the largest bank in Barbour County. Samuel V. Wood is now president, E. R. Dyer, vice president, Mr. Talbott, cashier, and Herman B. Watson, assistant cashier.

In getting the things that have gone a long way toward making Philippi a city in fact as well as in name M. Talbott has been an enthusiastic worker for a long period of years. He was a leader in securing Broadus College for this town. Broadus College was formerly located at Clarksburg, and its removal to Philippi was the result of the local citizens of the latter city raising a fund of $25,000, including the price of the campus. Mr. Talbott had charge of the "thousand dollar" subscriptions and secured fourteen of them. He was elected a member of the Board of Trustees of the college in 1908, has held the post ever since and is also treasurer of the college. From first to last his interest has been very readily enlisted in any matter of education. He was president of the Board of Education of the Philippi Independent School District eight years. He has been a member of the City Council, city clerk and for one year was mayor. During his term of mayor the first bond issue was promoted for street paving and the first actual work of paving was started.

Mr. Talbott has always been a democrat, casting his first vote for Grover Cleveland, and has been a delegate to several county and state conventions. He was a spectator at the Baltimore convention of 1912 when Woodrow Wilson was first nominated. Mr. Talbott was elected a member of the State Senate from the Thirteenth Senatorial District in 1914. He was nominated without his solicitation, and was elected by about 400 votes in a district normally republican by about 1,500. He was the only man of his ticket who carried his own county, which was otherwise republican. Mr. Talbott entered the Senate during the closing months of Governor Hatfield's administration, and served the first years of Governor Cornwell's administration. The Senate was republican. Mr. Talbott was a member of the finance, labor, railroad and other committees. He actively supported and was in a consierable degree instrumental in securing the passage through the Senate of the Anti-Gambling Bill. It was a measure with "teeth" in it, and no doubt its enforcement has done much to reduce gambling throughout the state. Mr. Talbott voted to submit the women's suffrage question to the state, which was defeated when submitted, and he voted for the amendment to the constitution.

Mr. Talbott married Miss Etta Strickler on June 5, 1895. She was born at the old Strickler property on the corner now covered by the Citizens National Bank, and in the same house she was married to Mr. Talbott. She is a daughter of Isaac H. and Margaret (Jarvis) Strickler, being one of their family of five daughters and two sons. She was educated in the public schools of Philippi, and was a teacher for several years before her marriage. To their union have been born four children named: Margaret, Edward S., Frances Weber and Richard Kenneth.

WEBSTER WADSWORTH WAUGH, Substantially identified with the business affairs of Ripley as an automobile dealer, Mr. Waugh is an expert in all the mechanics of automotive engineering, and is a young man who has had a remarkably broad range of experience in practical affairs.

He was born near Kenna in Jackson County, February 26, 1886. His grandfather, Arthur Waugh, was a native of old Virginia. He was a physician and surgeon, a pioneer of his profession at Given, West Virginia, and later removed to Mason County, where he practiced as one of the leading doctors of his community until he died in 1863, his death being the result of a kick from a horse. His first wife, and the grandmother of W. W. Waugh, was Miss Boswell, who was born in old Virginia and died at Given, West Virginia, in 1854, at the birth of her son Samuel G. A. Waugh. Samuel G. A. Waugh was born in Jackson County, April 17, 1854, and has spent his life in this county, though for several years his father lived in Mason County. His activities have been those of a farmer, and for a number of years he also taught in the rural schools of Jackson County. He and his son Webster W. now own together a farm on Thirteen Mile Creek. He is a republican, has served as constable of Ripley District four years, is a member of Ripley Lodge No. 16, A. F. and A. M., and was formerly active in the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias and at one time was an organizer of Odd Fellows lodges. Samuel G. A. Waugh married Elizabeth Brotherton, who was born in Jackson County in 1862. The oldest of their children, Edie, died in childhood; Felicia D. is a teacher in the rural schools of Jackson County and the widow of Matt Bucklew, a farmer who died as the result of accidental injuries; Onie, who died young; Amy, wife of Jesse Bass, a traveling salesman living in Mason County; William O'Connor, who was head electrician for the Scioto Stone Company at Columbus, Ohio, and was accidentally killed in a stone quarry at the age of thirty-four; Webster W.; Edgar, who died at the age of sixteen; Mamie, wife of Lloyd Crane, a farmer near Fairplain in Jackson County; Lillie, wife of Hollie Parsons, a farmer on Parchment Creek, Jackson County; Claramont Howard, an automobile mechanic employed in the wrecking room of the Ford Automobile Company at Columbus, Ohio; Harry, a farmer at Given in Jackson County; Beulah and Bernice, twins, the former at home and the latter lying in infancy.

Webster W. Waugh spent the first sixteen years of his life on his father's farm. Besides making use of the advantages of the common schools he has perfected his varied knowledge through extensive experience and reading and study at home. After leaving home he worked three years in Ohio for the Toledo & Ohio Central, Kanawha & Michigan and the Hocking Valley railroads, for two months was at work for the Coal & Coke Railroad at Charleston, West Virginia, for three months fired a stationary boiler for a tunnel company at Gassaway, West Virginia, for three months was a stone chipper on a lock on the Cuyahoga River in Ohio, then foreman of a stripping gang in a quarry at Columbus four months, and for two years was a municipal employe at Columbus doing landscape work and tree pruning. He then changed scenes by going to the Pacific Northwest, and for three months drove a delivery wagon in Spokane. For two months he ran a concrete mixer at Tulsa, Oklahoma, and on returning to Columbus, Ohio, was car repairer in stone quarries six months, and for three months was employed in curing tires in the Diamond Rubber Company's works at Akron. Following that he returned home, and for six months operated the home farm on Thirteen Mile Creek. He was next fireman on a steam shovel at Columbus nine months, then operated a crane for a sand and gravel company at Columbus six months, and craned a shovel at Pickaway, Ohio, five months and worked on general repairs for the Marble Cliff Quarry Company at Columbus two years. He then took another job craning a shovel at Connellsville, Pennsylvania, two months, following which he operated a shovel at West Pittsburgh eight months. This brings his record down to 1916. For seven months following he was master mechanic on a concrete job at Kensington, Ohio. For about a year after that Mr. Waugh operated a farm on Parchment Creek in his home county, and after a seven weeks' course in the Y. M. C. A. Automobile School in Columbus he was granted a diploma and in April, 1919, entered the automobile business at Ripley, associated with A. S. McCoy in the ownership of a public garage on Court Street. This firm sells and repairs automobiles and handles automobile accessories, and has the leading business of the kind in this part of Jackson County.

Mr. Waugh owns his home on Court Street. He is a republican and a member of Ivory Lodge No. 394, F. and A. M., at Hillyard, Ohio. May 9, 1915, at Given, he married Miss Ina Myrtle Maddox, daughter of Charles D. and Belle (Hill) Maddox, farmers near Givens.

FRED D. WOLFE spent many years as a farmer and teacher in West Virginia, but in recent years has found pleasant and congenial responsibilities as editor and publisher of The Mountaineer at Ripley, one of the three newspapers of Jackson County and the official organ of the democratic party for the county.

Mr. Wolfe was born at Given in Jackson County, December 14, 1879. The Wolfe family is of English ancestry. His grandfather, Abraham Wolfe, was born in Lewis County, West Virginia, in 1806, and as a young man removed to the Given community of Jackson County, where he spent his active life as a farmer and where he died in 1899. At Given he married Miss Mary Boswell. They were the parents of ten children, and those now living are: Nehemiah S.; Margaret, wife of Levi Moore, a farmer at Given; and Abraham, a farmer at Given.

Nehemiah S. Wolfe has spent all his active life as a successful farmer at Given, where he was born February 14, 1838, but since 1919 has lived retired at Ripley with his son Fred. He is a democrat, and is affiliated with R. S. Brown Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Rock Castle. Nehemiah Wolfe married Victoria C. Smith, who was born at Letart, Ohio, in 1841 and died at Given in 1913. She represented a very historical family, being a great-granddaughter of Gen. Andrew Lewis. Gen. Andrew Lewis was one of the sons of John A. Lewis, a Scotch-Irishman who came from Ireland to America in Colonial times. John A. Lewis married Lady Lynn. They lived on the frontier in the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia. It was Lady Lynn Lewis who was the distinguished heroine of the frontier who dismissed her four sons with the words "Go, keep back the foot of the invader or see my face no more," and these sons all bore an honorable share in the struggle for independence. The sons Gen. Andrew Lewis and Charles Lewis were officers in the battle of Point Pleasant on October 10, 1774, a battle that many historians claim marked the beginning of the Revolutionary war. Nehemiah Wolfe and wife had the following children: Cora, who died at Fairplain, wife of Benjamin F. Crites, now a merchant at Ripley; Austin Monroe, a farmer at Given; Edward L., a merchant at Dunbar in Kanawha County; Clinton, who was an attorney and died at Ripley in 1900; Lewis V., a merchant at Dunbar; Fred D.; Helen, wife of Luther A. Parsons, a farmer at Alice, Ohio; and Mary Augusta, wife of Alva Moore, a boiler maker living at Macon, Georgia.

Fred D. Wolfe attended the rural schools of Jackson County and the Ohio Valley College at Ravenswood to the age of nineteen. For the first thirty-four years of his life he made his home on his father's farm. His work as a teacher was begun in the Given school when he was eighteen. He taught in that school four years, and his record as an educator is spread over a period of nineteen years, during which time he taught in Jackson, Tyler, Logan, Mingo, Kanawha and Putnam counties. In 1917 Mr. Wolfe went on the road as traveling representative for the Dana Grocery Company of Ripley and for two years sold goods in portions of Mason, Jackson and Roane counties.

November 17, 1919, he accepted the post of editor and manager of The Mountaineer at Ripley. This paper was established in 1892, and is a well edited journal, circulated in most of the homes of Jackson and surrounding counties, and is owned by The Mountaineer Company, the plant and offices being on Front Street in Ripley. W. L. Y. Currey, of Sandyville, is president; Kenna K. Hyre, of Ripley, is secretary, while the editor and publisher is Fred D. Wolfe.

Mr. Wolfe is a democrat, a member of Ripley Lodge No. 16, A. F. and A. M., and a past chancellor of Walker Wright Lodge No. 95, Knights of Pythias. During the war he sustained his share of activities in behalf of the various drives, and personally he tried to enlist at Parkersburg, but was rejected partly on account of his age and partly because of his dependents.

September 22, 1915, in Jackson County, he married Miss Cleo Rawling, daughter of Luke A. and Ella (Winter) Rawling, farmers in the Fairplain community of Jackson County. Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe have two children: Dana, born October 16, 1916, and Dona, born December 20, 1920.

JOHN E. ARBUCKLE is the cashier of the Kanawha Union Bank at Glenville, Gilmer County, a well ordered institution that is a state depository and that effectively safeguards and advances the business and civic interests of the community in which it is established. The bank bases its operations upon a capital stock of $40,000, has a surplus fund of equal amount, its undivided profits are in excess of $6,000, and its deposits are nearly $600,000. S. A. Hays is president of the Bank, C. M. Bennett is vice president, John E. Arbuckle is cashier, and L. D. Zinn is assistant cashier. Besides the president, vice president and cashier the directorate of the institution includes also James H. Arbuckle, Jacob Moore, John S. Withers, A. L. Holt, G. B. Reed and N. E. Rymor.

John E. Arbuckle was born in the Village of Troy, Gilmer County, West Virginia, on the 24th of February, 1879, and is a son of James H. and Margaret E. (McClintock) Arbuckle, the former of whom was born in what is now Greenbrier County, this state, in 1846, and the latter of whom was born in Bath County, Virginia, both families having early been founded in the Old Dominion State. James H. Arbuckle was for many years engaged in the general merchandise business at Troy, and is one of the venerable and substantial citizens of Gilmer County, with inviolable place in popular confidence and esteem. He was a Confederate soldier in the Civil war, is affiliated with the United Confederate Veterans and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and both he and his wife are zealous members of the Presbyterian Church. Of the six children five are living: Eustice M., who graduated in the West Virginia State Normal School at Glenville, now resides at Parkersburg, this state, and is in the United States internal revenue service; John E., of this sketch, is the next in order of birth; Miss Alice C. remains at the parental home, at Glenville; J. Earl, a graduate of the normal school at Glenville, is one of the prosperous farmers and stock-growers of Gilmer County; and Alma J., a graduate of the State Normal School at Glenville, is now a successful and popular teacher in this institution.

John E. Arbuckle acquired his youthful education in the public schools of Troy, and in 1901, shortly after attaining to his legal majority, he took a position as bookkeeper for the Little Kanawha Valley Bank at Glenville. Later he was chosen cashier of the bank, and in this executive position he continued his efficient service from 1904 to 1906, in which latter year that institution was consolidated with the First National Bank of Glenville, under the present corporate title of the Kanawha Union Bank, and he was made cashier of the new institution, to the success of which he has contributed much by his careful and progressive policies. He is one of the representative business men of his native county, and here his circle of friends is limited only by that of his acquaintances. He and his brother are the owners of a valuable landed estate of 1,500 acres in Gilmer County, and he has capitalistic interests also in gas and oil production and also coal mining in this section of the state. Mr. Arbuckle is a past master of Gilmer County Lodge No. 118, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and at Weston he is affiliated with the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons and the Commandery of Knights Templar, while he has received the thirty-second degree of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite of Masonry and is a member also of the Mystic Shrine and the Order of the Eastern Star. In politics he is found arrayed as a loyal supporter of the cause of the democratic party. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Glenville, and he is serving as an elder in the same.

On the 6th of October, 1909, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Arbuckle and Miss Mildred Ruddell, who was born and reared in Gilmer County and who was graduated from the musical department of the Mary Baldwin Seminary at Staunton, Virginia, she having there received the gold medal awarded for special proficiency in music. Mr. and Mrs. Arbuckle have no children living, but they have one daughter dead.

W. FROST BROWN is one of the younger business men of Charleston, and is president, treasurer and general manager of the Brown Milling & Produce Company. This firm was organized in 1911 and incorporated in February of that year. The business has grown into a successful enterprise embracing the manufacture of meal and feed, as well as jobbing at wholesale flour, grain, hay, produce, fruits, etc. The firm has recently added a line of wholesale groceries, and handles an important share of the business in these different commodities distributed and consumed over the southern end of the state, particularly in the coal fields. They also supply jobbers in mill products outside of the state.

Owing to the steady growth of the business it was recently found necessary to greatly increase their facilities and enlarge their plant. Mr. Brown is justly proud of the new plant just completed by his firm, which started operation in June, 1922, and is the culmination of years of effort and the realization of an ambition to possess the most modern and complete corn mill and feed manufacturing plant in the State of West Virginia. In fact, it is said by authorities to be the highest type of plant of its kind in the country, and while not as large as some plants in western states, it is excelled by none in modern machinery, efficient and economical operation and high quality of the manufactured products.

The new additions to the plant are all of the most modern construction, and consist of fireproof reinforced steel and concrete grain elevators, with a capacity of 50,000 bushels of grain; a five story mill building with a daily grinding capacity of 2,000 bushels of pearl meal, 250 tons of ground corn feed and 200 tons of mixed stock feeds; a complete cold storage department, with more than 50,000 cubic feet of space, and a steel and concrete warehouse building more than 200 feet in length. The ground space occupied by the entire plant is 90 by 202 feet, located on the tracks of the Kanawha & Michigan Railway at Broad Street, with ample siding facilities and switching arrangements with all other railroads for the prompt handling of car load shipments.

The entire plant is electrically operated and is equipped throughout with the latest and most modern machinery it was possible to procure. The present investment in the plant is in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million dol-

M. Burbridge Payne

rs, and there are about fifty employes, ten of whom are workmen covering the territory in which this firm operates. W. Frost Brown was born at Mount Carmel, Pennsylvania, October 26, 1881, and came to Charleston with his parents in 1893. His father, William N. Brown, was well known in the Kanawha and New River coal fields, having been superintendent of many operations and largely instrumental in developing new coal properties and inducing large amount of foreign capital to invest in the coal fields of West Virginia. He died at Charleston in 1911, here his widow still resides. He was a Pennsylvania soldier in the Civil war, and was commander of the local post of the G. A. R., state adjutant general of the same organization, and actively connected with many religious and fraternal organizations.

W. Frost Brown was educated in the public schools at Charleston, and after leaving school was connected with the Kanawha & Michigan Railway for a number of years, holding various important positions in the local and general offices until he resigned in 1906, while chief clerk to the general freight agent at Charleston. He then entered the merchandise brokerage business, in which he was successfully engaged until 1911, when he organized the present firm, of which he is the head.

His brother, George F. Brown, is vice president and assistant manager of the company, and is buyer and manager of sales.

This business has met Mr. Brown's most sanguine expectations and is recognized as one of the most enterprising of the many substantial concerns of the capital city. He is also interested in the milling industry at other places outside of the state. Mr. Brown has always taken an active interest in civic and commercial affairs, and has served for several years as a director and for one term as president of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce. He married Miss Julia L. Botkin, of Charleston, and they have two daughters, Mildred Frost and Barbara Louise. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are members of the First Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM BURBRIDGE PAYNE became in 1890 deputy clerk of the Circuit Court at Welch, McDowell County, and two years later, in 1892, he was elected clerk of this court, by a majority of 500 votes. He was later re-elected, by a majority of 1,500 votes, and each successive election gave him an increased majority. His last election was in 1920, and at his death early in 1922 he had almost five years to serve. He was the dean of the Circuit Court clerks of West Virginia, and his long service offers the best testimonial to his efficiency and his personal popularity.

Mr. Payne was born in Crane Ridge, Sandy River District, McDowell County, August 28, 1866, son of John D. and Sarah (Cornett) Payne, the former of whom was born in Big Creek District, McDowell County, in 1836, and the latter of whom was born in Johnson County, Tennessee, February 5, 1841. The father's death occurred December 1, 1898, and that of the mother on the 11th of June, 1919. During the infancy of William Burbridge the family removed to Wyoming County, and while a resident of that county John D. Payne served as a member of the Lower House of the State Legislature, as representative of the district comprising Raleigh, Wyoming and McDowell counties. John D. Payne was a man of exceptional ability, and proved successful as a teacher, a merchant and a farmer, besides which he became a representative member of the bar of Wyoming County and in 1888 was elected prosecuting attorney of that county. He was a loyal soldier of the Union in the Civil war, in which he served four years and nineteen days and gained the rank of sergeant. He was in the command of Colonel Burbridge, in whose honor he named his son, and he took part in numerous engagements, including the battles of Lexington and Cynthiana, Kentucky, and Ponce de Leon Creek. Prior to entering service he had been wounded, a bushwhacker lying in ambush having shot him in the back. His father, Simeon Payne, was one of the early settlers of Monroe County. John D. Payne was one of the early settlers of Monroe County. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while his wife was a member of the Baptist Church. His political allegiance was given to the republican party, and he was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Payne was interested in the development of coal lands in this section of the state and was a citizen of prominence and influence in his community. Mr. and Mrs. Payne became the parents of three sons, of whom William B. was the eldest. David is a prosperous merchant at Mile Branch, McDowell County, and has served as deputy sheriff of the county. Wilburn Grant, the youngest son, died at the age of twenty-three years.

The "temple of learning" in which W. Burbridge Payne gained his initial education was a log structure of the pioneer type, and thereafter he continued his studies by attending the State Normal School at Athens. He taught two terms of school in McDowell County and then became a partner of his father in the conducting of a general store in the village of Bradshaw, this county, and this partnership continued for many years, the father having active charge of the store. Mr. Payne had made an excellent record as a substantial business man prior to being called into public office. He was a member of the Masonic Lodge in his home city of Welch, of the Royal Arch Chapter at Northfork, of Ivanhoe Commandery of Knights Templars at Bramwell, and of Scottish Rite bodies and the Mystic Shrine in Cincinnati, Ohio. He was one of the organizers and stockholders of the McDowell National Bank at Welch, and was a director of the Welch Insurance Agency. He was a stalwart in the local camp of the republican party, and he attended and supported the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife is a member.

May 20, 1896, recorded the marriage of Mr. Payne and Miss Jennie Beavers, who was born in South Dakota, a daughter of Alexander and Mary Ann (Wynn) Beavers. Mrs. Payne during her married life has in addition to rearing her family of children been a helpful factor in her husband's official work, and had the experience of a deputy in his office until his death, and on account of the qualifications of that experience she was appointed by Judge I. C. Herndon, the official successor of her husband, to fill out his unexpired term.

Of the children the eldest is Hobart Elkins, who is a graduate of the Ohio Military Institute at Cincinnati and who was ready for service in the World war, is an assistant in the Circuit Clerk's office; Meldrum Dean is at home; Miriam Joyce, the first daughter, died in childhood; William Burbridge, Jr., is, in 1921-2, attending the Ohio Military Institute at Cincinnati; and Bernice, is the youngest member of the parental home circle.

DANIEL N. MOHLER. Member of a family long prominently identified with the lumber and financial affairs of West Virginia, Daniel N. Mohler chose the law as his vocation, and his early years of practice have earned him a fine reputation in the bar of Charleston.

His father is William E. Mohler, a well known capitalist, banker and lumberman of St. Albans. William E. Mohler was born in Augusta County, Virginia, July 14, 1852, son of D. F. and Ellen E. (Silling) Mohler. D. F. Mohler was born in the same county about 1832, and spent the greater part of his life as a lumberman. At the beginning of the Civil war he secured a contract to construct wagons for the Confederate government, operating his factory the first two years and during the remainder he manufactured iron for the government. He owned the second sawmill in Augusta County.

William E. Mohler was educated in Augusta and Rockingham counties, and was trained to the lumber business under his father. He started in that line for himself at Alderson in Monroe County, West Virginia, and in 1882 moved to St. Albans, where he established a milling plant, drawing large quantities of raw material from Boone, Logan and other adjoining counties. In 1882 William E. Mohler with his father and brothers built the Mohler Lumber Company's mill at Lock Seven in Kanawha County. This is still the leading industry in that section of the county and the company has main offices at Charleston, Mr. Mohler being president of the company. He still retains his residence at St. Albans, is vice president of the Bank of St. Albans, a director in the Kanawha National Bank of Charleston, and is a director in the Virginian Joint Stock Land Bank, the West Virginia Mortgage & Discount Company, the George Washington Life Insurance Company, and the Capital City Supply Company, of Charleston. He is also president of the St. Albans Building Company, and is an extensive real estate owner in and around St. Albans. William E. Mohler has served as councilman of his home town, is a republican, and an elder in the Presbyterian Church. He married Jennie A. Reeves, of Augusta County, who died at St. Albans April 8, 1905. On May 14, 1908, he married Mary E. Alexander.

Daniel N. Mohler, a son of William E. and Jennie A. (Reeves) Mohler, was born at St. Albans in 1892. He was thoroughly educated for a professional career. He attended the Fishburn Military Academy at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, Washington and Lee University of Virginia, and took his law course in the University of West Virginia, from which he graduated LL. B. in 1915. In the same year he established his office at Charleston and is now a member of the law firm Morton & Mohler, one of the busiest firms in the capital city. The senior member is Mr. R. Kemp Morton.

After America entered the war with Germany, Daniel N. Mohler enlisted as a private in the United States Marines. He was with that famous organization about a year and a half, most of the time at Paris Island, South Carolina, and from the ranks was promoted to second lieutenant. He is a member of the Sigma Chi fraternity and is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner. Daniel N. Mohler married Miss Barbara Byrne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. R. Byrne, of Charleston.

CARL E. WILLIAMSON is vice president and general manager and founder of the Williamson Paint Manufacturing Company of Charleston. This is a corporation and industry whose business has already added to the great volume of commerce in the capital city.

Mr. Williamson is a native of Meigs County, Ohio, but all his business life has been spent in West Virginia. For fifteen years he was representative in this state of the Barrett corporation, manufacturers of roofing and roofing materials. Mr. Williamson covered the state as representative of the Pittsburgh branch of the house. One of the widely known and exceedingly popular traveling men of West Virginia, Carl E. Williamson has for years been a welcome visitor in the various cities and towns. His long record of honorable dealing with his trade has been of great service to him in establishing and carrying on a manufacturing business of his own.

The Williamson Paint Manufacturing Company opened its plant and began the manufacture of paint in September, 1920. From the beginning it has enjoyed a large and successful business. It specializes in two brands of paint, "Leak Not," an asbestos fiber roof paint, and the other "Rust Not," a black metal paint. These paints are manufactured in a well equipped factory on Watts Street and the Kanawha & Michigan Railroad, the raw materials being brought in tank cars, and the plant has a capacity of 4,000 gallons per day. The president of the company is Hon. A. A. Lilly, former attorney-general of West Virginia and one of the state's most prominent citizens.

Mr. Williamson has always taken an active interest in political affairs, and during his residence in Ravenswood, West Virginia, from which place he removed his home to Charleston in 1920, he served four consecutive terms as a member of the town council. He married Miss Georgia M. Bryan, of Ravenswood, and to them have been born a son and two daughters. Mr. Williamson is a member of the order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias, and of the Presbyterian Church.

BENJAMIN B. WILSON. For a man of his years Benjamin B. Wilson has had an unusual series of responsibilities in the coal mining industry. He comes of a family of miners and coal operators, and has had personal experience in nearly every branch of the industry. He is now superintendent of the C. J. H. Coal Company at Peach Creek in Logan County. This mine was opened recently, and all its modern equipment was installed under his supervision.

Mr. Wilson was born on a farm at Covington in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, December 11, 1884, son of Thomas and Jennet (Glendening) Wilson. His father was born in the North of Ireland, and was two years of age when brought to the United States. The mother was born in Scotland, and was a young girl when her people came here. She is now living, at the age of seventy-eight, at Logan, West Virginia. Thomas Wilson, who died in Pennsylvania in 1894, at the age of sixty-eight, was at that time a resident of Clearfield County. He was a farmer, was a miner and mine superintendent, and inherited that vocation from his father before him. Thomas Wilson was a Federal soldier in the famous Bucktail Regiment of Pennsylvania, and served three years, rising to the rank of lieutenant. He was in several of the Virginia campaigns, and also at the battle of Gettysburg, and was twice wounded. He voted as a republican, was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was affiliated with the Masonic Order, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. Thomas Wilson had a family of seventeen children, five of whom are still living: H. T., president of the H. T. Wilson Coal Company, with mines near Logan, and he was a pioneer in the coal industry in this section of the state, being first interested at Dingess in Mingo County. His home is in Cleveland. Ella Wilson is the wife of Andrew Mitchell, a mine foreman for the Wilson Coal Company. Mary is the wife of Arthur Evans; a miner and farmer at Glenrich, Pennsylvania. Thomas, the youngest of the family, is sales agent for the Wilson Coal Company at Detroit.

Benjamin B. Wilson attended school in Tioga County and also the Mansfield High School. He completed his education at the age of seventeen, and at the age of eighteen became a mule driver in a Pennsylvania mine. In 1901 he came to H. T. Wilson's operation known as the Camp Branch Coal Company at Dingess. While there he kept store and was general utility man for three years. He then returned to the mines in Pennsylvania, but a year later reached Logan County, West Virginia, as mine foreman for the Draper Coal Company. He held that position five years, and for two years was mine foreman and six years superintendent for the H. T. Wilson Coal Company. His next work was as superintendent of mines numbered 7, 9, 14 and 15 for the Main Island Creek Coal Company at Omar. He left that work just seven months before opening the C. J. H. Mine. That seven months he spent in the business of writing insurance for the West Virginia and Kentucky Insurance Company.

In 1910 he married Julia McDonald, daughter of Bryant McDonald, a pioneer family in the Guyandotte Valley. She was born near the mine location of the C. J. H. Coal Company, at the mouth of Peach Creek. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have two children, Thomas and Francis. Mrs. Wilson is a member of the Baptist Church. He is a Master Mason and an Elk.

BOYD B. STUTLER was born July 10, 1889, near Cox's Mills, Gilmer County, West Virginia, the son of Daniel E. and Emily B. Stutler, and was reared to manhood in Grantsville, Calhoun County, to which point he moved with his parents in 1897.

Mr. Stutler is a practical printer and newspaper man. He acquired his first experience in this profession when he entered the office of the Calhoun Signal at Grantsville in 1900. Later he purchased the Grantsville News, and from July 1, 1907, to September 1, 1917, was editor and manager of that publication. During that period he was mayor of Grantsville, 1911-12, and president of the Board of Education of Grantsville independent district, 1915-16.

Mr. Stutler entered the army as a private for service in the World war, and was honorably discharged as a sergeant with the successful termination of hostilities. He served with Battery A and Headquarters Company, Three Hundred and Fourteenth Field Artillery, Eightieth Division, from September 4, 1917, to June 7, 1919, serving with the American

W. H. Merrill.

Expeditionary Forces in France from May 26, 1918, until day 28, 1919, participating in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives.

Mr. Stutler married Miss Cathelene M. Huffman on November 26, 1911, and they have two sons, William Morris, born in 1914, and Warren Harding, born in 1920. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

WILLIAM HORACE MERRILL is vice president and general manager of the West Virginia Sand & Gravel Company of Charleston, and for a number of years has figured as one of the leaders in an industry vitally connected with the constructive enterprise and solid development of the state. Mr. Merrill was introduced to this industry as worker in a stone quarry at Limeville, Kentucky. Failing health had brought orders from his physician to take up outdoor manual work, and this was the work that he chose or which furnished the best opportunity at the time. Mr. Merrill was born in Greenup County, Kentucky, was reared and educated here, and had taught school for four years before he went to work in the stone quarry. After considerable experience and learning much of the business he became one of the organizers and the manager of the Wilson Ballast Company of Limeville. Subsequently he was with the Basic Products Company of Peebles, Ohio.

Mr. Merrill came to West Virginia in 1913, and at Huntington was associated with the Wilson Sand & Supply Company. In 1917 he and business associates took the contract or furnishing all the sand and gravel used in the construction of the great Government munitions plant at Nitro. This was the contract which brought him to Charleston, and in carrying out that contract he was engaged in an essential war service. In the meantime, becoming impressed with the solid and substantial character of Charleston and convinced of its continued growth and development, Mr. Merrill chose to remain in the city, and he organized and became president of the West Virginia Sand & Gravel Company, which in March, 1919, took over the business and became the successor of the Gates Sand & Gravel Company.

The West Virginia Sand & Gravel Company under Mr. Merrill's energetic management has achieved a noteworthy and conspicuous success. The business has grown with unprecedented rapidity, much beyond estimates originally made by Mr. Merrill for the extension. The company has the utmost facilities and resources for supplying the sand and gravel used in all sorts of concrete construction, and all branches of paving and municipal or public works. The main plant on the Elk River, at the foot of Glenn Street, as every piece of machinery and equipment for economical and expeditious handling of material. The company has about $200,000 worth of river equipment alone, including bow boats, barges, dredges and pumping machinery. A great tonnage manufactured by the company goes to distant points both by river and rail facilities. For local delivery in Charleston there is a motor truck equipment. The consistent and continued growth of building in Charleston has figured largely in the unusual prosperity and expansion of the business. Mr. Merrill is a member of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, and is a member of the Kiwanis Club, president of the Ohio Valley Sand & Gravel Association, and is also a thoroughly public spirited citizen.

Mr. Merrill was married to Miss Susan V. Biggs, of Ravenstein Place, Kentucky, in 1905. He has one daughter, Mariana Merrill, aged eight years.

O. J. MORRISON. The individual who founds and develops an immense business enterprise must of necessity possess qualities and characteristics of an unusual nature. Combined with the mind to plan must be the ability to execute and the foresight to grasp opportunities conditions produce. Contemporary history gives the names and records of a number of men who have worked out worth while successes through the possession of just such an equipment, but perhaps there is no more striking case of what a man may accomplish than the career of O. J. Morrison, proprietor of the O. J. Morrison Department Store Company of Charleston, with branch houses in various other communities of West Virginia.

Mr. Morrison was born on a farm near Ripley, Jackson County, West Virginia, March 10, 1869, and is a son of Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Morrison, honorable agricultural people of that community. He received a country school education and was reared to farming, but did not take kindly to the pursuits of the soil and accordingly turned his attention to teaching school. This vocation held him only two years, for the commercial instinct was strong in him and he finally bought a small stock of goods and a horse and wagon and began peddling his wares over the hills of Jackson County, exchanging groceries and calico with the farmers for their produce. He was honorable in his dealings and honest in his representation, soon gained the implicit confidence of his customers and eventually accumulated sufficient capital with which to establish a modest store at Kenna, a little village located on the Charleston-Parkersburg Turnpike. The possession of this store, small though it was, gave Mr. Morrison added incentive, and he worked all the more faithfully and industriously, with the result that soon his business outgrew his establishment, and he moved to Ripley, the county seat of Jackson County, where he really began the first of the string of stores that have made his name a household word in this part of the state. It was while at Ripley that Mr. Morrison coined the motto: "Make a dollar worth a dollar," and this he has used consistently ever since. The Ripley store now consists of two stories and a basement, 40 by 125 feet, and is under the management of J. E. Keenan. Later Mr. Morrison founded another store, at Spencer, where he now has an establishment of two stories and a basement, 40 by 150 feet, under the management of W. B. Reed. Later a business was also established at Clendenin. In 1910 Mr. Morrison decided to invade Charleston, where the people soon recognized the fact that he was doing a large business because of the fairness of his dealing and the quality of his goods, together with the astonishingly low prices at which they were offered. In 1914 he established a store at Huntington, where he now has one of the biggest retail houses of the city, four stories and basement, 45 by 200 feet, under the management of I. C. Prickett. In 1919 another store was taken over, at Clarksburg, where he now has a structure of two stories and basement, 50 by 190 feet, managed by E. G. Morrison.

Mr. Morrison's Charleston store was visited by a disastrous fire October 29, 1920, when thousands of dollars worth of merchandise was destroyed and the building was wrecked. There were those who predicted that Mr. Morrison's mercantile career in this city at least was at an end, but a few days later work was commenced in dismantling the old Burlew Opera House, on Capitol Street, in the place of which was erected a modern structure five stories and basement, 65 by 165 feet, this now being under Mr. Morrison's personal supervision. In all the stores there is represented an outlay of $800,000 capital. There are 300 employees, and the annual gross sales approximate $2,000,000. Mr. Morrison entered upon his career with little or nothing save his self-confidence, his ambition and his willingness to work hard and economize. Nothing was too difficult for him, no labor too exhausting, and when he earned a little money he put it back into his business. In this way he has lived to see that business grow to proportions which utterly exceeded his fondest dreams of earlier days, and the end is not yet. He has several other business connections, and is a director in the Charleston Building and Loan Association. His religious connection is with the United Brethren Church, but he is not interested in fraternal matters.

In 1895 Mr. Morrison was united in marriage with Miss Cora A. Harpold, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Harpold, farming people of Jackson County, West Virginia, and they have five children: Freda, Fay, Johnson O., Carl H. and Charles W.

JOHN BRITTON, chief of the Charleston Police Department, is a marked proof of the value and necessity of long practical training for the higher officials of the city government. He has won advancement to the head of his department because of his courage as an officer and his executive talents, and his courteous and pleasing personality. Chief Britton was born at Warren, Pennsylvania, in 1883, and is a son of Alfred and Sarah E. (Freeman) Britton.

Alfred Britton was born in Quebec, Canada, and as a youth learned the painting trade, which he followed principally in furniture factories as foreman of inside painting. For some years he was employed in furniture factories at Grand Rapids, Michigan, but in 1895 came to Charleston to assume the management of the Ohio Valley Furniture Company's factory, owned by George Fullerton, of Gallipolis, Ohio, at that time the leading industry of the city, with from 300 to 400 employees. After managing this enterprise for seventeen years Mr. Britton retired and lived quietly until his death in May, 1918, when he was seventy-one years of age. His first wife, Sarah Freeman, died when her son John was but three years of age, and Mr. Britton later married Mary E. Edwards, of Pennsylvania, who survives him, as a resident of Charleston.

John Britton secured a public school education and as a young man learned the trade of inside painting with his father, under whom he worked in various factories. Eventually he purchased the Great Southern Hotel, on Kanawha Street, in 1912, and conducted it for two years, when he became president of the Kanawha Taxicab Company, operating a line of ten taxis. He remained in this capacity, and then, under Mayor Breece, became assistant street commissioner. Later he was a plain clothes man on the police force, subsequently became a patrolman under Chief A. I. McCorn, and was later promoted captain of police, a capacity in which he served during the remainder of the administration. When he left the force temporarily he became chief for the Rollins Chemical Company of South Charleston, with twenty-four men under his supervision, during the war period. Leaving this concern, he went to Nitro, about ten miles from Charleston, on the Kanawha River, where the United States Government was operating an ammunition plant, and under Major Baer, in charge of the organization of the police department at that place, was made a lieutenant on the force, which consisted of about 400 men. He was later transferred to Cabin Creek, where he acted as captain until the signing of the armistice, and then went back to the Rollins Chemical Company as chief. In May, 1919, when Grant P. Hall became mayor of Charleston, he was called back to this city as captain of police, and continued in that capacity until February, 1920, when he became chief of the Nitro Police Department, with a force of eighty-men. On August 27, 1921, he was recalled to Charleston to become chief of the police department, which has sixty officers and thirty patrolmen. Chief Britton has placed the department on a well-trained, efficient basis, and has been tireless in his efforts to preserve law and order. He has continually strengthened his reputation as a fine disciplinarian, and upon the occasion of unusual disturbance of the public peace and in the unraveling of several notorious crime problems his coolness and bravery and his skill as a detective have stood him in good stead. A man of splendid physique, he possesses also a pleasing personality that commands respect and holds warm friendships.

Chief Britton married Lillie B. Canterbury, and they have two sons: Basil and Giles Polly.

WILLIAM E. WRIGHT. There are, unquestionably, individuals of natural force found in every prosperous city who, by reason of their inherent ability, by the use of their brains and the soundness of their judgment, attain distinction and acquire authority. They are men who industriously work for an end, and in helping themselves add to the sum of comfort and happiness for all about them. These resourceful men are the dependence of the whole social fabric, for their efforts not only bring into being the substantial industries that support commerce, but conduct them along the safe and sane channels which assure public prosperity and general contentment. In the class referred to is found William E. Wright, of Charleston, president of the Indian Run Coal Company and of the Indian Run Collieries Company.

Mr. Wright was born March 23, 1878, at Fayetteville, West Virginia, where he received a public school education and when little more than a lad commenced his experience with coal concerns. He was first employed by the Winifrede Coal Company, and later by the Kanawha and Hocking Coal and Coke Company, and then became identified with the organization of the Indian Run Coal Company, a selling organization, and the Indian Run Collieries Company, with mines on Armstrong Creek, Fayette County, producing the best high-grade steam and gas coal. This company has five different tipples working on 7,600 acres of land, its production being 750,000 tons annually. The company is now about two years old, having taken over this property from the Black Betsey Coal Company, which had operated on Armstrong Creek for twenty years, and the Elkhorn-Piney Coal Company, located on the same creek. The Indian Run Coal Company and the Indian Run Collieries Company were organized by Mr. Wright and S. G. Smith, who are the principal owners, the latter being the treasurer of both companies, with F. O. Harris, of Cannelton, West Virginia, acting as general manager. The capital is $1,000,000. For twelve years the Indian Run Coal Company has handled the output of various Kanawha and New River coal companies, as also that of the Indian Run Collieries Company. The entire output thus handled amounts to approximately 2,500,000 tons annually. The Armstrong Creek coal is the best by-product coal in the United States, and the Powellton seam is found only on Armstrong and Paint creeks and on Morris Creek.

Mr. Wright has maintained his office at Charleston for the past twelve years, and enjoys an excellent reputation among business men of his city. He has various other interests and is a stockholder in a number of banks and other concerns, and as a citizen is notably public-spirited, being a friend and supporter of all movements which promise to advance the public welfare. In politics he is a republican, and his religious connection is with the First Methodist Episcopal Church. He likewise is affiliated with several fraternal orders and is a member of the Rotary Club.

In 1905 Mr. Wright was united in marriage with Miss Flossie M. Henley, of St. Albans, West Virginia, daughter of the late Capt. C. W. Henley, of that place, a well-known and highly respected citizen of his community. Four children have been born to this union: Charles Ermen, Paul Henley, William E. and Frances Josephine, the first two of whom are attending the Charleston High School.

JOHN W. LEE, president of the John Lee Shoe Company, is one of Charleston's most successful business men. His success is the culmination of years of experience and effort from a humble beginning. His work has brought him the confidence and esteem of associates who are themselves among Charleston's most substantial citizens, and he is a factor in several going concerns besides the shoe company.

Mr. Lee went to work when a boy as a hundle carrier with the firm of Rand & Goshorn. In 1896 he went with the May Shoe Company as a salesman, was subsequently advanced to buyer, and was with that company fifteen years. Then, in company with R. L. Walker and W. B. Geary, he started the Diamond Shoe Store, which subsequently was incorporated and became the Diamond Shoe & Garment Company. In March, 1919, having disposed of his interest in this, Mr. Lee resumed an active connection with the shoe business, and in February, 1920, incorporated the John Lee Shoe Company, of which he is president and general manager. He has had a good business from the start, and in three years time his trade has increased to a volume of $250,000. He does an exclusive retail business, and an important feature of it is the mail order department. He keeps twelve employees, has recently opened a bargain basement and has one of the choicest locations for his store in the city. The company contracts for all its stock direct with the manufacturers, and all footwear is sold under the name and guarantee of the John Lee Shoe Company.

Mr. Lee is also president of the Nu-Way Dry Cleaning Company. He founded this in 1910 as owner, and subsequently incorporated the business. This is a local establishment employing fifteen persons, with three places of business, and handling dry cleaning and shoe repairing. Mr. Lee is also associated with the Faulkner Realty Company, the Fair View Land and Development Company and the Valley View Realty Company. These are organizations for the development of some high class residence sections around Charleston.

Walter W. Poirer

Mr. Lee is a charter member of the Rotary Club and is active in the Chamber of Commerce. He is a Knight Templar Mason and Shriner and a deacon in St. Paul's Lutheran Church.

Mr. Lee is a comparatively young man for all his business achievements. He was born at Charleston in 1879, son of Charles K. Lee, who at one time was on the police force and later a merchant, but is now retired. Mr. Lee had a public school education. He married Helen Joachim, of Charleston, and their four children are: William E., Virginia Elizabeth, Mary Katherine and Robert E.

WALTER WARREN POINT, M. D. A member of the medical profession of Charleston since 1914, Doctor Point is a physician and surgeon with the modern training and equipment for his work, and has in addition that experience involved in three years of duty with the army forces in the capacity of a surgeon.

Doctor Point was born at Huntington, West Virginia, July 3, 1887, son of W. W. and Dorothy Ann (Hagan) Point. He had a common and high school education and also attended Marshall College in Huntington, and graduated from the University of West Virginia with the A. B. degree in 1910. He pursued his medical studies in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Baltimore, where he was graduated in 1913. For fourteen months he was a member of the surgical staff of Mercy Hospital in Baltimore, and for three months was assistant superintendent of Sydenham Hospital in that city, a hospital devoted to minor infectious diseases.

In June, 1914, Doctor Point began his independent professional career in Charleston. While at the State University he was a member of the University Cadet Corps, subsequently was commissioned second lieutenant in the National Guard of West Virginia, and after completing his medical course was commissioned lieutenant and later captain of the Medical Corps in the National Guard. With that rank he went to the Mexican border in August, 1916, as regimental surgeon of the Second West Virginia Infantry. With his command he returned to West Virginia early in April, 1917, and on the 7th of the same month was transferred to the federalized military service, his regiment, the Second West Virginia, becoming the One Hundred and Fiftieth Infantry, Thirty-eighth Division. Later he was promoted to the rank of major in the Medical Corps, and October 3, 1918, went with his command to France, and was transferred from his regiment to Base Hospital No. 108 at Mesves. February 4, 1919, he was transferred to the Second Division in the Army of Occupation on the Rhine, and assigned to duty as surgeon of the Ninth Infantry of the Division. August 1, 1919, he arrived in New York, receiving his discharge September 3d, and soon afterward resumed his practice at Charleston. Thus for over three years his professional skill was utilized by the military establishment of his country. It was a patriotic duty performed ungrudgingly, and at the same time it constituted a valuable experience that is counting for substantial achievement in his professional work at Charleston. He has a large and busy practice in that city and is a member of the County, State and American Medical associations. On September 2, 1921, he was commissioned major of the Medical Corps, West Virginia National Guard.

Doctor Point is commander of Kanawha Post No. 20, American Legion, at Charleston. He is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner, and has interested himself in several civic and social organizations. He married Miss Maud Lore Brown, a native of Kingwood, Preston County, and a niece of Governor Dawson of West Virginia. Doctor and Mrs. Point have one son, Walter Warren, Jr., born in August, 1921.

JESSE A. BLOCH. For a number of years the City of Wheeling has boasted of one of the largest tobacco factories in the world. This institution is due to the enterprise of two brothers who started the manufacture of tobacco on a very modest scale forty years ago. For some years past the Bloch Brothers Tobacco Company has had an immense plant at Wheeling, employing a normal force of 500 hands, and its output is a factor in international as well as domestic trade.

The first vice president of this company is Jesse A. Bloch, son of the founder. His grandfather, Simon Bloch, was a native of Germany, and by reason of his participation in the revolutionary movement of that country came to America and settled at Wheeling in 1849. He was a wholesale merchant at Wheeling. His son, Samuel S. Bloch, was born at Wheeling in 1850, and has spent his life in this city. For a number of years he was associated with the wholesale grocery business of the family, but in 1880 he and his brother Aaron Bloch established a small tobacco factory, then employing only ten persons. In 1884 the brothers discontinued the wholesale grocery business, and have concentrated all their energies upon the tobacco industry. The company was incorporated in 1891, with Aaron Bloch as president, Samuel S. Bloch as vice president, and A. O. Maxwell, secretary. For some years the plant was at 1501-03 Main Street, but the company now uses the entire block between Thirty-ninth and Forty-first streets, and has a plant for handling leaf tobacco in other states. Bloch Brothers were the originators of the scrap or ribbon coarse cut tobacco, and one of the most widely used brands of chewing and smoking tobacco is the "Mail Pouch," manufactured by Bloch Brothers. They also make the Arrow and Wizard brands of cigarettes. The present officers of the company are: Samuel S. Bloch, president; Jesse A. Bloch, first vice president; Harold S. Bloch, second vice president; W. M. Tiernan, third vice president, who became superintendent of the plant in 1885; and A. O. Maxwell, secretary.

Samuel S. Bloch is a republican, a member of the Masonic fraternity, and for many years has been one of Wheeling's liberal and public-spirited citizens. He married Bertha Prager, who was born in Parkersburg, West Virginia. They have two sons and two daughters, the sons, Jesse A. and Harold S., both being officials of the company. Medalyne is the wife of Eduard Ziegler, a prominent business man now living in Paris, France. Miss Dorothy is at home.

Jesse A. Bloch was born at Wheeling, November 2, 1879, attended the local public schools, Linsly Institute, prepared for college in Phillips-Exeter Academy in New Hampshire, and had a technical training in the Worcester Polytechnic Institute at Worcester, Massachusetts. Mr. Bloch left college in 1900 and returned to Wheeling to enter his father's business, and has given it his full time for over twenty years.

He is also prominent in West Virginia politics. He was a member of the State Legislature for two terms, being elected in 1912 and 1914 and serving in the sessions of 1913 and 1915. In 1913 he introduced the Workmen's Compensation Bill, which became a law. Mr. Bloch in 1918 was elected a member of the State Senate for the four year term from 1919 to 1923. Senator Bloch was at one time mayor of Pleasant Valley, now a suburb of Wheeling. He is a republican, a member of Wheeling Lodge No. 28, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Phi Gamma Delta college fraternity, the Wheeling Country Club and the Fort Henry Club. He was prominent in all the local activities at Wheeling in behalf of the vigorous prosecution of the war, serving on the executive committees for the Liberty Loan drives and assisting with the Red Cross and other local campaigns.

In 1905, at Wheeling, Mr. Bloch married Miss Jessie Moffat, daughter of Thomas C. and Blanche (Quarrier) Moffat. Her parents live in Wheeling, her father being connected with the Engineering and Equipment Company of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Bloch have two children, Thomas M., born February 13, 1907, and Betty, born in May, 1908.

WEIRTON STEEL COMPANY. In May, 1905, there was chartered under the general laws of the State of West Virginia the Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company with officers of J. R. Phillips, president, W. H. Baldridge, vice president, E. T. Weir, secretary and general manager, and capitalized at $250,000.

This organization purchased the plant of the Jackson Sheet and Tin Plate Company located at Clarksburg, West Virginia, which transaction took place in 1905. The plant of the Jackson Sheet and Tin Plate Company consisted of eight stands of rolls usually termed "mills," three of which were for rolling sheets and five for tin plate. This plant was not in very good condition, the buildings were in need of repair and the machinery well worn. Considerable difficulty was experienced by the organizers in putting the mill in condition to operate satisfactorily and turn out a product which would be acceptable to the users of tin plate and sheets.

As a further obstacle for the new organization to overcome, their president, J. R. Phillips, met his death within a month or two after the company was organized, he being unfortunate enough to have been in the Harrisburg wreck of the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1905.

E. T. Weir was then elected president of the company; W. H. Baldridge remained as vice president and D. M. Weir was appointed treasurer. This organization of course was added to at various intervals up to the present time, so that the principal officers of the present Weirton Steel Company which was formerly the Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate consist of E. T. Weir, president, D. M. Weir, W. H. Baldridge and J. C. Williams, vice presidents.

As previously stated the original plant at Clarksburg consisted of eight mills. In 1908 an additional four mills were added making the Clarksburg Plant a twelve mill proposition. In 1909 the company was re-capitalized on a basis of five and a half million dollars and they purchased several hundred acres of ground at Crawford's Crossing or what might be said a part of Hollidays Cove, West Virginia. At that time the property at Hollidays Cove consisted of farm lands lying in the valley in which Hollidays Cove is located.

In this valley the Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company in 1909 erected a ten mill tin plate plant, built a few houses for the benefit of those employees that might have to come from other points than the small towns surrounding this district and established a town by the name of Weirton.

In 1910 an additional ten mills was added to the Weirton Plant making a total of twenty mills and in December of 1911 the Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company purchased and took over the plant and equipment of the Pope Tin Plate Company located at Steubenville, Ohio, which consisted of a twelve mill tin plate plant.

In 1914 four additional mills were added to the Weirton Plant and also another two mills added in 1915 bringing the total number of mills at the Weirton Plant up to twenty-six. This then gave the Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company twelve mills at Clarksburg, twelve mills at Steubenville, and twenty-six mills at Weirton, West Virginia, making a total of fifty mills which then put them in the position of being the largest independent manufacturer of tin plate.

In 1915 the Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company took over the plant and equipment of the Weirton Steel Company located at Weirton, West Virginia, which constituted a Cold Rolled Strip Steel plant which was built in 1913 and the Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company then proceeded to increase the capacity of the former Weirton Steel Company Cold Rolled Strip mill so that it would be in position to not only produce a greater tonnage of cold rolled strip steel but also to make their own raw material which consisted of hot rolled hoops and bands. This change was brought about by the Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company building two hot mills for the production of hot rolled strip steel.

Believing that the name "Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company," was a misnomer the name on August 1, 1918 was changed to that of the Weirton Steel Company as it was thought this change in name would cover the proposed varied products which they expected to manufacture. With the change in name the capitalization was raised to $30,000,000.

In 1919 a modern 600-ton blast furnace was complete and placed in operation. Also in 1920 there was complete and placed in operation an up-to-date steel plant consisting of seven 100-ton open hearth furnaces, a 42-inch bloom mill and a 21-inch and 18-inch continuous rolling mill. This blast furnace and steel works was also erected at Weirton, West Virginia, on a part of the property originally purchased in 1909.

In 1919 they purchased iron ore property in the Lak Superior region and likewise coke ovens in the Connellsville District, the latter to take care of their requirements of coke for the manufacture of pig iron.

The preceding explanation sets forth to some extent the very abnormal growth of the organization formed in 1905 and as a summary it shows the original Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company capitalized at $250,000 in May 1905, operating in a very difficult manner an eight mill plant at Clarksburg, West Virginia, employing some 50 or 600 people and producing tin plate and sheets totaling approximately 25,000 to 28,000 tons per year, whereas over a period of seventeen years or up to the present time they are now capitalized at $30,000,000 or 120 times the original capitalization, employing some 7,000 people not including the iron ore mines or the coke ovens and with an annual production of various commodities approximately as follows: Pig Iron, 250,000 tons; Steel, 600,000 tons; Hot and Cold Rolled Strip, 250,000 tons; Tin Plate, 225,000 tons.

The former Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company or what is known today as the Weirton Steel Company is therefore now placed on a basis of self-maintenance from the raw materials to the finished product.

In 1905 they depended upon manufacturers of sheet bars for the operation of their Clarksburg Plant. Today they depend on none for their major raw materials, being self-supporting from the origin of the iron ore and coal, through to the finished tin plate and sheets, also hot and cold rolled strip steel.

Outside of the enormous development at Weirton, West Virginia there has been very little change at Clarksburg, West Virginia, or Steubenville, Ohio from the original plant except the increase of four mills at Clarksburg, as explained heretofore, but at Weirton the farm lands of 1908 consisting of some three or four houses and as many as probably fifteen or twenty inhabitants, the town of Weirton today consists of 2,000 houses and almost 12,000 inhabitants.

E. T. WEIR was born in 1875 of Scotch-Irish parentage. In 1890 he entered the employ of the Bradlock Wire Company of Pittsburgh and one year later he became identified with the Oliver Wire Company which operated wire and nail mills on the South Side, Pittsburgh. He was with this concern until 1898, serving in various capacities, constantly on the alert to acquire knowledge of the manufacturing business to equip himself for the opportunity he ever dreamed of. In 1899 he joined the ranks of the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company and in 1901 was appointed manager of the Monongahela Tin Mills of that company; in 1903 he was made manager of their Monessen mills.

With J. R. Phillips, who was district manager of the American Company Mills, he organized in 1905, the Phillips Sheet and Tin Plate Company and started operating a small tin mill at Clarksburg, West Virginia. Since that time as the chief executive of the company, which now bears his name, Mr. Weir has realized, in part at least, the dreams of his early business career.

Mr. Weir resides in Pittsburgh but except when away is daily at his office in Weirton actively engaged in counseling with the large organization he is still leader of, not only concerning operation of the present plants but planning for the future growth of these mills and the Town of Weirton.

Mr. Weir is married and has three children. In addi-on to his duties as president of the Weirton Steel Company he is president of the Bank of Weirton and the Weir Improvement Company. He is a director in the Pigwater Steel Company of Pittsburgh and the Bank of Pittsburgh, N. A.

He is a member of Duck Island Club of North Carolina, Duquesne Club of Pittsburgh, Union Club of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh Athletic Association, Fort Henry Club of Wheeling, Pittsburgh Country Club, Pittsburgh Field Club, Westmoreland Country Club of Pittsburgh, Longueue Club of Pittsburgh, Triton Club of Quebec, Canada, American Iron and Steel Institute, Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, and Woodmont Rod and Gun Club of Maryland.

D. M. WEIR was born in 1880. After graduating from the public schools he started his business career with the liver interests in Pittsburgh and for five years worked diligently in various clerical capacities. In 1899 he entered the employ of the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company as weighmaster at their South Side mills and at the age of twenty-one was made chief clerk of that works, a creditable distinction indeed, he being the youngest man to occupy such a responsible position the company had ever known. In 1905, along with his brother and Mr. Phillips, he went to Clarksburg as purchasing agent for the tin mills he purchased at that location.

Mr. Weir's long experience particularly in the commercial end of the tin plate business peculiarly fits him for the responsibilities of the important offices he holds in the different enterprises he is connected with. There is no greater booster than he for the town of Weirton and the welfare of the workmen in the different mills.

Mr. Weir has been vice president of the Weirton Steel Company for many years; he is president of the Weirton Improvement Company—secretary and treasurer of the Weir Improvement Company, president of the Weirton Development Company and Weirton Home Building Company.

He is also director of: Bank of Weirton, National Exchange Bank of Steubenville, Union Building and Loan Company of Steubenville, The Children's Bethel of Smithfield, Ohio, The Ohio Valley Hospital of Steubenville, and West Virginia Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. Weir is also vice president of the Y. M. C. A. of Steubenville and is deeply interested in that work. He is a member of: Duquesne Club of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh Athletic Association, Traffic Club of Pittsburgh, American Club of Pittsburgh, United States Chamber of Commerce, Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, Steubenville Chamber of Commerce, American Iron and Steel Institute, Steubenville Country Club, Weirton Business Men's Association, Westmoreland Country Club of Pittsburgh, and Longueue Club of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Weir resides in Steubenville, Ohio, is married and has two daughters.

JOHN C. WILLIAMS. As an associate of the Weir brothers, since the incipency of the Weirton Steel Company one of the most potent contributing factors in its achievements has been the energy, foresight and leadership of John C. Williams, now vice president of the Weirton Steel Company. Mr. Williams was born in 1876 and has been in the Steel business since 1889 principally in the tin plate line, for, as many of his friends among the workmen employed in the mills under his management will testify, he was but a mere lad when he started to work in the cold rolls in a tin plate mill in Wales.

There are many cogent reasons for Mr. Williams' success and for his remarkable accomplishments as a mill operator but the one outstanding reason is the confidence and faith placed in him by the men in the mills and his absolute fairness to them.

Mr. Williams does not believe in driving, as for fifteen years he labored in the mills himself and in all capacities from greaser on the cold rolls to roller on the hot mills and the strongest bonds of sympathy are entertained by him for the "toilers" and those who labor. He is ever ready to give encouragement to those who need it and utmost consideration to those who try to do their best.

Mr. Williams in 1903-4 was assistant to E. T. Weir as superintendent of the hot mills at the National Works, Monessen; prior to that time and for many years he was superintendent of the Champion Iron and Steel Company, Muskegon, Michigan, which company operates bar, plate, tin and sheet mills.

Mr. Williams is married and lives in Steubenville, Ohio. He is vice president of the Weirton Steel Company in charge of operations; vice president of both the Weir and Weirton Improvement Company, director in the Bank of Weirton.

He is a member of Steubenville Chamber of Commerce, Steubenville Country Club, American Iron and Steel Institute, Weirton Business Men's Association, and Clarksburg Country Club of Clarksburg, West Virginia.

BENJAMIN F. MURPHY is a man of thought and action, and has demonstrated in many helpful ways his fine civic loyalty, with the result that his influence has been large and benignant in his home community, his native county and in connection with governmental affairs in West Virginia. He is essentially one of the most progressive and influential citizens of Clay County, and is a leading business man of the village of Clay, judicial center of the county. Mr. Murphy was born at Ivydale, this county, July 29, 1873, and is a son of Henry H. and Sarah J. (Dawson) Murphy, and he is a scion of one of the oldest and most honored families of what is now West Virginia. His great-grandfather, Patrick Murphy, was born and reared in Ireland, and upon coming to America became the first settler in the Elk River Valley of what is now the State of West Virginia.

After having profited by the advantages of the public schools of his native county Benjamin F. Murphy became a student in the Concord State Normal School at Athens, West Virginia, where he well fortified himself for the pedagogic profession. For thirteen years he was a successful teacher in the schools of Clay County, and he has continued to retain a most lively and helpful interest in educational affairs. For a time he was a teacher in a private school at Clay, or Clay Court House, which is still the railroad designation of the judicial center of Clay County. Mr. Murphy gained valuable magisterial experience by four years of effective service in the office of justice of the peace, and as county superintendent of schools for four years he gave a most able and progressive administration, besides which he was a member of the state grading board on teachers' licenses under the administrations of State Superintendents Miller and Shawkey. Thereafter he served one term as representative of his native county in the House of Delegates of the West Virginia Legislature, in which he made a characteristically excellent record, he having been chairman of the committee of education and a member of other important committees of the Lower House. At Clay he established the mercantile business which is conducted under the title of Murphy & Company and which is one of the important enterprises of the village. Mr. Murphy has had much of influence and leadership in the councils and campaign activities of the republican party in this section of the state, and he has been specially prominent in the furtherance of educational work and service in his home county, he having been the prime factor in the movement which resulted in the establishing of the Clay County High School, of which board he is the secretary. He is a director of the Elk Valley Bank at Clay and of the American Grocery Society in the City of Charleston, besides having other capitalistic interests of important order. He and his wife are zealous members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for the past several years he has been Clay County secretary in connection with the International Sunday School Association. He is a past master of Clay County Lodge No. 97, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and a past noble grand of Pisgah Lodge No. 180, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On the 11th of January, 1892, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Murphy and Miss Emma F. Friend, and of the nine children of this union seven are living: Myrtle N. is the wife of Dr. Thomas H. Fast; H. Mark graduated from the high school and thereafter attended the Mountain State Business College at Parkersburg, and also the University of West Virginia; Victor B. graduated from the high school, was for two years a student in the University of West Virginia, and is, in 1922, attending the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon; Maysel is attending the Clay High School; and the three younger members of the attractive home circle are Friend Paul, Benjamin C. and Mildred.

HERMAN S. HALLER is one of the active young business men of Philippi, has been a merchant, coal operator and farmer, and is now proprietor of the City Ice & Bottling Works, supplying essential service and products throughout Barbour County.

Mr. Haller was born in the Nestorville community of Barbour County, February 26, 1889. This branch of the Haller family came to West Virginia from Frederick County, Maryland, in pioneer times. Eli Haller, grandfather of Herman S., was born in Barbour County, spent his life as a farmer and was living at Nestorville when he died. He was a Home Guard during the Civil war, was a republican and a member of the United Brethren Church. He married a member of the Nestor family, and they reared four sons and three daughters: James, Jonas, Elsworth W. and George, Mrs. Millie Shanaberger, Lizzie, who married Lee Poling, and Mollie, who married Wesley Bennett.

Elsworth Wilson Haller, father of the Philippi business man, was born in Barbour County, and followed various active vocations. He was a miller at Nestorville and Philippi, building the Nestorville Mill. His last years were spent on his farm on Buckhannon River, where he died in 1915, at the age of fifty-two. He married Ella Williamson, a native of Barbour County, daughter of Nathau Williamson, and now living at Buckhannon. They had just two children, Herman S. and Dessie, the latter the wife of Cecil Rogers of Volga, Barbour County.

When Herman S. Haller was nine years of age his parents moved to Philippi, where he spent six years of his early boyhood. He came to young manhood on the family farm on Buckhannon River. He was educated in the country schools, and may be said to have begun his active career at the age of seventeen. For about two years he was a merchant at Volga in Barbour County, then returned to the farm for a year, later resumed merchandising and for four years sold goods at Carrollton, and at the same time conducted a farm. Mr. Haller gave up merchandising to become associated with Herman J. Polin in the development of a coal mine at Boulder in Barbour County. He was superintendent of the Boulder Coal Company, and they did a prosperous business until the slump following the close of the World war, at which time the Boulder Mine ceased operations. For a few months after leaving the coal industry Mr. Haller conducted a garage at Philippi, and in 1920 bought the plant of the City Bottling Works.

The City Bottling Works was established by C. L. Malcolm and first located at Mansfield, a suburb of Philippi. When J. S. Smith acquired the business he moved it to Philippi, locating it near the old wooden bridge. Mr. Haller bought this plant, but subsequently erected a concrete building and moved the business to it. This is a thoroughly equipped and modern bottling works, with a capacity of six hundred cases per day, and the ice plant has a capacity of six tons per day. All the ice manufactured is consumed locally, while there is a growing trade in the soft drink product in Philippi and along the railroad leading out of that city.

Mr. Haller is director in the Federal Carbonic Plant of Barracksville, is a director of the State Bottlers Association of West Virginia, is a stockholder in the Citizens National Bank of Belington, belongs to the Kiwanis Club of Philippi and is on its attendance committee. During the World war he was registered for selective service, but was not called to duty.

In Barbour County October 3, 1913, Mr. Haller married Bly Shank, a native of Philippi, and daughter of John and Lean (Dickson) Shank. Her father is a native of Barbour County, has been a farmer and public official, and about thirty years ago served a term as sheriff. Mrs. Haller has one brother, Aud, a farmer near Philippi. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Haller is a son, M. Wood Aud Haller, born May 27, 1918.

LUKE WHITE has been a resident of Lewis County, West Virginia, seventy years, took up the serious tasks and responsibilities of life here on a modest scale, and successful years and labors have brought him an ample prosperity, in the form of lands, livestock and other property, and he has stood equally high in the esteem of his friends and neighbors. Mr. White is a former president of the County Court of Lewis County.

He was born October 18, 1848, in the City of Providence Rhode Island, son of James and Mary (Brodrick) White. His parents were natives of County Roscommon, Ireland but were married in the United States, then settled on a Rhode Island farm. In 1850, when Luke was two year old, the family came to Lewis County, West Virginia, and the parents spent the rest of their lives on a farm here. They were devout Catholics, and the father began voting as a democrat but later became a republican. Two of their children are still living, Luke and Maria, the latter the wife of John Collins, a resident of Weston.

Luke White grew up on the farm and had only the common schools in his neighborhood from which to derive his education. When he was twenty-one years of age he started out for himself, buying a tract of land covered with heavy timber, and his task was clearing away the woods and putting the ground acre by acre under cultivation. That process has continued through all his active years until he now owns eight hundred acres, some of the best farming land in the county, and a large part of it under cultivation.

In 1874 Mr. White married Catherine Murry. Of their children James is deceased and all the others are still living, named Mary, Ella, John, Luke, Nicholas, D. J. Kathryn, Walter, Leo and Martin D. The family are members of the Catholic Church and Mr. White is a republican. He was a member of the County Court six years and during that term was president of the court. Outside of his farming interests he is a stockholder in the Fair Association, the People's Telephone Company, in the Weston Independent, a republican paper, and in the Conservative Life Insurance Company.

GEORGE C. HALL. The home and farm of George C. Hall is located eight miles north of Morgantown, in Union District, two miles south of Point Marion. This is one of the specialized farms in this section of the state, dairying and poultry breeding being prominent features, and no only Mr. Hall but his children are actively associated with him in all departments of the farm enterprise.
